"BORN OF WATER."—We have long since adopted the principle that where any doubt may arise as to the meaning of an expression uttered by our Lord, the safe course is, to inquire how the disciples understood it "after the day of Pentecost." Some affirm that a man must actually "hate his wife" to be a disciple of Christ; reasoning from Lk. 14: 26; while an apostle of Christ commands—"Husbands love your wives;" Eph. 5: 25. Our Lord says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Some of his hearers understood this expression carnally, and thus committed a blunder that proved fatal to them, and caused them to forsake him wholly. The Saviour afterwards explains his words by saying—"It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life."

Whatever may be said in favour of immersion, we are satisfied it is a total misapprehension of our Lord's words, John 3: 5, to apply them to water baptism. "Except a man be born of water and the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." But, "water does" not "mean spirit" here; but it does mean that which purifies, cleanses, or sanctifies; for, "without holiness no man shall see the Lord;" or, shall "see the kingdom of God." Peter says: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, [as they would be, if born of that "compound of oxygen and hydrogen upon which Noah's ark floated;" and of which, or in which they were actually born from their "mother's womb;" or when "born of the flesh;"] but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever;" 1 Peter 1: 23: therefore, as they are born again of this word, they live forever, or "enter the kingdom of God." Agreeably to this testimony of Peter, Paul declares that "Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word;" Eph. 5: 25, 26. And both agree with our Lord who prayed to God, his Father—"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth;" John 17: 17. Thus we arrive at the certain conclusion, "in the mouth of three witnesses," that to be "born of water," is "not an emergence from that compound of oxygen and hydrogen upon which Noah's ark floated;" but, emerging from the love and practice of sin, in which men are held by ignorance and error, into the love and practice of holiness "by the word of God," or the power of truth. This is the first item in being born again; and is being born of water—i. e. "the word;" its completion will be in the resurrection of the dead, "at the last day;" by "the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead."

In the remarks on being "born of water," in the last Examiner, it is asked—"What does being born of anything consist in? Is it not an emergence from a place in which the subject was previously out of sight?" The writer adds—"If then earth be the matrix of which a thing is born, would not being born of earth, consist in coming up out of the ground in which the subject had been previously concealed? And doth the substitution of water for earth make any difference in the idea of birth?" He goes on to say—"To be born of water, then, is also to come up out of the water in which the person had been deposited, for there can be no emergence without previous immersion."

We would just suggest, if this logic is good, then the other part of the text may be interpreted by the same rule and make sense. Let us test it by this principle. "What does being born of anything consist in? Is it not an emergence from a place in which the subject was previously out of sight? If then earth be the matrix of which a thing is born, would not being born of earth, consist in coming up out of the ground in which the subject had been previously concealed? And doth the substitution of "Spirit" for earth make any difference in the idea of birth? To be born of "the Spirit," then, is to come up out of the "Spirit" in which the person had been deposited, for there can be no emergence without previous immersion."

According to this logic the baptism of the Spirit, or being "born of the Spirit," is to emerge from, or come up out of the Spirit. The person was first "out of sight," in the Spirit; then he comes up out of it, and he is "born of the Spirit." While we do not believe our worthy brother, of whom we speak, is thus born of the Spirit, we fear many are. Alas, that many who "begin in the Spirit" should afterwards seem to think they "are made perfect by the flesh."

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY.—Br. Walsh has not furnished No. 3 yet; but it will appear in our next. The only article we have from him, for this month, is "Dr. Tyng and the Truth." Our readers we know will regret that we have not more.

THE "GREAT EARTHQUAKE."—ANOTHER SHOCK.—The horrid slaughter in Paris, in the late attempt to overthrow the new government in France, seems to confirm the view we took of the late French Revolution, in the May number of the Examiner. Will our readers examine that article again? We are not disposed to take the positive ground some have taken on these convulsions. We have been of the opinion for three or four years past, that the seven last plagues, of Rev. 16th, were all to be poured out before the Advent, and that the image, Dan. 2d, was to be smitten and broken before. For these, and kindred views, we have received not a little abuse and scorn from certain would-be-orthodox "Adventists." No sooner do the very events begin to come to pass, which they did not believe would occur till after the advent, than they make the land ring with the proclamation that these events prove they have been right! even without waiting to see the result of these revolutions. It makes us think of the Catholic Priest who, in his funeral oration, declared that "Daniel O'Connell" was "in heaven looking down on the Irish people with deep sympathy;" and on the next Sunday said a mass "for the release of O'Connell's soul from purgatory!" The fact is, there are those who never say nor do wrong: or, what is worse, never confess when they have. So, after having denounced us because we could not work in their traces, they claim the very events that we looked for, and they did not, as proof that they were right!! We have only to say now, "Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh;" but still further shocks of the earthquake are to be realized, if, as we are still disposed to believe, the present convulsions are the "great earthquake," under the seventh vial. We beseech all to avoid undue excitement. We have need to keep our minds in peace, trusting in God in these days of excitement. We cannot hurry the purposes of God, they will have their course; but we may hurry ourselves to destruction and ruin, by undue agitation. We need calm, sober reflection; with strict attention to the word and providence of God, and much prayer.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—We give the following as one of the signs of the times, and as an important item in the "Peace and Safety" cry, which is immediately to precede the "Sudden Destruction" that "shall come upon" those that slight or despise the truth of God. Another remark we would make is—While God is about to do, or is doing, a great work, the agents of Satan will always try to get up an imitation. See the case of the magicians in Egypt that withstood Moses. But "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived" down to the very time of the second advent of the "King of kings." And because they hate the truth and love lies, "God shall send them strong delusions to believe a lie, that they all may be condemned who believe not the truth, but obey unrighteousness." The following "important prediction" combines some truths and some fatal errors. That there will be "a new state of society," soon, we fully believe: but that it will be the advent of Robert Owenism, instead of the advent of the King of kings, we do not believe. That "man is a creature of circumstances," to some extent, we freely admit: but that all those circumstances are "independent of his will" is a fatal and destroying error. Such a doctrine is the fruit of high Calvinism, and is fatalism; which is only another name for the atheistical doctrine—"There is no God." When men come to years of understanding they can discover the difference between good and evil to some extent: and they are endowed by their Creator with the high attribute—the power of choice. Man does not "receive" all "his feelings and convictions independently of his will." To affirm he does is to abolish all distinction between right and wrong—good and evil: it is to convert man into a mere machine—a mere tool of fate—the sport of blind chance; it is to condemn all law—to abolish all order, it is to reduce the earth and its inhabitants to chaos, or to that confusion found in earth when it "was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep." We may notice this subject more fully hereafter. Now for the wonderful  $\frac{1}{2}$  Prediction.

IMPORTANT PREDICTION.—A New State of Society in 1900!—"The year 1900 will find this world and its inhabitants in a state of Perfection, Beauty, and Happiness never imagined. ROBERT OWEN'S SYSTEM OF SOCIETY will then be universal; mankind will be united into one harmonious brotherhood, enjoying health, happiness and long life. The above system of Society is founded upon the FIVE FACTS OF NATURE which follow:—1st—MAN is a compound being, whose character is formed of his constitution or organization at birth, and of the effects of External Circumstances upon it from birth to death—such original organization and external influences continually acting and re-acting each upon the other. 2d—Man receives his feelings and convictions independently of his will. 3d—The feelings or the convictions, or both united, create the motive to action called the will, which stimulates him to act, and decides his actions. 4th—The organization of no two human beings is ever precisely similar at birth; nor can art form any two individuals, from infancy to maturity, to be precisely similar. 5th—The constitution of every infant, except in case of organic disease, can be formed into a VERY INFERIOR or a VERY SUPERIOR being, according to the circumstances allowed to influence that constitution from birth.

A further analysis of the foundation of the above system is found below, consisting of TWO FACTS ONLY—1st, Man is the Creature of Circumstances; 2d, The instinctive desire for HAPPINESS is the only cause of all action. The System of Society by ROBERT OWEN, founded upon the above FACTS OF NATURE, is the only System which can confer upon the world HEALTH, HAPPINESS and LONG LIFE. In the year 1900, IT WILL! IT MUST!!! IT SHALL!!! be universal. SAM SLEE.

( $\frac{1}{2}$ ) The reader will please preserve this paper for a curiosity, if for nothing else, and in 1860 compare it with the then existing State of Society. Again, compare it 1870, and again in 1880, observing the progress of the above system, and the downfall of all others."

REPLY TO QUESTIONS.

QUESTION 1. "What is the Sanctuary that is to be cleansed at the end of 2300 days, Daniel 8: 14?" H. L. B.

ANSWER. We cannot now take up the question at length, but will say—It is clear to our mind the sanctuary is not the church nor the whole earth, as some have maintained. It is not the Church, or people of God, because a clear distinction is made in the text between "the sanctuary and the host." If the host is the people of God, it seems evident the sanctuary, or holy, is the asylum or place where God has specially promised to meet them and manifest his glory unto them; and that place was in the "holy land." If the prophet does not explain himself we shall look in vain to the fancies of men for an explanation. What does Daniel understand by the sanctuary? Hear him pray, chap. 9: 17; "Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake." Does any one doubt but that Daniel means the House or Temple of God at Jerusalem? If he does, let him read on and see what Gabriel says, verse 26; "The people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary;" and "he shall make it desolate [for ever? no; but] until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolator." [margin:] verse 27. Is there any just ground of doubt left as to what sanctuary is trodden under foot, and is to be made clean—justified, or vindicated, at the end of the 2300 days, or years?

Ques. 2. "Is Jerusalem that is to be trodden down of the Gentiles a place or People?"

Ans. Daniel 9th, which we have just quoted, states that "the city" is a subject of the judgments, or desolations, as well as the host. In Luke 21, our Lord is explicit in his statement, that "the people [the host]" shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: AND Jerusalem [the city] of Dan. 9] shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, [for ever? no, but] until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Those "times," we think, are the 2300 years of Dan. 8th; and terminate when "that determined shall be poured upon the desolator;" and as Mahommedanism has been the last of the "abominations" that "overspread" Jerusalem, it is upon that power the pouring is to take place; and we are not left in doubt as to what was to be "poured upon" this "desolator." The 16th of Rev. settles that in our mind. It is the sixth vial of "the seven last plagues," which is to "dry up" that "overspreading abomination," by which it would be manifest that the 2300 years were ending, and God was cleansing the sanctuary, or "holy," as the Septuagint reads.

Ques. 3. "How long after the ending of the 2300 days to the Restitution, or new creation of the earth?"

Ans. We do not know; for we cannot tell how long from the ending of those days to the advent and personal reign of Christ. We believe Christ will reign, with his immortal saints, on this earth, the period, whatever it is, symbolized by "the thousand years," Rev. 20, after his advent and before the "new creation of the earth," if you mean the new heaven and new earth, Rev. 21. If, however, you mean by "the Restitution" the subjecting the world to his government, we believe that will commence at the advent; and that the future age, or thousand years dispensation, is allotted to putting "all things under" Christ, or completing the work of restitution; the last act of which will be the producing "a new heaven and a new earth;" then, and not before, will that saying be fulfilled, Rev. 21: 5, "Behold, I make all things new;" and God shall say—"It is done." v. 6.

Ques. 4. "Do you call all the time after Christ comes, to the cleansing of the world by fire, probation time?"

Ans. We see no evidence in the Scriptures to limit "probation time" to any period whatever. There is doubtless a limit of it, as it respects individuals; but to limit it in regard to the trial of some intelligent beings, we think, with present light, is a mere assumption, unwarranted by the Bible. "Of the INCREASE of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth [the time of his sitting on David's throne] even for ever." Isa. 9: 7.

Ques. 5. "When Christ comes to Mount Olivet have the saints been caught up?"

Ans. When Christ descends from heaven towards this earth, his magnetic power, if we may be allowed that expression, will act on all his friends alive or in their graves, with an attraction that may be illustrated by the magnet and the steel. As the two parties near each other the magnetic action will be so strong that the saints, or holy ones, whether alive, or asleep in their graves, cannot but rise to meet their coming Lord in the air. Or, we may illustrate this point by another figure. Some great personage, benefactor, or conqueror, approaches a city: all his friends, or as many as can, go out to meet him and escort him into the city, and give him a hearty welcome. Thus when Christ, our Lord and King, returns from heaven to take the throne of his father David and exercise his dominion from sea to sea, and from the river Euphrates, the border of David's kingdom, to the ends of the earth, the friends and lovers of Jesus will all go out to meet him, or be caught up to meet him in the air: not that he, or they are to remain there; but, he, still descending to earth, will come to Mount Olivet and "all his saints with him."

Ques. 6. "If there is probation after Christ comes, is He the medium through which any will be saved?"

Ans. John 14: 6, "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Acts 4: 12, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." 1 Timothy 2: 5, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."

Ques. 7. "How can man be saved after Christ leaves the heavens?"

Ans. Much easier than now: for, all that love and make lies will be cut off in that day, so that there will be none left who corrupt the truth of God, nor any sectarians who corrupt men's minds for the sake of gain; and the watchmen will see eye to eye. But perhaps the question is asked with the thought that it is essential to salvation that Christ be in "the heavens." If so, we may ask—How were men saved while Christ was upon earth 1800 years ago? Surely he will have no less power to save when he returns. His power to save is not affected by his location; but so long as he liveth "he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him;" and this because, "he ever liveth to make intercession for them;" and God "hath sworn and will not repent [change his mind] thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek;" Psa. 110: 4: and he is a "Priest after the power of an endless life;" Heb. 7: 16: "He shall be a Priest upon his throne;" Zech. 6: 13.

Ques. 8. "Are the saints on the earth while the wicked are being destroyed?"

Ans. Prov. 11: 31—"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner." Compare with Prov. 10: 30—"The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." See also Prov. 2: 21, 22—"For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Yes, "remain in it," and be no more harmed than the three Hebrews in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace; for, "the Son of God" will be with them, and the "smell of fire" will not be "found upon them."

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

LUKE 16TH.—This portion of Scripture has been supposed to afford unanswerable proof that dead men are conscious, and that the wicked will be endlessly tormented. In whatever light it is viewed, it can prove nothing as to the final state of the sinner after the judgment; for the advocates of the natural-immortal-soul theory maintain that the state of the rich man was that on which he entered immediately at death: If so, it was prior to the judgment, and consequently was not his punishment, unless God punishes men before he judges them. The state of the rich man before the judgment cannot therefore determine at all what his final state will be. This case, then, can only affect the question of man's state between death and the resurrection, which precedes the judgment.

This portion of Scripture is either a literal relation of facts, or it is a parable. Those who maintain that it is a literal relation, have no less difficulty in explaining it than their opponents: they cannot explain it all literally, and yet they are bound to do so to be consistent. Let them make the attempt. Lazarus, covered with sores, died and was carried into Abraham's bosom. Will they pretend that is literal? O, no, say they, it was Lazarus' soul! But our Lord says, Lazarus was carried into Abraham's bosom. Immortal soulsists have to say—"Not so, Lord—it was his soul;" thus, they contradict our Lord to establish their "own traditions." Let us see whether they succeed any better with their "real history" of the rich man. He died. What became of him? He "was buried;" the rich man was buried, remember. What next? "In hades, the grave, of course, where he was buried; improperly translated! he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom," &c. The rich man did this. Immortal-soulists say—It was his soul: but our Lord says, it was the rich man. Thus again they make void the words of Christ to establish their traditions, if our Lord did really give a "literal history." But for the sake of showing the folly of their tradition about the soul, we will let them have it that it was Lazarus and the rich man's souls or spirits, disembodied, that are in hades. We now ask—Are their disembodied souls or spirits material or immaterial? That is, are they matter, or not matter? We are answered—"They are immaterial." If so, they have no substance! Can that which has no substance be seen or touched? If they have no substance, they are nothing. So, the "literal history" advocates have an immaterial rich man, with immaterial eyes, looking afar off and seeing immaterial Lazarus, or no-substance Lazarus! Truly, these immaterial souls must have sharp eyes to see nothing! and an equally sharp understanding to know that nothing is Lazarus! But this is not all. The immaterial (nothing) rich man desires that immaterial Lazarus should dip his immaterial finger in literal water and cool his immaterial tongue! And all this is "literal history"! We have not placed the subject in this absurd position with any other view than merely to show the "literal history" advocates that they are, at least, as much involved in difficulty in explaining this scripture as we, who believe it to be a parable, and that it has no reference to man's state in a future life.

That it is a parable, the context shows. It is in a group of them, viz., the lost piece of silver—the lost sheep—the prodigal son, and the wasteful or "unjust steward," with an admonition against serving mammon, or riches. The Pharisees, who were covetous, heard all these things, and they denied him. Our Lord then proceeds in his discourse with special reference to the change about to take place in the dispensations. He says—"The law and the prophets were [preached] until John; since that time the Kingdom of God is preached," &c. Before proceeding to an explanation of this Scripture, we will present the remarks and admissions of eminent men, who have been considered orthodox, relating to its being a parable.

LIGHTFOOT. "Whoever believes this not to be a parable, but a true story, let him believe also those little friars, whose trade it is to show the monuments at Jerusalem to pilgrims, and point exactly to the place where the house of the 'rich glutton' stood. Most accurate keepers of antiquity indeed! who, after so many hundreds of years, such overthrows of Jerusalem, such devastations and changes, can rake out of the rubbish the place of so private a house, and such a one too, that never had any being, but merely in parable. And that it was a parable, not only the consent of all expositors may assure us, but the thing itself speaks it."

"The main scope and design of it seems this—to hint the destruction of the unbelieving Jews, who, though they had Moses and the prophets, did not believe them—nay, would not believe, though one (even Jesus) arose from the dead. For that conclusion of the parable abundantly evidenceth what it aimed at: If they hear not Moses and the prophets, &c."—Heb. and Talm. Exerc. in Luke xvi. 19.

WHITBY. "That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: 1. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonica, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?" Annot. in loc.

WAKEFIELD. Ver. 23, "In the grave; en to hade: and, conformably to this representation, he is spoken of as having a body, ver. 24. It must be remembered, that hades nowhere means hell—gehenna—in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane; and also, that our Lord is giving his hearers a parable, (Matt. xiii. 34.) and not a piece of real history. To them who regard the narration as a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the popists. The universal meaning of hades is the state of death; because the term sepulchrum or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire, &c. See ver. 30." Note in loc.

Dr. Adam Clarke remarks on Matt. 5: 26—"Let it be remembered, that by the general consent of all, (except the basely interested,) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine. In the things that concern our eternal salvation, we need the most pointed and express evidence on which to establish the faith of our souls." Bishop Louth says—"Parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events, applied to the illustration of some important truth."

We state it then as a principle, that no parable is to be used as teaching doctrine not elsewhere explicitly revealed. Parables are used only to illustrate some truth already known, or partially so, or to prepare the way to present a truth not yet fully developed, but about to be, either by facts or explicit instruction. The scope or design of the parable is what we are to seek, and not pervert the truth of God by the assumption that the parable is a reality that "has been or may be;" nor, yet, that every item in it was ever designed to have an application to the subject it was intended to illustrate. By such assumptions discredit has been thrown on revelation, the truth of God been converted into food for the most fanatical, and men have turned to "cunningly devised fables." If any doubt whether parables are not sometimes purely fictitious, let them read the parable of the eagles' cropping the cedar, Ezk. 17: 1-10; the parable of the "ewe lamb," 2 Saml. 12: 1-7; and the parable of the trees choosing a king, Judges, 9: 7-15. It is said the rich man must be conscious, for he sees, feels and talks. We reply—It was common among the Hebrews to represent things without life as knowing, feeling and conversing: see Gen. 4: 10; Hab. 2: 11; Isa. 14: 8; Psa. 93: 3; Prov. 8: 1-3; Prov. 9: 1-5, &c. Our Lord, then, was in no danger of being understood, in this parable, as teaching the consciousness of dead men, and especially, as the Hebrew scriptures expressly taught, "the dead praise not the Lord"—that "their thoughts perish in the very day" they die—that, "the dead know not anything"—and that, "there is no knowledge in sheol," where dead men go: and further, inasmuch as Jesus uses the expression in Greek, to show the state of the rich man after death, that exactly corresponds with the Hebrew sheol, viz., hades, he could be understood in no other way than as using a fabulous discourse, like that to which we have previously referred in the Old Testament, to illustrate an unpalatable subject to his deriding hearers. We will now, before giving our present view of this parable, present explanations and admissions of eminent men, whose "orthodoxy" in regard to the conscious state of the dead is undoubted, yet their view of this parable goes to show that they suppose it may have a different interpretation from that usually given. The first author is Dr. GILL, who makes a two-fold application of it, and supposes it may apply to the torment of wicked Jews after death, or to calamities that were to come upon them in this world. He says:

"The rich man died: 'It may also be understood of the political and ecclesiastical death of the Jewish people, which lay in the destruction of the city of Jerusalem, and of the temple, and in the abolition of the temple worship, and of the whole ceremonial law: a Loammi was written upon their church state, and the covenant between God and them was broken; the gospel was removed from them, which was as death, as the return of it, and their call by it, will be as life from the dead; as well as their place and nation, their civil power and authority were taken away from them by the Romans, and a death of afflictions, by captivity and calamities of every kind, have attended them ever since.'

"In hell—in torments: 'This may regard the vengeance of God on the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, when a fire was kindled against their land, and burned to the lowest hell, and consumed the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains; and the whole land became brimstone, salt, and burning; and they were rooted out of it in anger, wrath, and great indignation—see Dent. xxix. 23, 27, 28, xxxii. 22—or rather the dreadful calamities which came upon them in the times of Adrian, at Bithur; when their false messiah, Bar Cochab, was taken and slain, and such multitudes of them were destroyed, in the most miserable manner, when that people, who before had their eyes darkened, and a spirit of slumber and stupidity fallen upon them, in those calamities began to be under some convictions." Expos. in loc.

THEOPHYLACT.—This ancient writer first applies the parable to the concerns of the next life. He then says:

"But this parable can also be explained in the way of allegory; so that we may say, that by the rich man is signified the Jewish people; for they were formerly rich, abounding in all divine knowledge, wisdom, and instruction, which are more excellent than gold or precious stones. And they were arrayed in purple and fine linen, as they possessed a kingdom and a priesthood, and were themselves a royal priesthood to God. The purple denoted their kingdom, and the fine linen their priesthood; for the Levites were clothed in sacerdotal vestments of fine linen, and they fed sumptuously, and lived splendidly, every day. Daily did they offer the morning and the evening sacrifice, which they also called the continual sacrifice. But Lazarus was the Gentile people, poor in divine grace and wisdom, and lying before the gates; for it was not permitted to the Gentiles to enter the house itself, because they were considered a pollution. Thus, in the Acts of the Apostles, we read that it was alleged against Paul, that he had introduced Gentiles into the temple, and made that holy place common or unclean. Moreover, those people were full of fetid sores of sin, on which the impudent dogs, or devils, fed, who delight themselves in our sores. The Gentiles likewise desired even the crumbs which fell from the tables of the rich; for they were wholly destitute of that bread which strengthens the heart of man, and wanted even the smallest morsel of food; so that the Canaanite woman, (Matt. xv. 27.) when she was a heathen, desired to be fed with the crumbs. In short, the Hebrew people were dead unto God, and their bones, which could not be moved to do good, were perished. Lazarus also (I mean the Gentile people,) was dead in sin, and the envious Jews, who were dead in sins, did actually burn in a flame of jealousy, as saith the Apostle, on account of the Gentiles being received into the faith, and because that those who had before been a poor and despised Gentile race, were now in the bosom of Abraham, the father of nations, and justly, indeed, were they thus received. For it was while Abraham was yet a Gentile, that he believed God, and turned from the worship of idols to the knowledge of God. Therefore, it was proper that they who were partakers of this conversion and faith, should rest in his bosom, sharing the same final lot, the same habitation, and the same blessedness. And the Jewish people longed for one drop of the former legal sprinklings and purifications, to refresh their tongue, that they might confidently say to us, that the law was still efficacious and availing. But it was not; for the law was only until John. And the Psalmist says, sacrifice and oblations thou wouldst not, &c." Annot. in loc.

JAMES BATE, M. A., Rector of Delford, says:—"We will suppose, then, the rich man who fared so sumptuously, to be the Jew, so amply enriched with the heavenly treasure of divine revelation. The poor beggar who lay at his gate, in so miserable a plight, was the poor Gentile, now reduced to the last degree of want, in regard to religious knowledge. The crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, and which the beggar was so desirous of picking up, were such fragments of patriarchal and Jewish traditions, as their travelling philosophers were able to pick up with their utmost care and diligence. And those philosophers were also the dogs that licked the sores of heathenism, and endeavored to supply the wants of divine revelation, by such schemes and hypotheses, concerning the nature of the gods, and the obligation of moral duties, as (due allowance for their ignorance and frailties) did no small honor to human nature, and yet thereby plainly showed, how little a way unassisted reason could go, without some supernatural help, as one of the wisest of them frankly confessed. About one and the same time, the beggar dies, and is carried by the Angels (i. e., God's spiritual messengers to mankind,) into Abraham's bosom; that is, he is engrafted into the church of God. And the rich man also dies and is buried. He dies what we call a political death. His dispensation ceases. He is rejected from being any longer the peculiar son of God. The people whom he parabolically represents, are miserably destroyed by the Romans, and the wretched remains of them, driven into exile over the face of the earth, were vagabonds, with a kind of mark set upon them, like Cain, their prototype, for a like crime; and which mark may perhaps be their adherence to the law. Whereby it came amazingly to pass, that these people, though dispersed, yet still dwell alone and separate, not being reckoned among the nations, as Balaam foretold. The rich man being reduced to this state of misery, complains bitterly of his hard fate, but is told by Abraham, that he slipped his opportunity, while Lazarus laid hold on his, and now receives the comfort of it. The Jew complains of the want of more evidence, to convince his countrymen, the five brethren, and would fain have Lazarus sent from the dead to convert him. But Abraham tells him, that if their own scriptures cannot convince them of their error, neither would they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead. And exactly so it proved in the event. For this parable was delivered towards the end of the third year of our Lord's ministry; and in the fourth, or following year of it, the words put into the mouth of Abraham, as the conclusion of the parable, are most literally verified, by our Lord's raising another Lazarus from the dead. And we may presume, that the beggar had the fictitious name of Lazarus given him in the parable, not without some reason, since the supposed request of the rich man was fully answered, by our Lord's raising another, and a real Lazarus, from the dead. But what was the consequence? Did this notorious miracle convince the rich man's brethren? No, truly. His visit to them from the dead was so far from convincing them, that they actually consulted together, that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that, by reason of him, many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus. So much for the true sense of this parable.

After such testimony, we trust we shall not incur the censure of heresy if we state our conviction of the true intent and scope of this parable.

The context shows that our Lord's design was to illustrate the effect upon two classes of men that would result from the change of dispensation from the law of Moses to the gospel of grace, now to be fully preached to all nations, which new dispensation was "the mystery, which in other ages [or, dispensations] was not made known unto the sons of men;" but, being now about to be "revealed unto holy apostles," would change the condition of both Jews and Gentiles; which change is aptly represented by the figure, death, in the parable: as the state and condition of both parties would be entirely changed. Let the reader please turn to the chapter, and see how our Lord introduces this parable. After having spoken of the law and the prophets being preached until John, and that since that time the kingdom of God was preached, he intimates that the law was about to have its last and perfect accomplishment—that the last "little" of it was about to be "finished:" that then the Jews would be like the wife whose husband was dead, the law not binding them any longer; and that God, who had dealt with them under the title of husband, would be at full liberty to select a new bride out of all nations. Thus Paul reasons, Rom. 7: 1—4. "Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if while her husband liveth she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." Now read the verse with which the parable of the rich man is introduced, Luke 16: 18. "Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband, committeth adultery." So long as the law given by Moses continued, the Jews were chargeable with adultery if they lacked in fidelity to that law as unto God their husband; but nationally they had often been wanting in fidelity, and the law was no longer to be the marriage contract; a new covenant, ratified by the blood of Christ, and not by the blood of bulls or goats, was to form the ground by which the new bride was to hold her relationship to God, and through which she was to receive the blessings promised. The law being dead "by the body," or death, "of Christ," still to cleave to that law, as the Jew did, was to commit adultery, and bring upon themselves all its curses: they died unto Christ by rejecting him and putting him to death, and "were broken off" from Abraham's bosom, or from all spiritual connection with him, and have been in "torments" unto this day in consequence: while the believing soul, who received Christ, even though he had been a polluted Gentile, "full of sores," died unto the law [see Rom. 7: 4] and was grafted into the good "olive tree," or was translated through the instrumentality of angels [messengers, or ministers of Christ] "into Abraham's bosom," became a child of Abraham and an heir, according to the promise, to the kingdom of God. The Jews, as a nation, had their "good things" in their "life time," or while they held the relation of bride to their Maker; but now being dead, nationally, in reference to that relation they are tormented, grievously and sorely tormented; and all their appeals, as to their relation to Abraham, have proved unavailing; and it has added not a little to their torment and sorrow to see the Gentiles enjoying rich blessings from which they find themselves shut out. We speak, of course, particularly of social, civil, and political blessing, in which they possessed "much" advantage "every way," in the days of their national prosperity. But an impassable gulf exists between them and the Gentiles now: but even that is no where said to be eternal. It will indeed continue to the end of this age, or dispensation; or till the Redeemer returns to Zion. Till that time there will be no national repentance; but, then will be fulfilled the prophecy of Zech. 12: 10—14.

The Jews, as a nation, hitherto have professed that their rejection of Jesus as the promised Messiah was want of evidence; like the rich man, in the parable, they have constantly cried, from the days of Jesus, for more evidence. "Let him come down from the cross and we will believe." But when he "rose from the dead," as the rich man is represented as desiring one to do, to convince the unrepenting Jews, instead of repentance being produced in them, as a nation, they put to death the witnesses of that glorious event. Who can contemplate the untold sufferings of that nation from the time Jerusalem was compassed about with armies, and their city destroyed, to the present generation, and not discover the propriety of the parable our Lord employed to illustrate those torments and their hopeless state? Surely we have in this view a full explanation of the parable.

LETTERS.

BR. E. HOTT, Farmington, Mich., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—The doctrine of Redemption from literal death, or of dead men from the dust of the earth, and the destruction of the wicked by the second death, in the lake of fire, is fast spreading in this State. Nearly all who have been looking for the Lord, for a few years past, believe the doctrine, and others are beginning to adopt it. I have lately attended two conferences in Indiana, and one just through, twenty miles west from Detroit. In both meetings the sleep of the dead and perdition of the wicked was held forth with power. Several believers were baptized for the remission of sins and the resurrection of the dead. There is seen to be a beautiful harmony of the doctrines of the Bible in this view of the penalty of the first sin; and it makes the resurrection, as the Bible does, our only hope of immortality and eternal life.

BR. H. ALLEN, Mogadore, Ohio, writes:—

BR. STORRS:—Having had an opportunity to peruse the "Bible Examiner," and being willing to learn from any and every source, we have concluded to take the last numbers of the present volume, and longer, should you continue publishing. There are a number here who believe that life and immortality are the attributes of the Kingdom of God; the reward of the saints which they will receive at the resurrection.

We have those also who advocate the heathen dogma, that man has an immortal soul, a part of God, which is to enjoy happiness or endure misery throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. Yes! that a part of God is to be eternally scorched in hell!! How wonderfully absurd.

Yours, in hope of immortality and eternal life.

BR. J. B. TYLER, Lackawack, N. Y., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I send enclosed subscription money for the Bible Examiner, which I have received regular; and for four years past I have met no religious paper so interesting to me as the Examiner. It is good ground to be on to walk by faith in present views, and convictions of duty, rather than to claim that past views and character must sanctify and make perfect the present and future. We should be daily learners. I read the * * * * and * * * * weekly, and I have an interest in them; but it is often, very often, I am grieved and wounded by the manifestations of exclusiveness there. All social and religious bodies, whether good or bad, love their own and have some way to show it. Why don't we take the one step from morality alone to Christianity, and love all for Christ's sake? For one, I want to be Christ-like as far as I may be.

BR. HENRY E. CARVER, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I believe that we are living in the period of the world's history, when we may reasonably expect the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom under the whole heavens. My reasons for this belief are partly as follows:—In the prophecy of David, under the symbols of the four divisions of the image, and also the four beasts, we have presented to our vision the entire reign of Gentile kingdoms, or power; reaching from the time of Babylon to the setting up of the Kingdom of God; and, consequently, we must be living somewhere in the range of the prophecy referred to above. Where are we in the prophetic history? In the head of the image or the first beast? No—it is numbered with the things that were. In the second or third succeeding powers? No—they also are past. Then where are we? In the fourth and last division of the image, or under the dominion of the fourth and last "dreadful and terrible beast," even that beast that had the "little horn," that had eyes and a mouth speaking great things. But in what part of the last universal monarchy are we? Not in the legs, nor simply in the feet, but in the very toes of the image—in the very part that will first be demolished by the "stone" kingdom. Daniel, in describing the last earthly kingdom as symbolized by the terrible beast, brings us down through its successive changes until he sees the "little horn" arise, and then says: I beheld till the thrones were cast down. This is the last event here mentioned prior to the sitting of Judgment, and who that will duly consider the present condition of the different parts of the last great kingdom, but will be constrained to say: this is that spoken by the prophet Daniel, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down;" and as the judgment is mentioned next in order and connection, the conclusion is inevitable, that the second advent of the Son of God is at hand.

Looking at the signs given by the blessed Jesus, to tell us when his kingdom was nigh at hand, we are forced to the same conclusion.

My soul magnifies the Lord for what I have learned since the notes of the "angel having the everlasting gospel to preach," began to swell upon the breeze, and came floating in cheering and life-giving strains over the mountains. Many things have I learned concerning the "faith once given to the Saints"—truths that had been obscured and almost obliterated by contact with sectarian interpretation, have been rescued from their situation, cleansed of their unseemly traditions, by the washing of water by the word, and now present themselves as glorious gems in that girdle of truth worn by every Bible Christian. Let us see to it that we have on this girdle, and bind it closely round our minds, having on the whole armor and our lamp in our hand, our light burning, and we waiting for our Lord, that when He shall descend from heaven with a shout, &c., we may be caught up to meet and ever be with him. Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus.

BR. R. E. LADD, Conway, Mass., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—You perceive by the head of this that I have removed from my former abode. I have been here several months, and have a noble field for labor. My soul is absorbed in the subject of Life and Immortality through Jesus Christ; and I present the "word of God" on this subject, in every place, and on all proper occasions; and I am certain that within the circle of my acquaintance it is becoming more and more interesting; prejudice is removing and light is appearing as the day is approaching.

I am exceedingly edified and instructed by the Examiner, and hail its monthly coming with intense solicitude, and only regret it could not appear semi-monthly, or weekly. If I had the means of my own it should be so. I shall try to obtain fifty good paying subscribers for the present volume. Not one of my subscribers, who take the Examiner, wish it discontinued, and I cannot say as much of any other advent paper for which I have ever felt an interest. May God speed you in your efforts to spread light and truth on the most momentous subject the Bible contains.

BR. LADD has already forwarded us between thirty and forty names for the present volume of the Examiner, and still is sending more. Among five hundred new subscribers, we have received for the present volume, we believe there has not been an individual who has requested a discontinuance; and among old subscribers not more than two or three; and all new subscribers, with two exceptions, have ordered the Examiner from the commencement of the present volume. We can accept no new subscribers upon any other conditions, so long as we can supply the entire volume.—ED. EX.

BR. D. B. ELDERD, Homer, Mich., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I was not able to attend the meeting at Nankin, that I spoke of in my former letter; but Br. E. Miller gave me an account of it. A goodly number assembled, and the disciples, except a very few, have embraced the Bible view of Life and Death; as also the record God hath given of His Son. By means of the "Six Sermons," and the labors of Br. Seymour and wife, with God's blessing, some five or six families have fully embraced the faith. Several others were "pricked in their hearts." Br. Miller exhorted them to "repent and be baptized every one of them." Several came forward and were baptized. My prayer is that they may remain steadfast. The cause, every where that I can hear from in this region, is steadily on the gain. I had a visit a short time since with my brother-in-law, to whom I sent the "Six Sermons," mentioned in my last letter. He is now rejoicing in hope of eternal life at the restitution. Could you be present at some of the meetings on Br. Miller's circuit, and hear the brethren giving praise and glory to God for sending Br. Storrs' Sermons as an agent to open the eyes of their understanding, it would do you good. But some of the D. D.'s are cursing you for what they call infidelity.

But, "Blessed are ye, when men shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for Christ's sake." Go on, brother, in the strength of Israel's God. The battle will soon be over. The Roman kingdom is fast ripening for destruction. Yours, in hope of eternal glory.

BR. N. A. HITCHCOCK, Tyler, Ill., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—Since I wrote you, and received the papers and sermons, I have learned that the truth which they contain is accomplishing some good, for which I rejoice; for none of us should, and no amiable heart can be indifferent with regard to what is vice and virtue, or truth and error. It appears to me written in burning letters, that man is a mortal, dying creature; that the punishment due to sin is death; and the only security against it is to put on Christ—become new creatures. By maintaining this state, or character unto the end, we shall, if sleeping, be "raised up at the last day," or if living, be changed to live forever; and we then put on an immortal and incorruptible nature, like Christ, to die no more. The hope of this glorious state saves us even now, "For we are saved by hope." Rom. 8: 24. And the excellency of the power of this hope is to save us as the anchor saves the vessel from wreck while encountering a mighty storm; and we have, as a pledge, that the storm will end, and that mortality will be swallowed up of life.

BR. ELON EVERTS, writes from New Haven, Vt.:

BR. STORRS:—I find the "Bible Examiner" to be what it purports to be; not that I would be understood that it may not err in some points, or at least not yet fully attained to the full light; for had it, I ought to be content with the past numbers; but, believing that light is sown for the righteous, and that it will illuminate the path of the Christian more and more to their journey's end; therefore, my feeble voice is, may God imbue the hearts of all that speak through its columns with love, and that spirit that leads into all truth.

I wish to remember and obey the sayings of Jesus, to lend, even if there is no prospect of receiving again. I see many who are spell-bound with the iron bands of human creeds, cruel tradition and stupidity, hardly believing that God will do good or bring evil. I think the influence of the "Examiner" is to melt down those barriers, that have swelled to mountains, to oppose the truth. This induces me to hope to do some good by "lending" it. I dislike to be destitute of it, therefore I send you $3.00; send me as many copies as you please. I think the Examiner is doing a work that no other paper in America can do.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY:

OR, THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN IN RELATION TO IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE.

By J. T. WALSH.

No. III.

MENTAL DISEASE AND DEATH.

In our last article on the constitution of man, we promised to take up the subject of Mental Diseases, and to apply our reasonings on the subject to the doctrine of immortality and eternal life; and we now proceed to the execution of the work.

1. Let the reader remember the position of our opponents that, when the man is dead, and his brain resolved into dust, he still thinks and feels.

OUR INFERENCE, OR DEDUCTION: If the above be true, NO DISEASE OR INJURY OF THE BRAIN SHOULD INTERRUPT THE MANIFESTATIONS OF THE MIND.

But disease and accidents do destroy the manifestations of the mind; and now for the proof:

2. A number of persons are born idiots, and never manifest any mind at all. Why is this, if the mind—the intellect, be independent of cerebral organization? If men can think and reason without any brain, (that is, when they are dead,) what should hinder them from thinking with an imperfect brain? And if they cannot reason with an idiotic or imperfect brain, how are they to do so without any brain at all?

3. Again:—In childhood, the mind is as feeble as the body; in youth we find that, as the physical powers are developed, expanded and enlarged, so are the mental; and when manhood arrives, we discover those gigantic intellectual faculties, which are the combined result of a sound, well matured, and well developed organization and education.—In childhood, we behold these faculties in an embryo state. We see them gradually unfolding, like the rose, up through youth, until manhood presents us with a full blown intellect, all fragrant with wisdom and knowledge! But in old age, the mind is again as feeble as the body. The whole system, including the brain, becomes shrunk and enfeebled—the limbs totter, and fancy's fires decay.

Why is this, if the mind be immortal? If this were so, should not the mind be as strong, as brilliant, and as profound in childhood and old age, as in the prime of manhood? Upon the hypothesis, that it is immortal, it certainly should.

4. Even the state of the atmosphere will affect the mind, either elevating or depressing it. Is an immortal mind subject to atmospheric changes?

5. When the body is diseased, weakness and imbecility of mind are the consequences. What then must be the consequence when the body is dead? Let revelation answer: "In that very day their thoughts perish."

6. When the skull is fractured and pressure is made upon the brain, all consciousness is suspended; while no such phenomena takes place with any other organ. We will state a few cases in proof of this subject. M. Richerand had a patient whose brain was exposed in consequence of disease of the skull. One day, in washing off the purulent matter, he chanced to press with more than usual force, and instantly the patient, who, the moment before, had answered his questions with perfect correctness, stopped short in the middle of a sentence, and became altogether insensible. As the pressure gave her no pain, it was repeated thrice, and always with the same result. She uniformly recovered her faculties the moment the pressure was taken off. He, also, mentions the case of an individual who was trepanned for a fracture of the skull, and whose FACULTIES and CONSCIOUSNESS became weak in proportion as the pus so accumulated under the dressings as to occasion pressure of the brain.

A man at the battle of Waterloo had a small portion of his skull beaten in upon the brain, and became unconscious, and almost lifeless. But Mr. Cooper having raised up the depressed portion of the bone, the patient immediately arose, dressed himself, became perfectly rational, and recovered rapidly. Professor Chapman, of Philadelphia, mentions in his Lectures, that he saw an individual with his skull perforated and the brain exposed, who used to submit himself to the same experiment of pressure as that performed on Richerand's patient, and who was exhibited by the late Professor Wistar to his class. The man's intellect and moral faculties disappeared when pressure was applied to the brain: they were literally held under the thumb, and could be restored at pleasure to their full activity. A still more remarkable case is that of a person named Jones, recorded by Sir Astly Cooper. Jones was deprived of consciousness, by being wounded in the head while on board a vessel in the Mediterranean Sea. In this state of insensibility he remained for several months in Gibraltar, whence he was transmitted to Deptford, and subsequently to St. Thomas's Hospital, London. Mr. Cline the Surgeon, found a portion of the skull depressed, trepanned him, and removed the depressed portion of the bone. Three hours after the operation, he sat up in bed, sensation and volition returned, and in four days he was enabled to get up and converse. The last circumstance he remembered, was the capture of a prize in the Mediterranean thirteen months before.

Will any Christian, or Christian Philosopher, reconcile these phenomena with consciousness in, and after, death? If thought and consciousness can be suspended by pressure on the brain, during life, what becomes of thought and consciousness after death? Are they in full exercise? Let the Bible answer: "The dead know not any thing."

7. In a swoon, blood is rapidly withdrawn from the brain, and total unconsciousness is the result. This should not be the case, if the mind were immortal.

8. The phenomena of sleep furnish another proof that mind is developed by the cerebrum. In profound sleep all consciousness is suspended, which is incompatible with the idea of the mind being altogether independent of the brain; for we cannot conceive of an immaterial principle asleep and unconscious.

9. To sum up all the diseased states of the mind during life, we would ask, how are they compatible with the possession of an incorruptible and deathless mind? Only upon the hypothesis that the intellectual powers are totally independent of the immortal soul? And if all the intellectual powers are independent of the immortal soul, and thus become subject to disease, what is the soul which is left? A perfect blank—A NONENTITY.

10. But death closes the scene: "In death," says David, "there is no remembrance of thee!" "In sleep who shall give thee thanks?" None! No, not one!!

"BORN OF WATER."

However others may differ on the subject of being born of water, to me it is clear that it has not the most remote allusion to our natural birth. In the 1st chapter of John the natural birth is spoken of as the product of the "will of man, the will (or lust) of the flesh," and "of blood." And, hence, in the conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus said to him, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." That is, it is like its origin—fleshly—not spiritual. Thus, "The first man was of the earth—earthly"—animal, fleshly. Nicodemus predicated his hope upon his fleshly birth—upon his being a son of Abraham, according to the flesh. And the object before the Lord's mind at the time, was to correct this fatal error. John the Baptist taught the Jews:—"Think not to say within yourselves we have Abraham to our father, for God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham." In our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus, we have this subject presented and illustrated in the clearest manner. "Except a man," says Jesus, "be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus having his whole mind pre-occupied by his fleshly birth, exclaims, "how can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" Nicodemus does not comprehend the subject. Now, what did Jesus do? He explains the truth he had previously announced to Nicodemus, by saying "except a man be born of water, and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh," (and not water.) "And that which is born of the spirit, is spirit, (or spiritual.)" Marvel not that I said to thee, ye must be born again," (the very proposition which he had at first announced.) To be "born again," then, is to be "born of water and spirit." Not "of water and or spirit," but "of water and the spirit"—two agents, but only one birth. This "new birth," then, is a perfect anti-type of the natural birth. The first animal, the second moral or spiritual. Generation involves a process. Re-generation involves the same. It is a law of nature, and of nature's God, that nothing can be born without "emerging" from that of which it is born. Now the saints are born from above—"born of God." He is their FATHER; and they, as his children, are "begotten unto a lively hope." His word—his truth—indited by his Spirit, is the instrument—the "seed," and an "emergence" from the water completes the one birth. And thus it is that we are "born again, not of corruptible seed" (as in the first case;) but of incorruptible by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." There is not one birth of water, and another of spirit; consequently, no "coming up out of the spirit;" but it is a process in which the Spirit of God, the word, and water, are concerned as agencies, concurring to produce the one result—A NEW BIRTH, of a holy, moral, and heavenly character. And this view of the subject harmonizes with what Paul says in his Letter to Timothy, concerning "the washing of re-generation, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit."

Making two births of one, has introduced all the confusion which we find on this subject. For, whoever severs what Jesus united in the production of the new birth, will make sad havoc of his teaching, and, also destroy the decorum of the figure. It is impossible to be born of water, in the Scriptural sense, without first being "begotten of God." A man may be immersed a thousand times, and if he be not previously begotten by the truth, he will be a spurious offspring—a bastard, having no divine paternity! That which is born of flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of water ONLY is water!

HOMO.

REMARKS ON HOMO'S POSITION.

If we understand "Homo" he makes literal water just as essential to the new birth as the Spirit of God. Without the water the Spirit could not produce a new birth. He says the "Spirit and water are two agents producing one birth;" and that "this new birth is a perfect anti-type of the natural birth;" and that "Regeneration involves the same process." That is, there cannot be a birth without a father to beget and a mother to bring forth. In the new birth he makes the Spirit the father and the water the mother; if so, we confess we cannot see how a person can be "begotten" except in the water. But, if we understand "Homo," he says a man must be previously begotten, or by immersion he is only "a bastard." If he is "previously begotten," that is while out of the water, then "the process" is not a perfect anti-type of the natural birth; certainly a child was never begotten out of its mother's matrix—that is the mould in which it is "begotten." But "Homo" seems to admit that "truth" is that by which the new man is "begotten." If so, is not the man's own heart the matrix in which the "seed" is deposited? and not in literal water. In the "natural birth" the child "emerges" from the place where the "seed" is deposited. If so, and the new birth is a perfect anti-type of the natural birth, must not the new birth be effected by an "emergence" of some sort, out of the heart of man, or, in other words, be a purely spiritual work, and not a material one? as it would be, at least in part, if it is an emergence from literal water.

"Homo" has a criticism on the word "or;" and says, it is "not of the water, and or the Spirit; but, of water and the spirit." Though the word "of" is not in the 5th verse, in immediate connection with the "Spirit," yet in the next verse our Lord expressly says, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit;" so that we confess, we do not see the force of the criticism: and "Homo," himself, afterwards says "The Saints are born of God." To be born of God and born of the Spirit we cannot suppose differs essentially; so that he, in fact, admits all that we contend for. If a man is "born of God" we cannot conceive that an "emergence" from the water completes the one birth." If so—How was the dying thief born of God? if such a thing ever happened. Or, how were Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the prophets born again? No such completion of the new birth is recorded of any of them. Does the new birth now and the new birth in the days of patriarchs and prophets differ essentially? If not, and they did not have an "emergence" from the water; to "complete the one birth," how can it be shown that in order to the new birth a man must emerge from water? Let us not be misunderstood: we believe baptism is an ordinance of our Lord; and one that should not be neglected; but, is it a part of the new birth? or, essential to that birth? If so, it was always essential. It was just as essential to the patriarchs and prophets as to apostles and other christians. There may be duties essential to be attended to in one age that are not in another; but this is not to be viewed in the light of a duty that depends on positive law, in this controversy. The question here is not so much about baptism, itself, as whether literal water is essential to the new birth. We know that without the new birth a man cannot enter into the kingdom of God: Is an "emergence from water" essential to "the one birth?" If so, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, so far as we have any knowledge, did not experience it; and yet we know that our Saviour hath said—"Ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God;" Lk. 13: 28.

"Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

"Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets" shall be in that kingdom:

ERGO: Then THEY will have been "born again." Yet we have not the slightest evidence that they "emerged from water." Therefore: Water is not essential to the new birth. We repeat what we have said before: we believe baptism to be an ordinance under the latest development of grace, and that all who embrace the Lord Jesus Christ should attend to it: but we consider it appointed for a very different purpose than that of completing the new birth.

By ELDER P. M. WAV.

"Then shall ye return, and discern, between the righteous and the wicked."—Malachi 3: 18.

This text affirms that clearer light shall be reflected on the character and blessedness of the righteous, under the gospel dispensation. By the gospel of Jesus Christ, "life and immortality are brought to light." "Adam was made a living soul;" Jesus Christ "was made a quickening spirit." Man, though lost, may be "created anew in Christ Jesus," may "pass from death unto life," which "life is in Christ." All, then, who obtain the righteousness which is by faith of Jesus Christ, are restored to the divine image and favour, constituted sons of God, and have secured to them all spiritual blessings, and a deliverance from all the evils which shall finally fall upon the wicked. Among these blessings, is not the least, that the righteous, soon as physical life ends, shall enter upon scenes of conscious blessedness, in the society of "the spirits of just men made perfect." There are many arguments in proof of the above proposition, but I shall confine my remarks to a very few, which, if I possess the power to "discern," are uncontrovertible. Prov. 4: 18. "The path of the just is as a shining light, which shineth more and more to the perfect day." And when the perfect day breaks upon the soul, does it sink into a dark, unconscious sleep? No, verily; the wicked may go into darkness, but the righteous shall be "light in the Lord." Hear the great teacher, Jno. 11: 26, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Physical death does not interrupt our "life in Christ." "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." Death cannot separate us from Christ.

The Saviour has illustrated, and given us positive assurance of this precious truth, Matt. 22: 31, 32. "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. For all live unto him." i. e., all those who have died in the Lord, are alive still, and subjects of God's kingdom. But how plainly is this taught in Christ's transfiguration, Matt. 17: 1-3, when "Moses and Elias appeared, talking with him." Surely, Moses and Elias, though they had been dead more than a thousand years, were not slumbering unconsciously! Again, the promise of Christ to the repenting thief, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," is so plain, as not to require a comment. What some are pleased to call a parable, (Luke 16: 19-31,) of Lazarus and a certain rich man, must carry conviction to every conscience, that the spirit of man exists, consciously, separate from the body. 2d Cor. 5: 1-10, can never be construed, by fair interpretation, to sustain the notion that the soul of the pious, when "this earthly tabernacle is dissolved," ceases its consciousness." It was that assurance, that his spirit should dwell in conscious happiness, when free from its present "house," that inspired in the bosom of Paul (Phil. 1: 21) "A desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." There are many other proofs from the Bible, but, to my mind, the above texts establish the doctrine beyond successful contradiction. I have not commented on the above texts, for the simple reason, there is no necessity. I have seen attempts to explain them away, but never read anything but what a biblical scholar ought to be ashamed of.

I know it is said, though there are difficulties in the above passage, yet the scriptures do teach that "The dead know nothing!" Now, I apprehend hend, the mistake lies in not "discerning between the righteous and the wicked;" and applying, indiscriminately, those passages of scripture, to the righteous and the wicked, which lie exclusively against the wicked. To notice a few of the most prominent which are thus misapplied, (I shall not controvert, here, the meaning of the term death, but will meet the argument on the supposition that all is implied that the destructionist claims, reserving the privilege of holding my own opinion.) It is said, "The Bible teaches that MAN, THE SOUL, as well as the body, dies." Gen. 2: 17; "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." "On what authority?" it is asked, "do we affirm that this is inapplicable to the entire man? On what authority do we affirm that the main part of man, the very part which is chiefly guilty of transgression, shall escape the penalty, and never die at all?" I answer, from the very good authority, a promise, which was subsequently made, that, though life was forfeited by sin, "Life and immortality" should be brought back and offered to man through Jesus Christ, so, that, all who believe in him "shall never die." But it is said, "man was not created immortal." And will you affirm, that he was not created conditionally immortal? Will you affirm, "though he had obeyed God, yet he must have died"? Nay, do you not affirm, that, after his fall, if he had access to the tree of life, he would "become immortal in sin"? Is it not clear, then, that spiritual life and spiritual death were involved in the penalty, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die"? And that physical or temporal death followed as a consequence? "The creature was made subject to death, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." If so, then, God "told the truth," and "the serpent" lied.

Again, it is said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4. "Why, then, do any speak of the never dying soul?" I answer; for the very good reason, that God added Ezek. 18: 21-23; "If the wicked will turn from his wickedness—do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die." How my good brother Storrs, or any lover of truth, could overlook this plain, positive assurance, is beyond my comprehension. "Ye shall discern between the righteous and the wicked." Again, we are referred to Ps. 146: 4, and Eccl. 9: 5, 6, 10. "The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward—also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished." I answer, does this apply to the righteous and the wicked alike? or, can "we discern between them"? By reading the third and fifth verses of Ps. 146, in connexion with the fourth verse, you will see that this language is affirmed of a wicked prince, in whom the righteous are forbidden to trust, because, when he dieth "his thoughts perish." So of Eccl. 9. Though the same event, physical or temporal death, happen to the righteous and the wicked, whilst the wicked perish, "The righteous, and the wise and their works, are in the hand of God." Eccl. 9: 1. Surely, then, there is a difference "between the righteous and the wicked." "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness, but the righteous hath hope in his death." Prov. 14: 32. "Ps. 6: 5, is quoted, 'In death there is no remembrance of thee,' and also Ps. 115: 17, 'The dead praise not the Lord.' And, as though the question was settled, it is said, 'The pious poet said, 'And when my voice is lost in death, praise shall employ my nobler powers.'" "The pious psalmist said, 'The dead praise not the Lord.'" Your quotation from Dr. Watts, is as one-sided as from the Bible. Speaking of the wicked, the Doctor says,

"Like brutes they live, like brutes they die,
Like grass they flourish, till thy breath,
Blasts them in everlasting death."

So, in quoting from the Bible. It is the wicked "who go down into silence! that praise not the Lord. But we will bless (or praise) the Lord from this time forth, and for ever more!" And that, too, without a space of several thousand years cessation. The wicked do not "remember and praise God." No, verily, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave," but the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." Let the wearisome hours of darkness and gloom press down the righteous here, and let the wicked triumph, death changes the scene. The light, shining in the distance, becomes clearer and clearer, till the light of the spirit world breaks upon his enraptured vision! Well did the psalmist say of the "ungodly who prosper in the world," "Surely thou didst set them in slippery places: thou castedst them down into destruction. How are they brought into desolation, as in a moment! O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image."

But, how different with the righteous; "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. My flesh and my heart fail, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever." I consider the question, "Is the soul of the righteous conscious between death and the resurrection?" one which does not necessarily involve other questions generally appended to it, and have thus considered it; but, as Brother Storrs affirms, that life is only attained at, or by the resurrection, I may hereafter devote an article to that subject. I will close the present, already too long, by a "reply" to your exposition of John 14: 1-3. "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself." Now, all is made to turn on the time when Christ "will come again." Does it mean at the resurrection, "at the last day"? How prove you this? By begging the question. Let me state the argument. Christ will come to raise the dead at the last day: therefore, whenever the Scriptures speak of Christ's coming, it must always, necessarily, mean at the resurrection. Pardon me, brother; your argument certainly reads thus to me. In the 18th verse of the same chapter, Christ said, "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you." And in the 23d verse, "We will come," i. e., I and my Father "will come unto him," &c. Now, no sane man will affirm that Christ here means, in the resurrection. Again, Matt. 18: 20, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." And Rev. 3: 20, "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him," &c. Was Stephen mistaken, when in death he said, "I see Jesus," and cried, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit"? No, verily. Christ did come and take his redeemed spirit to "a place prepared." Was Paul mistaken when he said, "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens"? "To depart and be with Christ is far better"? "The

Yours, for truth,
Syracuse, August, 1848. P. M. WAY.

REMARKS ON BR. WAY'S LETTER.

Br. Way's leading and concluding text—"Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked,"—declares a blessed truth, but we dissent from its application to the "gospel dispensation," if he means by that phrase the dispensation under which we now live. "Then shall ye return," &c. When? Answer. "IN THE DAY when I make up my jewels:" then will God "spare them that feared the Lord," &c., "as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. 3: 16, 17. In that day "ye shall return and discern between the righteous and the wicked," &c., "for, behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Br. Way will not pretend that day has come yet; but that is the day in which ye shall "discern between the righteous and the wicked."

Br. W. says,—"The righteous, soon as physical life ends, shall enter upon scenes of conscious blessedness, in the society of 'the spirits of just men made perfect.'" If this text, Heb. 12: 23, proves any thing in favour of the theory of Br. W., it proves too much, for Paul says—"Ye are come," &c., not you "shall, soon as physical life ends." Br. W. says—"Death cannot separate us from Christ." He doubtless refers to Rom. 8: 35-39; though he does not give it as a quotation. If any one will examine the text, they will see, at a glance, that Br. W.'s conclusion is not quite correct. Death, indeed, "cannot separate us from the love of Christ," nor "from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord;" therefore he will raise his saints from the dead; for that redemption Paul groaned; see verse 23. The saints "sleep" at death, "in the dust of the earth;" not separated from the love of Christ, but in his love and remembrance; and when he "descends from heaven" they shall awake, and no longer be separate from him.

If they are not separated in the sense of being "absent" from Christ, by death, so neither are they separated by "life," or while they live; for Paul affirms the same of life that he does of death in Rom. 8th. The text has nothing to do with the saints' consciousness when dead, but to the constancy of Christ's love, which is not shaken even though his saints sleep one thousand or ten thousand years "in the dust of the earth;" but if there is no resurrection of the dead, "they are perished;" even though they "fell asleep in Christ." See 1 Cor. 15: 16-18.

On the text Matt. 22: 31, 32, Br. W. says: "The Saviour has given positive assurance—that those who have died in the Lord are alive still," &c. Tell us, then, thou "Master in Israel," how our Saviour's argument with the Sadducees proved the resurrection of the dead? the very point in debate. Does proving that "disembodied spirits" are alive demonstrate a future resurrection, "at the last day"? or, has "Swedenborg" convinced you there is no such resurrection? Br. W. next gives us a list of texts on which he does not "comment"—

"for the simple reason, there is no necessity;" and says, he has "seen attempts to explain them away, but never read any thing but what a biblical scholar ought to be ashamed of." We, of course, do not know what Br. W. has "read," but we have read and written much against his view of those texts that we do not even begin to be "ashamed of;" nor shall we, till we can find better arguments on the other side than we have ever "read."

If we understand Br. Way—he maintains that it is the wicked dead that "know not any thing," and that when the Psalmist said, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence," he meant the "wicked dead." Surely! And did the wicked living "praise the Lord"? When Hezekiah had recovered from sickness, which he was told, at first, should result in his death, and he was praising God for preserving his life, he says—"The grave cannot praise thee," &c. Now, if we can "discern," he does say that if he had died, when dead, he could not have praised the Lord; but he adds—"The living, the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day," &c. Isa. 38: 18, 19. Hezekiah was a righteous man. Isa. 38: 3.

But if he had died he could not then have praised the Lord.

THEFORE, the RIGHTEOUS "dead praise not the Lord."

The Psalmist is equally as conclusive. Let any one read the sixth Psalm; David is there complaining, as the whole Psalm shows, of sickness and disease which he feared would result in death; and he piously and pathetically entreats the Lord to deliver his soul, i. e. himself; and adds as a reason for his prayer, "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

David was a RIGHTEOUS man.

But, if he had died he would THEN have had no REMEMBRANCE of God.

ERGO. The righteous dead are UNCONSCIOUS.

Again. "David is not ascended into the heavens. Acts 2: 34.

Jesus Christ has ascended into the heavens. Heb. 8: 1.

THEFORE, David is NOT "with Christ."

Thus, "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word is established," that Christ does not receive the saints to the conscious enjoyment of his presence at DEATH.

Br. W. understands us to say—"Whenever the Scriptures speak of Christ coming, it must always, necessarily, mean at the resurrection." We are sorry if we gave our good brother any occasion to understand us so; we surely did not intend it; and if he will read our remarks again, we think he will be undeceived. The point in discussion there was the meaning and application of the phrase, "come AGAIN." To come again implies a previous coming; we showed that previous coming was personal—that the going away was personal, and hence to come AGAIN was to do so in the same personal manner; and not in some hidden, secret manner, altogether unlike the previous. Should we "state the argument" for our opponents as Br. W. has for us, we might say "Christ will come to receive the souls of his people at death; therefore, whenever the Scriptures speak of Christ's coming, it must always, necessarily, mean at death; therefore, he will never come again personally." Would that be a fair version of my opponent's views? Not one of

Br. W.'s texts in disproof of our position affirm that Christ comes again at the time spoken of. Spiritually he never went away, and therefore spiritually does not come again; but personally he once came—personally he went away—and personally he will “come again;” then, and not till then has he ever promised to receive his followers unto himself; though Br. W. affirms he “did come and take Stephen’s redeemed spirit to a place prepared.” But the Bible affirms, Stephen “FELL ASLEEP,” yes, he sleeps, Br. W., and when the Lord comes again he will “wake him out of his sleep,” and Stephen will not be conscious that he has slept a moment, if it is “thousands of years.” Not one of the texts that Br. W. has quoted says that Christ ever came again at any man’s death; or, that he came at death at all. We asked “for a single text of Scripture that says, Christ comes again at the death of his saints.” Has Br. W. produced one? Let the reader judge.

THE SON OF GOD.—NO. V.

By HENRY GREW.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE DIVINE TESTIMONY RESPECTING THE IMPORT OF THE TERM SON OF GOD, AND WHETHER IT IS, OR IS NOT EXPRESSIVE OF THE HIGHEST CHARACTER OF OUR BLESSED LORD.

It has long been a sentiment of very general belief in the Christian church, that the terms Son of God, only begotten Son of God, are expressive of that divine relation to the Father in which his highest character consists. These terms are now considered by some, who are to be respected for their talents and piety, as referable to the humanity of Christ peculiarly begotten; and not as importing his most exalted nature.

In relation to this interesting and important subject, we may consider the following truths derived from the divine testimony.

1. It is in the character of the Son of God, that the Saviour is presented to a lost world, as the great object of faith, and with the belief of this truth salvation is connected.

2. It is in this character, he is an object of worship.

3. Jesus Christ during his ministry on earth never claimed a higher title.

4. The highest title ever given him in the Scriptures of truth, even that of God, is given to him as the Son of God.

If these propositions are clearly supported by the word of God, can we possibly avoid the conclusion, that the terms under consideration import the highest character of our Redeemer?

1. That “the Lord from heaven,” is presented to a perishing world as the great and glorious object of faith in the character of the Son of God, with the belief of which truth salvation is connected, appears from the following passages. Matt. 3: 17; 17: 5; John 1: 34; 3: 18, 36; 6: 69; 9: 35; 11: 27; Acts 6: 37; 9: 20; Rom. 1: 4; 1 John 4: 15, &c.

2. That it is in this character he is worshipped, plainly appears from Heb. 1: 6. When he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, and let all the angels of God worship him. See also John 5: 23; Matt. 14: 33; John 9: 35, 38.

3. No passage can be found in which “the faithful witness” ever claimed a higher title. On this high claim, the charge of blasphemy by his opposers was founded. John 10: 36. This claim excited their utmost rage. John 6: 18.

4. That it is as the Son of God on the throne of the kingdom, he is called God, is evident from Heb. 1: 8. Ps. 14: 6. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c.

The first chapter to the Hebrews illustrates this important truth. It is manifestly the design of the inspired apostle in this chapter, to set forth our adorable Redeemer in his highest dignity and most glorious character. He represents him, verse 2, as the maker of the worlds. Verse 3, as the brightness of the Father’s glory and the express image of his person. Verse 4, as being much better than the angels. Verse 6, as the object of their worship. And verse 8, as God. But it appears from verse 2 and 3, that it was in the character of Son that he made the worlds. If, then, his creating the world, if his being “the express image” of the invisible God, denotes his divine nature, the title of Son must denote the same. Why is he made so much better than the angels? Because he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. But what is this excellent name? It is the Son of God. This is evident from verse 5. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, thou art my Son, &c. But if this name is applicable only to his humanity, it must rather signify that he was made “a little lower than the angels,” and the inspired apostle appears wholly to have failed in his proof, verse 5, which he evidently considers as conclusive.

Mr. Fuller, in his essay on this subject, justly remarks, “The glory of the only begotten of the Father, and the glory of the Word, are used as convertible terms, as being the same: but the latter is allowed to denote the divine person of Christ, as antecedent to his being made flesh: the same therefore must be true of the former. The word was made flesh, and we beheld his glory; that is, the glory of the Word, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.” John 1: 14.

John 3: 16, For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. Here our Lord exhibits to us the great love of the giver by setting forth the excellence of the gift. But all this excellence is comprised in the phrase, “his only begotten Son.” This phrase must, therefore, include the highest character of our blessed Redeemer, or it is totally inadequate for his purpose, to set forth the amazing love of God towards us in “his unspeakable gift.”

Heb. 4: 14, We have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God. “The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.” If, then, there is any divinity in his priesthood, to give virtue to his sacrifice and intercession, that divinity is in the name of the Son of God.

So also, when he is exalted as King on the holy hill of Zion, the decree is declared, “Thou art my Son,” &c. And when we are required to be reconciled to his government, we are commanded to “kiss the Son.” Ps. 2: 7, 12.

John 17: 5, And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. The obvious truth in this passage is, that the Son possessed glory with the Father “before the world was,” and, consequently, that these relations then subsisted. But if the term “Son of God,” is not expressive of the Redeemer’s highest character, it follows that the Son of God, so far from possessing glory with the Father before the world was, has not yet existed two thousand years!

It is remarked by the respected author before quoted, that “God is frequently said to have sent his Son into the world.” John 7: 18; 10: 36; 1 John 4: 9, 10. But this implies that he was his Son antecedent to his being sent. To suppose otherwise, is no less absurd than supposing that when Christ is said to have sent forth his twelve disciples, they were not disciples, but in consequence of his sending them, or of some preparation pertaining to their mission.”—“Moreover, to say that God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, is equal to saying, that the Son of God assumed human nature: he must therefore have been the Son of God before his incarnation. Christ is called the Son of God antecedent to his being manifested to destroy the works of the devil: but he was manifested to destroy the works of the devil by taking upon him human nature: consequently he was the Son of God antecedent to the human nature being assumed.”

“It has been frequently suggested that the ground of Christ’s sonship is given us in Luke 1: 35, and is no other than his miraculous conception. It is true that our Lord was miraculously conceived of the Holy Spirit, and that such a conception was peculiar to him; but it does not follow, that by this he became the Son, or only begotten Son of God. Nor does the passage in question prove any such thing. It may be a reason given why Christ is called the Son of God; but not why he is so. Christ is called the Son of God as raised from the dead, and as exalted at the right hand of God. Acts 13: 33; Heb. 1: 4, 5. Did he then become the Son of God by these events? This is impossible, for sonship is not a progressive matter. If it arose from his miraculous conception, it could not for that reason arise from his resurrection or exaltation: and so on the other hand, if it arose from his resurrection or exaltation, it could not proceed from his miraculous conception. But if each be understood of his being hereby proved, acknowledged, or, as the Scriptures express it, ‘declared to be the Son of God with power,’ all is easy and consistent.”

Rom. 1: 3, 4, is an instructive passage. Our Lord was “made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness,” &c. It is admitted by learned Trinitarians that “it is not the third person in the Trinity that is referred to here.” (See Barnes, Poole, &c. on the passage.) It is Christ’s spirit in contrast with his body. He was of the seed of David in respect to his flesh or body. Observe, not according to his flesh and human soul, but simply in respect to his flesh or body. “A body, (not body and soul,) hast thou prepared me.” “The Word was made flesh,” not flesh and soul. But “according,” or, in respect, to his spirit, he was “the Son of God.” The passage proves that he was so before his incarnation. Mr. Barnes observes, “The expression according to the spirit of holiness does not indeed of itself imply divinity. It denotes that holy and more exalted nature, which he possessed as distinguished from the human.” The distinction, however, in the passage, is not between two spirits of different natures, but simply between the nature and origin of his one holy spirit and the nature and origin of that flesh or body which that spirit assumed.

We have, then, sufficient proof from the divine testimony, that the term Son of God is expressive of the highest character of our Saviour. The reflecting reader will discern that we have equal proof that he is, in his highest nature, “the only begotten of the Father,” and must, therefore, be necessarily dependent on him for all things, agreeably to Christ’s own words: “all things are delivered unto me of my Father.” Mr. Fuller, although a Trinitarian, acknowledged in the conclusion of his essay on the sonship of Christ, that “in the order of nature, the Father must have existed before the Son.” He indeed supposed the Son to be “properly eternal,” as well as the Father. But to reconcile this idea with the above concession, is, to me at least, absolutely impossible.

Is this with any of us a subject of mere speculation? God forbid! In this name, my brethren, is concentrated all the glory of God ever viewed by mortal minds. In this name centers all our hope, and peace, and joy. It is this dear name that draws forth our souls to Jehovah, in wonder, love, and praise. This is the best name that comprises all those glorious “things the angels desire to look into.” And it is in the knowledge, love and adoration of this name that the saints shall be “filled with all the fullness of God.”

“Oh, may I live to reach the place,
Where he unveils his lovely face;
Where all his beauties you behold,
And sing his name to harps of gold.”

BR. HENRY GREW writes from Worcester, Mass. :—

BR. STORRS :—I perused with interest the articles by Br. Walsh on the Kingdom of God, which appeared in several numbers of the Examiner: I was not aware, however, that he had finished them when the last appeared. I looked for more from him upon the subject. The last three numbers contain nothing more from his pen on that subject. I would enquire, if he considers he has completed it in the main, not to say the whole? If so, I think it will be easy to show, there is much he has left untouched, and much too that is important to be considered.

With the articles of Dr. Thomas and Br. Grew, I have also been much interested. If Dr. T. be correct in the belief that the unimmersed are, without exception, excluded from the kingdom of God, I think he is bound to show to the candid seeker for truth, however limited his intellectual powers may be, that immersion is the only true mode of baptism, in so clear a manner, as to leave no room for an honest doubt. On the supposition that Dr. T. be wrong, what a stand it is for a man to take—to allow a person may be prayerful, pious, sincere, Bible searching, truth seeking, &c. &c., and yet, because he has not conformed to a requirement he did not know of, must necessarily be excluded from the saint’s inheritance! Bless God, there are some who know too well the enjoyment of communion with God, to be driven to doubt and despair by men’s notions, however positively and emphatically they may be published. Notwithstanding I speak thus, I view immersion to be the correct mode, to which I conformed several years ago: yet I know such a person as a Christian man, exemplary, bible-loving, whose arguments in favor of sprinkling, I feel unable fully to refute. Shall I say to him, your piety, your spiritual enjoyment, your consistent works will all be fruitless—you have not been immersed—although you don't see this your duty, no matter, you have no reason to expect inheritance with the saints in the kingdom? No, indeed, unless by greater light through D. T., or some other means. I see more manifestly the correctness of the Doctor's position. But I may have more to say on this at a future time.

I am interested with the Examiner. I read each number from beginning to end. I had apprehensions of a want of advent spirit in its editor: but of late I have been in a measure relieved from such feeling. That while it is published it may be fully worthy its name, is the hope of your feeble, yet truth-seeking brother.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—The present volume is drawing to a close, and we are disposed to say some things thus early, that both our subscribers and ourselves may understand the position we occupy. We have given our patrons more matter, and a neater paper, than we at first promised. In consequence of this, the expense of publishing has been at least one hundred and fifty dollars more than was contemplated at the beginning, while we have made no charge, and received nothing for our services, and the Assistant Editor has not only given his services, but has actually contributed more funds than any other ten of our friends, since the monthly issue commenced.

We are satisfied from what we hear and know, that the Examiner is needed, and will be sustained, so far as paying the printer is concerned, and we never contemplated any pecuniary advantage to ourselves in publishing it. Though we are poor, and have nothing of this world's goods, we ask nothing of the friends of the Examiner, save that they see to it, that we are preserved from becoming indebted to the Printer. This can now be easily done if our present subscribers continue for the next volume, and send us only one new subscriber each.

Our purpose is, to continue the Examiner in the same form as at present, and at the same price; published monthly. Our terms are low, and we must insist upon payment in all cases in advance. We have no idea of doing as some do, that is, to be dunning our subscribers all the year, and telling them how much they owe us, and how much we are suffering for the want of it. We shall have but one rule, viz: PAY IN ADVANCE, or the paper will not be sent, either to old or new subscribers. No person will have a bill sent with a charge for the passing year if they have not paid, and no one will receive the Examiner, after the present volume, who has not paid for it as above stated. We give this notice thus early, that all who design to continue as subscribers, may have ample time, before the first of January, to save fifty cents and forward it, which must be done free of expense to us, but may be sent by mail at our risk.

We have taken and are taking much pains to secure an amount of matter for the Examiner, in future, which we doubt not will give new interest to the paper. Dr. LEES, Leeds, England, has promised to contribute to the Examiner. The article in our January and February Nos., on "Future Punishment," signed "PATHFINDER," was from his pen. In the present number, we have the first communication, direct from him, "for the Examiner," and we expect it will be followed by many others. Dr. Lees is "Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Giessen; F. S. A. Scotland, or Edin." His letter, found in this number of the Examiner, will prepare the way for what is to follow. We have a considerable amount of matter on hand, from his pen, of much interest. Some of his views differ from ours, at present, but, we are in search after truth, and if convinced of the correctness of his positions, we shall embrace them fearlessly. This getting into a stagnant pool, never to have a "new notion," as some are pleased to call every new thought that is at all ahead of the walls of their theological prison, we abhor. The great body of so called Protestant religionists are as much bound by the superstitions of Paganism and Romanism as Romanists themselves; they hug their chains, and denounce those who strive to set them free, and vainly suppose that they have all the light that can be elicited; hence they hate the light, and will not advance one step.

We are not of those who are ready to adopt every new thought that may be suggested, but we do hold to proving all things, not by the creeds or inventions of men, but by the Truth of God, whether that truth be found in the works or word of God. God's works and word must and do agree, and they can no more be found at disagreement than He can "deny himself." When men, therefore, ask us to throw away our reason, the noblest faculty with which our Creator has endowed us, or the noblest work of God in man, to follow their creeds, under the pretence that we must exercise faith, yea, a blind faith, in the doctrines of their own inventions, we pray to be excused. God himself has placed, in his word, the broad seal of his unqualified condemnation on all those who lightly esteem the reason He has given us: "Come now," saith the Lord of all, "let us REASON TOGETHER." Isa. 1: 18. And we are to give "a REASON of the hope" that is in us: 1 Pet. 3: 15. And Paul "reasoned" with his hearers, both from the Scriptures and "the things that are made," or the works of God. None but bigots demand implicit assent to their dogmas, and none but bigots, and such as "know nothing as they ought to know," think that they have attained the acme of knowledge. The command to "grow in knowledge," is as imperative and binding as the command to repent, or believe. But there can be no growth in knowledge, while men refuse to admit a doubt as to their previous theories. The admission of doubt does not imply an abandonment of the views, but only leaves the mind open to investigate: the investigation may result in the full confirmation in previous views, and in that case we shall be able to give a reason to every man that asketh us. Most religionists, at present, can give no better answer for their faith or practice, than that their church, or fore-fathers, believed and did so. We pity all such. May they attain unto that freedom which the word and works of God giveth, through his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN," AND IMMORTALITY.—Some of the correspondents of "the Christian Sun," are discussing the subject of immortality. Mr. Alexander McCaine is on the side of immortal-soulism. He reminds us of the "mountain in labor," which, after all its travail, "brought forth a mouse." We would ask Mr. McCaine a few simple questions, which, we hope for the truth's sake, he will answer.

- 1st. Is there anything "good" in man by nature?
- 2d. If "God only hath immortality," by what means do his creatures possess it?
- 3d. If man be born of "corruptible seed," whence his immortality?
- 4th. Is immortality an attribute, or an entity?
- 5th. What is life?
- 6th. What is death?

When Mr. McCaine has answered these questions, we have a few more to propound for his solution.

J. T. W.

P. S. Will the "Christian Sun" copy the above?

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.—As we come to make up our paper for this month, we see that the subject of baptism occupies a larger space than some may think desirable. If the subject is to be further discussed, we suggest if it would not be best to confine the remarks, till that point is sufficiently examined, to this one question:

Is baptism, with water, EXCLUSIVELY by immersion?

We received an article, some months since, in defence of baptism by sprinkling, but thought not best to publish it, and were willing that every person should "be fully persuaded in his own mind," but as Br. Magruder thinks that wont do for "a Bible Examiner," we are willing the discussion should go on, but, let us have a definite point. This remark is not designed to interfere with Dr.

Thomas's and Br. Grew's controversy. Let them finish as they please.

PROGRESS OF THE TRUTH IN BRITAIN.

We have received a communication from the Editor of the Truth Seeker and Christian Thinker, Dr. FREDERIC RICHARD LEES, of Leeds, England, from which we have pleasure in quoting the following extracts. They evince that the Truth is travelling far and fast over the world—that the days of the Fraud and Falsehood of misnamed "Orthodoxy," are indeed numbered—and they prove, once again, the justness of the old persuasion, that "Truth is stronger than all things: it liveth and conquereth for evermore."

"MY DEAR MR. STORRS:—I respond with pleasure to your request for information as to the state and progress of 'the Immortality question,' in England and Europe; and gladly furnish you with such as I am in possession of. Of Europe generally, or rather of its profoundest scholars and Divines in Sweden, Germany, and France, I can affirm that their closer acquaintance with the machinery and organization of the Divine developments in nature,—and the perception of the want of clearer and better definitions than an effete orthodoxy can furnish,—have led to the abandonment of those old idea-less phrases concerning 'Mind' or 'Spirit,' which represent Thought as existing without a Thinker, and a 'Mind' without a 'Mum.' The influence of SWEDENBORG'S philosophy has been very considerable on this subject, for, taking its stand-point in the great principle that 'Man is an Organ of God,' it legitimately asserts, that neither in this life nor the life-to-come, can there be any action, any life or movement, without an organization of action, movement, or manifestation—i. e. a body of some kind, no matter whether we call it 'material' or 'spiritual.' Hence there must be—(according to all the processes of God's providence)—a RESURRECTION before there be a future LIFE—a standing-again (anastasis.) The Thinkers of Europe are also fast repudiating the distinction of opposition set up between 'Matter' and 'Spirit'—disavowing the notion of a double substance, and maintaining unity of atomic Substance, in variety of Manifestation, BERKELEY said—'There is but one substance—Mind.'—PRIESTLEY said—'There is but one substance—Matter. We are now saying—'There is but one substance—no matter what we call it.' On the Continent, however, while the false form of the doctrine of Immortality is giving way in favour of the true one of Resurrection through Christ, I know of no eminent writer who advocates the Truth in the precise form which it assumes in America. Further, while many are Restorationists, there are a few who are Perditionists, (i. e. believers in the loss of the Life of the Wicked, by the destruction of that 'organization' through which alone life is possible.) The whole tribe of fallacies arising from viewing Life, Mind, Personality, &c., as things instead of states—and as self-existing instead of existing by and through means—are fast vanishing away with the childishness of the past age.

"Of Britain I can speak more specially and in detail, both of the Persons entertaining these views of Life, and of the Literature they have given rise to. In the first place, I will give you the History of my own Thoughts and Efforts, and, in the second, an account of the Controversies with which I have since become acquainted, conducted by others, with a partial list of the works which they have occasioned.

"Some ten years ago I read Dr. Law, the Bishop of Chester's 'Theory of Religion,' and 'Essay on Death,' which rid me at once of my faith in the current doctrines of Methodism on the subject, though the half-dozen texts on which they are based, prevented me arriving at satisfactory conclusions on the whole question. I was subsequently led to apply my knowledge of Chemistry and Physiology to this topic,—to look at the law of the procession of life and consciousness as God evolves it in Nature,—and then I found, for the first time, firm foothold. Nowhere did I behold Life and Mind except in connection with a specific Organization, while every where I beheld Life decease, and Mind disappear, with the ruin of the organ. Everywhere I beheld an exact Correspondence between the Organ—manifesting, and the Mind or Life manifested. Everywhere, I beheld this law inscribed upon nature.—Use, and you shall secure Profit and Increase;—neglect or mis-use, and you shall suffer Loss and Decease.—I then appealed to Scripture, and commenced my studies by a careful examination of every text bearing on the future life, or referring to Soul, Life, or Death, to Heaven and to Hell, by which alone I could gather the real opinions of the ancient writers. I compared the English version with the originals, always having my Hebrew and Greek Concordances before me, for the sake of readier reference to parallel Text and Context. The issue you will have anticipated. It opened out another volume of priestly frauds and forgeries, to be added to an already crowded catalogue. I rose up from my perusal perfectly satisfied that the doctrines of the Fire-Hell and its Eternal Torments, of the self-subsisting Soul and its Immortality, were senseless fictions, totally discountenanced by the Scriptures, at any rate. This was to me a mighty relief—and I felt, for the first time, fully competent to defend Christianity, both from the fangs of Infidelity and the corruptions of Priestcraft. I had now the highest assurance of the Truth—Creation and Scripture were in harmony. In Leeds, and the neighborhood, I preached these Scriptural Truths. In January, 1845, I started, singlehanded, the (Manx) Truth Seeker, in opposition to the priests, who, throughout England and Scotland, were denouncing me as an 'Infidel' for opposing their corruptions and their craft. I now thank God that they did denounce me: for it has shown me, more clearly, my duty. From that period I renounced all care for wealth and worldly success; I devoted all my energy, influence, and power, to their overthrow—and, by God's help, I will persevere unto the end. In the first No. of the (English) Truth Seeker, (a post Magazine of ninety-six pages, which I started the same year,) I assailed the falsities of Immortal-Soulism and Eternal Torments in a sermon on 'Profit and Loss.' This sermon, and a series of six others on the Future State, I preached in Leeds, Bramley, and elsewhere. Many converts were made. It was then published, and everywhere, throughout the country, from John O'Groats to the Land's End, it awoke thought;—the seed quickened, and the young plant of Truth took fast and lasting root. A discussion of the subject commenced in the second volume of the Truth Seeker, which was continued over two years. I send you some of the articles.

"In 1846 I began to find that other and influential persons in Britain, had also had their thoughts turned to this topic. My friend, JOSEPH BAKER, (now of Wortley, near Leeds,) formerly a celebrated Methodist Minister, but expelled for 'heresy,' had republished your 'Six Sermons' in a cheap form, and circulated them amongst his friends.—'The Christian Reformers'—throughout the North of England. The late THOMAS FOSTER, the author of 'the Evils of popular Ignorance,' and the greatest writer amongst the modern Congregational Divines, had given up the notion of Eternal Torments, and within his circle of correspondents, produced a great influence. Archbishop WHATELY, also, had favourably noticed our views. In the West of England, the 'Destructionist heresy' grew apace. M. DORNEY, of Maidstone, published his 'Notes,' which drew down some severe critiques from the monthly organs of the body. These he logically replied to, in a second and enlarged edition. In 1847, Mr. WHITE, a popular congregationalist at Hereford, sent forth his 'Life-in-Christ,' which excited the wrath of a disappointed rival priest (a Dr. REDFORD) in the Eclectic Review, who grossly misrepresented the work. Matters grew so serious, at last, that the Congregational Union, in order to put down, at one blow, the double heresy of Restorationism and 'Destructionism,' engaged the services of R. W. HAMILTON, D. D. of Leeds, to deliver the annual 'Congregational Lecture,' in opposition to the heretics. The Lectures were delivered, and published and puffed in the handsomest style. They are equally eloquent and illogical: in fact, viewed as an instrument for putting down the stern logic and criticism of your school, the book is a dead failure. In a recent article in the British Quarterly Review, (a dissenting organ edited by Dr. VAUGHAN,) this is tacitly confessed. This writer admits, Dr. H.'s deficiency of logic, and starts himself a quite novel canon of criticism. Christ's language, as he contends, is not to be interpreted by that of the Prophets, whom he is quoting,—but by the opinions of the later Jews, and of the Pharisees whom he was reproving and threatening,—and by their opinions as gathered from some fragments in the Apocrypha and Josephus! In other words, the BIBLE is NO LONGER TO BE ITS OWN INTERPRETER!!! How hardly put to it must the priests be, to be compelled to devise and adopt such a theory!

"This reminds me of a still newer theory, put forth by J. H. HINTON, M. A., of London, in a tract entitled 'Who will live for ever?' He answers, 'ALL'—and founds his assertion on Luke xx: 27—38. The declaration, 'neither can they die any more,' he applies to ALL the dead, arguing that as the seven husbands cannot be assumed to be all good, they must be representative of all men, of whom, therefore, Christ predicates immortality in the future life. The phrases which he admits to have always been viewed by commentators as limiting the declaration to the good, do not, he argues, really do so, while the full scope of the reply requires that there should be no limitation as to character. At all events, it is unfortunate that no one before, either in ancient or modern times, ever read the Greek text as he does. Nevertheless, he may be right, the fact is only a presumption against him. I therefore give an analysis of his work in my Magazine for your consideration.

"There are many able and excellent men, (as the eloquent H. MELVILLE, B. D. of London,) who incline more or less to our views. Foremost amongst these, we may place Dr. WHATELY, the Archbishop of Dublin. In Exeter, quite a controversy has been lately got up on the subject; J. N. DARBY, the Plymouth Brother, taking the Helish side of the question, (as you would see from Truth Seeker, No. 2, new series,) and several others the opposite side.

"Receive the assurance of my sincere sympathy with you in your warfare against Error. You have, my dear Sir, and will have, your 'reward.' It is a noble thing to be active in the cause of Truth—a true life, this battling against Falsehood. I also, have found God to be with me. Though only thirty-three years of age, broken off from all sects and parties, and denounced by most, I have, by God's help, raised up a noble army of Truth-Seekers—fearless and faithful men—who from John O'Groats to the Land's End, are everywhere lifting up their voice for the Truth. Let us take courage, and persevere—and, at any rate, we can die in the battle! The more the enemy rage, the more reason is prevailing.

"My space and time are now both exhausted, you will therefore please accept this hasty letter as a token of my good will. I have no time to copy it, and must either send it as it is, or delay to a future time; the pleasure of communicating with you; on the whole, therefore, I conclude to neglect the mere form of respect, in order to fulfil the true spirit of it.

Faithfully yours,
"FREDERIC RICHARD LEES."

REPLY TO MORE QUESTIONS.

QUESTION 1. "Will there be probation after the Lord comes?" c. o. r.

ANSWER. The answer to this question is so plain that, with present light, we cannot see how an unbiased mind can hesitate in an affirmative reply. See Zech. 14th. All attempts to make that chapter tally with the doctrine of "no probation, after the advent," in our opinion, have only shown how vain the effort is to establish such a theory. In the 4th and 5th verses it is plainly said, in that day "His feet shall stand upon the mount of Olives"—and that, "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints [or holy ones] with thee." In the 9th verse it is further affirmed—"The Lord shall be KING over all the earth: IN THAT DAY shall there be one Lord and his name one." Then it is stated in what manner the Lord will cut off many wicked, and concludes, verse 16, in this unanswerable answer to the question to which we are replying: "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship THE KING, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." Here it is clear, that in the cutting off at the advent, there will be those besides "the saints," who are "left of the nations." That those left are in a state of trial, or "probation" is equally clear, as the threatening of judgments upon those that "go not up" is distinctly set forth in the 17th, 18th, and 19th verses. These threatened "plagues" certainly are not for the "saints" who are changed to immortality at the advent; nor can we assume the fearful position towards which some have seemed to lean, viz. that "if those left do not come up they will be cut off, and if they do come up they will be cut off!! All the attempts of Mr. Miller and his followers to get over this chapter have but involved them in the greatest absurdities. We once favored his views, for a time, of "no probation to any soul of man after the advent," and tried every possible way to harmonize this chapter with that view; but, could never satisfy myself, nor offer an argument in favor of his position, but what we felt shame whenever pressed with, Zech. 14; till at last, in the winter of '43 and '44, we determined thoroughly to investigate the whole subject for ourself, and follow the best light we could find wherever it might lead us. We did so, and gave our mind wholly to that topic, for a time, with prayer for light and aid. We went into the investigation with the full understanding that if we were led to a different result from that we had previously favored we were to meet with the displeasure of those whom we loved as the apple of our eye; but at the same time under the solemn conviction if we were "ashamed" of Christ's "words" he would "be ashamed" of us at his coming. The examination resulted in the deep and abiding conviction—clear to our mind as the advent itself—that there will be left of the nations, after the advent, men in the flesh, who will be probationers for God's favor unto eternal life, though never to attain, so far as we can see, unto the high honor of "kings and priests unto God and the Lamb;" nor "to sit down with Christ on his throne," as those will who are accounted worthy of immortality at his coming. The texts of Scripture in proof of probation to some, after the advent are so numerous and clear, to our mind, that we can no more doubt it than we can question the advent itself. We cannot, however, enter more fully on that topic now.

QUEST. 2. "Who will be the probationers?"

ANS. Those "left of the nations;" for—"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee; for, the kingdom is the Lord's; and he is governor among the nations. A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation; they shall come and shall declare his righteousness unto a people THAT SHALL BE BORN, that he hath done this;" Psa. 22: 27—31. Comment on this Scripture will not be entered upon in this place.

QUEST. 3. "How long will probation last after Christ comes?"

ANS. We do not know—"Secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those revealed unto us and to our children forever." Deut. 29: 29. We repeat, however, what we said in the Examiner for August—"We see no evidence in the Scriptures to limit probation time to any period whatever." That it is limited with regard to each individual we cannot question; but, that it is so with respect to the race of man we consider a mere assumption. That the time will come when the trial of moral beings will be uniformly successful we think highly probable, and then there will be no more death or sorrow. We have light enough now to guide us into the fact that a more perfect age will succeed this than any previous one; and that be followed by another of a still higher order. But that age will not stop even then, is more than intimidated by Paul. Eph. 3: 21, which reads in our translation, "all ages, world without end;" but, which Mc Knight translates—"throughout the endless succession of ages." Not one solitary age and then an eternal monotony; but, age after age, each rising higher in glory and richer in the displays of God's wisdom, power, and love; and yet unexhausted and unexhaustible, eternally. For men to pretend that they know there will be no probation to any body in any or all these ages, in some form or under some circumstances, we think is being "wise above what is written;" for, we challenge the proof of one single text in the Bible where there is a "Thus saith the Lord" for any such assumption. It will not be enough to show that many have ended their probation: let it be shown that all have, if it is possible to do it. We ask, Where is the proof? Where?

Ques. 4. "Will the wicked dead be raised before the thousand years are finished?"

Ans. Our opinion, with present light, is—they will not. We confess, however, that we have but one text in support of that view, and that is in Rev. 20; and when we consider the highly symbolical character of the Book of Revelation we would not quarrel with any who think that a part or all the wicked dead will be raised at or near the time of the advent; and we must further confess, that such a view seems more in harmony with the general tenor of the Scriptures than to suppose the wicked dead are not raised till the close of the millennium. The future, or millennium age, is to be different from any that has gone before. If it were not for the 20th of Rev. we should be compelled to the conclusion, from the other Scriptures, that the wicked, who are dead at the time of the advent, would then be raised, judged, and "punished with everlasting destruction;" and that in the future age, or next dispensation, it being characterized by the personal reign of Christ, the sentence against transgressors will be executed fully and finally on all who sin under that dispensation, at the time of their sin, as indicated in Zech. 14, Isa. 65: 20, and Rev. 20: 9. But, this part of the subject we must leave for further light; for, each new dispensation develops some new truths which were only seen "through a glass darkly" in the previous one.

BAPTISM:—We have received a communication from Br. Magruder, of Charlottesville, Va., touching the discussion between Br. Grew and Dr. Thomas, going on in the Examiner, with some remarks on our Editorial, in the last Examiner. Br. Magruder's article is written in an excellent spirit, and so much of it as relates to ourselves, we give in the present number, with our own reply. We would inform our readers, however, that the article from "Homo," on being "born of water," was received, and, with our reply to it, put into the hands of the printer, before Br. M.'s article was received. Br. M. will excuse us for omitting, in this number, his "Reply to Mr. Grew."

He says—Dr. Thomas is now in England, and the period of his return is uncertain: and asks the privilege to enter "the field in behalf of the truth" the Dr. "advocates." We have no objection to it, whatever, provided the parties concerned assent. But Br. Grew is now in New England, and where, exactly, we know not, and hence, cannot consult him to know if he is willing to accept a new controversialist in room of Dr. T. If he is, we bid Br. M. welcome to the work. We do not think Br. Grew will object, but we wish to treat both parties fairly, and therefore defer so much of Br. Magruder's article as relates to Br. Grew, till we can hear from him.

The following is Br. M.'s introduction, and so much of his article as relates to ourself.

MR. GREW AND DR. THOMAS.

I have watched, with deep interest, the progress of the discussion between these able disputants, in the pages of the "Examiner." The introduction incidentally, of the subject of baptism in the August number, has imparted additional interest to their good tempered and well-conducted controversy. The question needs discussion at this time. The diverse views and practice in regard to baptism among those who are animated by a common hope of the speedy and glorious advent of our blessed Lord, ought, if possible, to be harmonized, provided it can be effected without a sacrifice of truth and honest conviction. I trust the present discussion will tend to produce satisfactory results. If conducted with moderation and candor, it cannot fail to elicit light, and advance the claims of truth.

EDITORIAL STRICTURES.

"What truth was ever elicited without controversy," well remarks the Editor, and I applaud the sentiment. Truth never, but error only, fears investigation. The first has everything to gain, the other everything to lose, by free discussion. The present discussion, I trust, will exemplify the truth of these observations.

The Editor says, "We have been repeatedly urged to give our views on the subject of baptism. We will do it in a few words: 'Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.'" Indeed? Is that the position and the province of a "Bible Examiner?" Surely it was not in reference to so grave and responsible a question as obedience to a divine command, that Paul laid down this rule. See the connection: Romans 14: 5—"One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Many bigoted sectaries decry and denounce the editor because he raises the cry "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Does he agree with them that the subject should not be discussed; that it is a non-essential, and urge again "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind?"

The Editor denies that baptism, administered to a penitent believer, is "for the remission of sins," although Peter says so expressly in Acts 2: 38, and asks—"How sins committed after immersion are to be pardoned without being immersed again?" &c. Answer in the words of 1 John chap. 1: 9, "If we (Christians) confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." It is then by confession in prayer that the Christian, having obtained the forgiveness of his old sins in baptism, is to obtain pardon for those he may commit afterwards. Baptism then, is for the believing and penitent sinner; confession and prayer is for the erring Christian.

Again, the Editor asks how the "penitent thief obtained remission of sins." If the penitent thief had sought remission after Christian baptism was instituted, the interrogatory might present some difficulty. It was not until after our Lord hung upon the cross—until after his resurrection indeed, that baptism was ordained by Christ—that the declaration "to all nations" was made, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." The thief was not therefore under our dispensation. Saul of Tarsus was, however. How did he obtain remission? Did Christ speak his pardon, as he did the thief's? No. Read Acts 22: 10. Saul asked "What shall I do, Lord?" The answer is, "arise and go into Damascus, and there it shall be told thee," &c. Accordingly he goes to Annanias, at Damascus—"a certain disciple,"—who replies to his question:—"The God of our fathers hath chosen thee," &c.; 14-16 verses, "and now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." We see then how Saul "washed away" his sins. Shall we not "go and do likewise?"

The thief may indeed enter Paradise without baptism, just as Abram, Noah, Job, and Daniel will. Not, however, because that is not God's appointed way to salvation, but because in their day and generation there was no such command. But can those under the dispensation of a risen Christ and his apostles, claim their entrance "through the gates into the city," who have presumed to "refuse him who speaks from heaven," and to "neglect so great salvation?" Has not Paul said of all such, "How shall they escape?" As to the supposed obstacle arising from "circumstances which prevent immersion,"—the answer to all such objections is simply, that no such "circumstances" can exist, for man cannot live without water, and where water is, there enough may always be procured for the immersion of the person; and even if health is so delicate as to peril life, it is better to die in the road to obedience than perish with those who are "out of the way," by disobedience to him who "has done all things well." The Editor well says, "it is rejecting light and sinning against it, that will be the condemnation of men 'at the judgment seat of Christ.'"—Amen, even so. How transcendently important then, to one and all of us, to see that on a subject so plain and obvious as Christian baptism, we do not "sin against the light" of Holy Writ, and thus seal our condemnation "at the judgment of the great day."

A. B. MAGRUDER.

REPLY TO BR. MAGRUDER.

In our remark—"Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," we did not intend to be understood as having any objection to the whole subject of baptism being discussed in the "Bible Examiner," if the friends desire it. We have some reason to think that nearly all the patrons of the Examiner are immersionists; and we suppose it is also known, to nearly all our readers, that the Editor of the Examiner, with all the light that he has been able to gain hitherto, is not an exclusive immersionist; but, is willing that every person should act in that matter according to their own convictions of truth. He has always listened to the arguments of those who are exclusive immersionists, he trusts, can-dently. With our present views, would even Br. Magruder desire that we should labor to disseminate the principle that "baptism is the answer of a good conscience toward God," and "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh?" 1 Pet. 3: 21. If, however, our brethren desire us to give our reasons for not being an exclusive immersionist we will do so: we are not ashamed of our faith in this respect; and if we find we have been wrong on this subject, we shall most certainly confess it. Truth we want, and nothing but truth, so far as is possible.

Br. Magruder is not quite correct in saying—"the Editor denies that baptism administered to a penitent believer is for the remission of sins." We said that the "Christian Magazine is strenuous for immersion as essential for the remission of sins," and remarked that it "could probably tell us how sins committed after immersion are to be pardoned without being immersed again," &c. Any proof that sins could be remitted except in and by immersion we had not seen, in their argument. We are obliged to Br. M. for his explanation, but shall reserve our remarks on that topic for another time.

In reply to our indirect question, how the penitent thief obtained remission of sins if it is essential to such remission that a person be baptized, Br. M. says—"If" he "had sought remission after Christian Baptism was instituted" there would be "some difficulty" in "the interrogatory."

We respond,—It was after Jesus said, "Except a man be born of water," &c. "he cannot see the kingdom of God;" and that was the foundation of all we said. If it was true, in the day Jesus spoke those words, that a man must be born of water (meaning immersion), then it was true in the day he hung upon the cross; so that the "difficulty" is not removed by Br. M.'s reply. The thief was under that "dispensation" which made being "born again," as stated John 3d, essential to see the kingdom of God. But Br. M. says "Christian baptism was" not "instituted until after our Lord hung upon the cross." In this we are agreed. Let us put the subject in the form of a syllogism.

Christian Baptism was not instituted till AFTER Christ's death and resurrection.

But, it was some three years BEFORE that time our Lord solemnly declares, "Except a man be born of water," &c. "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

THEREFORE, HE WAS NOT speaking of Christian Baptism. HENCE, being "born of water," is not immersion for the remission of sins.

If here is any fallacy Br. M. can show it. But let it be remembered, the question here is not whether Christian baptism is for the remission of sins; but, Is being born of water, John 3: 5, Christian baptism? We confess, with present light, we see no way to avoid the conclusion, that It is not: and this conclusion we arrive at from Br. M.'s own premises.

Br. M. says—"Abraham, Noah, Job, and Daniel will enter Paradise without baptism—because in their day there was no such command."

Will Br. M. undertake to prove they will enter the kingdom of God without being "born again?" Our Saviour saith "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man [that is, any man: not under "our dispensation"] merely: not a man in a dispensation after Christ's death and resurrection only, but any man] be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

Br. M. asks—"Can those under a dispensation of the risen Christ, claim their entrance through the gates into the city who have presumed to refuse him who speaks from heaven?" &c. We answer—No. But that does not touch the question. We may have a different view of what is spoken from heaven: we may think, and do it honestly too, that the interpretation that is given by another is not the sense of what is said from heaven; and yet we may do exactly what we sincerely believe is spoken from heaven: that is precisely the point in dispute between Br. Grew and Br. Thomas; and in their hands we, at present, leave that part of the discussion.

Br. M. says "That no such circumstances can exist" as would "prevent immersion—for man cannot live without water, and where water is, there enough may always be procured for immersion," &c. Why then, brother, did John go to the "wilderness" of Jordan to baptize?

STRICTURES ON DR. THOMAS AND OURSELF.

By Dr. NICHOLAS SMITH, HALLOWELL, Me.

BR. STOKES:—I have been amused to see you and Dr. Thomas, men who have the Bible before them, come to the conclusions you do in regard to "being born of water." Note, his "being born again of water." I suppose Dr. T. has M. D. attached to his name: if so, he knows there never was a child born in any other way than by water; and there is no other way designed by nature for any animal to be born.—Is not this an "emergence" by the "compound of oxygen and hydrogen such as Noah's ark floated on?" I never have analyzed this water, but suppose it is composed as above. You quote 1 Peter 1: 20 to support your positions; but, you must see that the translation is incorrect; man is never born of seed, any more than he is begotten by water; "being begotten again, not of incorruptible seed," as at the first begotting, "but, by the incorruptible, by the word of God," &c. Now let us see if we can get simple enough to understand what Jesus meant when he said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh;"—"That," what? Why, that infant—that child is flesh "which has emerged from a place out of sight," water being nature's assistant to bring about the "emergence," or birth. Can we get simple enough to believe Jesus meant what he said, "except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit" he meant just what he said? "That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit;" "that," what? That disposition, mind, temperament? Oh! no, not character, but a state; that man that is born of the Spirit is spirit; his whole being is spirit. You see the word is a noun, a state; if a character, it would be an adjective. You are aware that before a child can be born, it must be begotten, and from a "fetus" become a child perfect in all its parts; and at the fulness of time it is born into this state of existence, (not character;) and is sustained by the aliment God has designed, and the breathing of the vital air, or breath of life—it becomes a man. Now, in order for this man to be "born again" he must be "begotten again," not by corruptible seed, as before the birth by water, but by the incorruptible, by the word of God that liveth and abideth forever. If there is not an abiding, but he becomes a perfect man in Christ, he will have a birth or be "born of the spirit," or

"from above;" and will enter the kingdom of God and this will be as much a state as the first was; but the sects have made the substantive an adjective; and of course made void the word of God by their traditions."

If the above view is correct, you and Dr. Thomas must be wrong, and if wrong, will you correct?

THE MILLENNIUM.

Your millennium here on the earth—the return of the Jews—and probation after the Lord comes, the more I look at it the darker it appears. I see no place for a millennium, but in the air—in the city Abraham looked for, and Paul said was "above;" and that "God has prepared for us a city;" and the moment the sixth millennium ends the seventh will begin, and will be ushered in by the Lord himself being revealed from heaven—the saints raised and changed and caught up to meet him in the air. This is "entering into my rest," as Paul quotes, and "there remains a rest for the people of God," or the keeping of a sabbath. Is not the seventh millennium or seventh thousand years God's rest? Will not the saints remain at rest, or reign with Christ in the air, till they descend in the New Jerusalem on the new earth? It must be so.

Is not "the earth that now is, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men?" For "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which,"—in the which, what? why, in the day of the Lord that he spoke of in the verse before, which was a thousand years. You will here see that the earth will not be melted when the Lord first descends from heaven; but it will take place in that day. Can an unclean thing be brought out of a clean? Will corruptible and wicked men be raised out of the earth after it is filled with the glory of God? Note—"the whole earth shall be filled with my glory," not a part of it no! This melting will take place after the wicked are raised, or come up on the breadth of the earth, and will be as the sand of the sea shore. The devil and his company will then plan to hold the possession he has now got; but fire will come down from heaven and devour them; or, as Peter has it, "the heavens will pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works therein will be burnt up." This will be a literal lake of fire; or the hell into which the wicked will be cast, with all the nations that forget God, and will all be destroyed together; Isa. 1: 28. After this, the new heavens and new earth appear, and the New Jerusalem comes down, with all the saints who have entered into God's rest, or kept a Sabbath. They now enter the kingdom under the whole heaven; and now will have something to do; see Isa. 65: 21, 22; and will reign on the earth forever, even for ever and ever. Amen.

From the above, where will there be a chance for the Jews to return, or probation after the "Lord descends from heaven" and meets the saints in the air?

The heavens must retain him till all the foregoing takes place, or the restitution of all things. Where do we find in the New Testament, which is a comment on the old, a promise to the Jews, any more than the descendants of Ham, after they crucified their king? The only chance for probation after Christ comes, and the saints are with him in the air, is while the seven last plagues are pouring out, and while they drink blood, and the sun is burning them; when they will blaspheme his name instead of repenting.

NICHOLAS SMITH.

A single remark on Br. Smith's view of the millennium, which is this: We do not see how the devil and his hosts, by going "up on the breadth of the earth," are to "compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city," which are "in the air;" nor how the saints are to "reign with Christ a thousand years in the air" with nothing to reign over. We shall give our views at large on the future age when we can find room in the Examiner.—Ed. Ex.

THE HEBREW SHE'OL, 'HELL'

By Dr. LEES, OF LEEDS, ENGLAND.

A most powerful—and to the Priests, profitable—association of ideas, has been connected with the word HELL. By means of this association, they operate upon the fears of the fearful, and render them mental slaves and cowards, who dare not think for themselves, but accept their opinions vicarially and pastorally. Thus the Divine government becomes frightfully misrepresented, Christianity maligned, and infidelity engendered.

The vulgar, physical, and contradictory notions attached to the word 'Hell'—as a place gleaming with flame yet utterly dark! where bodiless and immortal souls are made to suffer misery without disorganization, injury, or death!—find, indeed, a partial correspondence in Milton's Paradise Lost, but none at all in the Jewish Scriptures. The slightest collation of texts will show, that men have no authority for transferring the modern-made meaning of the Fire Hell, with its pains and penalties, to the one Hebrew word, triflingly translated Pit, Grave and Hell.

Su'eol means something dug or hollowed out—literally shooled or shovelled—i. e. a PIT or GRAVE—what is grooved or grubbed out. Hence also, what is covered—a 'shealing' or 'hovel'—a hole or hollow. All these words are kindred. In the Bible it never once stands for a place of torment. The modern quibble that the place-Hell is a figure for the state-Hell—is pure moon-shine. A 'state' implies a 'place'; and has, and can have no more meaning, or sense, than the taste of a tart without either Tart or Taster!

When Su'eol is personalized, or localized, it is always represented as within the present earth, and, in regard to time, during, or at the boundary of this mortal life. In two or three texts it is used antithetically with SHAMEN, 'heavens'—i. e. the upper parts of the air, or the heights above, in contrast to the lower parts of the earth, or the depth beneath; but it is not in one solitary instance put as a place of roasting in opposition to one of rest—or as a place of suffering in opposition to one of bliss. The ancient Hebrews were complete strangers to the abominable conceptions of the modern Hell-mongers.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.—NO. IV.

VII. WHAT THEN IS TO BE DONE?

Let no other test be used, in receiving to fellowship, than that the person give evidence, satisfactory to the church, that Christ has received him; or, that the individual is born from above, and is thereby of "the Lord added to the church." Such persons are entitled to continued fellowship, so long as their tempers and practice correspond with the precepts of the Holy Scriptures.

The apostle says, Rom. xv. 7, "Receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God." How did Christ receive us? Was it because we had a faith that was unmixed with any error?—This would be to claim that every new-born soul is infallible, and that his judgment is perfect. A position, we presume, no Christian is prepared to take. Then how did Christ receive the soul? He received him because the sinner was penitent, and because that penitent soul fled to him for refuge; and we are to receive him when the evidence of these facts is clear to our minds, and have no right to demand any thing more at his reception, or in order to receiving him.

He is to be received to fellowship, not to membership. No man, nor body of men can receive a person to membership in the Church of God: 'the Lord' alone has power and right to receive, and 'add' members to his church; all his church can do is to extend the hand of fellowship; and thither they have no right to withhold, if the person give evidence of his acceptance of God: to withhold it is an act of rebellion against God. The Scriptures apply the name "Church of God" to the children of God in any particular place as, also, to the church universal. See 1 Cor. i. 2. "The Church of God which is at Corinth;" and x. 33 verse, "Give none offence to the Church of God;" also, xv. 9, "I persecuted the Church of God." See Acts xx. 28. "Feed the Church of God." 2 Cor. i. 1. "The Church of God which is at Corinth." Gal. i. 13. "Beyond measure I persecuted the Church of God." 1 Tim. iii. 5, "How shall he take care of the Church of God?" And lastly the Apostle uses the plural, and says, i. Thess. ii. 14, "Ye become the followers of the Churches of God." Thus we find the most common appellation given to the Church was the Church of God, for this evident reason, it belongs to him. If it belonged to the Methodists, it would be proper to call it the Methodist Church; or if it belonged to the Baptists, it would be proper to call it the Baptist Church; and so with respect to all other names. But as the Church of God belongs not to any of the sects, as such, nor to any man, or body of men, it is manifestly improper to call it by any name of human invention; and all such appellations, voluntarily accepted, and used, by a body professing to be a church, seem like a renunciation of their connection with the Church of God. We, therefore, call them just what they call themselves, viz: Baptist Church, Methodist Church, Presbyterian Church, &c. They, evidently, feel it more important to be thus designated than to be simply the Church of God: and they receive persons into their churches, not because the applicant is born from above, but because he is a Methodist, a Baptist, a Presbyterian, &c. We do not say they would receive him if they knew the individual was not born from above; but that is not the reason why they receive him; he must give them evidence not only that he has experienced the new birth, but that he is sound in their creed, or discipline, or whatever it may be that divides them from other professing Christians: nor does it help those sectarian churches at all, who profess to keep "open communion," inviting "all persons in regular standing in other churches" to commune with them. Look at it. You offer yourself, for example, to the Presbyterian church; you are rejected, because, you find some one article in their creed, to which you cannot consent. You now unite with the Methodist church. Next Lord's day you are at the meeting of the Presbyterians, and it is "Communion;" and they invite you, being a "member in regular standing in another church," to commune with them! They would not receive you into their church, though they admit you are a christian brother by inviting you to their communion! Is it not thus evident, that these sectarian churches have set up a standard or test of membership in their bodies, which they admit, by their invitations to communion, to be above the standard that God has given?

Such churches can, indeed receive to membership: and they only can do the work; for 'the Lord' never 'added' anybody to a sectarian church; that is man's work; and what is most of all to be regretted, such adding, too often, disconnects the person from the church of God, by begetting in his mind the sectarian jealousy and party zeal which is opposed to the law of love.

We will here call attention to Acts ii. 47: 'The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.' See also, Acts v. 14, 'Believers were the more added to the Lord,' &c. Also, Acts xi. 24. 'And much people were added unto the Lord.' These texts show that being added unto the Lord, and being by 'the Lord, added to the church,' is one one and the same thing; and that though ministers and other christians may be instrumental in this work, yet, the act of adding is the act of the Lord himself; and men have no negative in this matter, nor right to withhold fellowship when it is done.

As no man nor body of men can receive a member into the Church of God, so, they are not competent to 'excommunicate' from the church.—That, also is the prerogative of Him who has 'the key of David, that openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth.' Rev. iii. 7. We may, and ought, to withdraw fellowship when the individual's temper and practice indicate that the Lord has 'rejected' him; or, that he is no longer a member of the Church of God; but, let him understand that we do not excommunicate—that is an act of the Lord; and that 'it is a fearful thing,' for one who has been a member of the Church of God, 'to fall into' his 'hands,' as a traitor to his cause. But while his temper and practice correspond with the Scriptures, he is entitled to fellowship by the church. 1 John i. 7. 'That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you that ye also have fellowship with us, &c. 'If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.' Acts ii. 42. 'And they continued steadfastly in the Apostle's doctrine and fellowship,' &c. Gal. ii. 9. 'And when James, Cephas, and John perceived the grace that was in me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship,' &c. To keep and promote this fellowship, where there will be a difference of opinion, on many points, in the same body, let us heed the apostle's exhortation, Eph. iv. 1-3. 'I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace;' and also, 'avoid doubtful disputations;' that is, such matters as do not tend to promote purity, the knowledge and love of God; leaving all, in such matters, to judge for themselves, answerable to God alone. But if tempers or practice are unholily we are to obey the apostle's injunction, Eph. v. 11, 'Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.' Such are the principles upon which we conceive the church of God is established, and by which all the children of God ought to govern themselves.

Such are the Principles of the church with which the Editor of the Examiner is connected in the city of PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania. Let all who read these numbers ask themselves whether they owe to God and men any duty to sustain these principles, and then act as they can answer to God at the Judgment.

DR. LEES, LEEDS, England:—We are greatly obliged to you for the Nos. of the "Truth Seeker" received. Only one has come to hand that contains anything from "Archbishop Whately," and that article is on "Universal Restoration and the Second Death." Will you send us No. 1, Vol. 1, New Series?

P. S.—The "addenda" is received, but too late for insertion this month. We have sent you all the Nos. of the Examiner for this year: if they are not received, let us know, and we will send them again.

THE SIX SERMONS, QUARTO, we will sell at the following extremely low prices, that our friends may have a chance to scatter the truth abroad. For $1, thirty copies; $3, one hundred copies; and for $5, two hundred.

"RICH MAN AND LAZARUS."—The article on this subject, in the last Examiner, will be published in a Tract of 12 pages, 18 mo., corresponding in size with the Six Sermons in pamphlet, at one dollar per hundred copies.

BACK NUMBERS OF THE EXAMINER.—We still supply them for 1848, or Vol. 3. We are satisfied that any who may subscribe hereafter will regret to be deprived of those numbers. The matter furnished us by Dr. Lees, much of it, has a connection with the article in Nos. 1 and 2 of the present volume of the Examiner.

THE EDITOR of this paper preaches every Lord's day at COMMISTONERS' HALL, Third street, below Green, east side; at 10½, A. M., and in the evening at 7½ o'clock.

THE "SIX SERMONS" on the End of the Wicked, &c., can be had of the Author, 18 Chester street, between Race and Vine, 8th and 9th. Price, in Pamphlet, 15 cents, or ten copies for $1. The pamphlet includes the views of the author on the question, "Have the dead knowledge?" The Sermons advocate the doctrine, that "All the wicked will God destroy," or, cause them to cease from life, after the judgment. The work full bound in morocco, with Green's thoughts on the Intermediate State, 37½ cts. Cash in all cases with the order.

THE ASPECTS OF PNEUMATOLOGY ON REVELATION; or, Materialism, Fatalism, Regeneration, Creeds, Atheism, The operation of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of men, and HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY, Philosophically considered, in a series of Lectures, BY J. T. WALSH. Such is the title of an Octavo pamphlet of 74 pages, published by Br. Walsh, Richmond, Va., 1843. For sale at 18 Chester street, Philadelphia, Pa., and by the Author. Price 25 cents, or five copies for one dollar, thirty copies for five dollars. Cash always with the order.

"MENTAL DISEASE AND DEATH."

STRICTURES.—By WM. H. BREWSTER, MINISTER IN THE METHODIST CHURCH.

BR. STORRS.—With your permission, I will offer a few remarks upon an article, on "mental disease and death," by J. T. Walsh, Assistant Editor.

I understand him, in common with the deniers of the separate conscious existence of the soul or mind of man, and its immortality, to assume that the brain and soul are identical.

His whole reasoning proceeds upon this basis. The growth of the brain, is the growth of the mind, its disease, the disease of the mind, its death, the death of the mind. He says—"the position of our opponents, is, when the man is dead, and his brain resolved into dust, he still thinks and feels."

"OUR (his) INFERENCE, OR DEDUCTION: If the above be true, NO DISEASE OR INJURY OF THE BRAIN SHOULD INTERRUPT THE MANIFESTATIONS OF THE MIND."

He then states facts to prove what all believe, that injury of the brain does, usually, more or less affect the manifestations of mind. But these facts fail to establish an identity, and only prove that "while at home in the body," the brain is the organ of the mind; and hence, with a diseased and feeble organ, the manifestations of mind are therefore feeble.

Was the mind and brain identical, the mind would be affected precisely in the same manner, and to the same extent of the brain. But this is not true. It is now put beyond dispute, by the testimony of eminent men, that in different persons, every part of the brain has been diseased and destroyed, without perceptibly affecting the manifestations of mind. Now, while all he states can be explained,—on the ground of a connection between the brain and mind,—such facts as I have referred to, cannot be, on the supposition of identity.

He assumes, in this article, that the mind grows and decays with the body. That in old age, as well as childhood, the mind is feeble, and feeble because "the whole frame, including the brain, becomes shrunk and enfeebled."

Here, again, dependence, connection,—not identity—is proved. The supposition of identity would oblige us, in every case, to show that the weakness of the mind, corresponds exactly with the feebleness of the body,—but while the latter is "all weakness and pain," the former is full and powerful to reason," and triumphs, amid the pains of dissolution not unfrequently.

Were they identical, there could be no increase of mental power, after the physical organization had reached maturity. It would grow while the body grew, and stand still when it stood still.

The largest brain and the greatest mind would be interchangeable terms—a position contradicted by a thousand facts. In a few cases, even in childhood, while the frame is feeble, the countenance pale and deathly,—the most astonishing powers of mind are developed. Such is the case with the remarkable "Vermont boy," who has lately attracted so much attention. Though a little, feeble, sickly-looking boy, yet at the age of ten, he was wiser than all his mathematical teachers,—had calculated and published an almanac,—invented a new mode of calculating eclipses,—and was master of the whole field of science.

Thus God vindicates the truth of the soul's inherent, transcendent powers, when the body is feeble.

But Mr. Walsh is a Christian, and willing to bring his philosophy to the test of inspiration. Let the idea be borne along by the reader, that on the ground assumed by him, it is the brain that thinks and reasons—hopes and fears—loves and hates—repents and believes,—is redeemed, enlightened, regenerated, and saved.

Man is wholly physical: and hence, the convicting and converting power of the Holy Spirit, is confined to matter: and "that which"—the thing which—is born of the spirit, is flesh, and not spirit, as the Saviour declares it to be.

Mr. W. tells us "that which is born of the spirit" is the brain, or, at least, matter, (flesh). Christ declares "that which is born of the spirit" is not flesh, but spirit.

If the brain and mind are identical, then may we read brain, where the words soul, mind, spirit, heart occur in the Bible, in application to the thinking power of man.

Num. 21: 4: "And the (soul) brain of the people was much discouraged." "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the brain." "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own"—brains! "My brain is exceeding sorrowful."

"Fear not them that kill the body, but cannot kill the brain:—but fear him who can destroy both brain and body in hell."

I will not pursue this: but if it seem trifling, I am not the trifler—I only follow where he leads. If he does not believe the mind and brain identical, he should say so, and tell what the mind is: and if it be a distinct essence, how he knows it cannot exist separate from this material frame. And if the brain thinks, reasons, hopes and fears, worships and adores,—does it take the whole brain to perform these offices? and if a part, what part? and if each part, how can the size of the brain have anything to do with the power of mind? If it be the whole, then the destruction of any part destroys the power to think which is not true. If it be a particular part, then the destruction of the other parts should not affect the manifestations of mind, while the destruction of that part destroys the mind.

If this power belong to every part of the brain, considered separately, then every part of the brain must be destroyed, in order to destroy the power of thought, and there would be as many minds as there are parts or particles of the brain, when divided and sub-divided to the utmost susceptibility of division.

But if the brain and mind are not identical, but distinct entities, then the destruction of the brain does not involve, of necessity, the destruction of the consciousness, thinking power, and for ought that he has shown, after death, "and the brain is resolved into dust," the man thinks and feels. If the brain does not think or will any more than the heart, its destruction does not, of itself, destroy the power to think, any more than the destruction of the heart.

I have pursued this, perhaps, too far already, but there is something so repugnant to my feelings, opposed to my reason, and my interpretation of God's word, in the doctrine set forth, that I cannot look upon its propagation without deep feeling.

There live, alas! of heaven directed mien,
Of cultured soul and sapient eye serene,
Who hail the man, pilgrim of a day,
Spouse of the worm, brother of the clay,
Fragile as the leaf, in autumn's yellow bower,
Dust before the wind, or dew upon the flower.
For this bath science searched on weary wing!
By land and sea, each mute and living thing!
Launched with Iberia's pilot from the steep!
To world's unknown, and isles beyond the deep!
O! star-eyed science! hast thou wandered there
To waft us home the message of despair!

Such are my involuntary exclamations on reading such articles as that I am reviewing.

Lowell, Mass.

REPLY TO WILLIAM H. BREWSTER.

However well the gentleman may understand himself, it is evident that he neither understands me nor the subject before me. Of course Mr. Brewster will allow me the same liberty with his article that he has taken with mine. He will, therefore, excuse me, if, while I am respectful and kind to him, I should be a little severe with his arguments.

st. He says: "I understand him," (myself) "in common with the deniers of the separate conscious existence of the soul or mind of man, and its immortality, to assume that the brain and soul are identical." Now, whatever others may "assume" on this subject, I "assume" nothing. I neither believe nor teach, that the "brain and soul are identical." Consequently, my "whole reasoning" does not proceed upon this basis. And he will search in vain for any such intimation. If Mr. Brewster will turn to those numbers of the Bible Examiner, in which my articles on the "Philosophy of Man" are published, he will see the various applications of the term "soul," as used in the Scriptures. He will there see, that I do not predicate mind of the soul, in the ordinary acceptance of the word; although the term soul is used in many places in the Scriptures to embrace, or include, the mind. Man is defined by the Scriptures to be "a living soul," and the primary meaning of the term soul, is life: it would, therefore, be unscriptural, unphilosophical and absurd to say that the "brain and" life "are identical;" although it be not possible for life to survive the dissolution of the brain.

"The growth of the brain, is the growth of the mind; it's disease the disease of the mind; its death the death of the mind." Yes; the healthy "growth of the brain, is the growth," or increased development, "of the mind," but not the soul! For, an idiot, without mind, has as much soul or life, as the most intellectual. But the "disease of the brain, is the disease of the mind." Yes; is it not so? Can there be disease of one without implicating the other? And is there any manifestation of mind after the brain is dead? Mr. Brewster says there is! "It is now put beyond dispute, by the testimony of eminent men, that in different persons, every part of the brain has been diseased and DESTROYED, without perceptibly affecting the manifestations of mind."

Now, while the above statement, in Mr. Brewster's opinion, may have been "put beyond dispute by eminent men," I am compelled, by facts and principles within my knowledge, to deny its truth, and to class it with hundreds and thousands of other "false facts," published to the world by medical charlatans to sustain an antiquated theory, and save their sinking orthodoxy! The proposition bears upon its face the strongest improbability. What! EVERY PART of the brain diseased, without perceptibly affecting the manifestations of the mind? "EVERY PART DISEASED!!" All involved in disease down to the medulla oblongata, "in every part," "without perceptibly affecting the mind!" Astounding! But this is not all. "Every part" is not only represented as "diseased," but actually "DESTROYED" without perceptibly affecting the manifestations of the mind. Friend Brewster may rely upon it, he has been imposed on by "false facts," facts which are nothing more than loose statements, made by men without regard to proper observation, and in utter violation of the laws of physiology. Such a state of the brain, as that represented by Mr. Brewster, is absolutely incompatible with life! No man could live after his brain was "destroyed in every part."

If Mr. Brewster's "facts" be "true facts," how will he be able to reconcile them with the position, that there is any "connection between the brain and the mind?" His "facts" not only upset my theory, but his own also! Like Samson, while he slays the Philistines, he, himself, perishes in the general wreck! But there is a "connection between the brain and the mind," even in the estimation of Mr. Brewster. What is that "connection?" My position is, that the brain develops mind; and that, consequently, "when the man is dead, and his brain resolved into dust," he ceases "to think and feel." My friend, however, thinks differently.

When I stated in a former article the relations between the body and the mind, in infancy, manhood, old age, disease and death, I only submitted a proposition which every physiologist in the world, of any note, is prepared to admit. Nor has any fact stated by Mr. Brewster, upon this point, disproved it. The body may "be all weakness and pain," to use a strong expression; and still the person may be able to "reason," but he who affirms that such a man, in such a case, is "full powerful to reason," "and triumphs amid the pains of dissolution," has certainly observed to no purpose. It may be, that there are a thousand degrees of mental vigor; and it is possible, that a dying man, when death has not yet invaded his brain, may be able to manifest some degree of intellect; but to suppose that because he can do this, that, therefore, his brain is not the organ of his mind, would be to make sad havoc of all logic.

As it respects the intellectual boy, of whom Mr. Brewster speaks, I will remark, that the nervous temperament—that temperament which embraces the brain and nervous system generally—gives rise to precociousness of intellect. It imparts to such children a sprightliness, a vivacity of mind, incompatible with long life; and, also, positively incompatible with the possession of a deep, profound, and philosophic mind. But, let my friend remember, that this very precociousness of mind, in connection with an undue development of the brain and nerves, is but another proof of the inseparable connection which obtains between the brain and the mind; and that this undue development, or predominance of the nervous system, is, in fact, the cause of that precocity. But, even if it were otherwise, such cases are rare; and they would only be exceptions to the rule.

After stating the case of the boy, to which I have just referred, Mr. B. remarks:—"Thus God vindicates the truth of the soul's inherent, transcendent powers, when the body is feeble." My friend forgot that this juvenile intellectual giant, who "was master of the whole field of science," had a predominance of the nervous temperament, which gave rise to his brilliant mind; and that his "soul" was not the "inherent" power in the case.

But, if this "feeble little fellow" is really "master of the whole field of science," all I have to say, is, that he surpasses all his predecessors. He has left Newton, Solomon, and my worthy friend himself, far behind, toiling after him in vain!

Mr. B. is continually arguing on the assumption, that I maintain the "identity" of the brain and mind. This I have previously denied. And now, let me enquire, does he consider the soul and the mind "identical?" His whole reasoning proceeds upon this basis," as he said of me.

Let us examine this view of the subject. "The soul that sins shall die;" but the mind and the soul are "identical;" therefore, the mind shall die! What becomes of its immortality in this case? In the same manner I can prove the mind and soul to be distinct; Thus:

The mind can become deranged:

But derangement is nowhere affirmed of the soul:

Ergo: The mind and soul are not the same.

"The life of the flesh is in the blood." Jesus "poured out his soul," or life, "unto death." He did not "pour out" his mind. "His soul," or life, "was made an offering for sin." But it is nowhere asserted that his mind "was made an offering."

The brain and the mind stand in the relation of cause and effect. They are not "identical," but the one develops the other. Consequently, the following remark of Mr. Brewster, is out of place: "Let the idea be borne along by the reader, that on the ground assumed by him," (myself) "it is the brain that thinks, and reasons, hopes and fears, loves and hates, repents and believes, is redeemed, enlightened, regenerated, and saved." I am really at a loss to know, how any person could so pervert what I have written! Be it known, then, to Mr. B. that, when a man thinks, he thinks by means of his brain: that, when a man reasons, he reasons by means of the same instrument; and so of his hope, fear, love, hate, repentance and faith. All these mental and moral acts are performed by means of the brain. And there are appropriate organs in the brain for the manifestation of all these functions. It is THE MAN who is "redeemed, enlightened, regenerated, and saved," by motives, arguments, facts and principles addressed to him through his brain; or, if you please, through those mental and moral powers which are developed by that instrument.

But let me apply my friend's principle of reasoning to his own position, and then see how the case stands:

It is the immortal soul that "thinks and reasons, hopes" and fears, loves and hates, repents and believes, is redeemed, enlightened, regenerated and saved:

But some men, such as idiots, monomaniacs, &c., cannot reason:

Ergo: They have no immortality, and cannot be the subjects of "redemption, enlightenment, regeneration, and salvation."

Again: It is the immortal soul that "thinks," &c. But the beasts "think."

Ergo: The beasts are immortal.

Again: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no wisdom, nor knowledge, nor work, nor device in sheol whither thou goest." "Also, their love and their hatred," as well as "their thoughts have perished."

But these attributes are affirmed of the "soul."

Therefore, the soul is not conscious in the intermediate state.

"Man is wholly physical," while, at the same time, he possesses effective, moral and mental faculties, which put him in relation with the universe, physically, morally and mentally. And it is his organization which makes him superior to "the beasts that perish," and not the possession of an "immortal soul."

Mr. Brewster speaks of the "new birth" as though it were a physical production. "The Holy Spirit" operates on men as men, and not merely on what he pleases to call "an immortal soul." The spirit operates through the gospel, and moves to action by its motives and arguments, addressed to the reason and moral sentiments of men. It is not "an immortal soul" that is "born again," but the MAN, THE WHOLE MAN. Jesus said—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

But, let us look at this from another point. Jesus says—"That which is born of spirit is spirit," not "soul." Now, man has a body, soul, spirit and a mind; will Mr. B. inform me which of these is the "immortal" part? Which of these is the subject of the "new birth?" Thus Mr. B.'s reductio ad absurdum recoils upon his own head.

I affirm, on the contrary, that it is the MAN, composed of soul, body, spirit and mind; composed of flesh, blood, bones, nerves, and brain, who is the subject of a moral or spiritual birth, in contradistinction to his first birth, which was purely animal.

Again, Mr. B. says—"If the brain and mind are 'identical,' then may we, &c., &c. 'If?' This 'if' is well put in, for we maintain no such absurd position. And it is a pity Mr. B. did not take its kindly admonition; for it would have saved him the trouble of writing at least half his letter!

But let me try him by his own rule, and see how his "immortal soul" will stand the ordeal. "And the 'immortal' soul of the people was much discouraged." "Immortal souls discouraged!" Now, it is evident that the text means nothing, but that the people became dispirited—desponding. And was not this feeling produced by impressions made on them through the brain? I cannot conceive of an "immortal soul" discouraged! Discourage "immortality!" "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the (immortal) soul." Do "immortal souls" require conversion? "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own (immortal) soul?" And, seriously, "what would it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world, and lose his" brains? This would not profit him! But what did the Lord mean? He asked the question—"What would it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world and lose his life?" "My" (immortal) "soul is exceeding sorrowful." Is sorrow an attribute of immortality?

"Fear not them that kill the body, but cannot kill the (immortal) soul—but fear him who can destroy both (immortal) soul and body in hell." Now, in the last text but one, quoted by Mr. B., he did not quote it all. Jesus said—"My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." Now, if a soul can be "sorrowful even unto death," I should suppose it could be "killed." And, accordingly, we find the very "soul" that was "sorrowful even to death," actually put to death on the cross! Yes, that "soul was poured out unto death"—it was "made an offering for sin." Again: Does immortality go to "hell?" Can immortality be "destroyed?" I had thought that immortality was indestructible—deathless!

The Lord taught his apostles and disciples not to fear those who only had the power of "killing" in the present life; but whose power extended not to the life to come: but to fear him who not only had the power of life and death here, but who also, had the power to "destroy both life and body in hell"—to put an end to your existence.

Mr. B. says—"If this seems trifling, I am not the trifler, I only follow where he leads." The gentleman is mistaken; he has not "followed" me, but an ignis fatuus of his own creation; and, consequently, he has fallen into a dilemma from which he will find it difficult to escape. And if he has not trifled, he has at least the appearance of it. But I trust better things of him in future.

Mr. B. says: "If he (I) do not believe the mind and brain identical, he (I) should say so, and tell what the mind is." Well, I have said so, I do not believe the mind and brain identical. The mind is an effect, an aggregate of powers, or functions, developed by the brain. These powers are perceptive and reflective. They embrace the five external senses. In a more general sense, the mind is used to express not only the mental powers, but, also, the moral. All these functions have their corresponding organs in the brain; and when those organs are diseased, their functions are deranged; and when they are destroyed, the mind is no more. A man think without a brain? When he can hear, see, feel, and smell, without the appropriate apparatus belonging to these functions, then, but not before, will he think, reason, and perceive without a brain! A portion of the brain may be diseased, involving the function of that part only, as in monomania. But if the whole brain be involved, the man will be completely deranged.

My friend is not a mental philosopher. Let him be wide awake, or the Philistines may surprise him. We have not said the hundredth part of what we have to say, but this may suffice for the present. If Mr. B. should desire to continue the discussion, I shall be happy to aid him in the matter, in all candour and truth. Wishing him all happiness, I subscribe myself,

His friend, respectfully,
J. T. WALSH.

DR. THOMAS' POSITION DEFENDED.

In our last we published so much of Br. Magruder's article as related to ourself, with his introduction. We now give that part of it which is a defence of Dr. Thomas' position in reply to Br. Grew, the latter having consented to accept Br. M. as "an ally" to Dr. T.

Mr. Grew's article in the August No., and the editorial endorsement of some of the positions he assumes, deserves a courteous and candid notice from those who think that Dr. Thomas is right in the main ground he takes in the argument. The Doctor is now in England. The period of his return is uncertain. His reply will be necessarily delayed. Mr. Grew and the Editor are both in the field against him. It is but fair to permit an ally, in his absence, to enter the list in behalf of the truth he advocates. I propose, therefore, briefly and as clearly as I can, to offer some scripture testimony on the question at issue, by way of

REPLY TO MR. GREW.

Dr. Thomas maintains that "repentance, immersion and holiness, are indivisibly essential to salvation in the Kingdom of God." To this Mr. Grew objects "as unscriptural and absurd," and adds—"Now, I say, it is absolutely necessary in order to stand complete in all the will of God, but not to salvation." When Mr. G. says the proposition of Dr. T. is absurd, he means to point his objection at "immersion" as an essential to salvation. He answers, that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord;" and that "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Now, how stands the Bible testimony as to the essentiality of immersion to salvation? Let us premise, however, that there is no dispute here as to the mode or action of baptism. On that point the disputants agree that immersion is the baptism of the Bible. Now, is immersion essential to salvation? What say the Scriptures? Let Mr. Grew turn to 1 Peter 3: 20, and read: "When once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was a preparing wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water—the like figure whereunto even baptism (i. e. immersion) doth also now save us."

Mr. Grew asserts, baptism is not essential to salvation. The Bible declares "baptism doth also now save us." Which is right?

Again. Does Mr. Grew believe that faith is an essential of salvation? Yes, undoubtedly, for it is written, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But why make faith any more than baptism an essential from this text? What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.

Again. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus;" but it is immediately added, as descriptive of the mode of our having become children, "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ," Gal. 3: 27.

It is easy to multiply quotations to the same effect, almost indefinitely. See Acts 2: 38; Rom. 6: 4, 5; Acts 8: 12; Titus 3: 5; &c. &c.

Mr. Grew says, "as Dr. T. excludes from salvation all the unimmersed, I hold him to adduce one passage which necessarily implies their exclusion from the kingdom of God." I answer by citing the words of Jesus in Luke 7: 29, 30. Speaking of John the Baptist, he says, "All the people that heard him, and the Pharisees, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and the lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." Does not this passage "necessarily imply their exclusion from the kingdom of God?" Let truth and candour dictate the reply.

Mr. Grew says "Men are born of the spirit previous to their being qualified for baptism." This is true, if he means by "born of the spirit," belief—that faith is a qualification for baptism; but if he means, as he probably does, that men become Christians before they are qualified for baptism, he cannot object to being asked to prove what he affirms—for it is denied. If it be so, then baptism is not an ordinance for sinners, but for saints. Why, then, did Peter say on Pentecost, to those who already believed—"were pricked in their heart"—"Repent and be baptized—for the remission of sins." They were Christians when addressed by Peter, says Mr. Grew. But hold! Christians, and yet their sins unremitted? They were told to be baptized in order to get the remission of sins! If Christians, they were "saved," 1 Cor. 15: 2; and yet Peter says, "baptism doth also now save us." Still, they were unbaptized. If saved without baptism, as Mr. G. says, then Peter is not to be believed! The Corinthians "hearing, believed and were baptized." It was thus they became "saved if they kept in memory" the things they had heard, 1 Cor. 15: 2.

I pass over Mr. Grew's criticism on the phrase "being born of water," in John 3: 5; for while indulging his strictures on Dr. T.'s construction, he does not favour us with his own. In his zeal to repudiate a literal application of the passage to baptism, he brings himself to the conclusion that a "man may be metaphorically born of water," and thus, it seems to me, stultifies the whole passage.

I should be glad to pursue the subject in detail, and give the scriptural testimony at large, to show that "baptism is one of the conditions of salvation"—"remission of sins"—regeneration and adoption into the family of God—all of which, indeed, are synonyms, and express that "newness of life," the rising to which, (after the burial of baptism of 6th chap. of Romans), constitutes a leading feature in the "form of doctrine" which we are commanded to obey from the heart, in order to obtain the glory, honour and immortality which is promised to the patient in well-doing.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

BR. GREW'S RESPONSE TO THE FOREGOING.

BR. STORRS:—As the manifestation of truth is our object, I cheerfully accept of Mr. Magruder as "an ally" of his absent friend.

Mr. M. has not attempted to refute my argument founded on Rom. 14: 1, which imperatively requires the reception into the Christian church of the weak (i. e. erroneous) who are "in the faith" of Jesus Christ. It is admitted that we must be in this faith previous to immersion, which is admitting that immersion is not essential thereto, for if it were essential, we could not be in the faith until we were immersed. The sentiment that baptism is essential to salvation, is therefore refuted by a numerous class of bible passages which connect salvation with faith. Luke 7: 48, 50; John 1: 12; 3: 14, 15, 16, 18, 26; 5: 24; 11: 25, 26; Acts 10: 43; Rom. 5: 1; &c. &c. It may be said that these passages no more prove that we can be saved by faith without baptism, than they prove that we can be saved by faith without repentance or holiness. The truth or fallacy of this affirmation depends on the question, whether or not faith is as necessarily connected with immersion in water, as it is with repentance or holiness? Most certainly it is not. No man has the faith essential to acceptable baptism without repentance. Faith indeed is itself reformation of principle. "How can ye believe that receive honour one of another and seek not the honour which cometh from God only?" But faith can and does exist without baptism. See Luke 7: 50; 23: 42, 43. Mr. M. offers 1 Peter 3: 20 to 22, as proof of his position. The question is not, "which is right," Mr. Grew or Peter? The question is, is Mr. M.'s construction of the passage (part only of which he has quoted) correct? It appears to me that the inspired apostle put in the parenthesis ("not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God") to preclude the very conclusion that Mr. M. adopts! The parenthesis shows that he uses the word "baptism" metonymically, in respect to salvation, and that the act of immersion in water will not save us. In conformity with this view of the subject, he told Simon, who had been baptized, that, so far from being saved, he had "no part or lot in this matter." Acts 7: 21. He was not saved with it. The thief was saved without it.

Mr. M. quotes Mark 16: 16, and asks, "Why make faith any more than baptism an essential from this text? I reply, because my blessed Saviour has done so by saying, 'he that believeth not, shall be condemned;' but he does not say this of him who is not baptized, either in this passage or in any other. 'What God hath' put asunder," let not man join together. Faith and baptism are joined together in the passage as duties, but not as equally important and essential. In this respect Christ makes a difference.

Gal. 3: 26, 27 is also quoted. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus;" but, Mr. M. observes, it is immediately added, as descriptive of the mode of our having become children, "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." This appears to be contradictory. If faith is the "mode" by which we become children, as the apostle declares, then we are children before we are baptized, and baptism is no more a mode of our becoming children than any other act of obedience. The phrase, "have put of Christ," refers to the general obedience of those who have been truly baptized into Him, which obedience proves that they are children.

I have asked for one passage which necessarily implies the exclusion of the unimmersed from the Kingdom of God. Mr. M. gives me Luke 7: 29, 30, and asks, "Does not this passage necessarily imply their exclusion from the kingdom of God?" I reply, certainly it implies the exclusion of those Pharisees who rejected the counsel of God by John, to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. This, however, is far from implying that those who repent and believe will be rejected without immersion. The phrase, "being not baptized of him," does not, with the connection, necessarily imply anything more than their not being baptized of him with penitence, as he required, (for many of them were willing to be baptized, Matt. 3: 7,) proved their rejection of the counsel of God.

I am asked to prove "that men become Christians before they are qualified for baptism." Mr. M. admits that we believe before, and, with the apostle, that we are the children of God by faith, "and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," &c. Will Mr. M. abandon his position, or will he affirm that we may be the children of God by faith in Christ, and joint heirs with Christ to eternal glory, and yet not be Christians? I affirm that when the Eunuch said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, believing this with all his heart, as Philip required, he was a Christian before he was baptized. It is objected, "If it be so, then baptism is not an ordinance for sinners but for saints." I reply, baptism is not an ordinance for sinners until they repent and believe, and thus become the children of God. If the children of God are not "saints," I should be glad to be informed who are. Mr. M. quotes Acts 2: 38, and exclaims, "Hold! Christians, and yet their sins unremitted?" Nay, verily, I protest against a construction of the phrase, "baptized—for the remission of sins," that subverts scriptural facts and innumerable passages of divine truth, which connect pardon with repentance and faith. It is a fact, Jesus Christ being judge, that the believing woman in Simon's house was "forgiven" and "saved" before she was baptized. Luke 7: 47, 50. So was the man sick of the palsy. Luke 5: 20. That Christian baptism was instituted previous to these cases, and at the commencement of our Lord's ministry, (if not before, by John,) is evident from John 4: 1, 2. "Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples," yet, as they baptized by his authority and direction, it is written verse 1, that "Jesus—baptized." Surely it will not be denied that Christ's baptism is Christian baptism. Baptism is but the symbol of remission. Thus understanding it, the declarations of scripture, relative to the subject, perfectly harmonize. I would remind my friend of the importance of examining all the passages relating to a particular subject to ascertain the truth. Acts 18: 8; "hearing, believed and were baptized" proves the latter to be a duty, but not that it is essential to eternal salvation.

In conclusion, I present to the serious consideration of my intelligent friend another insuperable objection to his view. It excludes from the kingdom of God some who, on the whole, are more holy than some who are admitted.

HENRY GREW.

QUERIES ON BAPTISM.

In some of the late numbers of the "Bible Examiner," the subject of baptism has been introduced, and some of the correspondents have taken a very strange position, viz: that there can be no salvation without immersion. With your permission I will give the readers of the Examiner a few interrogatories, which may lead some minds to further thought on the subject, while no doubt, others may reject the whole as visionary and fanatical. It is assumed, without at this time attempting the proof, that John's baptism was under the Law, and was a type or "shadow of good things to come," and that the substance or antitype, was not, and could not, in the nature of the case, be identically the same thing as the type; or as Paul says, "not the very image of the things." As an example, the Lamb in the type was the sacrifice, which pointed to Christ as the antitypical sacrifice.

QUES. 1. Was not the probable mode by which John administered baptism to the multitudes who flocked to him from the whole country, according to the Law described by Paul, Heb. 9: 19, using a bunch of hyssop or other bitter herbs, as the multitudes from Galilee and beyond Jordan flocked down to or into the water, John did at Jordan the same as Moses did at the brazen laver, when the tribes passed on before him, "sprinkled all the people?"

QUES. 2. Was not that also the typical baptism which Christ's disciples administered, John 3: 22-24, and 4: 1, 2, from the fact that then, John was not cast into prison, before which the time was not fulfilled for the gospel of the kingdom to be preached, beginning first at Galilee?

QUES. 3. When John says, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance, but He that cometh after me shall baptize (Greek Baptizo)—will it do to read it here immersed) you with the Holy Ghost and with fire," are we to understand that the subjects were to be baptized or immersed in a literal fire?

QUES. 4. Will any one say that John's words were not fulfilled when Peter began to speak the words of eternal life to Cornelius and those that were with him, when the Holy Ghost fell on them as it did on the Apostles at the beginning? See Peter's sermon, or the word preached to them. Acts 10: 34, 44—"My word is a fire," and then his comment, chapter 11: 15, 16. Was not this the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost?

QUES. 5. Does not the mode in the antitype correspond with the mode in the type, when Moses and John sprinkled all the people? and would the truth be conveyed, and would it be proper to say, that Cornelius and they which were with him were immersed in the Holy Ghost, rather than the Holy Ghost fell on them?

QUES. 6. If Christ, or his people through or by Christ, were not to come after John and baptize with literal fire, then upon the same principles of interpretation, may not the words of Christ to Nicodemus be something different from literal water, when he says, "except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God?"

QUES. 7. If there is any doubt in answering the last question, can the objector show that the time when this being reborn takes place, is not at the time when they enter the Kingdom of God, which most will admit is set up when Christ judges the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom?

QUES. 8. Is there not a strong probability that Peter and the other Apostles, in the early part of their ministry, were as much mistaken and influenced by Jewish prejudice, when they applied water baptism after the subjects had been baptised with the Holy Ghost, as when they circumcised the uncircumcised?

QUES. 9. If there is no salvation without immersion, would it be benevolent in Paul to thank God that he had baptised but two or three; and would it not be in opposition to the command of Christ, as most understand his words to be to his disciples, "Go teach all nations, baptising them," &c., when Paul says, "for Christ sent me not to baptise, but to preach the Gospel?"

QUES. 10. After Christ's resurrection he directed his disciples to teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Was this baptism to be performed with water after the manner of the types, or was it done by the Apostles when they preached the word, and then laid their hands on their hearer's heads, and they received the Holy Ghost, and thus through them as instruments baptised with fire and the Holy Ghost?

Paul, in Acts 19: 4, contrasts John's baptism with the baptism of the Holy Ghost. In the fifth verse it is declared, that the twelve men were baptised, and in the sixth verse the manner in which it was done is declared to be by laying on of Paul's hands. The enquiry is now made, is there any other baptism left for the Christian dispensation, but the baptism of the fire and of the Holy Ghost—called elsewhere Christian "washing of regeneration;"—washing of water by the word"—&c. &c.?

Peter says the eight souls saved by water in the days of Noah, was a figure of baptism which doth also now save us by (or, because of, Greek dim), the resurrection of Jesus Christ. This baptism was not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God. Let every Bible reader answer whether it was water baptism, or the baptism by the Holy Ghost, that saved us; for Peter speaks of but one in the singular number! Which of the two baptisms washed away Paul's sins referred to in Acts 22: 16? Was it the one when he was filled with the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands of Ananias upon the head of brother Saul; or was it water baptism after he received his sight? Does not Ananias say that he was sent by Jesus to do the first, and says nothing about being sent by Jesus to wash away the sins of Paul by immersion, as your brother Magruder supposes in the last Examiner?

THE DEAD UNCONSCIOUS;

OR OBJECTIONS ANSWERED—No. I.

Truth is what we desire, and it cannot be purchased at too great a price. Truth makes us free; and truth sanctifies us. Whatever else we have, if we have not truth, we shall "suffer loss;" even though we may "be saved," it will be "so as by fire."

The first text to which attention is called, is Matt. 10: 28. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." We will approach this text calmly, remembering that "no scripture is of any private, or self-interpretation." That is: no scripture is to be interpreted without making a harmony of all the scriptures relating to the same subject. Now, as this text does not affirm that the righteous are conscious when dead, it can only be inferred from the language. If other scriptures do positively affirm that the righteous, even, are without knowledge when dead, then we must seek such an interpretation of Matt. 10: 28 as will harmonize. David deprecates death in this strain—"Return, O Lord, deliver my soul: oh save me for thy mercies' sake: for in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psal. 6: 5. Again, the Psalmist, mourning over his afflictions, declares that his "life draweth nigh unto the grave;" and then adds—"Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" These texts show clearly what view the Psalmist had of the state of the righteous dead. They do not have any "remembrance" of God—they are in a "land of forgetfulness." Peter tells us, respecting "David," that he is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. David himself declares, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness;" not when he sinks into the "land of forgetfulness," where there is "no remembrance of God;" but when he "awakes"—then he shall be satisfied: not before. Psal. 17: 15. He tells us, Psal. 16: 11, "In God's presence is fulness of joy." Then he did not go into that presence at death; because, if he had he would not have to wait till he awaked in the likeness of God to be satisfied: unless we suppose that the dead saints have fulness of joy and yet are not satisfied!! It were easy to increase the testimony as to the fact that the righteous dead are unconscious, as well as the wicked.

Now we may return to Matt. 10: 28. Let us paraphrase this text. "Fear not them that kill the body, [or take away your present life or consciousness] but are not able to kill the soul: [are not able to reach you to harm you afterwards] but rather fear him which is able [after the resurrection] to destroy both soul and body in hell;"—"gehennae." That the construction we put upon this text is not forced, is evident from the fact, that our Lord speaks of what God is able to do after the resurrection. He does not say, fear him who, after man has killed the body, is able to destroy the soul in hell—but both soul and body." Showing that our Lord speaks of the resurrection state and not the intermediate. Man can take away our temporal life, but he cannot reach our eternal life; God can deprive us of both by destroying both body and soul in gehennae. We repeat it—In order for God to destroy the body with the soul, after man has killed the body, there must be a resurrection first; and hence it is clear our Lord is not, in this text, making any statement that the soul is conscious when the body is dead; but assures them there is a power, beyond that of man, that can make a final and total end of their life or being. This interpretation harmonizes with the other inspired testimony "in the Psalms," quoted above. The testimony of Luke 12: 4, 5, confirms the interpretation we have here given. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body [take away your present life] and after that have no more that they can do.

But—fear him, which, after he has killed [taken away your present life] has power to cast into hell?—gehennan. But, as remarked above, to cast into gehennan, hell, the resurrection must first take place. But let us give still another view of Matt. 10:28. The same word—“Psyche,” translated “soul” in this verse is used in the same discourse at the 29th verse, and is there translated “life.” Let the 28th verse now be read thus, understanding it as addressed to the righteous; “*Fear not them which kill the body [take away temporal life] but are not able to kill [or destroy] the psyche—life [because your life is hid with Christ in God:] so that if men take away your temporal life, after that they can do no more. Luke 12:4; for “when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory”] but rather fear him who is able to destroy [after the resurrection] both life and body in gehenna.” “Our life” is in Christ; men cannot reach that; but “God” can “take away” our “part out of the Book of Life”; therefore fear him and not man.*

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, OCT., 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

BIBLE EXAMINER: THREE OFFERS.—I. Any person sending us $1, current money, free of expense, shall have the Bible Examiner for 1849, and seven copies of the “Six Sermons,” 18mo.; or 20 copies quarto. This offer is made to accommodate single subscribers in sending money; but we will do the same on any amount, for each dollar any one will send us. Please state distinctly which form of the sermons you will have, and how they shall be sent. The 18mo. shall have added, to each copy, the article on the “Rich man and Lazarus,” 12 pages, from the August number of the Examiner. Our price for the “Six Sermons,” 18mo., in all cases, is 15 cents single copy; or $1 for ten copies when not ordered in connection with the above offer. Our friends can see how much to their advantage it will be, in ordering the Sermons, to send us one or more subscribers at the same time.

II. Any person, or company of persons, who will send us five dollars, current money, at one time, free of expence, shall receive five copies of the Bible Examiner for 1849, and forty copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo. (pamphlet); for ten dollars, ten copies of the Examiner, and ninety of the Sermons; for twenty dollars, twenty copies of the Examiner, and two hundred of the Sermons. The two above offers extend only to the first of January next.

III. Any person, or company of persons, sending us $5, current money, free of expence before the 26th of December next, shall have 15 copies of Bible Examiner for 1849; for $10 they shall have 34 copies, and for $20—75 copies. We make these offers now to see how many subscribers we shall have to begin the next year.

BR. HENRY HEYES—Is respectfully informed, that I do not “consider” that I have “completed in the main” or “whole,” the “things concerning the kingdom of God.” But, for the sake of variety, I had “intermitted” the articles on that subject. At some future time, opportunity permitting, I intend to finish those articles. Every thing in the Bible is “important,” and I am persuaded that the time is not far distant when every thing recorded on its pages will be so considered; and that the distinction between “essentials,” and “non-essentials,” will be forgotten. J. T. W.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—The articles by Homo and Br. Magruder, were both too late for the present number; other matter was set up and could not be laid over; and besides, we think there is as much in the Examiner on the subject of baptism, this month, as is desirable in one number. They shall have their place, one or both, in our next. Nearly all our extracts from letters are crowded out this month, besides much other valuable matter.

POLLUTION AND VOLITION.—A correspondent of one of our exchange papers says: “It appears to me that man’s moral pollution depends, or rests, upon his voluntary acts, and, consequently, that mankind are not morally polluted, sinful, or guilty, previous to moral action.”

The Editor of that paper, one of the most logical ministers in the country, “replies as follows:

“All men, from Adam to the present time, have, without exception, commenced their responsible career, by putting forth wrong voluntary acts.”

“There can no effect exist without a cause—there must, therefore, be a cause for the fact that the first volitions of all men are wrong.”

“Evil volition, as an effect, can result only from an evil cause,—there must, therefore, be something evil in, or associated with, the man, prior to his volitions, which is the cause of his doing evil voluntarily.”

ERGO: There must have been “something evil in” Adam, “or associated with” him “prior to his volitions, which” was “the cause of his doing evil voluntarily.”

Can the logician point out the fallacy, if there be any, in our deduction from his premises? We believe he cannot without denying his first proposition. Adam did, so far as there is any evidence to the contrary, “commence” his “responsible career, by putting forth wrong voluntary acts.” Our logical brother seems to admit that fact; though, we suppose, he did not intend it; but, can he prove the contrary? But, if he can, he has another point equally as difficult to prove, viz.: that “all men, without exception, commenced their responsible career, by putting forth wrong voluntary acts.” Job says: “I have guided the widow from my mother’s womb.” That was not a “wrong act.” See Job 31: 15–18. If this be true, our brother’s logic is false in the premises; hence, his conclusion fails.

CLERICAL MISREPRESENTATIONS.

LETTER FROM DR. LEE.

Meltonsville, N. C., August, 1848.

BR. STORRS:—In the fluctuations of opinions, and imaginations purely human and heathen; amid the revolutions of doctrines and speculations, one bright, true light continues still to enlighten, benefit, and dazzle mankind. It is a glorious light. It will ever retain its transforming influences, while gratitude and admiration shall swell the voice of praise; while freedom shall prompt to deliberations, or equity hold her balance upon earth. If there is one place where this light should shine more effulgently than in any other, it is the Pulpit. But when the Pulpit becomes the vehicle of gross, palpable prejudice and ignorance—of unintelligible jargon and unfathomable mysticism—of furious fanaticism and rabid falsehood—it is an instrument most destructive of the peace, the interest, and the happiness of mankind. And has it ever been thus prostituted to purposes so vile and execrable? the gratification of unmixed malice, unbounded prejudice, and unmitigated hatred?

I told you in a former letter that a certain class of would-be-preachers were rabid in their denunciations, &c. I said the truth. Their madness has reached its crisis. It is no longer difficult, from the diagnostic symptoms, to prognosticate its termination—the lake of fire—unless they repent.

One of these giants in prejudice, presumption and foul misrepresentation, asserted, on the third Sabbath in this month, that he saw a letter by I. F. Lee, in the Bible Examiner, wherein he (I. F. Lee) denied “the dissolution of the soul and body,” &c. I arose, denied the assertion, and assured the congregation that Dwight Hays had asserted a palpable falsehood, and that he who would deliberately utter so foul a calumny, could hardly be credited, even when he told the truth. I procured the pamphlets immediately, and then observed, that if any doubted my word, I would read the extracts after dismission. Other equally unfounded assertions he made, manifesting as clear a case of mania a stultitia as that of the fool, who said in his heart there is no God. Will you have the kindness, my dear Brother, to inform your readers, whether or not I have ever made such an assertion in any letter addressed to you, either published or unpublished. Have I ever either affirmed or denied the dissolution of the soul and body. I hope you will ever prove a true witness. Out then with the truth. I now call upon you to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in this case, for the sake of truth, and the edification of such friends as the calumniator, Dwight Hays, may have. The readers of the Bible Examiner, in this county and elsewhere, should know that I. F. Lee is not deranged, but understands too well the import of words to deny the dissolution of the soul and body. I believe with Adam Clark, that “the first death is the destruction of the body through time— the second death the destruction of the soul and body through eternity.”

In hope of eternal life at the appearing and kingdom of Jesus Christ, I am truly yours,

I. F. LEE.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR OF THE EXAMINER.

Dr. Lee has never written us anything of the character attributed to him by his clerical [we suppose] accuser. Clerical opponents, who misrepresent us, are the most unprincipled of all opponents: because they either do know better, or they stand in a position where they ought to know better than to misrepresent what we have done, or than to attribute words to us which we never uttered: they are, however, the last men who have the Christian principle frankly to acknowledge that they were even mistaken. We have been the victim of this unprincipled conduct, more than once, from some of that class of men. The principle upon which they act is,—“The end sanctifies the means,” or,—“Let us do evil that good may come.” One of this class accused us publicly, some year ago,—in a paper of which he is editor and publisher,—of having expressed a sentiment which we never uttered; and he further charged us with saying that the statement was true, “when” we “knew” it was not; that is,—he charged us with telling a willful falsehood; and, when he was shown that we never made such a statement as he attributed to us, he entirely neglected to correct his mistake, but has left his readers under the impression to this day, that we were guilty of the charge. That same clerical leader, through his paper, lately made the following scurrilous attack upon Dr. Lees, of Leeds, England;—manifestly, having reference to that gentleman’s letter in the last Examiner.

“An English writer says, that when he came to believe there was no ‘fire-hell and its endless torments,’ it was to him ‘a mighty relief.’ No doubt it was!—

With good opinion of the law.”*

Thus this clerical gentleman, and his amanuensis attempt to stab Dr. Lees, of England, in the dark, and make the impression that he is a “rogue” that deserves a “fire-hell and eternal torments.” Yet, this same clerical character can get his sect in their “Conferences,” to pass resolutions approving all he does, and expressing unbounded confidence in him; and some of those who voted for those resolutions, profess that they do not believe in “endless torments”; so their leader now judges them, publicly, to be “rogues” who have no “good opinion of the law” of God. We think, at this time, the readers of that paper might study to profit the parable of Jotham, Judges 9: 7–15.

The words taken from the “English writer” are a garbled extract. Dr. Lees had been describing the careful and thorough manner in which he had investigated the subject of immortality, and its connections; his mind having been previously perplexed on the question. He says:—

“I compared the English version with the originals, always having my Hebrew and Greek Concordances before me, for the sake of readier reference to parallel Text and Context. The issue you will have anticipated. It opened out another volume of priestly frauds and forgeries, to be added to an already crowded catalogue. I rose up from my perusal, perfectly satisfied that the doctrines of the Fire Hell and its Eternal Torments, of the self-subsisting Soul and its Immor- truth, were senseless fictions, totally discountenanced by the Scriptures, at any rate. This was to me a mighty relief—and I felt, for the first time, fully competent to defend Christianity, both from the fangs of infidelity, and the corruptions of Priestcraft. I had now the highest assurance of the Truth—Creation and Scripture were in harmony."

It will thus be seen, that the "mighty relief" Dr. Lees experienced, was from the difficulty of "defending Christianity," while he admitted the "immortality and endless torment" FANES. That once proved to be a falsehood is a "mighty relief" to any man who undertakes to defend a pure Christianity. In conclusion, we would say to Dr. Lee, of North Carolina, that Priests have always been the greatest enemies to any truth that endangers their fine creeds and disciplines. With few, and rare exceptions, they are the last to engage in the investigation of any subject that may render them unpopular. "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another?" Many of them will misrepresent whatever we do or say; and the people have had such blind confidence in them, that they repeat any such slander as if it were true. We must bear these things as patiently as we can, tho' we may refute their slanders.

PROPHECY OF ZECHARIAH.

One of our exchange papers says: "Perhaps none of the prophecies have occasioned so much embarrassment in the student's mind, as that of Zechariah, particularly the 14th chapter."

We know it is very embarrassing to all those that attempt to establish a theory that is at war with that chapter—such as that there is no probation to any body after the second advent of our Lord, and that all, not then converted, will immediately be destroyed from the earth. Mr. Miller, and those who still adhere to his theory, have tried, and are trying in vain to harmonise not only Zech. 14th, but a multitude of other prophecies to their scheme.

The paper referred to, wishes to overcome the embarrassment by assuming that Zechariah is a very "allegorical" writer, though his "similes and figures are so connected with undoubted matter of fact, as to be distinctly apprehended;" and it says, "the clear and distinct must govern and explain the figurative." Very well: and what then? Why, says the editor of the aforesaid paper, "We venture to affirm that Zech. 14 presents no scenery beyond the coming of Christ and the judgment." In reply, we venture to affirm that it does "present scenes beyond the second coming of Christ"—the judgment is another matter. But we shall see how that paper makes out its theory. It says, "This prophecy was uttered before the second building of Jerusalem and the temple." We deny that Zech. 14th was written before the building of the second temple. The difference in the chronology between Zech. 1st and 14th is twenty years. Zech. 1st is placed in the second year of Darius, and the temple was finished in the sixth year of the same king; see Ezra 6: 15; so that Zech. 14th was fourteen years after the temple was finished. The aforesaid paper says: After preaching the rebuilding of Jerusalem, together with the deliverance of Israel, the prophet's eye describes in the distance the first Advent of Christ, and presents him under the symbol of a branch. "Yes, brother, and the 'prophet's eye' reached a long way beyond that, to the time when, 'Said the Lord of Hoshs, I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day;" an event which has never yet taken place, but which the "prophet's eye" saw, though the eyes of the enemies of the return of Jacob's posterity cannot see.

The writer next says: "In Zech. 4, Christ is evidently presented between the two dispensations—between the Jewish and Gospel church—the two houses of Israel proper under the name of Zerubbabel;" and adds, "Before him (or the church, if you please so understand it,) is a mountain, that shall become a PLAIN." We do not "please so understand it," and consider it an unwarrantable assumption: nor is there any evidence in that chapter that "Christ is presented between the two dispensations;" that, in our "opinion," is all pure fancy; nor is that all of this writer's fancy; the most marvellous is still to come: he says—"This mountain can be none other than the kingdom of Israel; that theocracy must be demolished, or the gospel can never be advanced." If he will carefully examine the history with the prophecy, he will see, we think, that his theory, and the theory of Mr. Miller on Zech. 4 is all pure fancy. Zerubbabel was the Governor sent to Jerusalem by Cyrus to rebuild the temple; and is the same person called Sheshbazzar in Ezra 1: 8, 11, which compare with Ezra 2: 2 and 3: 2, 8; and with Haggai 1: 1, 14. Zerubbabel commenced building the temple, under the decree of Cyrus, soon after his arrival at Jerusalem. Please read the whole of Ezra 3. After the work had gone forward a while, the "adversaries of Judah and Benjamin" set themselves to work to weaken the hands of Zerubbabel, and to prevent the accomplishment of the work; and in this they were, for some years, too successful; and after a time the work was "made to cease," for a while: see Ezra 4, throughout. But in the second year of Darius the work was again put forward: see Ezra 4: 24, and 5: 1, 2; Haggai, throughout; and Zech. 1: 1, 7, 12, 16. By the hindrances [mountain, brother,] that Zerubbabel had experienced, it seems he felt great discouragement; and now when he was directed to commence the work anew, the Lord was pleased to encourage his heart by a message from the prophet Zechariah, chapter 4, in which the prophet had first represented to his mind the completion of the temple by the candlestick of gold with its bowl, pipes, &c., which was an indication of the opening of the temple service, and hence showed that it was completed. Then, when the prophet had seen this, he was directed to speak to Zerubbabel, the Governor, to encourage his mind, and assured him that the work should be accomplished by the special intervention of the Lord himself, so that what was to Zerubbabel a "great mountain" should "become a plain;" and "the word of the Lord came unto" Zechariah saying, "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundations of this house; [see Ezra 3: 8-13] his [Zerubbabel's] hands shall also finish it;" &c. This is God's own interpretation. To make Zerubbabel "the church," and the mountain "the kingdom of Israel" is spiritualising with a vengeance.

That writer next says—"Whatever else the prophet teaches, from chapter 4 to 7, he still dwells upon the first advent, as appears in verse 12." He does not tell us in what chapter "verse 12" is. If he means verse 12 of chapter 6, then the 13th verse shows that the prophet looks beyond the first advent; for he says, "The man whose name is The BRANCH, shall sit and rule upon his throne," &c., which he has not yet done; and he does not sit upon it till he comes the second time—"Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory;" then "shall the Lord God give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever," &c. Yea, brother, "and he shall be a Priest upon his throne;" Zech. 6: 13; so you see it looks as if the dreadful thing, "probation after the second advent," might be continued to some body.

Our friend says, the prophet has not "left the scenes of the first advent in chapter 9, as appears from verse 9." We reply, neither has he left the scenes of the second advent as appears from the 10th verse of the same chapter: "His dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river [Euphrates] to the ends of the earth." Has that prophecy its fulfilment this side the second advent? We are satisfied it has not; and that is the day, remember, where the scenes of Zech. 14 are laid, when "the Lord shall be king over all the earth;" 14: 9.

The next attempt of our brother is to fix Zech. 12th all at the first advent, or immediately after. A strange undertaking, truly. "In that day," the Lord says, not only that he "will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people," but, that "all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces," &c. Surely that did not take place at the first advent; for the Romans were not only not "cut in pieces," in that day, but they cut Jerusalem and its people in pieces. "The Governors of Judah," in that day, did not "devour all the people round about," &c.; and "Jerusalem" was not inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem, in that day of, at, or near, the time of her "siege" by the Romans. In that day "the Lord" did not "save the tents of Judah first," nor at all. In that day "the Lord" did not "defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem." In that day, of the first advent, "the Lord did not," seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem." Now, as this writer says, "The same day or season is constantly kept in view throughout this chapter," we further affirm—In that day, of the first advent, there was not the "great mourning" spoken of in that chapter; for, that mourning is to be in the "day or season" when the "Lord shall seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem," verse 9, and when he "shall defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem;" and that is in the day when he "shall go forth and fight against those nations," &c., and when "the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee," Zech. 14: 3, 5; THEN in that day of his second coming, shall the remnant of the Jews, who remain after the awful calamities with which that day is ushered in, "look on" him "whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn," &c. "In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem," &c. Not the mourning of despair, but after the "pattern" of Saul of Tarsus when he fell to the ground on seeing the Lord Jesus on his way to Damascus, and was three days sorrowing, mourning, and praying, till Ananias was sent to him with the message to "arise and be baptised, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord;" in that day was "opened" to Saul of Tarsus, the blaspheming Jew, "a fountain for sin and uncleanness," then opened to him because he had not previously seen it—he had been blinded—and in the same way will there "be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem" in that day in which they, as Saul of Tarsus did, shall "see the Lord," and "mourn" for their past rejection of him and blasphemy against him. Saul "was a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious; but," says he, "I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief;" 1 Tim. 1: 13. In the same way, and for a similar reason, will the remnant of the Jews, Paul's "kinsmen, according to the flesh," [Rom. 9: 3] obtain mercy. Paul adds, 1 Timothy 1: 15, 16, "Of" sinners "I am chief. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first [the type] Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." So far as the manner of Paul's conversion is concerned none will pretend he is a pattern to any soul of man that ever has yet been turned to the Lord: he "saw the Lord," and was as "one born out of due time;" 1 Corth. 15: 8. So will God magnify his grace in Judah's conversion "at the appearing of Christ;" and they, like their prototype, Saul of Tarsus, will "wash away their sins" in "a fountain opened" to their minds, for the first time, in that day. Who ever "imagined" there was to be "another fountain opened at the close of the present age" than the one opened by Christ? Can our brother Editor tell us? The opening the fountain by Christ is one thing; the opening it to the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem is quite another matter. When they come to see it, it is then opened or made manifest to them.

Our exchange paper says—"That in all the foregoing chapters [from the 13th backward] the church are not carried beyond the scenes of the first advent," &c. Let the reader judge if we have not shown clearly the contrary.

The Editor of that paper seems shocked at the idea, as a strange "anomaly," that "redeemed immortals" should ever be "preaching to mortal-dying heathens," &c. Does not the brother believe that angels visited Abraham, Lot, and others, and conversed with them? Still more—does he not believe that the only begotten Son of God, by whom he made the worlds, came down to this earth and dwelt among mortal beings many years? that he even laid down his life among, and for mortal beings—and after his resurrection still remained among mortal beings forty days teaching and instructing them? All this he believes, we presume. Is the disciple above his Lord? If our Saviour has done these things, is it either impossible, improbable, or unlikely that his immortal saints may be among, teach, and rule over mortal beings? Shall we say, "any thing" is "too hard for God?" If God has said it shall be so, is not that sufficient to satisfy faith? And what, we pray, are the saints, when made immortal, to be "kings" over, and "priests" to, during their reign with Christ on the earth? Who, if not those that are "left of the nations," after the "Lord my God shall come and all the saints with" him?

The idea that mortal and immortal beings cannot dwell together is founded in prejudice—is unscriptural, and subversive of the Christian faith. It limits the power of God—and makes our weak judgments the rule to determine what God can or will do. If he pleases to have it so, it can be done. The only thing that faith asks is the proof that God has said it. That point settled, faith "stargers not," but is "strong, giving glory to God."

ON THE RESURRECTION.

The following is Dr. Lees' Reply to a request to give his opinion on Matt. 22: 31, 32, which some suppose conflicts with the view of the sleep of the dead.

With pleasure I give my opinion on the Resurrection—the grand and astonishing peculiarity of Christ's reward—first placing before me the record of the three evangelists. In order to puzzle our Lord, 'the Sadducées, who say that there is no resurrection,' questioned him, concerning the wife of the seven brethren.' The following was Christ's answer, which 'put the Sadducées to silence.'

(1) "Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God, Matt. xxii. 29.

(2) "The children of this age (aionos) marry, and are given in marriage: but those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age, even the resurrection from out the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; nor can they die any more, for they are angels, and children of God, being sons of the resurrection, anastaseos, Luke xx. 34-6.

(3) "But concerning the resurrection of the dead [Matthew].—[or] as touching the dead that they rise, [Mark].—[or] that the dead are raised, egeirontai, [Luke].

(4) "Have ye not read, in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, 'I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?' Mark xii. 26.

(5) "Now he is not the God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto Him. Luke xxi. 38.

(6) "Ye therefore do greatly err. Mark xii. 27.

(7) "And when the multitude heard, they were astonished at his teaching." Matt. xxii. 33.

The present circumstances of the world are, in many points, similar to those which existed at the first advent of Christ. On the one hand, we have a large class of Pharisees believing in the separate existence and immortality of some mysterious part of men, 'not knowing the Scriptures,' which refute their false philosophy; and, on the other hand, we have a large class of skeptical Sadducées, who can conceive of no future state, or resurrection, 'not knowing the power of God.' Hence, when we attempt to revive the exact doctrine of Christ—which is neither that of the Pharisees nor Sadducées—"the multitude are astonished."

There is nothing in the preceding narrative which, rightly considered, conflicts with the doctrine of the sleep of the dead. Sleep implies an awakening—a resurrection, or anastasis—a standing again. Hence, when the power of God is to be connected with this resurrection, literal Death is appropriately called 'a sleep,' for then the sleeper really does 'live unto God.' Thus our Lord spoke of Lazarus—"our friend Lazarus sleepeth": but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep [John xii. 11]. It is in this sense alone that the promise can be understood—"Whosoever believeth in me shall never die; for all the good 'live unto God,' who will raise them out of their sleep at the last day. In this sense, therefore, the patri-archs are in covenant with God. Like those who have 'fallen asleep in Christ,' they shall not die forever; God will do for them what he did for Lazarus, awake them out of sleep. Hence, also, the language of Paul's exhortation—"That whether we wake or sleep, we may live together with him." 'Your life is hidden with Christ, in God.'

God, 'who quickeneth the dead, and CALLETH THOSE THINGS WHICH BE NOT [yet] AS THO THEY WERE,' Rom. iv. 17, views the patriarchs, therefore, as the heirs of the covenant, 'the children of the resurrection'; and as Christ is called 'the Lord both of the dead and living,' Rom. xiv. 9, as being their sure and appointed Judge, so Jehovah is styled 'the God of the living, for all live [really] unto Him [not unto creatures of time, but unto Him] to whom a thousand years is as one day.' Thus, too, when the object of faith rests upon the promise of the Divine Being, future events are spoken of as present. Paul speaks of having 'a tabernacle not made with hands, eternal in the heavens,' before he actually possess it; hence, also, the Hebrew Christians are said to 'have a better and an enduring possession in heaven,' Heb. x. 34, and to 'have come unto the heavenly Jerusalem,' etc., xii. 22. Because God's promise is certain and steadfast—and because his kingdom is one 'that cannot be shaken'—it is express by present time, which to us is the most certain of all things, Gen. ii. 17; Deut. ix. 1; xxix. 13; Psalm ii. 7; Acts xiii. 33; Heb. v. 5. To-day is sure—hence selected as the symbol of sureness. God 'has prepared for the good a city,' it is said; and Christ went to prepare a place for his disciples; but Christ has not actually come again to receive his disciples, nor has the heavenly Jerusalem seen by John actually descended. In truth, it does not exist yet to Man—for he lives in the present only—but it does exist unto God, for with him the future is open as the present—it is sure, because he has decreed it.

Having made those general observations, I observe that there are three modes of interpreting the gospel narrative before me. Let me consider each separately.

I. The common interpretation supposes that the dead are NOT THE DEAD any longer, because they live unto God, who is not 'the God of the dead.'

Many fatal objections may be urged to this interpretation. As, first, that it does not follow, that because the patriarchs 'live unto God,' therefore they live unto each other: any more than it follows that the dead are living, because Christ is declared to be their Lord, [Rom. xiv. 9.] i. e., judge.

Second, it is opposed to the clear statement that the dead are to live, by virtue of the Resurrection, FROM OUT THE DEAD, and by that means only: they are to assume life then, and not before—a future period ('that age') being referred to, both in this passage and many others. Abraham, then, was dead, and needed therefore a resurrection to show God's power: but if he already lived, he did not.

Third, the object of our Saviour, and which he accomplished, was to prove 'the resurrection from out the dead.' But if he asserted that Abraham lived before, and without a resurrection—or that a part of Abraham was living in 'Adès'—how could that 'put the Sadducées to silence'?

Fourth: neither can the Pharisaic and foolish teaching, that the soul lives without a body (as an immaterial principle and by natural consequence,) demonstrate 'the power of God to raise the dead,' which the Sadducées called in question. But this was demonstrated, and the Sadducées were silenced; and therefore we cannot admit the common interpretation, which represents Christ as silencing the sturdy Sadducées by an irrelevant and fallacious argument!

II. Professor Bush holds that the Dead experience the resurrection at death, without any sleep or interval of repose; that they live in spiritual bodies without intermission.

Now this is a much more consistent and plausible view than the preceding, tho not satisfactory to my mind. It seems clear from the literal teaching of Christ and his apostles, that the resurrection denotes some general, simultaneous, and future event, and implies an intermediate state of Rest, Sleep, or temporal Death and Unconsciousness.

The context of the passage, par. 2, represents the anastasis, or Renewed State, as one not to be experienced in this age, but in a future age;—in that age the good are [to be] raised to incorruptible life. 'They can die no more.' Eternal life—an immortal organization—is the peculiar reward of 'the worthy' alone; it is 'a gift of life in Christ,' not the necessary activity of something inherent in our nature; not a continued existence of a spiritual body, by natural law, but a miraculous and astonishing demonstration of 'the power of God,' to be manifested upon those who 'die in Christ,' as it was upon Christ himself.

The Swedenborgians have sometimes placed stress upon the present tense of the phrase—"are raised." This, however, can have meant no more than the two other phrases employed by Matthew and Mark, which are not in the present tense. The essential idea cannot have been omitted in their record. In par. 2, the transition first occurs from the future to the present, and is easily accounted for—the antecedent being 'THAT AGE.'

Professor Bush, however, in translating anastasis by 'future life,' clears his theory from one objection alleged against the common interpretation. Christ, he argues, demonstrated from Moses another state of life, which the Sadducées denied, and hence, by implication, of some living apparatus for its display. Defeated in their great point—that there was no life beyond the grave—they would not care to argue about the sort of bodies which the dead possess.

III. Putting aside all pre-formed theories, however, the following seems to me the natural meaning of the narrative:

'Ye err,' Sadducées, in denying a Renewed State of life to the dead, neither 'knowing the Scriptures,' which promise life to the good, nor estimating aright 'the power of God,' who is able to raise up children to Abraham out of the very stones.

Ye misconceive the nature of that future state, when ye question me of marriage: it is not a kingdom of 'flesh and blood,' which requires that institution for filling up the population which perishes. Where creatures die, they must be born. Therefore, 'the children of this age marry and are given in marriage; but those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age' whereof I speak, 'even the standing up of the Dead,' neither marry, nor are given in marriage, for 'they cannot die any more, because they are' in THAT AGE 'like the angels in heaven.'

As touching the dead, that they rise again, why should ye, the profest followers of Moses, deem that incredible? Have ye not read in the book of Moses, how God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?'

He has declared himself to be their God—that is, their Rewarder,—even after their death; but he cannot be the rewarder—the God—of the finally dead and everlastingly unconscious, but of the living and conscious only. Now these patriarchs are as yet numbered with the dead—with those who 'go down into silence'—with 'the dead' who 'cannot praise' God; but they still 'live unto God,' and THEREFORE MUST RISE AGAIN to receive their reward, for 'God is not the God of the dead,' as such, 'but of the living.'

And, in truth, 'God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city.' The patriarchs sank to sleep, in hope of the realization of this wondrous promise; but whether this sleep was one day, or one thousand years, altered not the fact that God was their God, who had prepared for them a Reward, to be manifested in due time. Then, and not while they are dead, 'God himself shall be with them; and with their God' (Rev. xxi. 1, 2, 3.

EUROPE AND THE JEWS.

In our humble opinion, the convulsions in Europe are not only the commencement of "the seventh vial" of "the seven last plagues," but mark the closing of "the times of the Gentiles"—the deliverance of the posterity of Jacob—their return to Palestine, preparatory to the invasion of that land by Russia and the northern powers, who are the "Gog" &c. of Ezekiel, 38th and 39th,—and the second personal advent of our Lord. But, we are waiting for further developments, before we speak with positiveness.

We give our readers the following extracts from speeches delivered at the "fortieth anniversary" of the London Society for the Jews, held at Exeter Hall, May 5th, 1848; taken from the "Jewish Intelligence."

The CHAIRMAN said,—Those very convulsions of Europe, that throw all the rest of the world into disorder, only methodize and forward the great work in which you are engaged. If there are kingdoms to be overturned, are there no kingdoms to be restored? And if the times of the Gentiles are drawing to a close, is it not possible that the times of the Hebrews are about to be revived? There is one other matter of rejoicing on this present occasion, and it is an important matter. You have obtained the recognition, by the Ottoman Porte, of Protestants as a distinct and constituent part of the subjects of the Ottoman Empire. They now stand upon the same footing as the Greek, the Armenian, and the Latin Churches. And this is one of the first fruits that you have derived from the appointment of a Protestant bishop; because, such is the rule of the Ottoman dominion, that they will recognize no sect or body that is not represented by some responsible head. You have obtained that responsible head in the present Bishop of Jerusalem. You have obtained the full, complete and absolute recognition of the protestants as a distinct, separate and acknowledged portion of the Ottoman empire.

The Hon. W. COWPER, M. P. said,—I find great reason for encouragement in the cause which we are met to speak of to-day, from the present aspect of the Continent of Europe. In the Report it was mentioned, that the Austrian government had been able to prohibit one of our missionaries from continuing his exertions in that part of Poland which is under the dominion of Austria. The Austrian government has always been a great opponent of missionary efforts among the Jews, as well as of all Protestant efforts. But that proud government has found that it is a hard thing to strive against the Lord's work. That government is now shivered and shaken, and may at any moment fall asunder into a variety of parts; and the statesman, so renowned for sagacious policy, who has been so long at the head of that government, finding an asylum in this city in which we are assembled. The state of Europe gives freer access to the missionaries of this Society, wherever they may wish to seek out the lost and benighted Jews. And at this moment, when we see so much gloom hanging over all the nations of Europe—when they are shaking with apprehensions of civil discords, wars and tumults; when they scarcely know what to look for on the coming day; when in all directions "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth,"—when, over all the nations of Europe, I say, this gloom is hanging, I see that the prospects of one nation, and that the despised nation of the Jews alone, are brightening. While the sun of prosperity appears to be setting over so many other nations, it appears to be rising over the Jewish nation. In Germany, already, we see Jews occupying high stations. The prejudices that have hitherto ground down the Jews into the dust, are now fast dissipating. In France, we see every career opening to the Jews. We see them filling the most distinguished positions. Among that small cabinet that has been governing France, there were two Jews. Even at Rome itself, the prejudice against Jews, and the persecution of them, are passing away. Even in that strong-hold of persecution, where alone the Inquisition still raises its gloomy head, and by the instrumentality of the Pope himself, there has been indulgence extended to the Jews.

The Rev. HUGH STOWELL said,—I feel great pleasure, my Lord, in seconding the resolution Mr. Tottenham has submitted. You will have been struck with the manner in which the minds both of the speakers, and of the hearers, seem to have been profoundly impressed, as to the critical position in which our christian land is placed, and the fearful and emphatic character of the signs of the times in which we live. It has been brought against the Exeter Hall agitators, for such they are reckoned, that they have been needless alarmists, and have been crying out "The wolf! the wolf!" till they have disturbed nervous persons; but the wolf has never come. We would retort, not in the spirit of uncharitableness or anger, but in the spirit of brotherly love—we would retort upon those who have so charged the speakers of Exeter Hall, "when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman, with child, and they shall not escape." In the great places of the national assembly, the cuckoo note was resounding full and clear, "Peace, peace and safety;" when all at once, with the suddenness of the lightning's flash, Europe was shaken to her centre, and the dynasty of France was crumbled into dust. My Lord, it is a dangerous thing to be needlessly alarmed, but it is a no less dangerous thing not to be alarmed when it is needed. It does not do for the seaman to set about studying his chart, when his ship is getting among the rocks, or to reef the sails when the tempest is rushing into her shrouds. And very much the same would be the conduct of the Christian mariner, if he were to look into the chart of unfulfilled prophecy only, when its fulfilment has taken place; and if he were to begin to look for the breakers and the reefs and shoals, just when his vessel was grounding on the shoals, or dashing to pieces amongst the rocks. My Lord, if prophecy is given us, as assuredly it is, to be, after its accomplishment, one of the firmest buttresses and pillars of our Christian faith, it is no less given us to be the light shining in the dark distant future, and to which we do well to take heed. And though it shines in the darkness, and discovers not the surrounding features of the scenery, yet are we therefore not to fix our eyes upon it, as the ancient mariner did upon the polar star that was to guide him safe to his haven? Are we not to mark that bright light shining far off—a herald and pledge of the "day-spring from on high" that shall illumine and visit us? My Lord, I conceive that an attentive and calm view of unfulfilled prophecy, is admirably calculated, when taken in conjunction with the stirring signs of the times, to give us counsel on the one hand, and comfort on the other; for those things which make the people of this world afraid, make the Christian look up and lift up his head, because his redemption draweth nigh.

... Allow me to say, that though the Jew's Society is merely a Society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, yet it is scarcely possible not to throw round the Jewish cause a little of that halo of splendour which prophecy ever associates with Jerusalem. It is impossible for us not to do so; because it is impossible for us to study closely the Jewish subject, and not see that it is as clear that Israel shall be restored, as it was clear that she should be dispersed. The prophecies will be as literally fulfilled in the last case, as they have been in the first. If you ask a child in our schools, where is the country without a people, and the people without a country? he will answer, the country is Judea, and the people are the Jews. Judea is the lodging-house of all nations. There you may meet, as in the great centre of the world, the wandering Arab, the classic Greek, the whiskered Turk, and the fair-faced European; and there you may meet a little band of Jews, with their bishop at their head. You may meet all these; but none can say, We are the inhabitants of this land. They are all, as it were, tenants at will, waiting for their notice to quit. And if the land is thus waiting for its people, the people are waiting for their land. Wherever the Jews are to be found, they are a distinct people—the Jews are everywhere found as oil upon the waters—nowhere combined. And God, who has preserved them, will bring them again to their land, and will unite Judah and Israel together, as one, for ever. My Christian friends, and is it not deeply interesting, at the present juncture, to look to Jerusalem and to the Jews? I, for one, look upon the present events but as the "beginning of the end." I look upon those wars, and rumours of wars, that have filled Europe with alarm,—I look upon those earthquakes of nations—but as the first distant moanings of the tempest that is gathering and thickening, and that will break upon us with all its terrors. I look upon all these events that are taking place around us, but as the first outpourings of the seventh vial. Then, assuredly, Jerusalem must be the beacon to which we are to turn our eyes, and the Jew the star to which we are to direct our expectations. I am looking, with deep and earnest desire, to see the first heaving and moving of the scattered Jewish people, preparatory to their returning to their own land. And I believe the missionaries can already see, as in Ezekiel's vision of the bones, bone beginning to come to its bone. And already we may hear some distant sound shaking among the bones, in the mighty valley of vision. And I believe that as the outburst of judgment has been sudden, so the outburst of hope for Judah will be sudden, too. Who can tell that by the time we shall assemble here to commemorate another anniversary of this Society—who, I ask, can tell whether the Jews may not be gathered together as a mighty army, and be setting forward on their journey to their own land, conveyed, perhaps, by the ships of Shittim, our own wooden walls. O, that England may be the favoured instrument in this great work, instead of America, her daughter, or any other youthful competitor for the prize! I have good hope for England. I believe we are doing what the prophet was bid to do, to go forth in spite of the sneer of the worldly wise, and the contempt of the unbeliever, and to prophesy on the mighty outspread multitude of dry bones, until a mighty army shall arise. And let us remember the words we heard last night, from one of our most eloquent and most energetic bishops, that "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

We commend the following fable to the attention of those who seem to think, no one has any right to do or get good, unless it is done according to their sectarian organisation; and especially to those who would prevent us from drawing consolation and truth from the pure stream,—the Bible,—without their growling, as if they were the only "authorized expounders" at that fountain.

THE LAMB, THE WOLF, AND THE DOG.

A FABLE: BY G. S. PHILLIPS.

A little lamb once left its mother and went down the mountain, to drink at a stream which ran below. At the same moment, a wolf came out of the neighboring wood, and faced the lamb, on the opposite bank.

"What right have you to drink here," quoth the wolf; "Don't you know this stream belongs to me?" "Am I doing wrong?" asked the innocent lamb; "I thought the stream was free to all, and did not know that you were the owner of it."

"Don't stand lying there," said the wolf, pretending to be very angry.

"I do not tell a lie," answered the little lamb; "I was very thirsty when I came down the mountain, and am sorry if I have offended you by drinking of the stream."

"Your sorrow won't prevent me from killing you," replied the wolf; "so prepare yourself to die!"

"I have no preparation to make," said the lamb. "All my life has been as innocent as that of the flowers in the meadows."

"So then," said the wolf, "you will make a dainty meal for me!" and he jumped over the stream, whilst the lamb lifted up its eyes to heaven, and stood ready to be sacrificed.

At this instant, the faithful sheep-dog came bounding down the mountain, and confronted the wolf. "How now, old rascal!" quoth he: "Do you seek to kill one of my master's stray lambs, by pretending to own the stream wherein he has slaked his thirst? This is one of your ancient tricks, which you must now answer for without loss of time."

"Pardog me," quoth the wolf, crouching with a vulpine smile; "I meant the little lamb no harm, I merely wanted to try her courage."

"Try thy own courage against mine then," answered the brave sheep-dog; and with that he fell upon the cowardly wolf, and tore him to pieces.

The little lamb uttered sorrowful cries, like the wailing of an orphan in some alien world, and again lifted up its meek eyes to heaven, and saw the face of Jupiter looking out of the clouds, smiling and well pleased.

Then the dog and the lamb walked up the mountain together towards the fold.

INTERPRETATION.

Deaf to heaven is innocence.
Ever ready its defense.

Tho a moment, seems the Wronger
Over Right to triumph stronger,

There are angels evermore,
At the threshold of God's door;

Swift to fly, and strong to do Justice, all the wide world thro'.

Thou art safe in self-possession.
Innocence needs no confession.
Guilt lies only in transgression.

Hold thy heart in quiet keeping;
Evil sowing, evil reaping;—
The master's eyes are never sleeping.

Fear not therefore, tho there be
No sign of ready help for thee;
But in thy peril and distress,
Trust the master, questionless.

FROM DR. LEES.—THE "ADDENDA."

In 1833 Mr. THOM, of Liverpool, formerly minister of the Scotch Church, published a strange book, entitled "Calvinism identified with Universalism," which found some disciples. He is a man of learning and talent, but, as I think, led away by an idealless crotchety, viz.: that the human nature is totally and eternally destroyed first, and yet somehow the consciousness is finally restored! This was afterwards elaborated in various works, but chiefly, as regards your topic, into "the three questions."

In 1840, Mr. Carmichael, of Dublin, published his "Disquisitions on the Theology and Metaphysics of Scripture," which display great ability and research, and which, I believe, were somewhat influential in spreading views not dissimilar to your own. I refer particularly to the six chapters of the 7th Disquisition.

LIST OF WORKS ADVOCATING THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED,

SENT US BY DR. LEE, LEEDS, ENGLAND.

1. These Questions Proposed and Answered, concerning the Life forfeited by Adam, the Resurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Punishment, By Rev. David Thom, second edition, enlarged.
2. The Philosophy of Man, by John Osborne.
3. Scripture Revelations, by a Country Pastor.
4. The Future States: their nature and evidences considered, on principles physical, moral, and Scriptural, by Reginald Courtenay, M. A. Rector of Thornton Wallasey, Yorkshire.
5. Scriptural Doctrine of Future Punishment, by H. H. Dobney, second edition.
6. Life of Christ, by Edward White, Hereford.
7. A Tract on Future Punishment, Chapman, London.
8. The Evangel of Love: interpreted by Henry Sutton.
9. Human Nature: or, the Law of Reward and Punishment, illustrated on Philosophic principles.
10. Disquisitions on the Theology and Metaphysics of Scripture, by Andrew Carmichael, M. R. I. A. [Member of Royal Irish Academy.] Two Vols.

Some of the above works we have sent for, and from their pages hope to be able to enrich the Examiner, and give our readers matter on these topics which they are not likely to obtain from any other source. In thus seeking matter for our columns, our expenses are increased. Will our friends see that we are sustained by increasing the circulation of the Examiner.

DR. LEE, OF N. C.—The Sermon on "Profit and Loss:" we shall publish in the Examiner just as soon as we can find room. At present, we have none to send you; much obliged for your favour.

LETTERS.

SALUTATION FROM DR. ALBERT ANDERSON, Athens, Va. :-

TO THE BROTHERS BELOVED, GEO. STORRS AND J. T. WALSH, Editors of Bible Examiner:—The Bible Examiner is to me a paper both interesting, on account of the kindly spirit of its communications, and edifying, because it sustains a character in harmony with its name; I do not mean to say that it is perfect; but, I mean to express myself pleased with it, generally. If it continues its noble and independent course of investigation, we have many and strong reasons for believing that God Almighty will bless it, and make it a blessing. It appears to me, admirably calculated to increase the love of Bible study where it exists already, and to produce it where it has not hitherto existed.

Please accept the assurance of my Christian regard and love; and believe me yours in the hope of the Son of God from heaven.

The 55th is received, and the Sermons are sent. Thank you, brother.—[Ed. Ex.]

DR. JONATHAN WILSON, under date of Sept. 15th writes :-

BR. STORRS:—I fully endorse your views of the state of the Dead—the Destruction of the Wicked, and the Sonship of Christ.

I have been travelling among the Advent believers for four months. In which time I have visited Buffalo, Lockport, Rochester, Victor, Canandaigua, Utica and Albany, N. Y.; North Adams, Springfield, Three Rivers, Worcester, Wrentham and Attleboro, Mass.; Providence, North Situate, Coventry, Warwick and Bristol, R. I.; New Bedford, Boston and South Reading, Mass. With the exception of Boston and South Reading, from the information I have obtained in these places—and I have preached in all of them—there are 18 out of 20 who are with you in sentiment on the above named points.

BR. JOHN C. LOYD, Shippensburg, Pa., writes :-

BR. STORRS:—I love the Bible Examiner. It uproots the foolish notion of immortal-soul-ism. One of my Christian neighbours undertook to convert me from my "error" about the sleep of the dead. I lent him your pamphlet on that subject, and that "converted" him from all the foolery of going to judgment at death and a world unknown.

SISTER BEULAH STOW, Weybridge, Vt., writes :-

BR. STORRS:—I read the Examiner with interest. It comforts and refreshes my soul; and stirs me up to seek more earnestly for immortality, eternal life; and to escape (not "that death that never dies," but) "everlasting destruction" of "soul and body," which, I firmly believe, will be the doom of all those who "obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." May the Lord give success to your labours in scattering light and truth through our land.

SISTER CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS, Beaver Dams, N. Y., Sept. 14th, writes :-

BR. STORRS:—Though strangers to you, yet claiming fraternity, on the ground of unanimity of sentiment, we address you, thinking it must be a matter of encouragement to you, to know what your little messenger, in the form of "Six Sermons," is accomplishing, and has been instrumental of accomplishing for us. I am writing for myself, and in behalf of a sister believer, who, with me, was led to searching the Bible for ourselves, by means of your Sermons, to see whether those things were so. By submitting to the guidance of the Spirit, instead of creeds, we were led to renounce immortal soul-ism, and embrace the Bible doctrine of immortality, as being the gift of God, attainable through Christ alone.

Some little time since, a friend presented us with two numbers of the "Bible Examiner," and, as they exactly met our views, we were anxious to take them, and to aid in their circulation.

BR. ANSON WALKER, New York City, writes :-

BR. STORRS:—I think I will in no case be without the Examiner so long as I have money for any other purpose, besides buying bread, after which time I will beg it. It is a most welcome visitor. In my judgment its influence to convince those who read it, of the power of prejudice and sectarianism is mighty; for, the scriptural, uncontroversial, and vital truths that are presented, and scripturally defended in the Examiner, paralyse and deaden their force against you. I have to look to some other cause why the opponents of these truths do not embrace them than scripture, consistency or reason; and when you have taken from them these three, what excuse have they for continuing to oppose, except it be the power of sectarian influence and prejudice. * * * * *

THE MIND.—REPLY TO J. T. WALSH.

This gentleman declares I neither understand him nor his subject. Whether I understand him, he may decide; whether I understand the subject, our readers may. He says he neither believes nor teaches that the mind and brain are identical, and refers me, in proof, to his previous articles on file; but in one published in No. 7, I find the following passages:

"But we shall doubtless be told, that although the brain is the instrument of the mind, nevertheless it is not the mind, and that, therefore, our argument fails."

"This objection introduces another question. 'What is the mind?' The objector replies, the mind is the spirit, the agent which operates upon the brain developing thought and reason. Thus mind is defined to be an independent and separate entity, possessing all the attributes of intelligence, and possessing all the phenomena of an intellectual and moral character." (Vol. 3, No. 7.)

Against this view that the mind is a separate entity, acting upon the brain, he proceeds to present a variety of objections, and succeeds in his own opinion, doubtless, in showing its absurdity, leaving me to infer, as I think justly, that he considered the brain and mind identical.

He now declares he does not, but believes "the mind an effect, an aggregate of powers, as functions developed by the brain."

Again he says, "the brain and the mind stand in the relation of cause and effect."

Mind is the effect of a cause—brain. Brain develops thought, the brain develops mind, mind is the effect of brain—it is an aggregate of powers.

Such are Mr. W.'s definitions of mind. Let us look at them. And first, do they give us any idea as to what the mind is, whether matter or spirit? Do they give us to understand that the mind is an entity? But one thing they do do, they teach us that the brain is the cause of mind; that mind was not created directly by God, but is produced by man's physical organization, and depends upon that for its existence.

"The brain develops thought." What are we to understand by this? That the brain thinks? Such would be the natural conclusion, but that would make the brain and mind identical, which Mr. W. neither believes nor teaches."

"The brain develops mind," is the cause of mind—thus the brain precedes the mind, and as all effects correspond to the causes, physical causes producing physical effects, the mind is physical, and if it be an entity distinct from the brain, then the brain has produced a physical substance called mind! Where is it? Why don't anatomists examine it?

What is that mind, the "effect of the brain?" Is it something, or nothing? Is it an agent, and does it perform actions? Does it exist anywhere, but in the imagination of the writer?

"It is an aggregate of powers." These powers are reason, will, memory, conscience, &c. Powers are mere capabilities of doing certain things. Reason, for instance, is the power to reason.

Now these powers belong to something to which we may refer them. What is it? If the brain, then that is the mind. But Mr. W. don't believe nor teach that.

Memory is not the mind any more than inertia is matter, but it is a capacity of mind. Thought is not mind, but the action of mind. As well might you define God to be an aggregate of powers, as the mind. In this view, to speak of the powers of the mind, is absurd, for the mind is an aggregate of powers. The more I look at these definitions, the more confused and unsatisfactory they appear to me.

I find something in man that thinks, reasons, judges. I ask Mr. W. what it is, and he replies the brain develops thought. But does the brain think; is that the mind? No, says Mr. W. again, the brain develops mind.

I again ask what is the mind when developed by the brain, and am told an aggregate of powers.

But powers are the powers of something; the power to reason, to will, are among this aggregate; to what shall I refer them? They are developed, according to this gentleman, by the brain, and hence to this must be referred; and this brings us back to our starting point; the brain is the mind; for that which possesses the power of volition and reason, is doubtless the mind.

All his reasoning leads directly to this conclusion:

The brain is a part of our physical organization, designed for the production of thought, as truly as the nerves of sensation. In the infant there is no mind. But as the brain matures, it becomes capable of producing thought, and develops certain powers, mental and moral; and these powers thus produced by the brain, constitute the mind, which is nothing but certain powers of the brain.

A power of the brain is a capability of the brain, and again we come round to our starting point.

Suppose I was to define matter to be an aggregate of properties; should I not be pressed with the question, is there no substance to which these properties belong? And what are powers but the powers of something? Neither powers nor proportions exist abstractly from some entity to which they belong.

I have devoted the main part of this article to the great point in dispute, the existence of mind as a distinct entity from the brain; but there are several minor points introduced which deserve some attention.

He says I regard the new birth as wholly physical. By no means. That is his position. If man is wholly physical, then the new birth is wholly physical. Then "that which is born of the Spirit is flesh." So thought Nicodemus, so thinks Mr. W., but Christ declares it is not flesh, but SPIRIT!

Mr. W. declares it is man, composed of flesh, blood, bones, nerves and brain, who is the subject of the new birth. Now he either means that this flesh, blood, bones, &c., are changed by the new birth, or he does not.

If he does, here is the flesh born again, and we might ask what chemical change is produced in the blood in regeneration? If he does not, he believes it confined to the mind, here called man, and hence his play upon this word is done to east up a breast-work for security.

Several of his logical conclusions are not very alarming. Take the following:

"It is the immortal soul that reasons, is enlightened, saved, &c. But some men, such as idiots and monomaniacs cannot reason. Ergo: They have no immortality, and cannot be the subjects of redemption."

But Mr. W. tells us the Spirit operates through the gospel, and moves to action by its motives and arguments, addressed to the reason and moral sentiments.

"But some men, such as idiots," &c., have no reason to be addressed. no moral sentiments to be appealed to. Let Mr. W. meet his own difficulties.

The immortal soul thinks; beasts think. Therefore beasts are immortal. This is a favourite resort. When pressed, we are asked if we believe beasts immortal?

The fact that there is a spirit in man, does not, of itself, aside from the will of God, secure immortality. Angels depend upon God as well as men.

And while nothing indicates that beasts were designed for endless being, every thing teaches this of man. Into the Bible argument I do not propose to go in this article; but the text "fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul," receives this singular interpretation: Fear not them that can kill the present life, but are not able to kill the future life. Thus soul and body have the same radical meaning, life. Whereas they refer to entities.

But, it is added, fear him who is able, not only like man to kill the body, but to destroy both soul and body in hell. I must close this long article, and will do so by expressing a sincere desire for the welfare of my unknown opponent.

WM. H. BREWSTER.

LOWELL, OCT. 1, 1848.

REPLY TO W. H. BREWSTER.

I am willing with friend Brewster, to refer his understanding of the subject to our "readers." And I wish our "readers," to observe and remember, that Mr. B. has failed to answer the arguments submitted in my last. After stating my position, as previously expressed, he adds—"leaving me (himself) to infer, as I think justly, that he (I) considered the brain and mind identical." Having disavowed any such absurd position as his "inference," and in as much as no such "inference" can be logically drawn from my position, I leave it as unworthy of further notice.

But, for his sake, I will further illustrate my views of this matter. Because the human mind is manifested or developed by the brain, does it, therefore, follow that that which develops and that which is developed are the same? If this be his logic, it is not mine! Because the sense of sight is developed by the optic apparatus, or organ, does it follow that the organ of sight and sight itself are "identical?" And because the auditory apparatus as a whole, is the organ of sound, does it follow that that apparatus and sound are one and the same? Can not the gentleman distinguish between an organ and its function? Can not Mr. B. distinguish between the brain and its functions? Really, I am astonished!

But, after getting through with my definitions, he asks: "Do they give us any idea as to what the mind is, whether matter or spirit?" I give my first answer—the mind is an aggregate of powers, or functions of an INTELLECTUAL OR MENTAL CHARACTER. And I care not whether Mr. Brewster makes these intellectual powers or functions "matter or spirit;" they are such powers or functions as have no consciousness, apart from the living man, by whose brain they are "developed."

The human mind, human thought, human intellect, of itself, has no consciousness—this latter is an attribute of the man, and not of his thoughts, and hence, when a man dies, his "thoughts perish." The five senses, as they are termed, are, by all philosophers, called intellectual. Is sound "matter or spirit?" Is sight "matter or spirit?" Is the shade of a living tree "matter or spirit?" Ah! this word "matter!" It surely was not a fit thing out of which to form "a living soul!" But, nevertheless, God did "form man of the dust of the earth, and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life!"—another material thing!—"and he became a living soul."

What does my friend understand by a distinct "entity?" Does he mean that which has a separate and independent existence? Not independent of God, but of other beings? The soul of man is not such an "entity;" the mind of man is not such either; but MAN, himself, is such a being. Again, Mr. B. quotes me: "The brain develops thought," and adds, "what are we to understand by this? That the brain thinks?"

Shall I have to tell Mr. B. for the hundredth time, that man thinks by means of his brain, just as he sees by means of his eyes, hears by his ears? &c., &c. Man is the THINKER, and his brain is the organ, the legitimate function of which is to manifest thought; just as he has organs for the development of every function of his whole organization.

"The brain precedes mind," says Mr. Brewster. Yes; the brain of Adam existed before it developed mind; yea, before he had any life! But when his organization was put in motion, his brain manifested thought. Cerebral motion is necessary to thought. It is even necessary to dreaming, as was proved by the case of the girl, to which I have before referred. I can give expression to my mind. I can spread it out on paper, as I am now doing; and so can Mr. B. The idiot has no mind, his brain is defective—it is imperfect; he cannot reason; and yet, he has as much soul or spirit as Mr. B. or myself.

May I not retort, and ask Mr. B. "where" his immortal soul "is?" "Why don't anatomists examine it?" If it be a distinct "entity," as he contends, and, also, indestructible, why is it that some physiologist or anatomist has not detected it? And, as he asks me, "Is it something or nothing? Does it exist any where, but in the imagination of the writer,"—Mr. Brewster?

Again: Mr. B., speaking of the "powers" which constitute the mind, says, "Now these powers belong to something, to which we may refer them. What is it?" I answer, they belong to MAN, and they are manifested by the brain. Mr. B. appears to refer every thing to an immortal soul and nothing to the man, as such, at all! What sort of philosophy is this?

Mr. B. says, "Memory is not the mind," "but a capacity of mind." Every intellectual organ has its memory. Thus we have a memory of language, of names, of places, of things, of events, of forms, &c., &c. And the same person's memory may be defective in some things, but excellent in all others. Can Mr. B. explain this on his hypothesis? If memory be an attribute of that which is immortal in man; why is it ever defective? Will Mr. B. tell us? Will he explain how it is that partial or total idiosyncrasy exists? Will he tell us how and why monomania, or partial derangement, exists, if the mind be not an aggregate of powers? Let him not evade these questions, for I have not evaded his, but let him look them fully in the face.

But Mr. B. informs us that "thought is not mind, but the action of mind." This position is untenable, "Thought is" the result of cerebral "action," or the "action" of the brain.

Further on, Mr. B. says: "I find something in man that thinks, reasons, judges." Truly, Mr. B. has made a grand discovery! He says, "I find." Where did, or does he find it? In the heart, in the spine, in the lungs, in the brain, or diffused all over the body? Will he tell us? I am anxious to know its location—its "habitation," that I may "find" it also. And does he find this "something" in all men? In all idiots? This "something" that "reasons" and "judges;" does he find it equally in the possession of all; and if not, what is the reason? Will he not tell us? For my part, "I find" a great many men who cannot "reason," and I rather suspect Mr. B. has seen a few himself! These, of course, have no immortal mind! or, if they have, will Mr. B. explain why it is they cannot "reason?"

Mr. B. is guilty of too much repetition; he repeats and re-repeats the same things over again and again, without advancing a single step. In his article before me, he states my views often enough one would suppose to make them familiar; but he does not refute them. He has too many ifs and suppositions. But let us have some more of his peculiar logic: "Suppose I was to define matter to be an aggregate of properties, should I not be pressed with the question, is there no substance to which these properties belong?"

Yes; and "suppose" I "define" the human mind to be an aggregate of powers; and should be "pressed with the question, to what do these powers belong?" I should answer most emphatically, no MAN.

Mr. B. continues: "And what are powers but the powers of something?" True enough; and these "powers" are the "powers" of the man! Again: "Neither powers nor properties exist abstract from some entity to which they belong." Good! And these mental "powers do not exist abstract from" the man! One word on the new birth. Mr. B. very adroitly attempts to make me occupy what I conceive to be his own position on this question. The new birth is not a physical but a moral change wrought upon an animal, or physical man, composed just as I before stated. The spirit of God operates through the Gospel, by motives, arguments, &c., addressed to reason, the moral sentiments, &c., and moves the whole man, to action, his head, his heart, his ears, his eyes, his tongue, his hands and his feet. He "presents his body a living sacrifice to God." The new birth does not change flesh to spirit; it is a spiritual or moral change wrought in, and upon, the whole man, who is thus said to be born again.

But let us hear Mr. B. once more: "Mr. W. declares it is man, composed of flesh, blood, bones, nerves and brain, who is the subject of the new birth." Yes I do; and if Mr. B. will take all these away, what will be left to be born again? As to his enquiry about "chemical changes in the blood in regeneration," it is too puerile, too ridiculous to be noted.

What an absurd exposition Mr. B. gives of the Lord's words, "except a man be born," &c., when he says it, the mind, is "here called man!" The mind called man! This would make the Lord say, "except a mind be born again, it cannot see the kingdom of God." Again, "Except a mind be born of water and spirit, it cannot enter into the kingdom of God." A "mind" born of water! What an idea!! So Mr. B.'s mind has been born again, but Mr. B., himself, has not!

As it respects Mr. B.'s syllogism about idiots, it presents no difficulty to me at all. God does not hold idiots responsible. But, if they have immortal souls, I see not how Mr. B. will get out of the difficulty. They are difficulties thrown in the way of Mr. B.'s theory, and he, not I, must remove them.

Mr. B. has not met the question concerning the beasts. He must try it again. It is not I, but Mr. B. who is "pressed" on this question.

Mr. B. remarks: "The fact that there is a spirit in man, does not, of itself, aside from the will of God, secure immortality. Angels depend upon God, as well as men."

Very well; if "the fact that there is a spirit in man, does not, of itself, secure immortality, why predicate immortality of the spirit? Immortality 'depends upon the will of God,' says Mr. Brewster, and so say I; but is it 'the will of God' that sinners shall be immortal? Will Mr. B. meet me on this question? Angels depend upon God, as well as men," for their immortality; but are men now immortal and "equal to the Angels?" Angels are immortal; but men are not, and hence immortality is set before them as something to be sought after. I thank Mr. B. for his admissions! They are fatal to his cause. Again Mr. B. says: "And while nothing indicates that beasts were designed for endless being, every thing teaches this of man." Nothing indicates that beasts were designed for endless being! Mr.

Wesley, the celebrated founder of Mr. B.'s Church, thought differently; and if Mr. B. make intelligence an attribute of that which is immortal, I see not what other disposition he will be able to make of them! But every thing teaches this of man. "Every thing." If this be so, why has not Mr. B. given at least one thing that "teaches" it? This he has failed to do.

Mr. B. speaks of my interpretation of "Fear not them that kill the body," &c., as a "singular" one. But as "singular" as it may be in his estimation, I am willing to rest the whole controversy upon a full Eregesis of this text. If he foil me here, then am I forever driven from the field! The terms are easy, with Mr. B. accept of them? We shall see. May the truth shine into the mind of Mr. Brewster, is the desire of

SCRIPTURAL PSYCHOLOGY.*—NO I.

In these essays I shall divide the subject in the following order:

- I. MOSAIC PSYCHOLOGY;
- II. PROPHETIC PSYCHOLOGY.
- III. APOSTOLIC PSYCHOLOGY.

I. MOSAIC PSYCHOLOGY: This phrase embraces a period, extending from the creation of man to the era of Samuel the prophet. To the use of the term soul, during that period, I shall now direct the attention of the reader. But before entering formally into the investigation, I wish to state certain rules or principles of interpretation, which are admitted on all hands to be correct.

RULE 1st. A word, having a variety of significations, must be defined by the context, to ascertain its specific meaning in any given case. The correctness and importance of this rule, will be manifest when the term soul is examined.

RULE 2d. Words are to have their primary meaning, unless there is an obvious necessity for departing from it.

RULE 3d. If a given definition be the meaning of a word, in a given place and according to its context, then the definition may be substituted for the word, and it will make sense.

These rules will be applied in the course of my examination.

I will now proceed: "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, (in Hebrew soul;) and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven." This is the first use of the term in the Bible. In the common version it is rendered "life," but in the original it is soul. Let the reader remember that this is not only the first application of this word in the Scriptures; but that it was thus used to signify life, by God himself, nearly six thousand years ago! Here we have both high and antiquated authority for asserting that the primary meaning of the term soul, is life. And, indeed, it cannot imply, or involve, the idea of immortality, for it is here used in reference to "moving" or "creeping" creatures. Do creeping insects possess immortal souls? If the term soul involves the principle of immortality, then they are immortal, for they have souls. Moreover, this term soul is applied "to creeping" creatures before it is to man; yea, and before man was created! Man was not the first living soul!

Again "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature, (in Hebrew, living soul;) after his kind, cattle, and the creeping animal, and the beast of the earth after his kind."

Here the earth is made to bring forth "living souls" in the form of "cattle," "creeping animal," and "beast of the earth." Here we have a variety of "living souls;" are they all immortal? If so, we shall have immortal "cattle;" immortal "creeping animal;" and immortal "beast." "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every animal that creepeth upon the earth, in which is life, (Hebrew, a living soul;) I have given every green herb for food."

In this place "a living soul" is ascribed to "every beast of the earth," "every animal that creeps," and to "every fowl of the air." Are these "living souls" immortal? If so, the earth beneath and the heavens above, are thronged with immortals! Are all the beasts immortal, from the great Mastodon to the smallest animalcule that creeps beneath your feet? Are all the fowls immortal, from the Eagle that soars beyond the clouds, and gazes at the sun in his splendor, to the little humming bird that sucks sweetness from a thousand flowers? If you respond in the negative, then, I affirm they are "living souls;" and, therefore, if they are not immortal, it follows that "living souls" are not necessarily immortal souls. A living soul is one thing, and an EVER LIVING SOUL is quite another.

In the second chapter of Genesis, seventh verse, we have this account of the creation of man: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

We have now arrived at that, which is usually supposed to distinguish man from the brute creation; but we have already seen, that man, as a "living soul," has no pre-eminence over the beasts—they are living souls. The possession of a "living soul" is not the distinguishing feature between man and the lower animals. The superiority of man must be looked for elsewhere: it does not consist in a superior soul, nor spirit, or breath, but in a superior organization, giving rise to a superior MIND.

Man was not created immortal, else the tree of life would have been superfluous; but he was made "a living soul;" or person; not an immortal living soul, implying he could never die, nor an everlasting soul, implying he should live forever; but simply a living soul, depending on God for the perpetuation of his life—his existence. Eating of the tree of life was the means by which he was to live forever. This he would have done, had he not been disobedient; and then God would not suffer him to eat of it, lest he should live forever in sin. His expulsion from the garden of Eden was an act of mercy; and yet men are taught to believe now, that God, who would not suffer our first parents to become immortal sinners, will positively keep sinners alive in a burning hell, suffering indescribable torments, through the endless succession of ages! He must have changed since the expulsion!

I shall now examine the places in this book—Genesis—where this word soul occurs, and see what its meaning may be in any given case. Gen.

xii. 13. And Abram said to his wife: "Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee." Now, what is the meaning of this? Did Abram expect to save his "immortal" soul by his wife saying she was his sister? Surely not: he only expected to save his life, which he thought he was in danger of losing on account of her beauty. The context shows the correctness of this. (See the 11th verse.) "And it came to pass, when he (Abram) had come near to enter into Egypt, that he said to Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon: Therefore, it will come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they will say, This is his wife: and they will kill me, but they will save thee alive." Abram apprehended the Egyptians would kill him for his wife; and this was the reason of his request to her, in which he says: "my soul shall live;" a Hebraism for I shall live.

Turn now to Genesis xix. 20. "Behold now, this city is near to flee to, and it is a small one: Oh, let me escape thither! (Is it not a small one?) and my soul shall live." Can any reasonable person suppose, that Lot expected to save his (immortal) soul, by fleeing to Zoah? Certainly not. What then did he expect to save? Did he not expect to save his life? Surely he did; and his language is equivalent to his having said—"and I shall live." The language of Isaac is worthy of note. He said to Esau: "Make me savory meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul may bless thee before I die." This according to the Hebrew idiom, means—"THAT I MAY BLESS THEE BEFORE I DIE."

"O my soul," says Jacob, "come not thou into their secret;" the secret of Simeon and Levi. Do you suppose that Jacob referred to his "immortal" soul? Or, rather, did he not say, that "He did not wish to enter into their secret?"

It is said of Shechem—"And his soul cleaved to Dinah the daughter of Jacob, and he loved the damsel, and spoke kindly to the damsel."

Now, which shall be believed, the proposition that Shechem had an immortal soul which cleaved to Dinah, or that the whole sentence is but a Hebraism expressive of the fact, that Shechem, himself, cleaved to Dinah in love? Again, in the eighth verse, Hamor said, "The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter." Can any one make me believe that an "immortal" soul would "long" for a woman? It is folly to suppose so. No, the truth is, Shechem, himself, "longed" for her, for a wife; and this is expressed by his "soul longing."

In the thirty-fifth chapter, eighteenth verse, we have this expression: "And it came to pass as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) &c. Perhaps some may be disposed to believe that Rachel had an immortal soul, that departed to heaven. This might have some force, but for the expression explanatory of "her soul departing" "FOR SHE DIED." As it is, this is all the historian meant by her "soul departing."

"BORN OF WATER."

BR. MAGRUDER'S REPLY TO THE EDITOR.

Passing by some points of the Editor's criticism (for the sake of saving time and space) I come to reply to the "difficulty" in which he thinks me involved, that in John, 3d chap., Christ had no allusion to Christian baptism—that because Abraham, Noah, and the thief were justified and pardoned before the resurrection of Christ, and therefore before Christian baptism was ordained, therefore in John, 3d chap., he was not speaking of Christian baptism. Suppose the Editor be right—that 3d John has no reference to Christian baptism, does it thence follow that because Noah, Job, and the thief were saved without it, we (in this day) may be saved also, independently of this ordinance? Certainly not; for it is answered conclusively, no such command was given to them, and "where no law is, there is no transgression, for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John, 3d chap. 4. Now such a law is given to our contemporaries, and on that account they must obey it at their peril. And here is the very point of the argument. The argument is not that 3d John 5, relates to baptism, (though I am persuaded it does,) but that because the thief, Abraham, &c., are to be saved without baptism, we are not thence to conclude that we, who live under different laws are also to be saved without it. It is to this point I call the Editor to respond.

It seems to me (in all kindness) it is no answer to this reasoning, to urge that as Christ said, "except a man (that is any man) be born of water and the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God," and then to cite the fact that Abraham, &c. have never been born of water, and will be in the kingdom, and so infer that baptism is not essential to entrance into the kingdom. This is certainly not "rightly to divide the word of truth." The declaration, "except a man be born of water," &c., relates obviously to the future, and may be the present, but certainly not the past. What would be thought of a law-giver who, when propounding a new law, should hold it applicable to acts committed or omitted before it was enacted, thus giving it an ex post facto effect? The law, "except a man be born of water and the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God," of course, and obviously means, "he cannot in future;" hereafter no man can enter except on these terms. To illustrate: Moses enacted circumcision, and declared that whoever neglected it, should "be cut off from the congregation of the Lord." Would you therefore contend that no one can be saved unless he be circumcised? Certainly not; the reason is plain. Because no such law is obligatory under the Christian dispensation. In regard to the thief, the case is plain. Christ had the power, when on earth, and is plain. Christ had the power, when on earth, and often exercised it, to forgive sins unconditionally. He could say to the sick of the palsy, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee," annexing no condition, because, as he said of himself, "The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." So to the thief, he graciously said, "Thou shalt be with me in Paradise." But how stands the matter now? He is no longer here in person to forgive sins. He proceeds now by laws, made known in the gospel, "for the obedience of faith among all nations," and to these laws, ordinances, and institutions, must we submit ourselves (as did Saul, of Tarsus. Acts 22: 14-16,) in order "to wash away our sins," and to obtain the blessings promised. Well may Paul himself say, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed (or fully explained and elucidated) by them that heard him?" I submit the above as my reply to the objection that because Abram, the thief, &c., were saved without Christian baptism, therefore we may "escape," though we "neglect" it.

But the Editor urges this question. "Is being born of water, John 3: 5, Christian baptism?" He replies, "with present light" "it is not." If not then, pray what is it? If not baptism, what is it, I repeat? Those who object, are bound in candor to give us a better explanation of the words than we offer. What is a birth of water if not baptism? What a birth of water and spirit, if not Christian baptism? I await the reply. Meanwhile, let me say, I have never said (I believe) that St. John 3, had exclusive reference to Christian baptism, implying in the subject a belief in the death and resurrection of Christ. John's baptism was no doubt as essential to those to whom John preached as was the baptism of the day of Pentecost to those to whom Peter preached. Both were "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." They differed in the facts to be previously believed. Paul says this in Acts 19, "John verily preached to the people that they should believe on him who was to come after him, that is Christ Jesus." Hearing this, they (John's disciples) were baptized in the name of the Lord. For a Jew to reject John's proclamation and baptism, was no doubt as great a sin as for Jew or Gentile to reject the apostles. Nicodemus was one of these rejectors of John's baptism. Jesus, "who knew what was in man," discerning his incredulity on this point, said to him at once, "Except a man be born of water and spirit (as John's disciples were) he cannot enter," &c. Until this law is repealed, or unless any one in this generation can show that he is embraced in the exception which saves the thief, the palsied man and others to whom the Saviour spoke audibly when on earth, let every unbaptized man or woman who hopes for a place and a name in that kingdom, beware of neglecting a compliance with these terms of admission. Such may be among the foolish virgins who go to replenish their lamps at the moment of the Lord's approach, and so are shut out from his presence, for some, we are assured, will experience this bitter fate.

A. B. MACGRUDER.

NOTES ON BR. MACGRUDER'S REPLY.

We do not look upon John 3: 5, in the light of "law" at all; it is the announcement of a fact: which fact was just as real and important in the days of Noah, Abraham, Job and Daniel, as in the days of Nicodemus. But if it were a "law" it was in "force" from its announcement, unless the Law Maker specified another time, future, for it to take effect. No such specification is appended, hence Br. M.'s difficulty remains. The dispute between Br. M. and ourselves is not whether it is essential to salvation to attend to Christian Baptism—that topic we leave to him and Br. Grew. The entire argument between Br. M. and ourselves is: "Is being born of water, John 3: 5, Christian baptism?" Br. M. does not try to draw us away from that point. He admitted, in his previous article, that "Christian Baptism was not instituted until after our Lord hung upon the cross;" that admission sustained our position, that being born of water, John 3: 5, was not Christian Baptism. Br. M. now changes the issue, and leads us to respond to a point in which he and

Br. Grew are at issue; and we must be excused from interfering between them. Br. M. entirely misapprehends us in saying, that we "cite the fact that Abraham, &c., have never been born of water and will be in the kingdom, and so infer that baptism is not essential," &c. Really, Br. M., we did no such thing. We did not say that "Abraham, &c., have never been born of water." We asked if Br. M. would undertake to prove they would enter the kingdom without being "born again?" we know they will be in the kingdom, and we believe they will, at the time, have been born again, in precisely the sense in which our Saviour used that expression, John 3: 5. "The declaration," John 3: 5, "relates obviously" to the "past" as really as to the "future," if it relates to any thing done this side the resurrection. Our Lord states a fact, not makes a "law;" and that fact was as really a fact in the days of Abraham as in the days of Nicodemus; and none the less so because Nicodemus, "a master of Israel" was ignorant of it. Our Saviour himself virtually affirms this truth, verse 10—after Nicodemus expressed his surprise—"Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" Poor Nicodemus was blamed, according to Br. M., and those that think with him, for not knowing what was impossible to have been known, because according to them the thing to be known had no existence till now. Really, our Lord was too severe on Nicodemus, "if these things are so." Why censure him for not knowing that a man must be born of water and the spirit, if the fact had no existence in the Scriptures till that hour? and had never in any clear form been stated before? Tell us, ye "masters of Israel," why our Lord blames Nicodemus for his ignorance of a thing that could not have been known, because it had no being before, if your position is the true one?

We repeat, again, that we have made no such statement as Br. M. attributes to us, that "because Abraham, &c., were saved without Christian baptism, therefore we may," &c. When we make such a statement it will be time enough for us to defend it. Br. M. says, "If being born of water, John 3: 5, is not baptism, what is it?" and he adds, "I repeat—those who object are bound in candor to give us a better explanation of the words than we offer," &c. Br. M. further adds,—"I wait the reply." Now, he need not wait; we gave our opinion in the Examiner, No. 8. Dr. N. Smith gave his in No. 9; and if Br. M. will allow us our judgment in this matter, we will say, that either of these opinions are "better" than the one for which he contends; for that, with present light, to us, is the most unlikely and improbable of either.

Br. M.'s assumption that "Nicodemus was one of those who rejected John's baptism" shall have an answer when he gives us the proof; at present the evidence is the other way. His assumption, also, that "John's disciples were born of water and spirit" shall have like attention when he gives us the evidence, as he has offered no proof of either, we need not go into the argument, but meet both with a simple denial.

We have much hope of our good brother Br. M.: for he shows, like ourselves, that he is not ashamed to change when he finds his ground not tenable. He found that being born of water, John 3: 5, could not be applied to Christian baptism, so now he has fallen back on John's. We think we shall be agreed yet, at any rate, we will not quarrel if we are not agreed.

'THE SECOND DEATH.'

By RICHARD WHATLEY, D. D., ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

"Many of the ancient Fathers look upon (the expulsion of Adam from Eden) as a merciful dispensation. THAT MAN MIGHT NOT BE PERPETUATED IN A STATE OF SIN." Bishop PATRICK.

"Whoever had a beginning can also have an ending, and it shall die, unless it be daily watered from the streams flowing from the fountain of life, and refreshed with the dew of heaven, and the wells of God: and therefore God had prepared a tree in Paradise to have supported Adam in his artificial immortality: immortality was not in his nature, but in the hands and arts, in the favor and super-additions of God." Bishop JEREMY TAYLOR.

We know that in this present world there is evil as well as good. whether in the next world there will be an end put to all evil, is a question on which Scripture, if we look to that alone, gives us only this slight hint; that we are told (by Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 25) that Christ "must reign till He have put all things under his feet;" and that "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." And this does not seem consistent with the continuance forever of a number of wicked beings, alive, and hating Christ, and odious in his sight.

The Scripture do not, I think, afford us any grounds for expecting that those who shall be condemned at the last day as having wilfully rejected or rebelled against their Lord, will be finally delivered; that their doom, and that of the evil Angels, will ever be reversed.

What that doom will be—whether the terms in which its commonly spoken of in Scripture ('death,' 'destruction,' 'perishing,' etc.) are to be understood figuratively, as denoting immortal life in a state of misery, or, more literally, as denoting a final extinction of existence—this is quite a different question. It is certain that the words 'life,' 'eternal life,' 'immortality,' etc., are always applied to the condition of those, and of those only, who shall at the last day be approved as 'good and faithful servants,' who are to 'enter into the joy of their Lord.'

'Life' as applied to their condition, is usually understood to mean 'happy life.' And that theirs will be a happy life, we are indeed plainly taught; but I do not think we are anywhere taught that the word 'life' does of itself necessarily imply happiness. If so, indeed, it would be a mere tautology to speak of a 'happy life;' and a contradiction to speak of a 'miserable life;' which we know is not the case, according to the usage of any language. In all Ages and Countries, 'life,' and the words answering to it in other languages, have always been applied, in ordinary discourse to a wretched life, no less properly than to a happy one. Life, therefore, in the received sense of the word, would apply equally to the condition of the blest and the condemned, supposing these last to be destined to continue forever living in a state of misery. And yet, to their condition the words 'life' and 'immortality' never are applied in Scripture. If therefore we suppose the hearers of Jesus and his Apostles to have understood, as nearly as possible in the ordinary sense, the words employed, they must naturally have connected them to mean (if they were taught nothing to the contrary) that the condemned were really and literally to be 'destroyed,' and cease to exist; not that they were to exist forever in a state of wretchedness. For they are never spoken of as being kept alive, but as forfeiting life: as for instance, 'Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life:'—'He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.' And again, 'perdition,' 'death,' 'destruction,' are employed in numerous passages to express the doom of the condemned. All which expressions would, as I have said, be naturally taken in their usual and obvious sense, if nothing were taught to the contrary.

That these expressions however are to be understood not in their ordinary sense, but figuratively, to signify an immortality of suffering, is inferred, by a large proportion of Christians from some other passages: as where our Lord speaks of 'everlasting punishment,' 'everlasting fire,' and of being 'cast into Hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.'

From such passages as these it has been inferred that the sufferings, and consequently the life, of the condemned is never to end. And the expression would certainly bear that sense; if these were the only ones on the subject that are to be found, in Scripture. But they will also bear another sense; which if not more probable in itself, is certainly more reconcilable with the ordinary meaning of the words 'destruction,' etc. which so often occur. The expressions of 'eternal punishment,' 'unquenchable fire,' etc. may mean merely that there is to be no deliverance—no revival—no restoration of the condemned. 'Death' simply does not shut out the hope of being brought to life again: 'eternal death' does. 'Fire' may be quenched before it has entirely consumed what it is burning: 'unquenchable fire' would seem most naturally to mean that which destroys it utterly.

It may be said, indeed, that supposing Man's soul to be an immaterial Being, it cannot be consumed and destroyed by literal material fire or worms. That is true: but no more can it suffer from these. We all know that no fire, literally so called, can give us any pain unless it reach our bodies. The 'fire,' therefore, and the 'worm' that are spoken of, must at any rate, it would seem, be something figuratively so-called—something that is to the soul what worms and fire are to a body. And as the effects of worms or fire is, not to preserve the body that they prey upon, but to consume, destroy, and put an end to it, it would follow, if the correspondence hold good, that the fire, figuratively so called, which is prepared for the condemned, is something that is really to destroy and put an end to them; and is called 'everlasting,' or 'unquenchable' fire, to denote that they are not to be saved from it, but that their destruction is to be final. So in the parable of the tares, our Lord describes himself as saying, 'gather ye first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them'; but gather the wheat into my garner;' as if to denote that the one is to be (as we know is the practice of the husbandman) carefully preserved, and the other completely PUT AN END TO.

† This last expression of his is taken from the book of the prophet Isaiah (lxvi. 24), who speaks of 'the carcasses of the men that have transgressed, whose worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all (living) flesh;' describing evidently the kind of doom inflicted by the Eastern nations on the vilest offenders, who were not only slain, but their bodies deprived of the rights of burial, and either burned to ashes (which, among them was regarded as a great indignity, or left to moulder above ground and be devoured by worms.

We must not, indeed, venture to conclude at once, from our conviction of the divine goodness and power, that evil will ever cease to exist since we know not how to explain the existence of any evil at all. We can only say that there is some unknown (reason) for it: and that it is a foolish presumption to think of assigning a limit to the effects of the unknown cause, except where revelation guides us. But when we are told that Christ is to reign till he shall have put all things under his feet, and that 'the last enemy that shall be destroyed is DEATH,' this does afford some ground for expecting the ultimate extinction of evil and of suffering, by the total destruction of such as are incapable of good and of happiness. If 'eternal death' means final death—death without any revival—we can understand what is meant by 'Death being the last enemy destroyed,' viz.: that none henceforth are to be subjected to it. But if 'Death' be understood to mean everlasting life in misery, then, it would appear that Death is never to be destroyed at all; since, altho no one should be henceforth sentenced to it, it would still be going on as a continual infliction, for ever.

On the whole, therefore, I think we are not warranted in concluding (as some have done,) so positively concerning this question as to make it a point of Christian faith to interpret figuratively, and not literally, the 'death' and 'destruction' spoken of in Scripture as the doom of the condemned; and to insist on the belief that they are to be kept alive for ever.

There are persons, I believe, who do not like to hear this question spoken of as one that is left undecided by Scripture. Some would wish that the final extinction of the condemned should be positively declared, because they wish to believe that doctrine true; and some again, from thinking it a dangerous doctrine, wish to have the opposite one positively declared. But all such wishes are quite foreign from the subject. In judging of the sense of Scripture, we should be careful to guard against the error of suffering our wishes to bias the mind. If, indeed, we had to devise a religion for ourselves, we might indulge our wishes as to what is desirable, or our conjectures as to what seems to us in itself probable, or our judgment as to what may seem advisable. But when we have before us 'Scripture-revelations' on any subject it is for us to endeavor to make out what it is that Scripture teaches, and what it does not teach. We may wonder perhaps why Scripture has taught us so and so, or why it has withheld such and such knowledge, or why it has not more distinctly revealed this or that; but if we presume to interpret Scripture according to our inclinations or judgments, or to speak positively on points which Scripture has left doubtful, because we think it advisable that all such doubts should be removed, it is plain that this is not to make Scripture our guide, but to make ourselves the guide of Scripture.

On one point, and that which ought to afford us the fullest satisfaction, we are left in no doubt. That when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also of the number of his approved servants, shall appear with him in glory, which is to last for ever, we have the fullest assurance from Scripture.

Ignorant, however, as the wisest must be on these subjects, the most ignorant of us is wise enough for his own purpose, if he will but seek for the knowledge of his duty, and use what knowledge he has. Short-sighted as we are, we can see by the light of God's word that there are two paths set before us; the ends of which we cannot indeed distinctly see; but we know that the one leads to everlasting happiness, and the other to ruin; and that God has offered us our choice between them, and entreated us to take the better, and promised us strength to walk in it, if we will strive to enter in at the straight gate.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, NOV., 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—The next number will complete the present volume. No person will have it sent to them after that, unless we receive payment in advance—see terms first page. This rule will apply to all who are now subscribers, as well as to new ones. We hope our present patrons will attend to this in season, and avail themselves of some one of the "Three Offers" in our last number. Immediately on the issue of our next number, we shall have a quantity of Vol. III bound. The price of it will be seventy-five cents, single copy, or four copies for $2, current money, sent us free of expense. Those who wish the present Vol. complete, unbound, can be supplied with it at the subscription prices. If they wish us to lay aside any for them, bound or unbound, till they call for them, we will do so if they send us the money with the order. Remember, if you wish the present volume complete, you must apply for it soon.

THE "THREE OFFERS."—In our offer of the "Six Sermons," 18mo., we include our views on the Intermediate State of the Dead, and the tract, "Rich man and Lazarus," with each copy of the Sermons. The postage on each copy, including the whole, is about four cents. We state this for the information of all inquirers. Our "offers" cannot be extended to friends in Canada, without the addition of the amount of postage we are obliged to prepay on the Examiners sent there, which is eighteen cents, on each copy, per year; and also the postage we will have to pay on the Sermons, if sent by mail. The best Canada bank bills are five per cent discount here.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—We wish to oblige all, but we cannot possibly publish every thing we would if we had a weekly issue, or an enlarged monthly. Our friends, therefore, must bear with us as if their communications do not always appear. We may also err in judgment in our selections from their favors; but we will do the best we can. We have given place to more commendatory items during the year than we intended at the outset, but it has been done by the desire of others, contrary to our own judgment in some respects.

We are compelled to lay over several articles intended for the present number; and among them the first article of a Review of the Lectures of J. W. Bonham, against the destruction of the wicked, in which that production of endless miseryism is handled as it merits, but kindly, by H. Grew.

"PROPHECY OF ZECHARIAH."—The Bible Advocate, published at Hartford, Conn., seems almost to take fire at our remarks upon this prophecy in the last Examiner. It is "half inclined to believe" our article was "designed as a refutation" of one it had published; but the Advocate says:—"Our arrangement and proof are such as are not touched by this reply." We wonder why it "flutters" if it was "not touched?" Why be at the pains of publishing six columns of additional matter to help that which was not harmed?

But, says the Advocate,—"If the Examiner had only published our article, we should have no need to say a word in reply." Did not all those persons see your "article," Br. Advocate, that will see your reply? If so, your "reply" is a "needless" affair according to your own admission. Did not the Advocate then undertake a work of supererogation in replying at all? Did that paper really think the Examiner would copy its "article?" We must have been excessively fond of accommodation, to have copied six columns and a half from a weekly paper. When did that paper ever set us the example of such disinterestedness? Carefully, it would seem, till now, have the Editors abstained from ever mentioning our paper, though we have published occasionally for more than three years, and regularly for more than a year. They have not copied an article from the Examiner, nor mentioned its name all this long while, except at the time when Dr. Cray has managed the editorial. With that exception, the Advocate never let its readers know that such a paper as the Examiner was in existence. Now it seems to wonder that we could not have copied its long article on Zechariah! "Consistency should blush for an answer," truly! If the Advocate intends the introduction of its last article, of an "old fiddle" and "Judas" hanging "himself," to illustrate our reasoning, as it evidently does, we will only say—"Physician, heal thyself;" we have no controversy with such very logical deductions.

The "article" in our "exchange" paper, to which we referred in our last, is one and the same paragraph, admits the Mount of Olives, Zech. 14, is literal, and says "the feet of the Lord stood upon" it at his first advent; and then, when it comes to the cleaving of the Mount of Olives, and half of it removing one way and half the other, it means "the destruction of the Jewish polity"!!! Aye, and the "fleeing to the valley of the mountains" is "literally to be dispersed among the Gentiles"!!! If this is not an "arbitrary application of scripture," we may defy a Jesuit to tell what is. But, we leave that paper to pursue its own way, and we shall take the course to which we believe God and duty calls us. We feel no fears in letting our remarks on Zechariah go the world over, without strengthening them, along with the twelve and a half columns our exchange paper has served up for its readers.

MORTAL AND IMMORTAL TOGETHER.—"No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you," Job 12: 2. One of our exchange papers, in laboring to prove us wrong in the opinion that some will be probationers in the next age, or under Messiah's personal reign, and to avoid the difficulty in which it was placed by our argument, from the fact that angels have visited and preached to men; as, for example, Gabriel to Daniel—to the father of John the Baptist—to Mary, the mother of Jesus—and others—gravely inquires—"Are angels immortal?" and adds—"The same argument which proves that they are, will prove that men are." Surely, "wisdom shall die with you," brother Exchange. Our Lord saith—"They that are accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more: [why not?] for they are equal unto the angels;" that is the reason why they cannot die any more. Here our Lord clearly affirms that the holy angels cannot die: but our Exchange, says—"They are not said to be immortal;" and it further affirms that "Angels and men will be all of an age in immortality." Our Lord is thus represented as saying—"They that obtain that age," &c., "cannot die any more, for they are equal to themselves." Truly—"How forcible are right words." Will our Exchange give us chapter and verse in proof that "angels and men will be all of an age in immortality"? aye, and a little proof that angels will ever be made immortal at all, if they are not so before men? or, if those are not immortal now who "kept their first estate"?

We conceive our brother Exchange has made another very great mistake in applying Paul's language, 1 Timothy 6: 15—16, "to Christ;" a mistake, however, which would be pardonable in a learner, but hardly so in one who is so positive in conclusions, without evidence, as some of his statements are. His words are—"Paul teaching the only Potentate, says, Who only hath immortality, dwelling in light, &c. If our brother had quoted the remainder of the verse, he would have found it to read thus—“Which no man can approach unto: whom no man hath seen nor can see.” Will he affirm that is “Christ?” The same apostle, in the same epistle, chapter 1: 17, affirms that “The King eternal, immortal, invisible,” is “THE ONLY WISE GOD.” He only hath inherent immortality: but, does it therefore follow that holy angels are not immortal, because men are not yet so? Is that logical? Just as much so as the following:—“There is none good but one, that is God,”—“therefore no man nor angel is good.” Though God alone is inherently good, yet he, at diverse times, imparts of that goodness to his creatures. How then can our brother Exchange prove that God does not impart immortality at diverse times to his creatures? And hence, how can he prove what he has so positively affirmed, that angels are not now immortal? If his assertion is to be relied upon as proof, it proves too much—it proves angels never can be immortal: for, then the “only Potentate” could not be said “only” to have “immortality.”

Our brother seems to say, that our Lord was mortal after his resurrection, and until his ascension, for he says—“Nor is there any evidence that he was immortalized, until he was glorified after his ascension.” Pray, why did our brother not affirm at once, that he is not “immortalized” yet? for he says—“Angels and men will be all of one age in immortality.” “The man Christ Jesus,” [1 Tim. 2: 5.] is not “immortalized” yet, according to these assumptions. We agree with our brother, fully, that “Faith founded in speculation, may supplant Christian faith, but it can never honor the Gospel.”

We have received, we presume from the author, a small pamphlet of fifty-eight pages, on “The purpose of God in creating the World,” &c. “By E. B. Pinney.” We have not examined it as fully as we may. In some things we agree with him; and in others we are compelled to disagree; particularly in the application of the prophetic periods. But we will soon show if he is right. Those who may wish to procure the work, can obtain it of the author, at Seneca Falls, N. Y. Price $1 per hundred, six cents single copy.

THE PENALTY OF ADAM'S SIN.

A writer signing himself “Timothy,” in the Bible Advocate, September 28th, very briefly notices our article on the “Death Threatened to Adam, not Moral, nor Spiritual, but Literal,” in the Examiner of July. Instead, however, of letting the “original sin” of the article fall back on the Bible Examiner, “Timothy” says it is “A piece [that] appeared in the Athena Warbler of July 15th.” That is true, but it is not all the truth. The Harbinger gave credit for it to the “Bible Examiner.” However, we care nothing about that so far as we are concerned: if “Timothy” is afraid to say Bible Examiner, or does not choose to name it, we have no fault to find on that account.

“Timothy” does not quote us correct, or the Advocate has made him say what he did not mean. He represents us as saying that “It involves the greatest absurdity, and that it confounds language, to suppose that moral death was included in the sentence threatened to Adam.”

Our language is, “Some contend that death [threatened to Adam] was a moral death. Such a view involves the greatest absurdity and confounds language. We shall see this by an examination of those texts in Moses and the Prophets where the phrase surely die occurs.” We did go into that examination, and found, yea demonstrated, that that phrase is never used where moral death is the subject referred to; and this “Timothy” does not attempt to disprove from Moses and the Prophets; evidently, because it cannot be done. We said not a word about whether “moral death was included in the sentence,” but we did say, that was not the penalty of Adam's sin, which God threatened; and we repeat it—to maintain that it was, “involves the greatest absurdity, and confounds language.” It is contrary to the entire analogy of the language of the Law and the Prophets, as we have shown; and it will be time enough to strengthen that position when “Timothy” gives any evidence that we have misunderstood or misapplied the words of Moses and the Prophets.

The civil law threatens men with death who commit murder—that they “shall be hung by the neck till they are dead.” Is that a literal death, or a political one? Perhaps “Timothy” would say it “includes” political death the penalty? or, is it a mere accident? an unavoidable consequence, which it would be “absurd” to legislate about? It follows as a matter of course when a man has committed murder, that he loses his political life; but no one ever dreamed that was the penalty for murder. Equally absurd is it, to maintain that when God said to man, whom he had just “formed of the dust of the ground,” “thou shalt surely die,” he meant a moral death! That would amount to just this—“O, Adam, I have formed thee of the dust of the ground—if thou sinnest, thou shalt surely be a sinner!!” Most marvellous penalty! Know, O man, if thou dost commit murder thou shalt surely be a murderer!

“Timothy” next goes on to catechise us; and we judge he has been to the “Assembly's Catechism” to get his questions—they are a very fair specimen of that school.

QUESTION 1. “Does mankind retain the moral image that Adam had when he was first created?”

ANSWER. When you tell us what moral image Adam had at that time we will answer you.

QUESTION 2. “If man has not lost his moral image, is not morally dead, why should Christ have come to atone for sin?”

ANSWER. The expressions “moral image”—“morally dead”—and “spiritual death,” are all very good metaphors, but do not belong to Bible theology—they are as unscriptural as “immortal souls” and belong to the same brotherhood. It is by such stereotyped phrases, brought out of the Cereus of Babylon, that men's minds are bewildered and blinded. The question is a mere play upon words. If you had asked “If Adam was not a sinner—was not subjected to death—why Christ should have come as a deliverer?” all would have been plain; but such a question would have brought you exactly on the ground we occupy. But we reply to your question—If the penalty of Adam's sin was moral death there could have been no atonement; and the race of man was lost. That death which could make atonement must be of like character—Christ must have died a “moral death”—must be “morally dead.” That would be to “atone for sin” with a vengeance. We have long seen that the advocates of the theory “Timothy” contends for, are virtually denying the atonement, and establishing the doctrine of the “endless misery” of all mankind, so far as they do anything. “The second death” is like the first: if the first is a moral death so is the second: if the first is literal so is the second: there is no avoiding this conclusion. Nor is that all: if the first death is a moral death, no man can die the “second death” who has not been first made morally alive: hence, either all men are thus made alive and then die a second moral death, or else none can possibly die the second death—it would only be to continue under the first moral death. But still another absurdity follows the moral death theory, viz: If the first death be a moral death, as they must be made morally alive to die a second moral death; then, this “second death” must be in the present life; i. e., they must be morally dead to be liable to moral death! and if they die another moral death after the resurrection, it must, of necessity, be the THIRD moral death!! Let the moral death of Adam theorist escape this dilemma if he can.

QUESTION 3. “Where is the necessity of the atonement? If literal death was the only penalty attached to the first transgression, if literal death only was contained in the sentence against sin, then justice has no demands, only to bring this dust back to dust again.”

ANSWER. Can “Timothy,” or any one else, show that “justice has” any other “demand” for “the first transgression?” If they can, let them do it. We deny that justice has any further demand than that. The penalty of that transgression is inflicted—there is no remitting the penalty, all are made subject to death: but the second Adam, Jesus Christ, has obtained the right to “abolish death,” this he will do by a resurrection of all that are in their graves, or by a change of the living which is equivalent to a resurrection. But, “Timothy” seems to think all sin is wrapped up in the first sin; for, according to his argument, if man [all men] did not morally die by Adam's sin there is no need of an atonement. We think otherwise, but shall not argue that point now.

“Timothy” says—“The brother in quoting Ezk. 3: 18, &c., says, Can it mean moral death? and also says [ask] Are not the wicked already morally dead? I would say, [ask] does not the brother here overthrow his argument by allowing that the wicked are morally dead?”

We would say in reply, when we asked the question, “Are not the wicked already morally dead?” we used the phrase “morally dead” as a quotation, though we did not mark it as such; it was using our opponent's own phraseology to show the inconsistency of applying the threatening to what they call moral death. To say a wicked man is morally dead, is to say, a wicked man is wicked. But God said “to the wicked, thou shalt surely die,” &c., in Ezk. 3: 18. The threatening did not relate to what “Timothy” calls a “moral death”; for, the person spoken of was, at the time addressed, what he calls “morally dead.” We did not, therefore, “overthrow” our “argument,” but established it. But if we were to admit that all wicked men are “morally dead” it does not touch the question, as to what death was the penalty of the law Adam violated.

“Timothy” adds—“I know that the state of mankind by nature and by practice, would teach that doctrine.” [That is, that “the wicked are morally dead.”]

The wicked most certainly are wicked—“morally dead,” if you please—who disputes that? The question is not touched even if you had proved that. What has that to do with the penalty of the first transgression? Just as much as the fact that a man is politically dead when he has committed murder, and no more. His being politically dead does not prove that was the penalty of the law against murder. “Timothy” quotes Scripture—“To be carnally minded is death,”—“And you being dead in your sins,” &c., [Not Adam's sin, but their own.—Ed. Ex.]—“Having the understanding darkened; being alienated from the life of God.” The inference of “Timothy” from these texts is truly marvellous; he says:—

“We see that scripture agrees with what the brother allows, that the wicked are morally dead, and that they have been ever since the fall of man.”

We have made no such admission as this language seems to imply. We do not allow that any man since Adam, or by Adam, was made “morally dead.” Adam sinned, and hence was a sinner; but God has sworn by himself that no man should have occasion to say, “the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge;” Ezk. 18: 1—4. We wonder when men will cease to impeach the oath of the Lord of Hosts; and leave off the guilt of charging on God their own wickedness.

“But,” says Timothy, “See the pride, the anger, the hatred, the malice, that rushed into the human heart after the fall.” He adds, “Cain was morally dead—Lamech was morally dead.”—&c.

Prejudice and superstition are always blind. Some men can see nothing good in the world: we do not know but such men are “morally,” or, at least, mentally dead. Was Abel morally dead? We wonder if Cain did not “morally” kill him! Quite as likely as that Cain was “morally dead” by any act but his own; or, that his “moral death” was “the penalty of the first transgression” of his father! Was Seth morally dead? Was Enoch morally dead? Was Methuselah? Was Noah? Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Was Joseph, Moses, Joshua, Caleb, Job, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, and the Three Hebrews? Were all these “morally dead”? Oh, but these were not “the wicked,” it is only “the wicked” that “Timothy” says are “morally dead!” That is, it is only the wicked that are wicked! But “pride, anger,” &c., “rushed into the human heart, after the fall.” Did not a little rash into mother Eve's before she fell? Was not the desire to “be as Gods” a little touch of “Timothy's” “pride rushing into the human heart” before the fall? Wonder if Eve was not born of somebody that was “morally dead!” Really, one needs to take a lesson of Job to know how to deal with those who can set aside the plainest declarations of Moses and the Pro-ghosts on the subject of the death penalty to Adam. Let Timothy, or any one else, take the article which drew out his remarks, and refute the position they laid down, if he can. We challenge them to do it. Our columns shall be open for them to make the attempt. The question is simply this, Do Moses or the Prophets give any other interpretation of the phrase "STURDILY DIE" than that of a LITERAL DEATH? We affirm, they do not. Who will pursue with us on that point?

P. S. Since writing the foregoing we have obtained and read the "Three Lectures of J. W. Bonham," delivered in England, on "The Eternal Punishment of the Wicked not Annihilation." We had seen the Boston organ of endless misery's notice of this work, which led us to desire to see the puffed "Lectures." They are, in our mind, a most singular failure—quite a good echo from Boston, Massachusetts; and a pity if Boston could not praise its own child. At another time we may give our readers a specimen of the double-faced character of that abolition. We just remark now that the author says, page 22, "The nature of the death Adam died in consequence of sinning is the point at issue." As our remarks on that subject have already been presented in the Examiner of July and this month, we shall add no more now, but may say more hereafter. We have no fear for the result, if the "Three Lectures of J. W. Bonham" are the best our opponents can do. We say to them all as Micah said to Ahab, king of Israel, 2 Chron. 18: 14, "Go ye up and prosper!" Please read that chapter if you wish to know the result.

THE DEAD UNCONSCIOUS;

OR, OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.—No. II.

It is said: "That the souls of the righteous are preserved in life in the intermediate state is positively stated by Matthew, Mark, and Luke." Which have either of them "positively stated" such a doctrine? We cannot find it. But "Moses was seen by Peter, James, and John, conversing with our Saviour upon the mount of transfiguration." Let it be distinctly understood, that manifestation was a "vision;" so our Lord himself declares, Matt. 17: 9. It appears, from Luke 9, at the time "Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep;" but "when they were awake, they saw his glory and the two men that stood with him." But it seems they were not so much awake as to know distinctly what was passing for Peter wanted to make "tabernacles"—"not knowing what he said." Now as this was a representation by a "vision," it does not follow that Moses was personally and really present on that occasion, any more than it follows that the saints were really in life at the time Daniel saw the little horn making war upon them and prevailing against them, even till the judgment set; or, that the new heavens and new earth were actually being when John saw them eighteen hundred years ago; or that the things seen in any other "vision" were realities at the time seen. This "vision" was designed to represent our Lord, himself, as he will be when he comes in his kingdom, not as he then really was; for, as yet, he had not been quickened by the spirit; and before that event would take place he was to be "put to death in the flesh." He was not, therefore, actually in his glory at the transfiguration, but was represented in vision as he will be when he shall "come in his kingdom."

Another objection.—"The soul is a spirit, therefore the soul may, with perfect consistency, dwell with God and angels, separate from the body."

Where is the proof "that the soul is a spirit?" If the soul is "the man" it is not a spirit. Besides the Scriptures keep up a uniform distinction between soul and spirit. But what is "a spirit?" Has it shape? Has it substance? Or, is it immaterial? That is, having no substance, or matter connected with it? If the latter, we beg to know how a spirit can be seen? Can thought be seen? Can mind be visible to the eye? These absurdities are involved in the common theory.

Once more it is objected.—"If the Saviour has declared that whosoever liveth and believeth in him shall never die; we are bound to believe him, see John 11: 26." Most certainly we do believe him. But did our Lord assert by such language that Lazarus was not then dead? If he was not dead, then he did not raise him from the dead. But he himself had declared, "Lazarus is dead," verse 14. The interpretation the objector gives to our Lord's words, verse 26, makes him contradict himself, and makes the miracle to be no miracle: that is—the dead was not raised, because Lazarus was not dead. But our Lord said he was dead, and he calls death sleep. He did not say Lazarus' body sleeps, but "Lazarus sleepeth;" and "Lazarus is dead;" and let it be recollected that the objector admits, and contends, the soul is the essential man; then the soul was the essential Lazarus; and Lazarus slept, and was dead, our Lord being judge.

What then did our Lord mean when he said: "He that believeth in me shall never die?" He must be understood in one of two ways: First That such a person should not die for ever, or remain forever under the power of death, though they die as had Lazarus. The original admits, we believe, of this construction; so some of the commentators have rendered the words, and among them Dr. Clarke. The previous verse shows that this may be the meaning. Our Lord had said: "I am the resurrection and the life;" he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live;" i. e. he shall have a resurrection to life. Our Lord had told Martha that her "brother" [not his body merely, but "thy brother,"] shall rise again; he shall not always remain under the power of death; he shall not die forever; or, remain always dead; he "shall rise again." And whosoever [not Lazarus only] liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever; they shall live again, for "I am the resurrection and the life," and "in the resurrection at the last day," they shall live again. Such, we conceive, is the true meaning of our Lord's words, unless,—second—He had reference to those that should be "alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," of whom Paul speaks, 1 Thess. 4: 15; such "shall never die." It is possible our Lord had reference to that class of believers, in the words under consideration; for that day had just been spoken of by Martha.

From this text then there is no evidence that a man is dead and alive at the same time; or, in other words, that a man is dead, but not dead in that very day his thoughts perish," is the testimony of inspiration. See Psa. 146: 4. And "the dead praise not the Lord." Psa. 115: 17. "In the grave," in "sheol"—the state of the dead—"there is no knowledge." Eccl. 9: 10. Such testimony is positive; and no inferential conclusions can invalidate it. When a man is dead, he is dead; and were it not for the "resurrection," even those "that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But they shall live again to "die no more." Compare 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18, with Luke 20: 35, 36.

H. T. ANDERSON.

We are exceedingly pleased to see that this gentleman has so ably vindicated some of the things, "concerning the kingdom of God." The readers of "the Examiner" will appreciate the article to which we refer, under the caption, "Study of Prophecy," taken from the "Christian Magazine," and edited by J. B. Ferguson, B. F. Hall, and T. Fanning. Mr. Anderson is far in advance of all his contemporaries in the "Reformation," as it is called, and his brethren will do well to listen to his faithful and lucid exposition of the subject of which he treats in the article before us. Perhaps they will learn from him, when the same views offered by another, would be rejected on account of the source from which they might emanate. At all events, the truth is proclaimed, and we therein rejoice; yea, and we will rejoice! The following is the article to which we refer.

J. T. W.

While I have my doubts of a universal conflagration, I have no doubts of a change in the constitution of the present heavens and earth. I do most religiously believe the saying of the Saviour, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the Earth." The song of the redeemed that John heard, ended with the words, "thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." There is a strong feeling of attachment to the earth on the part of those who suffered here. So it would seem from this song of theirs. Sin has indeed brought upon our race and upon our earth curses, which have sadly injured both. The race has become degenerate and wicked; and this fair globe has suffered from the consequences of the sin of man. We have death, disease and pain; labour, sorrow and tears. But in that new state to which we hasten, there will be neither death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor any more pain; and God shall wipe away every tear from our eyes. Not only so, but there will be God's tabernacle with man, a pure river of water of life clear as crystal, flowing out from the throne of God and the Lamb. On this river, there will be trees which will yield fruit every month; the fruit will be food and the leaves for medicine; or, as John says, for the healing of the nations. What a glorious state this will be.

But, turn from this for one moment, and tell me, what healing of the nations is this! Will the nations need healing in that state which John describes? And who are these kings that bring their glory and honor into this city? Surely there must be some mistake about our ideas of a future state. John's new heavens and earth cannot differ from Peter's, nor can the state described by either of these differ from that of which Ezekiel and Isaiah speak. There can be no difference between prophet and prophet, for all have one spirit. But has Isaiah spoken of a new heavens and earth? He has, and says, 66: 22: "For as the new heavens and new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that, from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." Does not this look like the saying of John with respect to the nations bringing their glory and honor into it. Such was the case in a less degree in Solomon's reign, when the kings around him brought gifts to the temple. There will be a healing of the nations, let the wise men say what they will of it. So says the Lord by his servant John. It is written, and we cannot unwrite nor reverse it. Make it intellectual, moral, physical: still it is healing. Now on the generally received opinion, that there will be, in that state, none but the resurrected, how can they need healing? I answer, they have no need of healing, for they are the inhabitants of the city; and they have no death nor pain, but are like the angels of God. And why this tree of life? Shall the resurrected eat of the fruit? I answer yes: for the Saviour says to the church at Ephesus, "to him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." But for whom are these leaves? I answer, for the nations. So says the testimony. Then, when the Tabernacle of God is with men, there will be nations of the earth who will need healing. Let the Doctors make of this what they can. If they spiritualize, then it is spiritual healing. There is no escape. From all this, I infer [?] that there will be no such universal conflagration as we are wont to hear of. For if this universal conflagration takes place, and none but the immortals shall remain, then why have leaves to heal, when there are no maladies?

Let the reader remember that Isaiah and Ezekiel were Jews; that Peter and John were Apostles of the circumcision and descendants of this same family. Let the reader also remember that one spirit taught these four men, and that they all write in the Oriental style, that Peter was at the Babylon in Assyria, the very centre of the settlement of the Jews, when he wrote, and that he wrote for the Jewish believers; and, then, with all these facts before him, he will be able to comprehend what he wrote. And let any one take heed how he calls in question the fact of Peter's being at Babylon in Assyria. But this, by the way; Isaiah says of Jerusalem, "the nation and kingdom that shall not serve thee, shall perish." Again: "I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." And again: "The sun shall no more be thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down: thy people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands that I may be glorified." Now as Peter, John, Isaiah and Ezekiel describe the same new heavens and earth, and as we find in Isaiah, Ezekiel and John nations subject to the holy people, we cannot conclude that that burning of which Peter speaks, is one of a universal charage, or so extensive as to involve the nations of the earth; for then, verily, would there be no nations to subjugate. So you perceive, that the new heavens of Peter and John being the same, the burning must take place prior to their existence. But in the new heavens and earth of John, Isaiah and Ezekiel (this last does not mention new heavens and earth; but the holy city, the waters and tree of life) we find the nations subjugated. Therefore, (I think you must permit this "therefore") there can be no such burning as will involve the nations of the earth. I think, with all due deference to those who think differently, that the wisdom of the wise has failed them on this point. Remember that I have said, I believe in a change in the physical constitution of the present heavens and earth. Moreover, I believe that the Lord Jesus will be revealed, taking vengeance, by flames of fire, on them that know not God, and who obey not the gospel. This I religiously believe and teach. But I am constrained to interpret Peter so as to harmonize with the old prophets, and with John. Had I time, I would here quote from Moses and the prophets, the predictions relative to the land of Canaan; not the land only, but the heavens above that land, and perhaps we might find wondrous things out of the law, the prophets and the Psalms. But not to detain the reader with further remarks on that subject, I will introduce to his consideration a subject of another kind, but bearing upon the present one. First, then, a question: Is the Messiah an heir of anything yet to be possessed? If so, what is that thing? Paul says, we are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. This joint-heirship has some future bearing; something is yet to be developed. Is the Messiah now on the throne of David, or the throne of his Heavenly Father? On the answer to this question hangs the hope of Israel, and of the Christian. If it can be shown that Christ is not on David's throne, then the idea of a spiritual Millennium reigns vanishes—like the baseless fabric of a vision! Let me try the answer to that question. First, I remark, that the passage in the 2d of Acts, 30th verse, is not authorized. The words "to eita sarka anastesein tou Christou," belong not to the text. In the next place, I will quote from the Saviour's words, Rev. 3: 21—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcome, and am set down with my Father on his throne." There is a throne which he calls his, on which he will hereafter sit. Open now, Isaiah, and read 9: 6, 7: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The Father of the Everlasting Age, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Well, then, the throne of David is his by inheritance, and he must yet sit upon it. He is the seed of David according to the flesh, and no other one can ever reign over the house of Jacob. Luke 1: 32-33: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest. And the Lord God shall give him the throne of his Father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This needs no comment. The language is clear, simple and plain. I say no one but he can reign over the Jewish people. Where is their Priesthood, and their kingly line? They are both lost to them long since, but safely preserved for them in the person of Christ. How consoling this promise. I care not to enter into the difficulties of dark sayings. This is plain. He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever. And Peter said, lo, we have left all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore? Jesus said to them, "Verily I say unto you, that you, which have followed me, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory in the Renovation, shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This will be the portion of the Apostles, and every one that overcomes will sit with him on his throne. This is the consummation to which we hasten. He will have a throne of his own, of which he is the sole heir, which no one else can occupy, but which he will share with the faithful. When? In the Renovation, when the fullness of the Gentiles comes in; when the man of sin is destroyed, when the Israelites turn away from ungodliness, when the times of the restitution of all things shall come. Then will he sit on the throne of his glory, and the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Then shall the moon be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and shall reign in glory. "At that time before his ancients gloriously." "At that time shall they call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all nations shall be gathered to it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem." Jeremiah 3: 17. I did not conclude the quotation. "Neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. For the Lord will comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places, and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." Isaiah 5: 13.

I may at some future time give my view of Peter's 3d chapter. I have not entered into that subject, nor do I think it necessary now. I had long listened for some interpretation, which would cause that portion to harmonize with the other three that I mentioned, but my ears have not heard it from any quarter. The facts that I mentioned alone are important. Peter did not write for the Gentiles, and I think his language is understood only by those who give such an interpretation as will harmonize with Isaiah, Ezekiel and John, as well as other prophets. Be it known, that he wrote his letter a short time prior to the overthrow of Jerusalem, when that whole land, city and nation, were threatened by the Romans. The minds of the Jewish people were no doubt sadly perplexed with the coming vengeance, and needed all the aid that the Apostle could give. There is something exceeding sad to my mind, (what must it have been to that of a Jew!) in the whole of the 4th chapter of his first letter; but particularly in the 17th verse: "But the end of all things is at hand." They sound like the knell of the departing glory of the Jewish age. Imagine to yourself the homeless wanderer, driven from his own land, persecuted for his religion, which his Saviour had given; he has taken his last look at the glorious temple, the city of a thousand years and more, and the centre of all that was loved on earth. The sound of war is in the land, the rumors of the approaching Roman host, the coming desolation, the end of which he knew not, all come before him; and then these sad and solemn words, "the end of all things is at hand." "A fire is kindled in my wrath which shall burn to the lowest hell." See Deuteronomy. These awful words must have struck deep into the Jewish heart. But it is a sad theme. I'll turn from it with a quotation "Ye shall no more see me until you say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The time I trust is not far distant. The Lord hasten the day. Nevertheless, says Peter, we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth Righteousness. How striking this word, when contrasted with the excessive wickedness and sinfulness of the then existing Jewish nation. But enough for the present.

THE TWENTY-THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

By DR. JOHN FONDEY.

BR. STORRS:—About eighteen months ago, I addressed you a few letters giving you the result of my investigations in reference to prophecy, which I designed simply as suggestions for a more able and extended consideration by you than I could give them; one of the chief results of which inquiries was, that the twenty-three hundred days were literal days, and yet future. The twelve hundred and ninety, and thirteen hundred and thirty-five days, were also regarded in the same light. Time, and further reflection, have deepened my original impressions of the correctness of these views; and with the view to elicit truth, and excite others to a thorough investigation of this subject, I present them for the consideration of all who love the study of prophecy.

The host spoken of in the eighth chapter Daniel, is conceded by most of us, I believe, to refer to the Jewish people. This chapter gives a description of several monarchies which were to be the agents permitted by God to chastise the Jews. Babylon being soon to pass away, is not mentioned. Persia, Greece, and the divisions of the Greek kingdom, are spoken of. But the principal character (for the little horn is, I conceive, an individual, and my authority for recognizing him as such, besides other arguments afforded by the other prophets, is drawn from Daniel 11: 36, where the action of this king are again noticed. It matters little, however, whether this be a king or kingdom here referred to, for the two others are closely connected.) is a little horn which springs up in the latter time of the kingdom of the divided Grecian Empire, and who, after accomplishing great things, is finally broken without hand. By comparing the different parts of this chapter together, it will be readily seen that the little horn, and the transgression of desolation, are identical. In the thirteenth verse, the daily is spoken of. This I believe to mean the Jewish daily sacrifices which are yet to be restored after the Jews shall have built a temple prior to the advent of Christ. This could be proved from the prophets, but I only speak of it now in passing to explain the twenty-three hundred days. These Jewish daily sacrifices and the transactions of this little horn, who is to be an active agent in inflicting judgment on the Jews, are to occupy a period of twenty-three hundred days. These days I believe to be literal, and I will now give my reasons for this opinion, leaving it to others to decide for themselves whether they are of any value.

The argument is simple, and founded on the peculiarity of the words spoken by the angel while obeying the command in the sixteenth verse, to make Daniel understand the vision: "In obedience to this command, he tells him to 'understand, O Son of Man, for AT THE TIME OF THE END SHALL BE THE VISION.'" He does not say the vision of twenty-three hundred days shall begin with the commencement of the seventy weeks, which idea our advent brethren held out so valiantly for, and many yet do, and as long as they do so will only be perpetually disappointed; nor three hundred, or one thousand years hence—but mark the phraseology—he says at the time of the end, which is somewhere about the time of Christ's second coming, this vision shall be. That passage seems to me a plain passage, and I wonder that I myself and others have stumbled over it so long—it shows that we are not to look for those twenty-three hundred days UNTIL THE TIME OF THE END. That time of the end is, I believe yet future, but as I am only considering the literality of the days spoken of in this chapter, I shall pass on to the next argument on this point.

In the nineteenth verse the angel says: "Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation, for at the time appointed the end shall be." Let us analyze these words—at the time appointed (the conclusion of the twenty-three hundred days,) the end of the indignation should be. But will the indignation end on the Jews until Christ comes? No, for when he appears the Jews will be in such a time of trouble as never was and never again should be. This is not, however, the strongest point in this verse. But this is: "Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the LAST END of the indignation." This is the burden of the vision—this is what the angel comes to tell him about, viz.—the events connected with the time of Jacob's trouble, and which is yet future. Is that last end of the indignation, twenty-three hundred literal days, or is it twenty-three hundred years long? I believe it to be twenty-three hundred literal days. The whole period of the indignation of God on the Jews was to be seven times, or two thousand five hundred and twenty years. At the time Daniel had this vision, but one or two hundred years of this indignation had been inflicted on the Jews, leaving the most of the seven times punishment yet unfulfilled. Now this twenty-three hundred days finishes up the indignation on the Jews, and is said to be the last end of it. If the twenty-three hundred days are not literal days, but refer to years, I would ask if twenty-three hundred years would not be a long last end of twenty-five hundred and twenty years—the end would be nearly as long as the whole period spoken of.

Mark, he does not say I will make thee know what shall be in the beginning, nor the middle, nor the latter part of the indignation, "but I will make thee know what shall be in the LAST END of it, for at the time appointed (twenty-three hundred days,) the end shall be." The common sense meaning of words, will, it seems to me, warrant no other explanation of this verse, nor the one previously spoken of, than that the vision shall be at the time of the end, and that the last end of the indignation more than twenty-three hundred literal days in length.

I have spoken of the twenty-three hundred days as making the duration of the last end of the indignation. This time, however, is, I believe, divided into two parts. One of twelve hundred and sixty days, (which can be proved from the prophecies,) during which the transgression of desolation is to be treading down, which leaves for the other a period of one thousand and forty days, during which the Jewish daily sacrifices are to be offered. Both these periods added together, give us the whole duration of the vision. The question of the saint in the thirteenth verse, included both these events. The time of the continuance of the daily, and also the transactions of the little horn, or the transgression of desolation, and the time of the complete termination, was to mark the time of the complete cessation of the indignation on the Jewish people.

An objection might be started to these views, that as the angel gives an account of the different monarchies, they must be included in the period of the twenty-three hundred days, and consequently those days must be years. But if we look carefully at the explanation of the angel, we shall find that the burden of it referred to the actions of the little horn—the events connected with the last end of the indignation. Besides, I conceive the description of the other monarchies to have been given simply as an introduction to the subject matter of the vision, viz: the movements of the little horn. To illustrate this. When the historian gives us the history of a king, he does not immediately commence with the events of his reign, but traces his descent, and then goes on to give an account of his acts. So in this chapter we have the persecuting kingdoms given; he is shown to have sprung out of one of the four divisions of the Grecian Empire, and then his acts are given at length. I was pleased to see that you had made an advancement towards the views of the literality of the days in Daniel's prophecies. In the April number, subject Prophetic Periods, No. 6, you conclude the twelve hundred and ninety, and thirteen hundred and thirty-five days, to be literal, but the term translated twenty-three hundred days, you say is different from that of the twelve hundred and ninety, and thirteen hundred and thirty-five days, and therefore, I suppose, consider them, in distinction from those last, to be years. But in Daniel 12: 11, it speaks of its being twelve hundred and ninety days from the time when the daily shall be taken away to set up the abomination that maketh desolate. In Daniel 8: 13 and 14, it speaks of the daily and transgression of desolation containing altogether twenty-three hundred days. These two dates and transgressions of desolation in the eighth and twelfth chapters, are evidently the same; and if your twenty-three hundred days are years, and twelve hundred and ninety days are days, you will have days cut off years, which spoils the harmony of prophetic dates. But if, as I believe them to be, the twenty-three hundred days are days, your twelve hundred and ninety days can commence somewhere in the duration of the first mentioned number, no violence is done to prophetic periods, and all is harmonious and intelligible. Another objection which presents itself to my view, is drawn from the twenty-sixth verse of the eighth chapter;

the vision is there said to be shut up for many days. Of course the twenty-three hundred days were not to commence until a very remote period.

The little horn in this chapter, I do not consider Papacy, but an anti-Christian power, yet to be manifested identical with the King in Dan. 11: 36, and the Russian Emperor (the great Gog) who shall last reign, I conceive to be the person indicated. The time, times and half of Daniel 7, are also yet future, harmonizing with the twelve hundred and sixty days during which the little horn of the eighth chapter is to be flourishing. The little horn (Papacy,) of the seventh chapter, makes war for twelve hundred and sixty days on the nominal Christian church, while the little horn or Russian Emperor of the eighth chapter, makes war for the same length of time on the nominal Jewish church; the two persecuting both the natural branches and the graft.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct., 1848.

LETTER FROM BR. MANSFIELD.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 9th, 1848.

BR. STORRS:—I find in your monthly paper much that interests me; especially in your articles relating to the question of man's condition in death, and the future state. When I first gave my attention to the advent doctrine in 1812, while in Cleveland with our departed brother Fitch, I fell in with your "Six Sermons;" and simultaneously with my investigation of the advent doctrine, I examined the subject matter of those discourses and became assured of the general truth of your positions. I have, it is true, found apparent obstacles in the way, but not more than are met in attempting a solution of the advent doctrine—the doctrine of sanctification—human rights, &c., &c. I have always endeavoured to maintain the truth upon the questions referred to, contained in those sermons; and have never felt that by so doing I violated any of my obligations to others, with whom I agreed on the great and absorbing theme of the second advent, who differed with me on the subjects of death and immortality. I feel now, as I have in time past, that the doctrine of the speedy personal coming of Jesus, is the sublime and thrilling theme of the heralds of Christ in this age of the world; but that all other truths should occupy their appropriate place in the arch of truth; assured that—although the keystone be in its place, the arch is imperfect while any truth is left out, and the fabric is in danger of falling. That the dead are unconscious—and the wicked are not immortal, I firmly believe, and therefore think the arch of truth incomplete without those views; and I am persuaded that the mass of advent believers entertain the same sentiments, though many do not.

I have never had occasion to change my views on the Jew question; but think the Millenarian scheme furnishes no satisfactory scriptural argument to sustain the idea of a mixed state in the millenium; and that no explanation has been given from scripture, as to the termination of this mixed state, nor of the process by which the mortals living during that period shall become immortal. Accept assurances of Christian love, and believe me

Truly, yours in hope,

THE MIND.

SECOND REPLY TO J. T. WALSH.

DEAR SIR—I wish to call your attention, and the attention of our readers, to a few points now settled.

1. You admit that it is not the brain that thinks. That none of the mental or moral powers are to be ascribed to it. That the "aggregate of powers" you call the mind, cannot be said to be powers of the brain,—that it would be ridiculous to say that the brain reasoned, hoped, feared, loved or hated.

2. Hence the destruction of the brain does not in itself destroy that which thinks, and puts forth mental power.

3. That mind is not a thinking, reasoning power. That these exercises are not the exercises of the mind, but they constitute the mind.

4. That these powers are to be referred to man as an organized being, and result from his organization, and are put forth in consequence of, and by virtue of the brain.

5. That there is no such essence, entity, or substance, as mind, to which we may justly ascribe mental or moral power, action, or affection.

And hence you must admit, and maintain, that thought is a necessary, mechanical result of an organized, living, physical machine, called man, and when the organization is disturbed or destroyed, thought, the result of organization, ceases, or is deranged. I hope I have not misunderstood you, and do not intend misrepresentation of your views.

The conclusion seems inevitable, to me, that thought is a mechanical result, and man an irresponsible machine, on the ground assumed by you in this discussion. Organization and cerebral motion produces thought, and if there is no mind presiding over this organized being, or machine, then man is no more free than the solar system; he moves on and thinks and purposes by reason of his organization, till the machine is out of repair, and then ceases to think, and is no more. I have been led into this inadvertently, and will here state, that one of the chief objections to the material view, is, that man is made an irresponsible machine and not a moral agent.

On the ground I maintain, the mind controls, by its free volitions, the movements of this organized body, in which it resides; and the senses are only windows through which it looks out of its prison upon the world of matter.

6. When you affirm that the mind cannot think without a brain, you put assertion in the place of proof. Do angels think by reason of a brain? Does God, whose image man is, think by reason of a brain? To say that man cannot manifest thought, and hold connexion with the outward world, when the senses are locked up, is saying very little indeed.

Most persons believe that God can commune with, and influence the human mind, without addressing any of the senses.

Facts show that there can be perceptions without the use of eyes. With the eyes closely bandaged, in a dark room, persons have been known to read a book they never saw, and tell the time of day by a watch.

It is now perfectly settled, that what are termed idiots can be educated. A school is soon to be started in Massachusetts; a teacher has been selected, and is now abroad preparing himself for his task.

I have before observed, that mental power continues to increase long after the whole physical organization has reached maturity.

What are we to understand by the term man, as used in your articles, and to whom you ascribe all mental and moral phenomena. What is that man that thinks? Not any part of his physical system. Is it intended to embrace simply the whole physical frame? I see with my eye, hear with my ear. Now what is it that sees and hears? Not the eye nor ear, any more than the telescope or trumpet.

By a figure of speech, we say that the eye sees, the ear hears, the hand writes, but clearly they are only agents. Agents of what? Of the man; which being interpreted means—the other parts of the physical organization: that is, the organized man destitute of any property but matter, having nothing but a body, sees out of the eye, one part becoming the servant to all the others, and changing work, to to keep the bargain even.

Thus "the eye cannot say to the foot I have no need of thee," for when this organized being wishes to change localities, he uses his feet—when he wishes to speak, he uses his tongue, and so on: thus in turn each is the servant of the whole; a very important lesson to organized society is thus wrought out.

Man's identity resides not in his ever changing body, but in the mind. Paul says, he knew a man caught up to the third heavens—but whether in the body, or out of the body he did not know. Again, in another place, he speaks of being absent from the body, and present with the Lord, as co-existing facts. Clearly, the organized body is not the man, but something that can leave the body—be out of the body.

I have asserted, and again repeat, that according to your views it is the physical man that is born again, for this good reason, that man is wholly phy-

sed. You think that my position approaches the absurd, because you understand me to say that it is the mind that undergoes the change called the new birth. This would make the Lord say: "that except a mind be born again, it cannot see the Kingdom of God." Again, "except a mind be born of water and spirit, it cannot enter into the Kingdom of God."

"A mind born of water! What an idea!! So Mr. B's mind has been born again, but Mr. B. himself has not!"

Now, as you ridicule the idea of the mind being born again, it follows, of course, that you believe the body undergoes this change. You make this mistake in respectable company, for Nicodemus had the same opinion.

I grant, at once, that this change of mind, produces a new application and use of the physical organs; but I have yet to learn, that the change is not wholly a change of mind, "making a new heart and spirit," and in consequence of the control of the mind over the whole man, "the body is presented," &c.

But what is this. I am again tempted to ask, that presents the body? Not the mind. You reply at once, the man. But on your theory the body is the man, the whole of man—and hence man, the body, is to present the body "a living sacrifice."

But we need have no controversy as to what it is that is born again, for much as you ridicule the idea, your ridicule hits not me but the Bible.

Turn to John, 3d chapter, 3d and 6th verses—Nicodemus is astonished to hear it said that a man must be born again. Christ replies and adds, "that which is born of the spirit is spirit." A spirit born again! A spirit born of water and spirit! What an idea!! But hold, these are the words of Christ, and here he tells us what he means by man, that must be born again.

I have no desire to burden the columns of your paper with long articles, and therefore omit many things. The challenge contained in your last, is accepted, in so far as to be perfectly willing to rest the whole question—Does the soul—mind—outlive the body—upon that text; but I cannot confine myself to that text on the main question. Now to the text.

1. Observe that "body and soul," are in opposition to each other, and both substantives.

2. It is declared, that while men can kill the "body," they cannot kill the "soul," which is not true if the soul dies when the body dies.

3. It is declared that God can destroy both in hell, or as Luke says, "hath power to cast into hell after death."

We must understand by hell a place, and state of punishment after death. Now, on your interpretation, that the body means the present life, and the soul the future life, the text would read—"Fear not them that kill the present life, but fear him, who after he hath killed, (the present life) hath power to destroy both the present and the future life in hell. Thus the present life is destroyed twice."

If this is your logic, it is not mine. I have only to say in conclusion, that leaving you to manage your side of the controversy as you please, I shall do the same on my part, always intending to be respectful in language.

Respectfully
WM. H. BREWSTER.

Matt. 24: 20. Luke 12: 5.

RESPONSE TO MR. BREWSTER.

DEAR SIR—In your "points now settled" you make the same incorrect "inferences," which you made in all your previous articles. I now despair of any thing but misrepresentation on this subject, though, I doubt not, it is unintentional on your part. The "points" which you regard as "settled," are far from being so in my estimation; one or two of them, however, are not so objectional as the others. Imitating your example, I will also state certain "points" which I consider "settled" in previous articles, and "post up" the controversy to the present time.

1. Man thinks, reasons, reflects, judges, compares, loves, fears, hopes, venerates and adores by means of his brain. The brain is the seat of those organs, whose functions are above indicated.

This meets your first "point."
2. "The mental and moral powers," while they are attributes of the MAN, "are to be ascribed to" the brain—they being functions of that instrument. "That the aggregate of powers," I "call the mind," are "powers" of the MAN, and functions of the brain; and that it would be ridiculous to say the brain reasons, hopes, fears, loves or hates," seeing that THESE, while they are functions of that organ, are in reality attributes of the MAN—organized and living, and not of his brain abstractly or when dissected out.—"Hence the destruction of the brain does" "in itself destroy that which thinks, and puts forth mental power," because the "destruction" of the brain—the instrument of thought—involves the destruction of the THINKER—MAN.

This meets your second "point."

3. Your third "point," while it is not expressed in my language, may pass current without further notice.

4. Your fourth "settled point" is an admitted refutation of your first, and part of the second "point." That these powers are to be referred to man as an organized being, and result from his organization, and are put forth in consequence of, and by virtue of the brain. Of course, then, the "destruction" of the brain, is the "destruction" of that "which thinks!"

So much for your fourth "point."

5. Your fifth "point," "that there is no such essence, entity, or substance, as mind, to which we may justly ascribe mental or moral power, action or affection," must be received with a qualification. In relation to Man it is true; and it may be true of angels, and of Christ; but we do not affirm it of "Him who dwells in light inaccessible." I apprehend that there is much error in the world, in relation to spiritual bodies; and I cannot conceive of any being thinking without an instrument of some sort, but Him who is uncreated, unorganized, and self-existent!

Thus far we have "posted up" this controversy. The inference you draw from the "settled points" is utterly at variance with the premises. I neither "admit" nor "maintain," "that thought is a necessary, mechanical result of an organized, living, physical machine, called man." "Moral and mental" functions cannot be ascribed to "mechanical" laws. Electro-magnetism, modified by the laws of the living organism, of which the brain may be styled the "battery," and the nerves the "conductors," contains the principles by which this question is solved. There is not a single faculty of man, moral, mental, or animal, which cannot be made to manifest its function, with increased power, by means of electro-magnetism! This has been done a thousand times! I have both witnessed and performed it! MAGNETIC VIBRATION, PRODUCING "CEREBRAL MOTION" EXPLAINS IT.

Will Mr. Brewster tell us how these effects are produced, if the brain be not the seat of these functions? If they be attributes of the "immortal soul," why are they influenced by magnetism? Is immortality governed by magnetic laws?

As it respects "human responsibility," it is abundantly established by what you are pleased to call "the material view." The brain, as the sensorium of man, is made up of various organs, each organ possessing a distinct function. These functions are moral, mental, and animal. The moral and mental should govern the animal. Man, possessing the power of will, is "responsible" for the right use of all these faculties. They have a legitimate, and an illegitimate use. They are to be used, but not abused. Every moral law in the Bible is directed against their abuse. As this is your principal objection, I will enlarge upon it. Man possesses an organ—cerebral organ, I mean,—which prompts him to adore. Combining its influence with his will, he determines to worship something. If he is not enlightened, he will worship idols; but if the light of Truth has illuminated his understanding, he will respect men and "worship God," which is its legitimate function. Hence its unlawful exercise is forbidden—"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

This illustration is applicable to every animal and moral faculty of man, so that he is, in the fullest sense, a "responsible agent." He is responsible for the right use of all the powers, with which God has endowed him. But if man has an "immortal soul," or if his mind be a distinct "essence," "entity" or "substance," capable of life, consciousness and intelligence, when separate from the body; then this "soul" or "essence," which you call the mind, is alone "responsible," and the man, as such, has no "responsibility." If a man were to strike you, or slander your character, would you hold his "immortal" part "responsible," or the man himself? Am I to understand that your "immortal mind" is "responsible," for what you write, and that the man—Mr. Brewster—has no "responsibility" at all? Why hang a man, for the sins of his "immortal soul?" This is punishing the innocent for the guilty! Either let a man go free, or punish the real offender. But, sir, so sure as God is just, he, as well as men, will hold the MAN, and not his body, his mind, or his "immortal soul," "responsible" for his evil deeds! The Man, THE WHOLE MAN, AND NOTHING BUT THE MAN, is responsible before God!

You say that "on the ground" you "maintain," the mind controls, by its free volitions, the movements of this organized body, in which it resides: and the senses are only windows through which it looks out of its prison upon the world of matter." Here, for the first time, you have given us a synopsis of your theory! Let me analyze it:

1. "The mind controls, by its volitions, the movements of this organized body."

2. It "resides" in the body, as in a "prison."
3. "The senses are only windows, through which it looks out upon the world of matter."

According to what you "maintain," then, the "immortal mind" only, has "free volitions;" and this "mind" "controls" the "movements of this organized body." Immortality, then, "controls the movements" of that which is mortal. Why is it, Mr. Brewster, that these "movements" are so irregular, eccentric, defective, deranged and insane? "God only hath immortality," and he only bestows it upon his creatures. He is the fountain of this attribute in angels, and will be its source in men. But it "resides" in the body. Where is its location?—This was asked in my last article, but you gave no answer. Does it "reside" in the brain? If so, what is it? What is it like? Again, it is in "prison!"—Pythagorianism to perfection! Immortality in "prison"—looking through windows upon the world of matter! But suppose all these "windows," the "senses," are closed, then it cannot see out "upon the world of matter." All is blind, all darkness, all "confusion worse confounded!" Again, you say, "when" I "affirm that the mind cannot think without a brain," I "put assertion in the place of proof." Now, I have not said that "the mind cannot think without a brain," but I have said that man cannot, the proofs of which have been given abundantly in previous articles,—proofs which you have failed to invalidate. When you have answered the arguments already submitted, it will be time enough to advance others.

You ask—"Do angels think by reason of a brain?" I answer angels are not the subject of discussion; but so far as we can judge from analogy, and from what is revealed concerning them, they certainly think by means of some instrument. They have an immortal and incorruptible organization, but this does not preclude the possession of an organ of thought. But, be this as it may, it has nothing to do with the question before us.

Again, you ask, "Does God, whose image man is, think by means of a brain?" I have already answered this question, but I repeat, that God is unorganized, uncreated and self-existent; and the laws of thought, which govern mortal man, are not applicable to the uncreated God. Man was created in the image of the Elohem—the holy ones—the angels; and all we know of them, as taught in the scriptures, confirms the account given by Moses.

Once more, you observe, that, "To say that man cannot manifest thought, and hold connection with the outward world, when the senses are locked up, is to say very little indeed."

Ah! a while since you told us that the "mind looked out upon the world of matter, through the senses—the windows" of the soul; but now you tell us the mind may "hold connection with the outward world, when" these "windows"—the "senses are locked up!" Do you mean the "five senses," or the moral and mental which are within the brain? "Most persons," you say, "believe God can commune with, and influence the human mind without addressing any of the senses." If you mean the five external "senses," I grant it is true; but if you mean the moral and intellectual, I deny it.

Facts show that there can be perceptions without the use of eyes. With the eyes closely bandaged, in a dark room, persons have been known to read a book they never saw, and tell the time of day by a watch. True; but this does not favor your views of the subject. Cataleptic patients can do this; so can magnetic subjects. In the first case, it is a diseased state of the nervous system; in the latter, it is superinduced by magnetic influence. The brain is magnetic, electric and phos-

pyretic. These make it luminous. When the magnetism of the atmosphere and the brain are in equilibrium, the electro-magnetic light, "the eyes being closed," passes through the cranium, excite the optic nerve to vibration, and thus the person can see through a magnetic medium. Destroy the optic nerve, however, and you destroy all sight. We now come to a most astounding development! Here it is. "It is now perfectly settled, that what are termed idiots, can be educated. A school is soon to be started in Massachusetts, a teacher has been selected, and is now abroad preparing himself for his task."

Well, reader, I thought I had investigated this subject; that I had learned something concerning the constitution of man; but, really, if Mr. Brewster be right, I am in worse than Egyptian darkness!

"Idiots to be educated!" Then they will be "idiots" no longer! Let the earth rejoice! Let the inhabitants of the earth shout! and the heavens echo back the sound, for the world is now to be rid of all "idiots!" I would smile, but the subject is too grave!

But, seriously, I regard the scheme as utopian and "idiotic." You might as well try to teach a monkey to be serious, a horse to adore, or an ass to pray, as to teach a congenital "idiot." I speak not of those who are partial "idiots," but of those who are completely so. Those who are merely "idiotic," may be educated, in a limited sense, to the extent of their educability. But congenital "idiots" are hopelessly doomed to ignorance. When a man is educated, his moral and mental powers are brought out, trained and properly directed. Before you can educate a man, he must possess powers to be educated. The "idiot" has them not, and education cannot create them. Before you can educate an "idiot" you must re-organize him physically. No system of training can do this.

"A school is soon to be started." And a "teacher is now abroad preparing himself for his task!" A mighty "task" it is! He may go "abroad;" he may travel all over Europe, and the world; he may visit those ancient seats of learning in Greece, Rome, and Egypt; he may consult the eastern magi, astrologers, soothsayers and diviners; he may wade through the ponderous volumes of antiquity, and consult the wisdom of all ages, and even then he will not be qualified for his "task."

You ask, "what are we to understand by the term man, as used in your articles?" I thought I had been sufficiently explicit, but as you seem not to understand me, I will, for the last time, in this discussion, define man. Man is an organized being; composed of bones, muscles, tendons, nerves, veins, arteries, brain, &c., &c. He is made up of body, limbs, abdominal and thoracic viscera. All these are chemically organized. The organization being complete, it is put in motion, and kept in motion by electro-magnetism. Life is thus developed. This electro-magnetism is modified by a vital chemical action, and is then termed "nervo-vital fluid." The brain is its "battery," the nerves its "conductors." The brain is a congeries of organs. They manifest animal, moral, and mental functions. "The life of the flesh," which is electro-magnetic, "is in the blood." Man breathes electricity, light, oxygen, &c., &c. All these elements, physically, electrically, magnetically and chemically combined, by a process known only to God, he calls man. "The first man was of the earth—earthly"—animal. This is all I can say now on this point; it would take a volume to elaborate it.

But you ask, "What is that man that thinks?" I have answered this question several times; why put it again? Time and space are too precious for such repetitions.

In the remainder of your philosophical argument there is nothing new. You go over the same ground again and again. 'Tis true you vary the questions—you change your language, but they are the same still. Like one in a "tread-mill," when you continue to step without advancing. When you present a new argument, I will notice it; but until you do, I must be excused from travelling over the same ground every month.

With these remarks, I leave the philosophical part of this subject, to attend to your scriptural allusions.

Paul teaches a lesson which you seem not to have learned, although you quote him. In 1 Cor. xii. he says: "For the body," (the man) "is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body." Thus "God hath tempered the body together." The man is made up of the body and its members, as I have before explained. There is no "schism" in it, but it is a perfect whole. It is not "one member," but many. All the parts of the body and man are perfectly adapted to each other. I thank you for referring to this illustration of the Apostle. It is just the thing.

"Man's identity," you say, "resides not in his ever-changing body, but in the mind." If this be so, how is it that personal "identity" is deranged? "Identity resides in the mind," and that "mind" is "immortal;" how then does it become destroyed? Is an "immortal mind" susceptible of any sort of derangement? But the "body" is no more "changing" than the mind. What in common parlance we call the mind, is as "ever-changing" as the "body." "Identity," then, according to your theory, cannot "reside in the mind." The truth is, there is a cerebral organ which gives rise to personal "identity," and supplies the l of consciousness. This can, and sometimes does become diseased and deranged, producing double consciousness, &c.

Your allusion to Paul's vision is too slight and vague, for me to notice it at present. When you make it the basis of a regular argument, I will give it a full reply.

Your assertions concerning the new birth, may pass for what they are worth. He must be extremely ignorant of the truth, who does not know that the new birth is a moral or spiritual change. The Lord Jesus taught this in the very quotation which you have used to sustain your theory. "That which is born of spirit, is spirit," or spiritual; "not fleshly or carnal. Jesus did not say, "that which is born of the spirit," is the human spirit, mind, or soul; but spiritual. You might as well say that that which is "born of God," is God, as to affirm what you have, concerning being born of the spirit. You again repeat the misrepresentation of a "change in the body," when a "man is born again." This you have done so often, while I have as often refuted it, that I shall not pay further attention to it, other than to observe, that you, yourself, are "in respectable company" in misunderstanding, like Nicodemus, the nature and process of the new birth.

In your next paragraph you grant me that, which in the one just noticed you deny me—that is the moral change in the whole man, when he is "born again."

But passing over all minor points, I come now to the text upon which I proposed to rest this controversy. You say my "challenge" is accepted, but you are unwilling to rest the "main question" on that text. Well, sir, let it be as you will. But to the text itself. Matt. x. 28: "And fear not them who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

The parallel of this is found in Luke xii. 4, 5. "And I say to you, my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: Fear him, who after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say to you, fear him."

1. "And fear not them who kill the body." The word "kill," in this sentence, in the original, signifies to "murder," to put to death with an evil purpose. "But are not able to kill the soul." In this sentence it signifies to "destroy," "to bring to naught."

"But rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." The word "destroy," in this sentence, signifies to "dismiss from life," to bring to naught." Is it not evident, then, that the Lord exhorted his disciples not to fear those who merely had the power to commit "murder," or to "kill the body," but had not power to "dismiss from life," or "to bring to naught," in the sense of precluding the possibility of living again?

2. This is clear from the fact, that he commands them "rather to fear him," who not only had the power of life and death here, but who also had power to "destroy," "dismiss from life," or "bring to naught," both soul and body in gehenna."

This view is confirmed by the passage from Luke, where the Lord says: "Fear not them that kill" or "murder" the body, BUT AFTER THAT HAVE NO MORE THAT THEY CAN DO." They cannot preclude the resurrection to eternal life; "for our life is hid with Christ in God."

I could say much on this topic, but must wait another month, as this article is already too long.

In conclusion, I would suggest the propriety of narrowing down this discussion to a few prominent points, in order to save time and space.

With much respect, I am yours,
J. T. WALSH.

"PRIDE OF OPINION."

We clip the following excellent sentiments from the editorial department of the "True Wesleyan," of New York city, a paper we are as well pleased with as with any of our exchanges, though we differ from it on many points.

"Men are often too proud to confess their errors or to change when they are convinced that they are wrong. There is nothing more absurd than man's pride of opinion. For men to persist in an error, after they are convinced, lest, by giving it up, they should show themselves to have been mistaken, is madness. There is one thought that should humble this pride of opinion. It is this: all men have been and still are more or less mistaken in many important matters. To this we should add the fact that wherein we are in error, if we do not correct ourselves, others will be sure to correct us, as human society progresses towards its higher destiny. When we look at ourselves as individuals, we see that we have arrived at our present position by a succession of changes, and yet we are ashamed to change. The whole path of life, from the cradle to the grave, is strewn with cast off ideas and opinions. We have taken up an idea and brought it on with us for a time, and cherished it as truth, but after bringing it for some time, we threw it down and picked up another, or picked up two in place of it, for most men increase their ideas. These were retained for a time and then cast off for others, and in this way we have arrived at our present positions, changing at every step, and yet all the time ashamed to change, lest the world should know that we had been mistaken. The same is true of society in general, for the changes of individuals effect changes in society, and all the changes of society are but the changes of individuals that compose society. The present state of the arts and sciences has been arrived at by a succession of changes. The principles of the several sciences which have been settled by one generation, have been rejected and exploded by the next, and yet men are proud of their opinions. All improvement involves change, and yet men are ashamed to change. If men will change from bad to good, and from good to better, the more rapid their changes, the better will it be for themselves and the world."

REPLY TO C. B. HOTCHKISS.

"QUERIES ON BAPTISM."

"QUES. 1." It is admitted by learned pedobaptists that the Greek word imports immersion. See G. Campbell's dissertation on the word. He admits that it ought to have been so translated. John could not well immerse by sprinkling. Surely he need not have gone to Enon "because there was much water there," if he only wanted to wet "a bunch of hyssop." The sprinkling "described by Paul, Heb. 9: 19, is a sprinkling of blood, typical of the atoning blood of our blessed Lord. Our immersion in water is an appropriate emblem of our burial with Christ and rising with him to newness of life. See Col. 2: 12. "Buried with him in baptism," &c.

"QUES. 2. John not only preached repentance, but the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Mark prefaces his record of John's ministry with the words, 'The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ,' Mark 1: 1. Paul confirms the same, Acts 19: 4. 'John verily baptised with the baptism of repentance, saving unto the people that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is on Christ Jesus.' Behold (said John) the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world!" I wish that all modern preachers preached the Gospel as as John. Surely the baptism of Christ and his apostles, John 3: 22, was connected with the preaching of "the Gospel of the kingdom."

"Ques. 3." It will not only do to read it (baptizo) were immersed," but the fulfilment of the prediction, Acts 2: 2 to 4, requires it. When they were baptised with or in the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, they were immersed in the holy element, for "it filled all the house where they were sitting." "In a literal fire" they were neither immersed or sprinkled. The prophet is not to be so understood.

"Ques. 4." Peter's hearers in the house of Cornelius were indeed baptised with or in the Holy Ghost. I see no objection to our friend's supposition, that this was "the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost." But the record of this whole case is fatal to his sentiments; giving in fact a clear affirmative to his question, "Is there any other baptism left for the christian dispensation but the baptism of the fire and of the Holy Ghost?" After they were baptised with the Holy Ghost, Peter said "can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptised, which have received the Holy Ghost, as well as ye?" And he commanded them to be baptised in the name of the Lord." Acts 10: 44-48. To suppose then that the baptism of the Holy Spirit supercedes the ordinance of immersion in water under the christian dispensation, is to "be wise above what is written" by the Spirit of Truth.

"Ques. 5." Baptism is not "the antitype" of Moses' sprinkling with blood. The blood of Jesus is the antitype of this. John never "sprinkled all the people." He did not baptize them. He baptised (i. e. immersed) them. As the sound like a mighty wind and the cloven tongues fell on the people on the day of Pentecost when they were baptised with or in the Holy Ghost, it is proper to say of Peter's hearers, Acts 10, that when the Holy Ghost "fell on them," they were baptised in the same.

"Ques. 6." I agree with our friend on this question and think that John 3: 5, may be understood in a sense different from literal water.

"Ques. 7." To suppose that the new birth insisted upon by our beloved Savior, refers to the time of our entering the kingdom at his second appearing, is to suppose that we are not the children of God until that period. We are not his children until we are begotten and born of him. John writes of those who received Christ, when on earth, as persons who were then born of God. John 1: 13. This phrase is not used in reference to our entering into the joy of our Lord at his glorious appearing.

"Ques. 8." With all due respect for the judgment of my friend, I really think the "probability" of his being mistaken, is quite as "strong," as "it is so," so should be so, who were so inspired by the Holy Spirit to teach those things, and only those things which Christ commanded them, that they could say, "He that knoweth God heareth us." John 1: 16. In respect to circumcision, (as touching the Gentiles, which bebove,) we (said James) have written and concluded that they observe no circumcision." &c. Acts 21: 25. In respect to the Sabbath, there was no command for them to observe at any particular time. The only case we can find of any apostle practising it, is Paul's circumcision of Timothy whose mother was a Jewess. He says "circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing." He taught those who depended on it, that Christ would profit them nothing.

"Ques. 9." Whether there is, or is not "salvation without immersion," it was "benevolent in Paul to thank God that he had baptised but two or three" of the Corinthians, so long as they were glorying in men, and saying "I am of Paul and I of Apollos." Paul did not thank God that he had baptised no more of that particular church, because baptism was not a duty, or because it is unimportant, but "lest any should say that (he) had baptised in his own name." 1 Cor. 1: 15. He preferred the honor of his divine Master to his own. By the declaration "for Christ sent me not to baptise, but to preach the gospel," we must understand that the announcement of the glad tidings of salvation to a dying world, was the principal and great object of his mission. If he had no commission from Christ to baptize he could not have baptised at all; for that only which he "received from the Lord Jesus," he taught. See 1 Cor. 11: 23, Matt. 28: 19, 20.

"Ques. 10." The true answer to this question is found in the practice of the apostles. This practice proves that Matt. 28: 19 means immersion in water, which (as is evident from Acts 10: 44-48), was not superceded by the baptism of the Holy Ghost. See also Acts 8: 36, 38. Acts 2: 38. This could not be the baptism of the Holy Ghost for this was promised them as a subsequent favor. Acts 8: 15 to 17 proves the same. The Samaritans were not baptised with the Holy Ghost, by the laying on of the apostle's hands until some time after they were immersed in water by Philip.

Paul's act in Acts 19: 6 is not explanatory of the baptism mentioned in the 5th verse, but a subsequent act. Strictly speaking, neither the baptism of water nor the baptism of the Holy Ghost (in the scriptural sense of that phrase,) can save us. The bestowment of miraculous gifts, and not the conversion of the soul to God, is the true import of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The apostles were converted long before the day of Pentecost. When they were then baptised with the Holy Ghost, they were furnished with miraculous gifts "and spake with other tongues." Acts 10: 44, 46, confirms this. It was water baptism which emblematically washed away Paul's sins. Acts 22: 16.

HENRY GREW.

As the foregoing article will probably close, for the present, the discussion on the subject of baptism, we take the liberty to dissent entirely from Br. Grew's position that the baptism "with the Holy Spirit" was being "immersed in the holy element;" for, if the house was "filled" with it, it was filled by the spirit being "poured out, or shed forth" upon them, and not by their being "immersed in" it. We wish not to protract the discussion, and therefore say no more at present.—Ed. Ex.

"SAINTS REIGN IN THE AIR."

In the Examiner of September, we gave a brief communication from Dr. Smith, of Hallowell, Me. on the above subject, which the reader is requested to look at again, page 142. We appended "a single remark" by way of dissent in the following language:

"We do not see how the devil and his hosts, by going 'up on the breadth of the earth,' are to compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; which are 'in the air;' nor how the saints are to 'reign with Christ a thousand years in the air' with nothing to reign over."

To this Br. Smith has replied at some length. We intended to insert his reply in the last Examiner, but it was crowded out; and, as we are hard pressed for room still, he will excuse us for giving only that part of his article which is a direct reply to our objections. Br. Smith, after enlarging on his previous article, and speaking of the wicked dead being raised out of this earth, (in opposition to the new earth, as Mr. Miller's theory maintains,) at the close of the Millennium, says:

The New Jerusalem is in the air, and in plain sight. This must be, else every eye could not see him, (Jesus) and they also which have pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth could not wail because of him. Also they are to see those that have come from the east, west, north, and south, in the kingdom with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and they themselves thrust out. Hence you see the saints must be in the air with Christ, and the whole host of the wicked must be raised from the dead in order to see their great loss, and know their final doom. Satan will now deceive them—then they compass the camp of the saints about. See Webster's Dictionary, where the sixth definition of the verb "compass" is, "to purpose—to intend—to imagine—to plot—to contrive." as we may say, to go about to perform in mind only. Thus you see, that to compass, is to plot, plan, contrive, imagine, &c. Thus they will do while the saints are in the air.

Paul says we are compassed about with such a cloud of witnesses. Hence, to compass about, denotes an array of evidence. Webster says, when this is the meaning, "it is in mind only." Thus it will be with this miserable company for the word says: "Fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." The heavens and the earth which are now, are reserved for this very purpose. Peter tells us "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works therein shall be burnt up." This, I believe, as an honest man, will be the literal "lake of fire and brimstone," and will be the hell of the Bible into which "the wicked will be turned with all the nations that forget God." "The ungodly and the sinner will be rewarded in the earth." Ps. 11: 31. And in this pool of liquid fire the devil and all wicked men and women will be "burnt up, root and branch," so that there will be no wicked man, woman or devil in the universe of God. See Psa. 37: 9, 10, 20, 34, 38; also, 104: 35; Prov. 2: 22, and 11: 31, Isaiah 1: 28, and a host of others.

But we according to his promise look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. After the above scene of the resurrection of the saints, the melting of the earth, the destruction of the devil and the wicked passed upon John's mind, in vision, he says he saw the New Jerusalem while it was coming down, and after it was down, and the glory connected with the seed of Abraham, and David's royal sons entering the Kingdom, under the whole heavens in which they will reign "for ever and ever," and not merely for a thousand years, as some suppose; that time will be better, in the past; occupying the period while they reigned with Christ in the air.

Hence you see, the heavens will retain Jesus till the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the age began—till all things are subdued under him—his enemies destroyed and made his footstool, and he takes the kingdom under the whole heaven.

"Who will they reign over?" Ans.—the Bible does not say they will reign over any one; but, "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

I expect that when "the Lord shall take to himself his great power and shall reign," they will reign with him. After the saints were raised and were heard praising God in heaven, Rev. xix. 1, &c. they gave glory to God "for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth," verse 14th. We might infer that they reigned with him who was styled "the King of kings and Lord of lords." In the Psalms it is written that "the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning;" again, "he shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet." Paul says, "know ye not that the saints shall judge the world," (not decide the cases.) John says, "he that overcometh and keepeth my word unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." From the above we believe that this reigning with Christ must be after his saints meet him in the air, and before he descends in the New Jerusalem with all his saints, to take possession of the redeemed earth which he purchased by his death and sufferings: see Eph. 1: 14.

May our Heavenly Father by his word, and the influences of the Holy Spirit, lead us all into the truth as it is in Jesus.

To "reign with Christ" is to reign over something. To talk of reigning with nothing in subjection is beyond our conception. The Queen of England and her Lords reigning without a subject would seem a contradiction. But Br. Smith has a right to his views; others must judge of their correctness.—Ed. Ex.

A CONTEMPLATED GREAT WORK ON THE MILLENNIUM.

THE AGE TO COME.—It is proposed to publish, if sufficient encouragement is offered, a work of 600 pages, entitled THE AGE TO COME.

It will present a full and entire History of all Theories touching the great question of the predicted MILLENNIUM, both Ancient and Modern. It will seek to show what is true, and what is false, in these Theories. This will constitute Part First of the Work. These are the leading Theories:

1. MILLENNARIAN THEORY.—Ancient View.
2. LIGHTFOOT'S THEORY.—Revived by Bush.
3. THE FIFTH-MONARCHY THEORY.—An English Heresy.
4. MILLERISM.—History, Errors, Facts.
5. SOCIALISM.—Features, Claims, Principles.

6. METHODIST.—The Popular View. PART SECOND of the Work will contain an Exposition of the features of The Age to Come, as they appear presented in the Scriptures.

The book will be of the size, and general style, of Dooley's History of Romanism. It is intended to be a Work for the Age—a work for the Clergyman, the Theological Student, and the Common Christian.—PRICE TWO DOLLARS.

BY A CLERGYMAN.

Who has devoted much time to the subject.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, DEC., 1848.

ARE THE WICKED IMMORTAL?

"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Bible.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—We have never supposed that we could give that variety in a monthly issue which could be given in a weekly paper. Our object has been mainly that of presenting the immortality question, and the topics naturally growing out of it. If the support would warrant it, and our friends desired it, gradually advance to a semi-monthly or weekly. But while we publish only monthly, and at the low price that we charge for the Examiner, we know our readers will be likely to be subscribers to some weekly paper which will afford us a variety on the ecclesiastical religious topics. We will gladly furnish them such matter did our limits admit. If our friends wish us to publish weekly, and devote one-half, or more, of the Examiner to general religious topics, and passing events, we will do so when fifteen hundred shall please themselves to send us two dollars each per year. A religious paper issued weekly ought to occupy all the time of, at least, one Editor so closely that he could scarcely be expected to be engaged in any other calling; and he must therefore look to the subscribers to sustain him in a pecuniary view. We are of opinion, however, that our present course is, on the whole, the best; that is, to let our readers look to these weekly papers they have been in the habit of sustaining for general matters, and let us devote our investigations to which, it seems to us, we have been specially called.

THE LAST NUMBER.—According to previous notice, this number is the last to all subscribers who do not pay before our "terms" of "payment always in advance." We feel very sorry to part with any who have been our patrons heretofore. A few have been coming who have had the Examiner sent to them from the commencement of the New Series: a few who have paid us nothing who have taken it for the commencement of the present volume. In both cases, however, in both cases, is small, and we can only begive them all, and take our leave.

of them with none other than the kindest wishes for their present and eternal welfare. Those who have paid for the Examiner up to the present time, we hope have felt themselves benefited sufficiently to determine to continue. From all such, and as many more as are minded to become our patrons, we shall be glad to hear before our January issue. Unless we do hear from them, or find them credited beyond this number, we shall take it as an expression of their wish to discontinue the Examiner. It will be painful to blot out any name from our books; but we wish not to send the Examiner to any who do not value it worth fifty cents per year, and we have no means of knowing that they do thus value it unless they send us that amount. We must treat all alike in this matter. Let none, then, think we slight them if we do not send them another number. The reason will be, we do not find them credited for 1849. If, however, any should not receive it who know they have sent us payment in advance, beyond the present number, if they will inform us when they sent, and how much, we shall take pleasure in sending the paper, even if we find that the money never reached us. In any mistake, of this kind, the information may be sent at our expense. We earnestly solicit all to continue their subscriptions, and send, at least, one new subscriber each. We will do the very best we can to make our paper interesting and instructive.

THE SERMON ON "Profit and Loss," in this number of the Examiner, we hope, will not merely be read, but studied. We do not agree with every expression it contains, but we have received much "profit" from the study of it. We have read it some half dozen times since we received it, and shall not fail to read it again; and we must say, our interest in it increases the more we examine it. May the Lord make it a blessing to all who read it.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.—By H. H. DOBNEY.—In the list of works sent us by Dr. Lees, Leeds, England, is that of the "Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," by H. H. Dobney." This work we had heard of before we received Dr. Lees' communication, and had sent to England for it. It was the only one in his list we had any knowledge of prior to his favor.

The work of Dobney we have received, since the last Examiner was issued, and find it exceedingly interesting and instructive. It is a 12mo. of 278 pages, in "two parts." The first part is divided into four chapters, in which the author takes up the Reasons for Discussing the Subject—the Relation God sustains to Man—the True Idea of Sin—the Moral System—Excellency of Law—Propriety of Punishment—Punishment Inevitable—Punishment not Corrective but Penal, &c. This occupies about seventy pages.

In the second part he takes up the question of the nature and character of the punishment; which is handled in a very kind and conciliatory spirit, but still in a manner that is calculated, all but irresistibly, to carry the mind to the conclusion that the popular notion is an error, and that the wicked will be "miserably destroyed;" and "be as though they had not been." This part of the subject is treated of in eight chapters of over 200 pages. We sincerely wish the whole book could be reprinted, and circulated over the United States. Had we the funds we would do it ourselves; but we have them not, and so fear we shall have to content ourselves by giving portions of it in the Examiner. Reprinted it should sell for about seventy-five cents. The cost of the copy we have caused to be imported from London has been one dollar and seventy cents.

Dobney, we believe, is a Baptist minister, though no statement of his ecclesiastical relation is given in the book. Those who wish to see large extracts from the work will be gratified if they subscribe for the Examiner for 1849.

We will cause the work to be reprinted if one thousand copies are ordered within six months, and the money pledged to be forwarded when the work is ready for delivery; and to all who buy to sell again, 33 per cent discount will be made.

P. S.—Since writing the above, we have loaned the book to a friend, who, having read it, pledges to take fifty dollars in the stock necessary to republish it. The probable amount necessary to publish the first thousand copies will be $500. Any amount pledged shall be refunded in the books at cost.

PROSPECTUS.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY;

Or, Hymns, Psalms, and Songs, suitable to the worship of God and the proclamation of his truth.

By J. T. WALSH.

We propose publishing a cheap edition of Hymns, &c., free from the errors which obtain so extensively in every Hymn Book extant. The work will be suited to the Christian worship, and adapted to the faith of a people expecting the Messiah, and the establishment of his kingdom. In a word, it will melodiously set forth the views advocated in the Bible Examiner and other periodicals devoted to the same objects. The work will be published so soon as the author can do it with safety to himself. Any person feeling a disposition to aid in the enterprise, can do so by forwarding their contributions to Br. STORRS.

T. W.

It will be seen by the foregoing that Br. Walsh intends to furnish a "Hymn Book" such as many of us have felt is much needed. We rejoice that he has made up his mind to undertake it, and hope he may be abundantly sustained in that labor. If any of our friends have good hymns, suitable to such a work, will they favour the object by sending them to our office? And do not forget to let us know at once your wants in regard to such a hymn book, and what you will do to aid in its issue.

BIBLE ADVOCATE.—The apology our brother of the Advocate has given us for the "tone of" his "reply" to our article on Zech. 14th is perfectly satisfactory. On our part we are glad to correct the "sad mistake" we made, in saying the present editor of that paper "had not copied an article from the Examiner." Our brother says:

"If you will turn to volume IV, number 8, page 62, you will find two articles selected from the Examiner, and duly credited. Also, same volume, number 15, first page, you will find a very lengthy article, duly credited; and we were thankful for the opportunity of making each and all these selections."

We are truly glad, brother, to receive this information; and by our "mistake" we did you injustice, for which we are sorry: we thought these articles were selected by Dr. Crary, in the absence of the editor: we are glad to find it otherwise, and trust you will forgive us the error.

We certainly "intended no wrong" in any of our remarks; but we did think there seemed to be an air of positiveness in the articles of our "exchange" which needed some reproof; we regret if we were not as "courteous" as the gospel requires in giving it, and will try to do better in future.

EXAMINER FOR 1848.—The volume is now completed. Any wishing to avail themselves of all the numbers, can have them at the subscription price, if they send their order and money soon. We are satisfied that new subscribers will regret it if they do not order the paper from January, 1848. Let all persons ordering the Examiner write the names of persons and places plain; for we have no means of "guessing" them out. For terms and address see first page.

LETTER FROM THOMAS SMITH.

BR. STORRS.—I am very much interested in the "Bible Examiner," especially in that part which so fearlessly and ably discusses the "Immortal Soul" question. It appears that men are beginning to think for themselves on the trans-Atlantic shores, as well as on our continent; and the result seems to be an abandonment of those long established notions that men have "immortal souls" naturally. I was struck recently with a little occurrence in the State of Massachusetts, while on board a packet. An intelligent Sea Captain, a fellow passenger, and a professor of religion, were on board, to whom I proposed the following question: "What, sir, do you suppose will be the nature of the punishment of the wicked in the future world?" Said he, "Why, I suppose it will be a horror of conscience, or something of that kind." I then repeated numerous Scriptures by which to show him that the Bible taught they would be cast into a lake of fire burning with brimstone, "where they have of fire—that fire would do for them—burn them up. No! Not knowing my faith, he very readily remarked, "Why, sir, if that be the nature of their punishment they will be annihilated, will they not?" I then gave him some Bible testimony, and the result was that he acknowledged that such instruction was the most Scriptural and reasonable. To this conclusion, it appears to me, men must come, in order to admit a harmony in the attributes of the Father of mercies. Numbers of strong minded men of my acquaintance, are merging, and have merged into universalism, because of the so-called orthodox creed of eternal life in misery; and they will increase more and more unless the true light upon this important subject is brought to bear upon their minds, and then I trust, if they are candid, they will readily exchange their error for the truth.

I cannot, for myself, see either reason or Scripture in your ideas of probation after the coming of Jesus. In fact, if such a thing should be, and men are of the same nature as they are now, and the claims of Jehovah the same—I cannot see that but very few, if any, would be benefited by it; and should the Lord in any way afford them a superior opportunity to what men now have, He would in that case show himself a respecter of persons—which idea the Scriptures contradict.

Still praying to be led into all truth, I am your brother in tribulation, hoping for eternal life at the appearance and kingdom of Jesus Christ the Son of God!

DOVER EAST, September, 1845.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR OF THE EXAMINER.

We are not offended that Br. Smith cannot "see either reason or scripture in our ideas of Probation after the coming of Jesus." Our old prejudices do not give way at once. Will Br. Smith admit, that we, in this age, or last 50 years, have had "any more afforded us" as "superior to what men" had in the 12th, 13th and 14th centuries, when it was death to read the Scriptures in the language of the common people? If he does admit this—Is God therefore a respecter of persons? The "respect of persons" the Scriptures speak of, as not in God; is always spoken of his character in relation to the good and he will call men to for the improvement or mis-improvement of means granted them, whether Jews, Christians, or Gentiles. That some have had, in all ages, and in different ages, more means and advantages to know God and bear fruit, is undeniable. The one, two, and five talents clearly teach this doctrine. Did not Abraham have a "superior opportunity to what" many had, both before him and in the age in which he lived? Did not the posterity of Jacob have superior advantages for centuries? Paul says they had "much every way"—chiefly because unto them was committed the oracles of God? Rom. 3: 2. Do not we now, under the gospel, "superior advantages" to what the Jews did in their best days? And may not the next age confer still greater advantages without an impeachment of God's dealings with men? Is our "eye evil because" God is "good"? May He not do what He will with his own? May He not give to some "superior advantages" to that of others, and yet not be a "respecter of persons" in the Scripture sense? Facts show that He has thus distinguished men in all ages.

But in judgment he is no respecter of persons; greater privileges lay us under superior obligations; and if we fail, the greater will be our condemnation. We can "see neither reason nor scripture in" the objections made to the idea of probation, to some, after the advent; but we do not condemn others, who think differently, so long as they manifest an honest desire to know what truth is.

BR. ELON EVERTS, Vergennes, Vt., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—I find once and awhile one who dares read the Examiner, and after trying its "heresy" by the balances of the sanctuary of truth, they find (although widely different from the popular theology of the age,) that it agrees so well with the sealed weights, that they want more of it. Many are inclined to cast their old weights (heathen traditions, endorsed by the creed making sectarian, honoured and endorsed however much,) to the moles and bats. I send enclosed three dollars to be appropriated for the Examiner.

I am glad to see that you propose to speak occasionally on the reign of David's rightful heir and his kingdom. Will it not be profitable to say something on the unfulfilled promises, made by God to a people that suffered over 400 years in Egyptian bondage, and brought out with a high hand, and placed in a goodly land, and had wholesome laws, but they broke them, and then were carried away captive into all nations, their city destroyed, and their land made desolate and trod down by the Gentiles? All this has taken place literally, to a literal Israel, and upon a literal land and city. And God that has done this just precisely and literally, according to his threatening, previously made, for their iniquity; also has, by many of his prophets, declared, as by Ezk. 39: 26-28, "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy on the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous of my holy name; AFTER that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid. When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' land, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations: Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen; but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there." This all to be about the time of the great slaughter of the wicked, and supper for the fowls and beasts, as shown in said chapter; being parallel with Mal. 4, and Rev. 19. Not parallel with the slaughter of Rev. 20th, and Ezk. 38th. Now this gathering of Israel can't be fulfilled upon a spiritual Israel.

DR. N. STORRS, Hallowell, Me., writes:—

BR. STORRS:—We have some reformation in this place: several have been converted and others reclaimed, so as about to double our numbers. We are all of one mind: all say the same thing: all consider your paper good; and if it were not for your Millennium on the earth—probation after Christ comes, and the return of the Jews, it would be the best paper printed. If you have the truth on these points, may the good Lord enable you to make it so plain that we may see it by your bringing the plain testimony and not merely inference. But if we have the truth, may you see it and embrace it in the love of it.

Profit and Loss—A LAY SERMON.

BY FREDERIC R. LEES,

Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Göttingen, P.S.A., Edin.
Editor of 'The Truth Seeker,' etc.

Preached at Leeds, England, A. D. 1845.

'Godlikeness profiteth for all things.'—Paul.

'What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his soul?'—The Christ.

'For a recompense—be ye enlarged.'—Paul.

The principle of Profit and Loss, as embodied in the startling question of the Great Teacher, contains at once the seed, the sum, and the substance of that divine gospel, which it was the mission of the Messiah to declare and develop.

'Thou' a problem in heavenly arithmetic lying at the basis of all life, He was the first to give it a full and living solution; to exemplify the ideal principles of his sacred Ethics in real and vital being. In words, indeed, he has broadly and beautifully shadowed out the interior principles of his Father's government, but in works he has declared them with a depth and distinctness which none can mistake. From the first and fearless utterances of the Spirit, which ensured the hate and persecution of the Priesthood, to the hour of his crucifixion on Calvary, when the false triumph of his foes opened wide to him the Gates of Glory, his life was one long and illustrious commentary on the principle expressed by his Apostle—'Whatsoever a man sows, even this shall he reap; therefore the sower to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption, while the sower to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.'

THE GRAND LIFE-PROBLEM.

MAN, spiritually, was appointed in the divine image—in other words, he was both designed and adapted to become an ORGAN OF LIFE and OF GOD. His nature is two-fold—animal and spiritual, of which, in the order of development, individually and historically, the animal is first—the spiritual second. 'The first Adam,' is therefore, 'of the earth earthy'; it eats dust until spiritualized and purified—it tends to the nothingness of self; therefore he who regards the selfhood of the flesh as his vital centre, must reap corruption. But 'the second Adam,' the fleshly organ of life purified and 'made perfect' thro' trials, temptations, and sufferings—in short, the incarnate Word or Wisdom, EMMANUEL, or 'God with us'—is the 'Lord from Heaven'—the divine humanity—MAN, 'the temple of God.'

Thus man, tho' liable, by the mal-administration of his faculties, to sink into corruption and nihilism, is also capable of rising into the similitude of the Messiah—'God manifest in the flesh'—and of inheriting the eternal glories. This is no longer an ideal theory—a vain speculation—for 'the Lord of us, Jesus Christ, gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from the tendency of a malignant spirit, according to the will of God.' 'I do say, therefore, walk in spirit, and you shall not perform a desire of the flesh.' The flesh certainly wars against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. 'But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, forbearance, usefulness, goodness, truth, gentleness, temperance; against such there is no law for death.' They, in short, who belong to the Christ, have crucified and still-crucify the flesh, with the propensities and selfish dispositions. If we are alive in spirit, we may also perform the rites and ceremonies in spirit. These things are not ideal impossibilities, for they have been realized, and may be for evermore. Christ, our Lord and leader, has been in the wilderness before us; he has conquered the demon principles, and triumphed over our real enemies—those of our own household. As our 'elder brother' and 'exemplar,' and 'the captain of our salvation,' he has actually achieved such perfection thro' sorrow, conflict, and suffering, and is even now gone before us to point and prepare the way; He, our Precursor and our Pledge, has risen from the Dead, physically and spiritually, that we may rise also! For, as Paul declares, 'If the spirit of the Raiser of the Saviour from the dead, will make even your mortal bodies live. If you live fleshly you shall die; but if you put to death in the spirit, the doings of the body, you shall make yourselves live. If indeed sons, also heirs, heirs verily of God, follow here indeed of the Messiah; if we are fellow sufferers, it is our duty to be also fellow glorified.' Thus all is prepared for the establishment of that 'kingdom of God'—which 'cometh not with observation; for, behold! the kingdom of God'—with all its life-laws and everlasting principles—'is within you.' Here Doubt and Despair are expelled by the demonstration of a Divine Life, while Truth, and Hope, and Love, abide for ever.

This then is the grand life-problem—the purpose of our being at all, and which therefore, unattained, we shall cease to be—to subordinate and sanctify the sensual, and to develop and display the spiritual, principles of Human Nature. Wot ye not, brethren, that we should be about our Father's business? That if we rise not with the Heavenly, we must inevitably Sink with the Earthly, Man? Unvivified by the divine spirit—who only hath immortality—we must die. 'Dust we are, and unto dust must we return.' We have, then, the Divine Nature to inspire and image in the Human—and we be to us if we fulfil not this life function, and 'purify ourselves even as he is pure.' The consequences of failure are not arbitrary but inevitable, and no false faith, or corrupt creed can arrest their course, or avert their consummation. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' God will by no means clear the guilty. As the tree falleth so it lieth—as death leaves us will judgement find us. Hence the exhortation of Paul—'Let each, therefore, examine his own mechanism, and then he shall have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For each shall bear his own burden.' Let him, however, who is under instruction in this cosmos, (or eternal light which enlightens every man in all times, 'associate with him who is instructing in all good things, Deceive not yourselves—by thinking to escape the retribution of your own acts; 'God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man sows even this shall he reap.'

PROGRESSIVE CULTURE.

Religion, then, consists in the progressive Culture of the Soul for the development of the Divine—and this culture must be based on fixed laws, and conducted on firm and eternal principles. Religion is 'a fountain of living waters springing up unto everlasting life'—but those waters must gush and flow forth according to some stated and certain laws. Now, it is the function of the religious philosopher to ascertain and expound these laws of the Life-kingdom. If we divide that kingdom into three Departments—the Instinctive, the Intellectual, and the Moral—then the mission of religion is to put down the rebellion of the lower against the higher Provinces, to restore the rule and government of Israel, and effect a complete reconciliation amongst the conflicting Powers. In fine, its aim is the re-union of the human with the divine nature—'Christ in us'—a renewing and midwifing spirit—the hope of glory.

the solution upon the law of Life and Death—or in other words, upon the law which regulates Progression and Regression, known in ordinary phrase as Reward and Punishment. We have chosen, however, to discuss the most important of all Institutions, under a new denomination.

Firstly, because the old terminology is confused and inadequate. 'Reward' is not, either in actual usage, or according to its etymology, the logical antithesis of punishment, since it denotes either the return of good or the return of evil. 'Punishment' is also ambiguous and indefinite. It signifies, according to the savageness or civilization of the people who employ it, any suffering or privation from the most trifling penalty to the most terrible visitation of vindictive torment—anything from the irrevocable punishment of death, down to the slightest chastisement or smallest privation inflicted with the merciful intent of warning or reclamation. In itself it sometimes denotes mere privation or loss—privation of means, loss of liberty, faculty, or life—while it may connote in the mind of the magistrate or parent, the purest or most merciful emotions. At other times it may denote torment the most intense, while it connotes, in the mind of the inflictor, feelings of the fiercest rage and vengeance.

Secondly, therefore, we avoid the ancient terminology, because we wish to discriminate the pure and essential elements of this institute of Reward and Retribution, from its mere accidents and accompaniments.

Thirdly, to exclude from the consideration of Divine punishments, which are the results of wisdom and love, the remotest idea of vindictive feeling or of vain torment—ideas, alas! but too commonly associated with the subject, and which, as we can truly worship only what we love, tend to darken the Divine Aspect, and to destroy our deepest feelings of reverence towards God. Indeed we think with Lord Bacon, that it is better to have no opinion of God at all, than one which is dishonouring to Him and degrading to us. And all misconceptions of Deity are degrading. As is the God we have framed to ourself, so will be our Life and Soul: an image of a gloomy and partial deity fills the spirit with kindred gloom and fitfulness, while, conversely, a more and jealous temper will reflect an image of God corresponding to itself.

Thus the moon-struck Sophist stood,
Wishing the shade from his own soul upthrown;
Heaven and darkened Earth, and in such mood
The form he saw and worshiped was his own.
His likeness in the world's vast mirror shown;
And 'twere an innocent dream, but that a faith,
Nurtured by fear's dew of poison, grows thereon.

Indeed, there is far too much cause for the poet's complaint. The lovely truths of Christianity are hidden by the clouds of darkness which continually ascend from the avassal regions of man-made Theology, and the low and happy heaven of the Great Good is transformed into Tartarus—

'Hate is thrown on high, with Fear her mother,

Verily, those perverters of Christianity are guilty of half the infidelity of the world.

CHARACTER OF THE MORAL AND SPIRITUAL CHARACTER OF AN AGE.

The Gnosticism of any age is an unerring criterion of its moral and spiritual character. For this reason the Christ-divine; he must have come from the bosom of the Father, else he could not have revealed Him. His sublime life-definition of the eternal and the invisible—God is Love—the most comprehensive generalization of philosophy has ever reached, and expressing at once the end and aim of the immeasurable universe, far transcends in its power of spiritual demonstration, the literal logic of the schools, and in itself vindicates the claim of Christianity to be considered the highest and most perfect form of ethical philosophy—the Philosophy of Benevolence. It penetrates at once the secret of the universe—it reveals the law of life and felicity. God is love; but all nature, our nature is constructed by Him. It is, therefore, a mechanism of Love, designed to move and be moved by that principle. He, then, as St. John says, who abides in love, abides in God. He is in harmony with himself, with God, and with the world. He is happy.

Hence 'vainly seek
The selfish for that happiness denied
To aught but virtue? Blind and hardened, they
Who hope for peace amid the storms of care,
Who covet power they know not how to use,
And sigh for pleasure they refuse to give,
Madly they frustrate still their own designs;
And, where they hope that quiet to enjoy,
Which virtue pictures, bitterness of soul,
Pining regrets, and vain repentances,
Disgrace, disgust, and lassitude, pervade
Their valueless and miserable lives.'

This is the grand lesson of life. Let us hope it is becoming better understood, and that the Poet is a true Prophet.

'Heavy-headed selfishness has felt
Its death-blow, and is tottering to the grave;
A brighter morn awaits the human day,
When every transferee of earth's natural gifts
Shall be a commerce of good words and works;
When poverty and wealth, the thirst of fame,
The fear of infamy, disease and woe,
War with its million horrors, and fierce hell,
Shall live but in the memory of time,
Who, like a penitent libertine, shall start,
Look back, and shudder at his younger years.'

We have only to expand John's definition a little, in order to arrive at the most important of all our religious sentiments—the distinct, steady, and constantly operative conception of what is implied in the words, 'Almighty and Omnipresent God.' Of a truth, God is Love, and Love is God. This idea of Deity alike excludes from our conceptions, vindictive and purposeless visitations of pain. Pain itself, in this view, assumes a divine appearance—becomes an aspect and apparition of love. Even what has been figuratively called 'the frown of God,' is to be traced to the same source: it is an eclipse of the Divine Countenance arising from some passing cloud of Sense, and the pain and darkness which we feel is designed to warn us of some transgression of the divine laws by which the radiance of the spiritual sun would become more completely intercepted. Pain is intended to bring repentance—i. e. to notify us that we have strayed out of the straight path, that we may turn back. This is the doctrine of Paul. 'O man!' says he, 'Dost thou consider the riches of His goodness and forbearance, and long-suffering, however to thy hardness and impenitent heart, thou dost treasure up to thyself wrath in the day of wrath, and the uncovering of the just retribution of God, who will render to each according to his doings.' Pain, here, is referred to the 'goodness of God'—and happy may he be deemed, who preserves unimpaired the moral sensitiveness which informs him of the impending evil! On the contrary, the loss of feeling, which indicates the hard heart—these proclama the seared conscience, the hard heart—these proclaim the death of the spirit, the ruin and destruction of the temple itself! These, then, are the only things the heretic's Christian need fear; not trials, afflictions or persecutions.

'The clouds we so much dread,
Are hewn with mercy, and shall break
In us examples on our head.'

*Rom. ix. 3, 5.

Without the ideas of Wisdom and Goodness—and their correlative punishment apart from passion—there can be no real Religion, for there can be no respect and no love. Priestianity there may be, but not Christianity; a contrivance of priests for priestly purposes, but not an inspiration from heaven. God dwelleth not with lies. When the people give up their souls to the keeping of others, to do whatsoever the priests prescribe to them, they may have Superstition enough, but no true Piety; they depart from the ever-present God to lean upon Man; they doubt the goodness of Deity, and therefore hire a man to entreat Him!

As the conception of an Omnipresent and Almighty Being of Love and Wisdom, is the essence of Religion, and the sole source of all the good impressions it is capable of producing, it follows, that every idea instilled into us, implying imperfection in Deity, is a perversion of religion—a debasement of the purifying ideal we aim at—which, so far as it goes, transforms our spiritual food into poison, the good into evil. It is evident, then, that just in proportion as men set up for the object of their imitation or worship a being of limited wisdom and goodness, do they manufacture for themselves a motive for the practice of what is contrary to perfect wisdom and goodness. Let us beware, therefore, in discussing divine punishments, that we do not permit ourselves to think ill of God by associating the notion of punishment with those vindictive feelings which so often tarnish the judicial proceedings of earthly courts. There is still, to some extent, a language current on this question which we hold in the utmost abhorrence. It is the relics of a barbarous age, when the human and the Divine natures were equally misunderstood.

Men who themselves, in earthly matters, would never think of pain, save as an undesirable means to a desirable end, and therefore to be inflicted to the smallest possible extent required for reformation, will yet, from the mere force of phrase, ascribe to the Deity the infliction of torment in the most cruel excess; and even represent the un-proud God as administering pain, not like a wise and virtuous being under the direction of benevolence and with a view of correction, but in the spirit of personal revenge, to 'satisfy,' as the cant runs, 'Offended Justice'—an abstraction made for the occasion—and to 'vindicate his outraged dignity!' Now this is simply to speak evil of God, i. e. to blaspheme; it is one of those misrepresentations of the Divine procedure which have reacted in the production of our prevalent infidelity—the ascription to God, not of the character even of an amiable man, but of a vain and vengeful savage.

No wonder that such representations should be useless and inefficient in reforming character, however profitable in creating a demand for the vicarious services and ceremonies of Priests. Even the abstract representation of Justice, in the Law, could only 'condemn wickedness in the flesh'—it could not conquer and regenerate the flesh. 'For if a law, capable of creating life, had been given, justice would most assuredly have been by the law.' Hence the law has become itself our schoolmaster for Christ, since we should be justified by the truth. The truth, however, having come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For you are all souls of God, thro' the truth in Christ Jesus.* Thus we see that men's hearts are to be touched and transformed, not even by the Law, much less by pictures of a partial and fear-inspiring Deity—but by the magic influence of Love, exhibited in harmony with the highest forms of Philosophy and Truth. The incarnation of the Eternal Reason (logos) of God, whose 'Life was the light of Men,' alone can revive and regenerate the race. 'It existed in the world, and the world made itself thro' It, and the world did not know It.'—As many, however, as received Him, He gave to them an existence to make themselves Sons of God, to those that have truth in his divinity, who were born, not of bloods, nor of a will of flesh, nor of a will of man, but of God.—Truly says John: 'Of his fullness we all have received, and grace for grace; because the Law was given by Moses'—the Law which could not save, because it gave no true insight into the nature of God; therefore, 'Grace and Truth came thro' Jesus Christ.' Thus, we perceive, that the ordinary representations of Divine punishment, virtually blot out the revelations of the Messiah-Redeemer, and exhibit a view of Deity which neither informs nor reforms.

FURTHER DEFECTIVE VIEWS OF THEOLOGY.

But the common doctrine of Divines is exceedingly defective on another ground. They equally mistake the nature and administration of punishment. Not only do they render it arbitrary, dependent on mere will, and disconnected with the principles and processes of God's perpetual Government, but they also postpone it to an undefined and distant period. One might have thought that legislative experience, and the progress of mental philosophy, would long since have excited the suspicion of serious error in the pseudo 'orthodox' views on this subject; but, alas! for the influence of creed, experience and philosophy are not permitted to aid in the development of sectarian 'divinity.' Its dogmas are all stereotyped—and its prophets all infallible! The sects, little and big, have all some 'Pope' or other, or some final 'council' or 'creed,' to act as an extinguisher upon reason and evidence. If there be any essential difference between Roman 'orthodoxy' of one sort, and British 'orthodoxy' of all sorts, it is only that slight one remarked by Steele—namely, that the Roman Pontiff is always in the right, and the Protestant Parson never in the wrong! The Roman Pope is un-fail-able—the Protestant Bigot un-err-able.

Whether we regard punishment, for the present, as consisting in pain, or in privation, what we ask, are those principles of its administration which political experience has now rendered indisputable? Firstly, that the CERTAINTY, and, secondly, that the PROXIMITY of punishment, is necessary to its efficiency.

But Theologians weaken the belief in the certainly of punishment, by opening out vicarious sources of escape from the consequences of sin, and thus make the actual infliction a doubtful matter. True—Prophets and Apostles have warned us against this pernicious doctrine, and taught us that the consequences of Sin cannot be counteracted—but where 'divines' fail to pervert prophets and apostles, they contrive very conveniently to forget them. Nevertheless, reader 'Be not deceived! Whatsoever a man soweth, even this shall he reap.' 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Paul in his exhortation to the Romans, inculcates this doctrine expressly. They who de-formed themselves, did reap corruption. 'God delivered them over to the very desires of their hearts, receiving in themselves the retribution for their wickedness which was needful—seeing that they did not feel *Gal. iii. 27-29.

†To onoma, a Name; i. e. the sacred 'Ja'—I am. St. John adds—'And the Word made itself a flesh, and dwelt in us, and we have beheld ourself glory, a glory as of an only begotten from [the] Father, full of Grace and Truth.' i. 14 disposed to practice the Good according to knowledge, (God) delivered them over to the unfeeling mind, to do things which are not harmonious."
(John i. 10-13.)

Emerson, in his admirable essay on 'Compensation,' enforces the same truth. "Crime and punishment grow out of one stem. Punishment is a fruit that, unsuspected, ripens within the flower of the pleasure which concealed it." "The dice of God," said an old Grecian, "are always loaded." True, every law has its sanction, every act its effect. There is no chance—and therefore no evasion of consequences—in the universe of God.

Again; the popular preachers' represent punishment not only as dubious, but as distasteful. It is not viewed as an effect certainly and necessarily following transgression as its cause, but as a mere arbitrary accident, which may or may not ensue, just as the sinner succeeds or fails in propitiating his judge. But the stern fact is, that a miracle alone could effect the severance of Crime from its true Punishment—and that miracle will never be wrought. Nevertheless, the ideal postponement of the penalty of crime to a dim and distant future, deprives the fear of its due force, and renders the conception of the consequences faint and ineffective. Now, as it is the grand law of Love to conserve as much as may be the Being it has created; and therefore to be as sparing as possible in the employment of pain, the work and warning of its decay—in other words, to inflict the smallest amount which will serve the purpose—it follows, that benevolence will be ever seeking to connect the conception of crime as closely as possible with that of punishment, in order to render the smallest pain, in degree and duration, sufficient. And this conclusion will be found to harmonize with facts. If the first painful intimation of organic or moral disorder and decay, be not heeded—and, as a rule, the first is the most acute—the voice of the warner grows weaker not stronger, in relation to the same act and injury—the susceptibility less and less—until, finally, body and mind become unfeeling, dead. Pain, we see here, is the protest of Vitality against whatever will violate its integrity, and, of necessity, as repeated transgressions subtract from the sum of its energies, its protests become more few and feeble, until they finally terminate in mortification or death. Thus step by step, the pain diminishes, while the loss—the true punishment and lasting consequence—increases. But the vulgar and anti-scriptural notions of future punishment are the very reverse of all this; for they represent the pain, and therefore the faculty of feeling—the life—as gradually augmenting! Pain, here, serves when it can answer no purpose, and 'corruption' follows. But there, it is attached to disorder, without decay—to life, without hope of amendment!! to being, without aim or use!!! This is not only absurd; it is "Horrible! most horrible!"

What, too, ought to be thought of the wisdom of any human legislator, who should decree that the pains and penalties of murder should be postponed till twenty or thirty years after the perpetration of the crime?—thus violating the second condition of efficient punishment—the awareness of the penalty to the crime. Or what should we think of his attempt to mend the matter, by ordaining, in opposition to all the analogy of nature, that the lapsed interval of ease should be then made up by the infliction of intenser torment in his 'prison-house'—where he could do neither good nor ill? Yet such is the atrocious government which many 'theologians have daringly imputed to 'the blessed God'!! Is it not, in fact and in substance, the theory of all who set forth the pains of the future life as intended for the prevention of vice in this?

But in truth, O brothers, this vile and cruel theory is not drawn from the pure well of Scripture undefiled:

but, as might be anticipated, a priori, it is a fiction and forgery of priests.

IMPORTANT PRINCIPLES AND RESULTS.

God's laws are not marked by startling and sudden transitions—all is gradual and progressive. We entirely accord in the opinion of Bishop Butler, founded on analogy, that we have no reason to suppose that the change from the present to the future life, will be greater than the change from the condition which precedes birth to that state into which it ushers us. In fact, we believe that the individual's revived or resurrection-consciousness, will exactly represent the consequences of past action, neither less nor more; and therefore that he will be found in possession of all the dispositions and habits formed by his previous career—either adapted for progress in the Divine life, or fitted for destruction. In short, we believe again with St. Paul, that 'whatsoever a man sows, even this shall he reap: Therefore he who sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, and he who sows to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.' In other words, if we depend on our own defectibility, or on our fellow worm, equally defectible—we shall err and perish. But if we cherish the Divine Logos—the light that enlightens every man coming into the world—the Divine Spirit manifested in our Spirits—we shall depend upon His perfection, and partaking of it, we shall live.

The Rewards of heaven are unlike those of this world, which, in strictness, are equivalents and exchanges only. Heaven's rewards are properly matters of profit—of increase, produce, growth. 'The fruit of righteousness—is a tree of life.' You have not to give in order to get, but to do only, to work. Action secures addition; and you have simply to use your capital, and it is straightway increased, sixty or a hundred fold. We live under a dispensation of Grace, which excludes merit but grants reward.* Reward is God's Royal Rule of dispensing good; he who uses the one-favor, shall have more added to it, while from him that uses it not, shall be taken away even what he hath. Walk a little, and you shall be able to walk more; work a little, and you shall have strength to work more; think a little, and you will have power to think more; love a little, and, bye and bye, you will love more largely. The universe is one grand system of uses. All our powers are given for enlargement by the means of use. All faculties and forms are summed up in Life, in Being; but this being differs in degree and development in every individual. Viewed as the first gift—as the ground and cause of enjoyment and action, and as capable of indefinite development—this capacity of becoming useful and happy in an endless life, the source and substratum of existence, assumes a value which transcends all worlds. What indeed, shall a man give in exchange for this soul? This life, this soul, however, is but lent. The awful judgement-question will be—'What hast thou done with thy soul?' It is designed for culture and development, and if not developed, it must deteriorate, decay, and die.

Christ preached this universal doctrine to his disciples: self-development was the reward held out. 'Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive many-fold more in this present time, and in the world to come, life everlasting.' Thus, as nothing can arrest the consequences of evil, so nothing can frustrate the rewards of the good. The reason is obvious; the true rewards are internal and spiritual, consisting of a continual extension of the spirit's capacities; the kingdom is spiritual—it cometh not with observation, 'FOR WHOM THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU'—and therefore its treasures are incorruptible, and beyond the reach of rust or robber. Thus has God placed man's happiness in his own keeping, and enabled him, by the humble submission of his spirit to the influences of the Divine, to 'lay hold of eternal life'—to grasp the glories, and realize the rich rewards, of the spiritual realms.

As 'Reward' signifies, in its essential use, positive possession—increase of faculty, capacity, or means—in short, accession of life; so 'Punishment,' as its logical antithesis or negation, denotes loss of faculty or means—or, in brief decession, decay, death.

An obvious inference from these definitions is, that pleasure, as pleasure, is no more the real and abiding Reward, than pain, as pain, is true and permanent Punishment. That pleasure is no further 'reward' than as it indicates right action, will perhaps be admitted by considering, that the act of Sin is frequently productive of intense temporary pleasure. But can we say that sin is 'rewarded'? At least, its performer is not profited; reversely, he loses some portion of the power for re-experiencing lawful pleasure; the premature bloom is followed by premature blight. All pleasure, out of time, or out of place, is inevitable loss—not loss of present pleasure, perhaps, but loss of faculty for further excitement—loss of the groundwork of pleasure and pain. This is as much worse than the other, as the loss of a fruitful tree is worse than the loss of its year's fruitage. In trade, the loss of Capital must be the capital-loss; in life, the loss of power, of soul, or capacity, the 'capital punishment.'

These views of Reward and Punishment will be found pregnant with many important consequences. They not only tear off the dark and vengeful mask with which a vile and daring anthropomorphism has concealed the radiant countenance of the everlasting 'Father of Lights,' but point to pain itself as supplying as true a demonstration of Divine benevolence as the most exquisite felicity. The sum is this:—

All the movements and mechanism of the universe are manifestations of Wisdom and Grace, for 'God is love.' Pleasure and pain are but varied indications of His will—the two pointers on the Dial of Life, marking respectively, the steady or oscillating movements of the vital machinery. The Divine Physiologist designs to teach us by means of pleasure, if we will, that 'His ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace'—but if, like stubborn, ignorant children, we will not be taught this lesson of wisdom, He adopts the other method of instruction, and, by means of pain, he demonstrates that 'the ways of transgressors are hard.' Thus pleasure and pain are but the radiant outflowings of one Divine Aspect, reflected on different paths, and assuming diverse appearances. In 'the path of Holiness' the Divine lustre descends in the form of 'the Dove,' bringing to the heart perpetual peace and joy;—in the 'way of Death' it gathers into the apparition of 'a burning Bush,' symbolically signifying that sin is 'a consuming fire' the end whereof is death. But behind and beneath all, there is Love. Pain is not the real loss, the true Punishment, but merely the indicator of injury—the warning voice of God in nature, raised when we stray into the path of danger and death, that we may hear, turn back, and live. It for ever repeats the touching question of the Lord—'Why will ye die?' 'As I live, saith Jehovah, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked.'

These are our views of the great life-problem of Profit and Loss; and, we think, such a consideration of God's all-wise and almighty government, by refining and exalting our conceptions of the Divine character and requirements, by rendering our ideas of responsibility at once more rational and more rigid, and by showing us that we must inevitably reap the reward of our own works or eat of the bitter fruit of our own doings, cannot possibly fail to deepen all those salutary convictions which tend to wise and worthy conduct; to give force and fixedness to the kindest affections of our nature; and to strengthen and stimulate the desire of doing good, by exhibiting virtuous action as the parent of power for ever enlarging in the might and majesty of its consequences.

Such views, also, would put men on their guard against the misleading and baser affections; would explain, not only how much is gained by progression in virtue, but how much is lost by giving way to selfish and sensuous seductions.

We should learn ourselves, and teach our children, to always associate crime with punishment and virtue with reward, thereby inducing an instinctive avoidance of the Selfishness itself would at last discover its best interests to consist in having its propensities supplanted by those higher faculties which lead us to rejoice in being the instrument of another's felicity; and, finally, on closing the Ledger of Human Life, we should find a vast balance of Profit standing to our credit, consisting in enlarged capacities of Being and of Action, in augmented faculties of enjoyment and of use, ready to be transferred to our account and favor in God's 'Book of Life.'

Solemn, indeed, is the question which returns to us; 'What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?'

BUSINESS NOTICES.—Wm. Algire, the money sent in October was not received; but we have sent you the sermons since yours of November 6th.

C. B. Hotchkiss. Yours on "Symbols" shall have a place soon.

Thomas Smith. We sent you 20 copies of Six Sermons, quarto, to North Truro, Mass., the fore part of October; we sent, to the same place, 17th of November, 12 copies of the 18mo.

Adam Dixon. We have none of the "Tracts" except what are bound up with the Six Sermons. How shall we apply the money intended for them?

To all persons. The fact that you receive from us what you send for, is evidence your money is received.

THE "THREE OFFERS" AGAIN.—1. Any person sending us $1. current money, free of expense, shall have the Bible Examiner for 1849, and seven copies of the "Six Sermons," 18mo., and our views of the State of the Dead, including the tract "Rich man and Lazarus," with each copy of the Sermons; or 20 copies of the quarto edition, which does not include the tract.

2. Any person, or company of persons, who will send us five dollars, current money, at one time, free of expense, shall receive five copies of the Bible Examiner for 1849, and forty copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo. (pamphlet, including same as previous offer) for ten dollars, ten copies of the Examiner, and ninety of the Sermons; for twenty dollars, twenty copies of the Examiner, and two hundred of the Sermons.

3. Any person, or company of persons, sending us $5. current money, free of expense, shall have 15 copies of Bible Examiner for 1849; for $10 they shall have 34 copies; and for $20, 75 copies.

We make these offers now to induce our friends to act at once in sending all the subscribers they can, that we may be able to form a judgment of the number of copies we shall print for 1849. The offers extend, therefore, only to January.

THE EDITOR of this paper preaches every Lord's day at COMMISSIONERS' HALL, Third street below Green, east side; at 10½ A. M., and in the evening at 7 o'clock.

THE "SIX SERMONS" on the End of the Wicked, &c., can be had of the Author, 18 Chester street, between Race and Vine, 8th and 9th Price, in Pamphlet, 15 cents, or ten copies for $1. The pamphlet includes the views of the author on the question, "Have the dead knowledge?" The Sermons advocate the doctrine, that "All the wicked will God destroy," or cause them to cease from life, after the judgment. The work full bound in morocco, with Grew's thoughts on the Intermediate State, 37½ cts. Cash in all cases with the order.

THE ASPECTS OF PHRENOLOGY ON REVELATION; or, Materialism, Fatalism, Regeneration, Creeds, Atheism, The operation of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of men, and HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY, Philosophically considered in a series of Lectures, BY J. T. WALSH. Such is the Title of an Octavo pamphlet of 74 pages, published by 'Br. Walsh, Richmond, Va., 1846. For sale at 18 Chester street, Philadelphia, Pa., and by the Author. ## THE DISCUSSION CONTINUED.

TO MR. J. T. WALSH:—Does the soul consciously exist after death till the resurrection?

My Dear Sir:—I am content to leave the points already discussed to our readers. I will, therefore, in this article, call attention to a few considerations not before noticed in this friendly discussion.

First. The express condemnation of the doctrine of Sadducees. Their views are comprehensively expressed in Acts 23d, 8th.—"For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both."

Here are three negative positions embraced by the Sadducees, and their opposite by the Pharisees, and on each of them, Paul declares himself a Pharisee.

What was the creed of the Sadducees as here presented? They denied a future existence for man, by denying both the resurrection of the body, and the separate existence of the soul, or spirit.

There is no way to escape the force of this, but to deny the reference of the word "spirit" to the soul, or spirit of man, disembodied. But what else could they mean? Man's hope and destiny was the topic under consideration.

1. By spirit they meant something distinct from angels, because they are mentioned separately.

2. They believed in a God, and therefore the reference is not to him.

3. They did deny the spiritual existence of man as well as the resurrection of the body. How natural that they should be named together, especially as the Pharisees believed both. I believe therefore that by "spirit" we are to understand the spirit of man before the resurrection of the body.

Secondly. In Matt. 22d, from the 23d to the 32d, we have a detailed conversation between Christ and some of the leaders of this sect, when they urge what they considered a fatal objection to a future existence, as well as the resurrection of the body. In answering this objection the Saviour utters this remarkable language, 31 and 32—"But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?"

God is not the God of the dead but of the living."

There are two points to which I wish to call particular attention.

1. God is the God of Abraham, but God is not the God of the dead, and therefore, Abraham, though in appearance, and in the language of men dead, he is not really so, otherwise God would not be his God. With any other view the text contradicts itself.

2. God is only the God of the actually living, while he is the God of Abraham, therefore Abraham is actually living.

You will reply, perhaps, that it is the resurrection the Saviour is proving. But the word of necessity implies nothing more than a future life, to stand up, to live again, and the context obliges us to give it this definition in this place. 1. Because of the declaration "in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage" which must be understood as tantamount to, in the future life, "they neither marry," &c.

2. Because Christ declares Abraham then living, which fully disproved the doctrine of the Sadducees.

If it be said he calls God the God of Abraham in view of his subsequent resurrection to life "at the last day," I reply: 1. The text does not declare that God is the God of those now dead, but who are to live, but emphatically "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living"—those actually now living.

2. Abraham's future resurrection to life and consciousness, ceases to be a matter of rational expectation, unless his soul still exists in a conscious state.

I submit it to the reason of the unbiased, that if there be no soul, separate and distinct from the body, capable of living after that has died, there is no such being as Abraham of Mesopotamia in existence.

There being no such person, he cannot be raised from the dead, for the obvious reason, that a being that does not exist, cannot have a resurrection.

The appeal to omnipotence will avail nothing in this case, for omnipotence cannot do, what in the nature of things is contradictory and impossible.

God can create another being resembling Abraham, but he would not be the Abraham that once "dwelt in tents with Sarah and Isaac, heirs of the promise," but another; and if made to feel he was, he would be deceived. And hence I fully believe your view destroys the hope even of a future resurrection. The two doctrines live together and die together. Another being created to take my place could not recognize my previous affections as his own.

After a thousand years, during which time I have not only failed to think, but the whole power of thought has become annihilated—my whole being returned to the dust from which it was taken—my resurrection is an utter absurdity.

Third. Another passage is found in Matt. 17th. 2d. "And there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him." Here I believe both doctrines are illustrated and confirmed to the disciples. Here was Elijah in a resurrection body confirming that doctrine. Here was Moses, who died and was buried 1400 years before, a proof of the other doctrine contended for.

But had not both bodies? I cannot say, though both were made known to the disciples, what was their appearance. God sometimes assumes a body and makes his angels to appear as men, spirits or flaming fire. Could he not clothe, for the time, the soul of Moses in a body, as it pleased him?

There is no proof that he was raised from the dead, i. e., that his body was raised, and if you deny my declaration, you must base that denial on sheer assumption.

My dear sir, on this side of the question I have now done. I am most respectfully and truly your friend and brother,

W. H. BREWSTER.

REPLY TO MR. BREWSTER.

Dear Sir,—In your article you base an argument,

1st. On "the express condemnation of the doctrine of the Sadducees."

Truly, in Acts 23d, 8th, it is said "For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit." What is the force of this passage? The Sadducees, by denying a "resurrection," as a necessary consequence, denied the existence of "angels and spirits," thus predicating the existence of them upon their resurrection. There seems to be a hint here, that "angels" have attained to their present condition by a previous probation and resurrection from the dead. This idea receives support from the Mosaic account of Man's fall, &c. According to this view, the existence of "spirits" should be predicated on the resurrection of men. The saints, when raised, are termed the "spirits of just men made perfect." But this merely by the way.

"The Pharisees confess both." "Both" what? The term "both," refers to two only. But you say "here are three negative positions embraced by the Sadducees, and their opposite by the Pharisees, and on each of them, Paul declares himself a Pharisee."

Now the term "both," referring to two things only, must be applied to "angels and spirits," whose existence is predicated upon a resurrection, or else, if you apply it to "angels and spirits," you must leave out of the question the "resurrection," altogether! And, accordingly, we do find just such an idea among some of the Pharisaic Jews, who affirmed, "that the resurrection was passed, the soul having gone to heaven at death, and overthrow the faith of some."

But, waiving all this, did Paul affirm "himself a Pharisee" in the three particulars above noticed? He has not left us to infer his meaning, for in the 6th verse he tells us in what sense he is a Pharisee. He says—"I am a Pharisee—concerning the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." So there is no evidence that he was a Pharisee, believing in all the paganism of disembodied spirits, and "ghosts of frightful mien."

After asking what was "the creed of the Sadducees," you reply, "they denied a future existence for man, by denying both the resurrection of the body, and the separate existence of the soul, or spirit." Now, if you had finished the sentence at the term "body," you would have expressed the truth in the case, for the Sadducees truly "denied a future existence for man, by denying the resurrection of the body"—upon which that "existence" depends! But denying this, the other followed as a necessary conclusion.

2. Your second argument is founded on Mat. xxii. 23—32.

Now, be it remembered, the Sadducees affirmed there was no resurrection; (see 23d verse,) and consequently no future life for man. Death, with them, was an "eternal sleep;" and for the purpose of puzzling the Lord, they asked him—whose the woman shall be in the resurrection, for the seven had her? They did not ask whose wife she shall be in the intermediate state, or the state between death and the resurrection; but whose wife she shall be in the resurrection? The Lord replied, "ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection, (not in the state of the dead,) they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven;" thus predicating the angelic nature upon the resurrection. He continues, "but as concerning the resurrection of the dead, (not their separate existence,) have you not read that which was spoken to you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, (who live no more, as you suppose) but of the living;" that is, of those who shall live again by a resurrection, which you Sadducees deny. Such is the obvious meaning of the passage. You say "God is not the God of the dead"—that is, of those who are "really dead;" then by what logic will you make him the God of those who are half dead? Again you say, "God is only the God of the actually living;" but why prefix "really" and "actually" before "dead" and "living?" Do not the words express the ideas? Men are either dead or alive, and therefore the case stands thus:

1. God is not the God of the dead;
But Abraham is dead;
Therefore God is not the God of Abraham.
This is not the true position; let us try another.
2. Living men are not the subjects of a resurrection;

But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are living;
Therefore they will not be raised from the dead.

Are you willing to endorse this? Perhaps not; let us try again:

3. God is not the God of the dead, who live no more;

But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again;
Therefore God is the God of Abraham, &c.
This expresses the truth on the subject, and both of us can endorse it with all the heart!

I have no objection to your definition of the term resurrection—"to stand up, or live again." It is a re-living, or living again, and necessarily implies the previous death of the subject. No death, no re-surrection; no re-surrection, no future life.

You speak of "Abraham's resurrection to life and consciousness" as "ceasing to be a matter of rational expectation, unless his soul still exists in a conscious state." Really, I should like for you to help me to an understanding—a "rational" understanding of this sentence! In the first place, you endow Abraham with "life and consciousness" while dead, and then, strange to tell, raise him to "life and consciousness"! He will then have a double life and double consciousness! May we not say, that, if Abraham's soul exists in a state of "life and consciousness," his resurrection to "life and consciousness" ceases to be a matter of rational expectation? It would, indeed, be an absurd "expectation."

You then "submit it to the reason of the unbiassed, that if there be no soul, separate from the body, there is no such being as Abraham in existence." Further on you say, "There being no such person he cannot be raised from the dead, for the obvious reason that a being that does not exist, cannot have a resurrection."

Here you have precipitated yourself against the sharp rocks of skepticism, and cannot save yourself without "suffering loss."

If Abraham's soul is not living, you say he does not exist; and, consequently, he cannot be raised from the dead. This is your argument. Of course, then, the body of Abraham, to say nothing of his soul, has no existence; and this, according to your view, can never be raised: so that you are driven to the dreadful alternative of denying the resurrection of the body in toto! Then, if there be any resurrection, it must be affirmed of the spirit; but this, according to your view, is alive, and therefore cannot be the subject of a resurrection to life. So your view leads to a denial of the resurrection altogether. Here, then, we have this Pago-Christianized Theology to the life. The spirit or soul survives the body—this returns to dust, and ceases to exist—therefore it can never be raised—therefore the grave will never yield up its prey; but have the "victory"—therefore we can never sing, "O! grave where is thy victory!"—therefore the sea will never give up its dead—therefore death is an "eternal sleep"! From such theology good Lord deliver us! But this is the legitimate tendency of the popular doctrine. It leads the mind back to Infidelity and Paganism. I am sorry, truly so, to find friend Brewster advocating such views.

Again, you say, "the appeal to omnipotence will avail nothing, for omnipotence cannot do, what, in the nature of things, is contradictory and impossible." My good sir, you are in company with those Athenians who mocked when they heard Paul on the "resurrection of the dead," and with those to whom he said—"Why should it be thought incredible that God should raise the dead?" Is there anything in the "nature" of the resurrection "contradictory and impossible"? I am almost constrained to say—"You do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God;" for if the body has no existence, and cannot be raised, Paul erred when he said—"Our vile bodies shall be fashioned like his most glorious body." And, "if the spirit of Him who raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you."

But how can a body be "fashioned" when it has "no existence"? Or how can "mortal bodies" be made alive if they have no "existence"? This, according to your view, is "contradictory and impossible." The resurrection is, in a qualified sense, a new creation; but it is the reorganization of the former body. If this be not so, how is it, that we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive in body, the things he has done, whether good or bad? And how are they who "sleep in the dust of the earth to awake?" How is the "earth to cast out her dead?" as the Prophet says.

May I not adopt your language, and, with all the emphasis I can give it, declare that, if your view be correct, THE "RESURRECTION IS AN ABSURDITY?"

3d. Your third proof is Mat. 17: 2, on which I shall be brief. And,

1st. We may remark, that the whole transaction is a "vision," and does not necessarily involve the personal presence of Moses and Elijah. But,

2d. Granting they were there personally, what does it prove? Of Moses it is said that he died, and the Lord buried him. The man Moses died, and the man Moses was buried; and if he personally appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration, he must have been raised from the dead.

Of Elijah it is said he went up to heaven in a chariot of fire, and no difficulty is presented in his case; but how you invest him with a "resurrection body," I cannot conceive. Elijah was not the subject of a "resurrection," but a translation. Al! he left when he went up was his mantle, which he left as a legacy to Elisha. It is said that the "Devil disputed about the body of Moses," but we have no evidence that Elijah left his body as a legacy to his Satanic Majesty, and received another as he went up.

You say, "there is no proof that Moses was raised from the dead." The very fact of his appearing on the mount, is "proof" to my mind.

You say, "God sometimes assumes a body," &c. Where is the proof of this? The bodies of "angels" are not "assumed." They "appear as men," because this is their form. Man was made in their image. I regard it, therefore, as a "sheer assumption" on your part to deny the resurrection of Moses. If he personally appeared on the Mount, he was certainly raised, and his presence there would be the proof.

In conclusion you say, "On this side of the question I have now done."

O! that I could hope soon to have you on this side of the question, contending for incorruptibility, immortality and eternal life in Christ, by a resurrection from the dead!

Shall I not hear from you on the passages previously quoted? I have much additional testimony in store, and should like to have an opportunity of presenting it; if not in hope of changing your views, at least for the benefit of our readers. May the Lord bless us both, lead us into all truth, and give us an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, is the prayer of your sincere friend,

JNO. T. WALSH.

SCRIPTURE EXPOSITIONS.

EPHESIANS II. AND III.

VERSES 11 and 12. Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands. That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.

The apostle having previously clearly stated their high calling, and the exalted standing to which they had now attained, next gives them a word of caution. "Wherefore remember," call to mind, recollect—"that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh"—that is, were not of the nation in covenant with God—"remember that at that time ye were without Christ,"—Christ being of the Jews, and not previously having been proclaimed to them—"being aliens"—strangers to, ignorant of, separate—"from the commonwealth of Israel," not citizens; and as a consequence—"strangers from the covenants of promise,"—not allied to God in covenant—"having no hope"—of the resurrection from the dead; or, of the adoption of children, "and without God in the world,"—atheists in the world; having no knowledge of the true God or the nature of his service, nor of that glorious state to which God designed to raise the holy and unblameable in love.

VERSE 13. But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

"But now in Christ Jesus"—by the regenerating power of "the word of truth," which is the seed in producing a union with Christ, who is the truth, as well as the life; so that now—"ye who sometime were afar off"—that is, aliens—"are made nigh"—no longer aliens, but brought to be worshippers of the true God—"by the blood of Christ," Christ was of the Jews by blood. When his blood was shed, or his life received by descent from Abraham was given up, his relation to them, "after the flesh," being dissolved, he enters into relation with persons out of all nations by the Spirit of Life, or through the spirit by which he lives forever more, and which raised him up from the dead.

VERSES 14—18. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby. And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one spirit unto the Father.

"For he is our peace"—i. e., he is the author of it—"who hath made both"—Jews and Gentiles—"one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition,"—the wall of division—"having abolished"—made useless, rendered worthless—"in his flesh"—i. e., in his sufferings—"the enmity"—that which was the cause of the division between Jews and Gentiles—"even the law of commandments contained in ordinances"—those under which the Jews had heretofore been held; which by the sufferings and death of Christ were now rendered worthless. In bringing about the death of Christ both Jews and Gentiles were active agents—united in his crucifixion—and could therefore have no just cause of complaint if they were all placed upon the same footing. The purpose of God was, now that Christ had made useless the law of ordinances—"to make in himself [Christ] of twain [Jews and Gentiles] one new man"—bringing both into union with himself, so that they should constitute one body, while he [Christ] would be the head of this "new" and spiritual creation; thus constituting "one new man;" as perfectly united together as the head and body of the one animal man—"so making peace"—or concord, union, harmony, between those who before were in discord:—and that he might reconcile both [Jews and Gentiles] unto God in one body by the cross"—by his death—"having slain the enmity thereby"—the animosity existing between them; that is, his condemnation and death was the occasion of the hostile parties uniting together, [see Acts 4: 27,] as some great and deeply interesting event, not unfrequently, unites men from extreme points, as well as abolishing the law of commandments—"and came"—by his ambassadors—"preaching"—proclaiming—"peace"—reconciliation—"to you who were afar off"—who were aliens, i. e., Gentiles—"and to them that were nigh"—the Jews: "for through him [Christ] we both [Jews and Gentiles] have access," admission, "by one spirit"—even that spirit which was upon Christ our head without measure—"unto the Father." Being united with Christ as a branch to the vine, or to keep to the figure of the apostle, as the members of the one body are united with the head and partake of whatever life animates that, so all the members in Christ have access through their head, by the spirit of life in him, to the Father, and in no other way: for, saith the Savior, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

VERSES 19—22. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God: And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone: in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

"Ye"—Gentile Christians—"are no more strangers and foreigners" as ye were once—"but fellow-citizens"—that is, are united under one head and system of government and favor—"with the saints"—the holy ones who first hoped in Christ; [see chap. 1: 12,]—"and of the household" family—"of God." The apostle now changes the figure to a building—"And are built upon"—rest firmly on—"the foundation"—the word of truth, the gospel of their salvation, [chap. 1: 13,] proclaimed—"of the apostles"—messengers of Christ, "and prophets"—either those of the Old Testament, or those of the New, or both—"Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone"—that without which there would be neither union or strength in the building; and he was that of which prophets and apostles all testified who spake of salvation for men; and which was chosen of God to be the head or foundation of the new, or spiritual creation—"in whom all the building"—the whole body of saints, "fitly framed together"—each part adapted to its place and in its proper position. Any part of a building out of its place weakens the whole: but properly adjusted it becometh, or—"growth unto a holy temple in"—or, on—"the Lord"—he being the head stone, or foundation—"in whom," or, on which—"ye also are builded together"—built up in company, each forming a part of the structure—"for an habitation"—an abode, residence, a home—"of God through"—en—"by the Spirit." The church, the spiritual building, is designed of God as the home, the abode, the residence of his Spirit: first resting in Christ without measure, and from him flowing into every soul built on him; thus making them partakers of the divine nature; and, ultimately, exalting them to the immortal honor of a tabernacle, for God, that shall not be taken down, and eternally be that temple through which he will manifest his glory before other created intelligences: and thence "the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints;" see chap. 1: 18. Let us see to it, that none of us put forth a hand to mar or injure any person, even one of the least, composing this building, or that God is endeavoring to bring into its structure. The least of all may be as important, in its place, as the greatest; and, indeed, fills a place that the greatest could not occupy.

CHAP. III. VERSES 1—7. For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles; if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; as I wrote afore in few words: whereby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit: that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power.

The first verse seems to be the commencement of an exhortation which is interrupted to the close of the chapter, and then resumed at the first verse following. Paul, for preaching the word of truth, the good news of salvation, to the Gentiles, was grievously persecuted by the Jews, and at length is found a "prisoner" at Rome, from whence he sent out this epistle. He calls to their mind the fact that he was a prisoner for their sakes, on their account; and then reverts to his call to preach Jesus Christ to them, and says, "If ye have heard of the dispensation"—of the charge or trust committed—"of the grace"—favor—"of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation" the Lord Jesus unveiled himself to him, so that he saw him, and received his mission directly from Christ; and in such manner as precluded all doubt on the subject of his call and work: see Acts 26: 12—18, and 1 Corth. 15: 8—9; at this time, Jesus—"made known unto me the mystery"—the secret—"which in other ages"—or previous dispensations—"was not made known as it is now revealed"—uncovered, brought to light, rendered conspicuous—"unto the holy apostles and prophets"—persons who communicated truths directly by inspiration of God: and such there were in the days of the apostles: see Acts 11: 27, 28, and 13: 1, 2; and other places. To these prophets and apostles God made known clearly—"by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body"—with the Jews—"and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel"—which promise is, that all, without regard to nation, that become holy and blameless in love, shall have "the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself," or, be made partakers of his incorruptibility and endless life: of which glorious tidings, Paul says—"I was made a minister"—or, a servant, to the Gentiles—"by the effectual working of his power;" see again Acts 26: 12—17.

VERSE 8. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

"Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints"—or, holy ones, that is, the least of all the apostles, as is evident from 1 Corth. 15: 8, 9, which see—"is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." Christ has riches; and they are unsearchable, and so extensive that they cannot be explored, nor exhausted. Let us dwell here a moment. What are we called to? First, a union with Christ: to become his bride. Of course, partners in his treasures, honors, and whatever belongs to him. Let this truth be proclaimed. But who and what are we? Mortal, corruptible, dying creatures; whose foundation is in the dust; and all of whose tendencies are to return to dust again; with no principle of immortality or endless life in ourselves. To such creatures Christ is proclaimed, as seeking to bring us into a relation to himself of the nearest and most interesting character. Men are allured by the charm of riches, gold, inexhaustible mines; that wakes up their whole being, and they eagerly inquire what it is, where it is, how they can find it, how they may possess themselves of those treasures; and if they find there is even a chance for success in the pursuit, they enter at once on the expedition, hazarding all the labor, toil, risk, suffering, or privation, that may be attending the enterprise. Now, says the apostle, I come to proclaim to you riches unsearchable, a mine that is inexhaustible in Christ. He is the Son of the living God, and heir of God: heir of his incorruptibility, glory, endless life, and whatever pertains to the fulness of God. He proposes to share these riches with us: and in exchange for this short and fleeting life to give us an endless life: instead of these corruptible bodies to give us incorruptible ones: instead of the dishonor of consuming in the grave, by worms, to raise us to crowns of glory that fade not away: in a word, to give us riches as much more glorious, valuable, and durable than the richest diamonds, or the most refined and pure gold, as they exceed the most worthless and loathsome object that earth bears upon its surface. But all comparison fails, and we feel the deepest sense of weakness in the attempt, and leave it to your own reflections to follow up the contemplation of the honor, glory, and riches that are so freely offered to us in Jesus Christ.

VERSES 9—12. And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. According to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord: in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

"To make all see"—to enlighten all: not the Jews only, but those of every nation—"what the fellowship"—participation, communion—"of the mystery"—the secret of the calling of the Gentiles, "which from the beginning of the world"—or, ages—"hath been hid in God"—not known as now, though in the purpose of God—"who created"—caused to exist, formed, instituted, or, formed anew, regenerated, renovated; [it may relate here entirely to the "one new man," chap 2: 15, or the one "body," verse 6; the regeneration committed to Christ,]—"all things by"—through, or, in—"Jesus Christ: to the intent that"—in order that—"now unto principalities"—authorities—

"and powers"—rulers—"in heavenly things"—in things relating to the kingdom of God, or the regeneration—"might be known by"—or in—"the church the manifold"—the immense, the infinite, "wisdom of God." The whole scheme of creation, redemption, and renovation, is one of boundless wisdom; faintly manifested at first, and but imperfectly understood until after the death, resurrection and ascension of Christ, and the consequent outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the further gift of prophecy in the days of the apostles, by which was made known, vastly more perfectly than in any previous dispensation, the boundless wisdom of God in the work of renovation, progressing to a completeness and perfection never before conceived of by the sons of men; not even the most enlightened, viz., the Jews; and which even the first Christians, not excepting the apostles, were slow to learn: so much so that the Saviour said, "Oh unwise and slow of heart to believe;" and Peter had to be taught in a vision, by a sheet let down from heaven, even after his baptism of the Holy Spirit: and our Lord Jesus had personally to appear to Paul with light from heaven that overpowered him, before the church fully understood, or engaged in earnest to carry out God's designs of mercy and salvation to the Gentiles; which design was not new, for it was "according to the eternal purpose," according to the determination before the ages: that is, before either the Christian or Jewish ages; and as expressed, or set forth, exposed to view, [for so the original word here translated purpose, signifies,] to Abraham, when God informed him, that in his seed, which is Christ, all the families of the earth should be blessed: this was that "which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord," that "the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and partakers of his promise in Christ Jesus;" verse 6: "in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him." Through the promise of God, and the knowledge of his purpose to make us, Gentiles, partakers in the adoption of children, we now have access to God, with a firm reliance upon his mercy to us, who are in Christ, united to Christ, in the one body. Glorious privilege, glorious calling, glorious hope: and let the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ have glory now and evermore, through our head and deliverer, the Son of God.

IS THIS AGE FINAL, OR PREPARATORY? No. 1.

Most Christians are looking for a glorious state of triumph for the Church of Christ on this earth. Do the Scriptures warrant such an expectation? Let the word of truth decide the question, and not our prejudices or fancies. We go back to the time of Moses; Numb. 14: 21, "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Here is a most solemn oath of the living God. Has the promise made by this oath ever yet been fulfilled? Surely, none can be at a loss for an answer. How did the Psalmist understand this subject? See, Psalms 22: 27, "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." Has this prophecy ever had its fulfilment? Certainly not. But he tells us when it shall be, viz: When "the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is Governor among the nations;"

verse 28. At that time it is said "a seed shall serve him: it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. They shall come [the seed,] and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this." Here is a people to be born, after the kingdom is the Lord's, who are to be taught the works God has wrought in subjecting the nations. This portion of Scripture needs no further comment to show that the events spoken of are future, and they are not "conditional;" a phrase much used by those who, though not designedly, are, in fact, turning the Scriptures into "a cunningly devised fable."

That we do not misunderstand the Psalmist in this matter, let us look at Psalm 72, where speaking of Messiah's reign, he says, "The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him." At the 17th verse he adds:—"His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed." In view of that glorious period he breaks out in praise and prayer, verses 18 and 19, "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and amen." These are no dark sayings; but full, clear and plain. It does not require a Solomon to show that this prophecy is unconditional, future in its accomplishment, and before the new earth dispensation. See verse 8, "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Compare this with Rev. 21: 1—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away: and there was no more sea." The two periods are as distinct as language can make them; and it seems to us, the impartial mind cannot fail to see it.

Let us next examine Psalms. 102: 13-22, "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. This shall be written for the generation to come: and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord. For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth. To hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death. To declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem. When the people are gathered together and the kingdoms, to serve the Lord." Here the language is clear. It is at a time when the Lord personally appears in his glory. This was written for a future period: and the people which shall be created shall then praise the Lord. The Prophet Habakkuk says: "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," Hab. 2: 14. This certainly relates to the future.

IN THAT AGE, THE JEWS MISSIONARIES.

The Prophet records from the mouth of the Lord, Zech. 8: 21-22. "And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord." Here is a prophecy too plain to be mistaken. The next verse shows that this is to be at a time when the Jews will be missionaries to "the nations." The objector may say "Jews are the spiritual seed." If that is admitted it does not in the least affect the argument; because there are those "of the nations" who are not Jews; and these "take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, we will go with you for we have heard God is with you." We understand, of course, that it is the literal Jews that are spoken of in this verse; and we believe the remnant of them, who escape the terrible judgments with which that period will be ushered in, will be converted at the manifestation of Christ personally to them as he manifested himself to Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus. At that manifestation they will weep and mourn as described, Zech. 12: 10-14; and it will not be the mourning of despair, but of genuine repentance for having so long rejected their true Messiah, the crucified Jesus: "in that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness;" Zech. 13: 1: and the iniquity of that land will be "removed in one day," see Zech. 3: 9. This people, thus saved, not changed to immortality, but among the "left of the nations," [Zech. 14: 16,] will be the first or chief of the nations, during the next age or dispensation, and will be employed as suggested by the text, Zech. 8: 23, that is, as missionaries, successful missionaries to "all languages of the nations." Under their labors among those left of the nations, "many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord."

A QUESTION.

In Heb. 2: 14, the apostle, speaking of Christ, says: "that through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." Again, in John 3: 8, it is said, "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."

Here the two inspired witnesses speak too plain to be misunderstood. They mean simply this, that Christ will destroy the devil and his works."

Will some one that believes in the immortality, and never ending sins and torments of those persons that die in their sins,—and the immortality and never ending sins and torments of the devil, tell me how, and when, Christ will bring about the great event of destroying the devil and his works?

DOES IT DO ANY GOOD?

We have heard so many sneers from a certain quarter against the view we entertain on the immortality question—and it has been so significantly said "I never heard of the doctrine doing any good," that we have concluded to give these ignorant persons two items, among many within our knowledge, of good done by the hated doctrine.

Oswego, Ind., April 1st, 1849.

BR. STORRS:—For your encouragement I would state, that the "Six Sermons" have been blessed in bringing some dear souls to the correct knowledge of Bible Truth. God has been pleased to make a single copy, when introduced into a neighbourhood, a pioneer for the herald of salvation to follow. In this way numbers have been led to know, that sin and death came through the first Adam, and life and immortality came through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and that God does not send death to gather his saints unto himself, but, that he will send Jesus Christ to gather them at the second advent, who will present the entire church; as the glorious bride, without spot or wrinkle, unto God his Father, arrayed in beauty, possessing immortality and incorruptibility, whose inheritance will be in the new heavens and new earth—the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and unfading. Hence, a need of the second coming of Christ is felt, and in this manner a way is opened for proclaiming this blessed doctrine.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

DEAR BROTHER STORRS:—It has now been about two years since your "Six Sermons" first caught my eye. They called in question a doctrine, the truth of which I considered of vast importance; viz, the immortality of the soul: for upon this, and the doctrines unavoidably growing out of it, I had based all my hopes of future bliss and glory. I was a Universalist. Believing that all men are a compound of mortality and immortality, destined at the death of the body to ascend in their nobler nature, which was a part of Deity himself, to his own right hand to enjoy his favor forevermore. This, in my estimation, being true, I decided that God would not punish sinners with eternal torments in hell forever, for in so doing he must of necessity punish a part of himself. I was preparing, as fast as my circumstances would permit, to proclaim this, to me, glorious doctrine. But before I had completed my investigation of the "Six Sermons," I became fully satisfied that the entire system [of natural immortality] was based upon the serpent's first lie,—"Ye shall not surely die." I rejected it at once, and was led as I believe into a knowledge of the true source of immortality; and to see that God would render unto every one according to their deeds. "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Since that time I have felt it my duty to proclaim, according to the ability given, life and immortality through Jesus at his coming and kingdom. During the past year I have travelled through a part of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio: and among those looking for the coming and kingdom of Jesus, I have found but three, who do not believe with you in respect to the nature and destiny of man: one in Illinois, one in Indiana, and one in Ohio. I believe these truths should be kept in the front of all preaching; for they are the fundamental doctrines of the Bible. They strike a death blow to Universalism in all its parts. I have found in conversing with Universalists, since I embraced my present view, that they are entirely unprepared to meet these truths. The weapons they use so successfully against eternal torments fall lifeless when tried against the Bible view of the destruction of the wicked.

Yours, in hope of Eternal Life,
D. P. HALL.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—We have concluded to say a few words as to the prospects of our paper; and especially as some, even of our friends, from our silence and through insinuations of others, have been led to think that the Examiner is amply sustained. We abhor the everlasting begging and dunning practiced by some.

From our subscribers we have not received funds sufficient to pay our printer for the present volume; and unless we can realize at least four hundred more new subscribers during this year, we shall be exceedingly embarrassed in finishing the volume for 1849, and shall be plunged in debt, without having received a cent for our personal labors. If half our present subscribers will send us two new ones, each, with the pay in advance, we shall be able to finish the year not only free from debt to the printer, but also a trifle for our own services; at which you will rejoice, if we have contributed anything to your profit. No subscription will be received for a less time than one volume. All the numbers for 1848 can be had if desired.

Any person who will send us two new subscribers, with pay in current money, free of expense to us, we will send a copy of Dobney, in paper cover, without charge. Dobney on Future Punishment, or the end of the Wicked, is the most grand and interesting work that has yet appeared. If any prefer the Six Sermons instead of Dobney's work, as a premium for the two new subscribers, we will send three copies of them. We now leave the subject with our friends, to do what they judge best and right.

DR. JOHN T. WALSH.—All letters to him should be addressed PHILADELPHIA, Pa., No. 63 Ogden St.

TOUR EAST, WITH VARIOUS OBSERVATIONS.—Our apology for the lateness of the Examiner this month, is our absence. After our last went to press we concluded not to issue the May number till our return. We left Philadelphia March 28th at six o'clock in the morning, and arrived in New York City, 100 miles, at half past one, P. M., where we were welcomed to the hospitable home of our old friend Henry F. Johnson. A meeting had been given out for the evening in American Hall, Broadway, where, notwithstanding the wet weather, we had the satisfaction of seeing many old friends, and a good assemblage of attentive hearers, to whom we spoke "of things new and old;" and again in the same place the next evening, Saturday, March 31st, we left New York at 8 o'clock in the morning, by the cars; going north and east we passed through Bridgeport, New Haven, and Hartford in Connecticut, Springfield, and Worcester in Mass., principal towns and cities on the route, and arrived at Boston about six o'clock in the evening, having travelled about 230 miles in ten hours, including stops. This is winging our way fast enough for any age but the present. So has steam entered into the composition of men's minds, in these days, that the means of locomotion are altogether too tardy, and invention is at its "wit's end" to see if some more expeditious means of conveyance cannot be brought into use, whereby the land of promise [California!] can be gained in "two days" by travelling the heavens above instead of the earth beneath. Yes, they seem determined to travel in the air, and are quite confident that they can succeed, and thus all but annihilate distance, making a pleasant ride, above the clouds, to California or England in "two days." Truly, "man" was "made upright;" but we "have sought out many inventions." But all these movements indicate the closing up of the present age, as truly as the attempt to build Babel indicated the confusion of tongues, whereby the devices of men were overthrown to establish the purposes of God.

Sabbath, April 1st, we preached three times in Chapman Hall, Boston, to an attentive congregation. During the week we attended several meetings and preached. Sabbath the 8th, we again spoke to the people three times; and Thursday following, being the State Fast of Mass., we preached twice. In our discourses we took up the signs of the times; the saint's inheritance; the locality of the Kingdom of God; the prospects of the Jews; the nature of the coming age; and the immortality question; as well as practical holiness, or the importance of being Christ-like in our lives and conversation. True, we had to touch all these subjects but slightly, time not allowing us to enlarge upon them; but we have the satisfaction of knowing that what we did say made the people anxious to hear more; and we were strongly importuned to remove to that city, to preach statelily; but we were compelled to decline, believing that the providence of God called us elsewhere. We may again visit the friends there, as we were urged to do if we could not take up our residence with them. The house of Br. Prescott Dickinson was our home while there; and many have proved his hospitalities as well as we. From Boston we went to Lowell, the city of Factories. Here we were cheered by the cordial greeting of our beloved brother, the "eminent Methodist preacher," Merrit Bates of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America." We felt some as Paul did when he met the brethren at "Appi-forum, and The Three Taverns" on his way to Rome, and "thanked God, and took courage." It was truly refreshing to meet with one minister of the religion of Jesus Christ who manifests its spirit, and is far removed from the narrow spirit which characterises nearly all religionists of every name and party. Here also we met our old friend and brother Wm. H. Brewster, Br. Walsh's polemical opponent, who is also a minister in the Wesleyan Methodist connection, and preaching in Lowell. Our interview with him was of a most pleasant character, and contrasted amazingly with the narrow spirit of most of our theological opponents. Differ as we may and do on some subjects, we felt that the bonds of christian friendship and fellowship were strong and unbroken. We gave Br. Brewster a copy of Dobney on Future Punishment, and since learn that he was highly pleased with the "first part," which was all that he had read at the time. We hope and trust he may be equally well pleased with the "Second part;" and if so, we doubt not, he will become the powerful advocate of "the faith he once destroyed."

We were invited by the official members of the Wesleyan church, to whom Br. Bates ministers, to preach to them on the immortality question. We gave them five Discourses on the subject—two during the week, and three on Sabbath, April 15th. The word spoken was listened to with deep attention. We had both Methodist and Universalist ministers to hear. Br. Bates openly avowed his belief in our view of the end of the wicked; and we doubt not he will be fully sustained by the church and congregation to which he ministers in Lowell; he had preached one discourse to them on the question before our arrival, which made them the more anxious to hear us. Br. Bates went to the Annual Conference of the Wesleyan church, for New England, while we were in Lowell; and though all knew his views on the immortality subject no objection was made to passing his character; the Conference thus manifesting a noble spirit of toleration which does them much honor, and honors the religion they profess. Several copies of Dobney on Future Punishment were disposed of at that Conference, and also of our "Six Sermons." The church at Lowell unanimously requested Br. Bates to return and labor among them another year: Br. Brewster also returns to his congregation in Lowell. Our visit to that city was highly gratifying and encouraging. We parted with the friends there, particularly with Br. Bates, with much regret: it was painful to take the final grasp of that brother's hand, with whom we had enjoyed such a refreshing season; but, we shall meet again; so proclaims the voice of faith. A history of that brother's trials and persecutions, in years past, for the truth's sake, is a chapter written in the "book of remembrance;" and will not be forgotten when God shall "make up" his "jewels." He has a part to act, in future; for which may our Lord fully prepare him, and strengthen him mightily in its performance. Eight years has his mind been exercised more or less on the immortality question. When he was Presiding Elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the Troy Conference, we sent him a copy of "Three Letters," the first thing we ever published on the subject. Those Letters were originally written to the late Rev. Orange Scott, afterwards founder of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America," and which he often told us he was unable to answer. It was by his advice we published them; though his name was suppressed as the person to whom they were written. In the spring of 1841 we sent a copy of those Letters to Br. Bates, and the seed then sown has never ceased to vegetate, though sometimes it has lain comparatively dormant, and then starting forth with fresh vigor, till at length it has appeared in strength, and is vigorously manifesting itself.

The "Three Letters" became the basis of the "Six Sermons," which were first published in Albany, N. Y. in the spring of 1842, and before we had any thing to do with "Millerism." We make this statement because that theory has often been charged with being the author of the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked as advocated by us in our "Six Sermons." But there was never any connection between the one and the other; and Mr. Miller always opposed our views on the immortality question. It is true that we were drawn into Mr. Miller's theory for a time, but renounced all his peculiarities more than four years ago, and some of them more than five years since; and have had no connection with his peculiar views for more than four years past; the leaders in that system are among our opposers.

From Lowell we returned to Boston, and from thence to Springfield, where we were welcomed by many friends, particularly Brethren R. E. Ladd and Moses Stoddard, good men and true, who stand for the right and truth at whatever cost. Sabbath, April 22d, we preached morning and afternoon in Dwight's Hall; and in the evening in the Universalist Church, on the subject,—"No immortality to man except through Jesus Christ." Here we had a large and attentive congregation, to whom we opened and expounded the Scriptures as to the fact, that the death threatened Adam was not a moral one, but a literal dissolution of his entire being; from which there is no recovery except by Christ, and no immortality only by a union with Christ, and being made partakers of the divine nature in him; or, without holiness—being made Christ-like. After the sermon, full liberty was given to question us, and we answered all that chose to ask; and there were several, which gave new interest to the subject.

While in Springfield we visited the grave of O. Scott, to whom we refer in our previous remarks. He sleeps in the Cemetery, near the Methodist Church. Near two years have passed away since he has "slept in the dust of the earth," awaiting "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God" to waken him to meet his descending Lord. Many reflections rushed upon our mind as we gazed upon the spot of earth where he lies whose warm hand we had often pressed—whose animating voice and countenance had often cheered us—by whose side we had often stood in doing battle against oppression—and who, first of all ministers of the Gospel, encouraged us to proclaim to the world our views of no immortality to wicked men. Our emotions, as we stood by his grave, can be more easily imagined than described. We did not indeed fancy an immortal spirit fled to some imaginary heaven; but we did feel an oppression come over our mind that he with whom we were once so intimate in active life was now before us, but could not hear our voice, nor mingle his affections with ours. No, silence reigned: but hope was there; and that hope was in our heart that he who lay before us in the silent dust would, ere long, hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth to eternal life. We reluctantly took a last look of his dusty bed, and turning away, could scarce restrain our tears: it had a softening and chastening influence on our affections which still remains; and we shall often reflect upon that scene, and live in hope that we shall meet again where death is known no more.

From Springfield we travelled west to Albany, N. Y., the place where we first preached our "Six Sermons" in 1842. At Albany we now preached three times, and trust the Lord will bless the word spoken to the good of such as heard it. Our interview with old friends was of a refreshing character. Some, however, were scattered abroad, and some had fallen asleep. We here became acquainted with Eld. Jasper Hazen, Editor of the Christian Palladium, a periodical of the Christian connection; he is Editor also of the American Christian Messenger. We were refreshed by the kind and brotherly spirit he manifested towards us. We cannot but love men, who, though they differ from our views, manifest that they are in possession of a brotherly heart. "Love is the fulfilling of the law;" without this all our professions and knowledge are vain. Eld. Hazen was among our hearers while in Albany, and we feel a pleasure in the remembrance of our interview with him.

On our return to Philadelphia, we spent the first Sabbath in May in the city of New York, and preached three times in the American Hall; but the day was one of the most rainy of the season, so that few attended.

Now, after an absence of six weeks, we are once more at home in our "own hired house." Our Heavenly Father has kindly watched over us in our travels, so that no harm has befallen us in passing over near a thousand miles by steam power. He has brought us to our habitation in peace, and preserved ours in safety during the period of our absence; and we now desire to record His loving-kindness and tender mercy. To Him be glory and praise through Jesus Christ, His Son, our Saviour and Hope.

THE TRUE WESLEYAN—IMMORTALITY.

Since our last paper went to press, the Editor of the True Wesleyan has commenced a series of articles on "The Immortality of the Soul." In the first article he stated the reasons for discussing the question, and the conditions on which replies would be admitted into the Wesleyan: one of those conditions was, if the respondent be an editor he shall publish both sides in his paper. We had a personal and friendly interview with the Editor of the Wesleyan, and an understanding that we were to republish in the Examiner no more of his articles than we might be disposed to reply to. With this arrangement we left our response to his article "No. 2," with him, on our way to Boston. Soon after we arrived at Boston we received a note from the Editor of the Wesleyan, saying that he had concluded to have his articles stereotyped, and make a book of them; and as such a work should contain a reply to all the objections urged against his views, and as those replies would most naturally arise out of his rejoinders to ours, he desired that we should first publish in the Examiner, and then he would copy from our paper and respond when through with his regular course of argument: this would enable him, with least expense, to stereotype his rejoinders to complete the book. We wrote him in reply, that we did not wish to oppose any obstacle in the way of his book being got up in the way most convenient to himself; but still, thought his new proposition would give him a double advantage: first, the influence of his entire argument would be on the minds of the readers of the Wesleyan before the first of my replies would appear; and then, second, each of my articles was to be accompanied with his rejoinder to prevent the minds of his readers from losing whatever impression his series of articles might have made: and besides, the time that would elapse from the time his articles were published to the appearance of mine, would make it necessary for me to quote more from his than if they followed immediately. Under these considerations we requested him to return the article we left him, and now present our readers with his article from the Wesleyan, of March 24th, with our reply: it is as follows:

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.—NO. II.

THE IMMATERIALITY OF THE SOUL.

The Scriptures alone can certainly and satisfactorily settle the question before us, in the minds of christians, yet there may be arguments drawn from reason and philosophy which have much force; and as these may assist in coming at a right understanding of the Scriptures, we will commence with them, and close with a direct appeal to the Bible. We will commence with the spiritual nature of the soul. The soul or mind is not matter but spirit, and of course forms no part of the body. This raises an important issue with one class who deny the immortality of the soul. There are some who deny the existence of a soul or spirit in man, to be contradistinguished from the body, and insist that what we call the mind is a mere function of the brain, and that the brain itself is intelligent.

So far as the researches of philosophy extend, there are but two primary substances in the universe, and these are MATTER and SPIRIT. All we know of these substances is certain properties and phenomena which they exhibit. Matter is known to possess the properties of Impenetrability, Extension, Figure, Divisibility, Indestructibility, Inertia, Attraction. Spirit is that which thinks, perceives, remembers, reasons, wills, and is susceptible of love, hatred, joy and grief. The former of these properties are found in our bodies, in common with all other matter; the latter constitute the phenomena of the mind. It is not reasonable to suppose that properties so opposite to each other, inhere in the same substance, and the only rational conclusion is that matter is not mind, and that mind is not matter. There must therefore be in man an intelligent spirit, which forms no part of the body, and this is what we call the soul. We reason upon the modern and generally admitted principles of natural philosophy, and unless we are greatly mistaken, the whole system of philosophy will have to be exploded to invalidate our arguments.

The admitted properties of matter, and the admitted properties of mind, cannot inhere in, and be essential properties of the same substance. A few illustrations will make this plain. The body is matter, every part of it is matter; the bones are matter, the flesh is matter, the blood is matter, the nerves are matter, the brain is matter, and all the secretions are matter, every part is matter, and the whole is matter, and to every part and to the whole belong the properties of matter above described. Where these properties inhere, as they do in the body, the properties of mind cannot inhere.

Inertia, which is an essential property of matter, cannot inhere in the same substance with will or volition, which is an essential property of mind. Inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion, or self-action; matter acting only as it is acted upon: will or volition is that property of mind which renders it capable of self-determination and self-action. Now as matter can only act as it is acted upon, and as mind has the power of self-action, they cannot be the same substance,—matter cannot be mind, mind cannot be matter. Again, matter can only be moved by physical force; matter acts on matter by contact, and one material body cannot act on another material body, only as their surfaces come in contact; but mind is acted upon by motives, and acts from motives, and mind acts on mind through the medium of motives without physical contact. This proves as clear as a sun-beam that matter and mind are not the same.

To insist in opposition to the above view, that mind is matter; that intelligence and volition are its inherent properties, and consequently that man has no soul, which forms no part of his body, must subvert the admitted principles of philosophy. Philosophy insists that inertia is an essential property of matter; man's body is matter, as shown above, and yet it exhibits locomotive powers, and is seen acting without any visible agent acting upon it, and hence the doctrine of the inertia of matter must be given up, or we must admit that there is a rational soul inhabiting in the body, which controls it, moves it, and guides it. We see a steam engine in motion, and we know that the power of motion does not reside in any part of the machine; that it acts only as it is acted upon. We know that the steam propels it, but we know at the same time that the steam acts only as it is acted upon; that there is an intelligent, reasonable agent that directs the whole.

So with the body; it is an animal machine, the bones are studs and braces to support the frame, and are levers for the purpose of mechanical action; the muscles, by their contractions and distensions, operate on the bones and set the machinery in motion; but the muscles have no intelligence, or volition, and when the machine is in order, they are under the control of, and are guided by the mind. The foot or hand cannot will to move; the eye cannot will to open or shut. This our own consciousness proves. Let any man try to will with his foot or hand; and his own consciousness, which is the highest proof possible, will tell him that there is no power to will in his foot or hand. Man can will, and may be conscious of willing to move his foot, but at the same time he is conscious that his foot does not will, and that he does not will with his foot, but that he, his mind, wills concerning it. The muscles are put in motion by a power superior to themselves, which must be intelligent. Now what is this power? Those who deny that man has a soul, which is no part of the body, and which is an immaterial spirit, say that the brain is this self-determining, controlling and guiding power. This we deny on the ground that it is matter, and only matter, and possesses only the properties and powers of matter. If it be said that there is something in or associated with the brain which is not matter, which is superior to matter, the whole argument is given up, for that is just what we contend for, and that superior something which is not matter, we call the soul. If it be said that the brain is only matter, then however refined it may be, it possesses only the properties of matter, one of which is inertia, directly the reverse of self-operation. The brain then cannot act only as it is acted upon, and we come back to the question, what is this superior power that acts the muscles in motion, when we will to move the foot or the hand? If it now be said that it is the brain, we ask what power acts upon the brain, causing it to act on the muscles? The brain being matter, can act only as acted upon. We have then got to give up the first principles of Natural Philosophy, or seek for some higher cause of the phenomenon of motion. We allow that the muscles operate on the bones, that the brain operates on the muscles, through the nerves, all the nerves and spinal marrow terminating in the brain; but we insist at the same time, that there is an intelligent soul which acts on the brain, or it would never act. This doctrine being admitted, the phenomena of matter and mind are made to harmonize without involving any philosophical contradiction, or absurdity; deny it, and the principles of natural philosophy, which past ages have developed and matured, are thrown back into chaos, and we have to begin, de novo, and grope our way in search of first principles.

The above view accords with our own consciousness. Every man is conscious of thinking, but we are not conscious of thinking with any part of our body, not even the brain. That the head is the seat of the intelligence, no rational man can doubt; we are conscious that the thinking operation is carried on within the head, but no man is conscious that his brains think. The rational soul is mysteriously united to the body, and the brain is doubtless the point of union, and constitutes the medium through which the soul holds communion with the physical world without. The fact that this union is mysterious constitutes no objection, for if we deny it, there will be as great a mystery involved in the idea that the whole mental phenomena is the result of properties inherent in matter, and found only in the brain, in contradistinction from all other matter.

RESPONSE TO ARTICLE "No. II."

BR. LEE.—As you have kindly granted me the use of the Wesleyan to respond to your articles on Immortality, I hope to do you the justice to keep to the conditions you have specified in your last number; and I earnestly pray that the Father of Lights may give us both understanding, and guide us into truth. Whatever may be the result of our controversy, I truly desire that we may be able so to conduct it as to show that we can, if we must, differ in love.

The philosophical part of the question interests me but little, and hence, upon that part, I shall probably say but little. I perfectly agree with you that "the Scriptures alone can settle the question before us." The facts of inspiration must determine what is the constitution of man. Philosophers have never yet come to an agreement among themselves on this subject; and their speculations may well be termed "legion." Their imaginings have mainly grown out of the notion that there are "two substances;" though in that they were not always agreed. Bishop Berkly, it seems, adopted the notion which amounts to this, viz: "matter does not exist." Berkly, indeed, calls man a substance, but then he is an incorporeal substance. He, and Plato before him, regarded motion and intellect as real and independent existences, and not as qualities of matter; this doubtless led him to his conclusion as to the non-existence of matter, inasmuch as we see neither motion nor intellect except in connection with matter. Locke declares, we do not know what matter is; and endeavors to prove from this fact, that we do know what immaterial substance is! Truly, "the world by wisdom knew not" man, any more than it did "God."

The Double Substance theory is that from which you reason on the question under discussion. So far as I am concerned, I wish it understood that what constitutes the being of God does not enter into this controversy. We agree "THAT HE IS;" but what He is, beyond the fact that He is Spirit, I shall not attempt to define. Whatever He is, it proves nothing as to what man is.

You tell us, "so far as the researches of philosophy extend, there are but two primary substances in the universe, and these are matter and spirit." The term "primary" implies secondary "substances." What are these? Are they neither matter nor spirit? Among your definitions of matter is "indestructibility; but you say "every part of the body is matter." Do you really believe "every part of the body" is "indestructible?"

Again, are electricity and light matter? and do they possess the property of "inertia?" "The whole system of philosophy" is "exploded" if the properties of matter, as you have defined them, pertain not to these.

"Inertia, which is an essential property of matter," you tell us, "cannot inhere in the same substance with will or volition, which is an essential property of mind." But, is it not a fact, that the mind "inheres" in the "brain," which, you say, is "matter?" and hence, is it not a fact, that mind, will and volition, "inhere" in matter?

You say again—"Inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion, or self-action," &c. Is this true of light, of magnetism, and electricity? If not, does not your argument fail?

It appears to me that you have given the properties of what philosophers term "animate matter," and not matter organized, or living matter; and hence I think you do not reason conclusively on this point.

If light, magnetism, and electricity be spirit, and not matter, then "attraction" is not only the property of matter, but mind, or spirit also. "Matter," you say, "can be moved only by physical force." But the muscles move, or contract and expand, it is said, by nervous power. Do the nerves exert a physical force? If so, what sends the electric current along the nerves? Do you say, "it is the will?" If so, as "matter can be moved only by physical force," must not the will be physical? that is, must it not be matter?

Once more, you say—"Matter acts on matter by contact, and one material body has no power to act on another material body, only as their surfaces come in contact." But, does not matter act on matter without contact of surface? The sun, millions of miles from the earth, acts with tremendous "force" on it. And do not all the planets act on one another without contact? According to the philosophy upon which you base your argument, mind can do no more. "This proves," if not as "clear as a sun beam," yet, clear enough, "that matter and mind are" modifications of "the same." Br. Lee being judge: and thus you "subvert the admitted principles of philosophy." Does "philosophy insist that inertia is an essential principle of organized matter?" If so, it is false philosophy.

Br. Lee says, "We are not conscious of thinking with the brain." Are we conscious of thinking without our brain? For my part, I am just as conscious of thinking with my brain as of seeing with my eyes; or, as I am conscious of walking with my legs. But suppose I had not that consciousness, would that any more prove I did not think with my brain, than it would prove my stomach did not digest my food because I am not conscious of that? The brain, by excessive study, becomes fatigued and pained; and we are conscious of using our brain when we think; and when it becomes affected by disease, we feel an inability to think.

We again repeat, that the darkness philosophy has thrown over this subject, arises from the Double Substance theory; and this principle is in opposition to the relation in Genesis, where God is considered, not as an immaterial substance, but simply as an "ETERNAL BEING, who by his will condensed that which constitutes heaven and earth, and communicates to matter, motion and life." No philosopher has ever been able to give even a tolerable definition of his fancied "immaterial substance," the expression itself is without meaning, and an evident contradiction of ideas; and since the idea of substance contains the idea of matter, ought not the expression "immaterial substance" to be rejected from Philosophy?

In conclusion,—If the philosophy upon which your reasoning is founded be true, that "inertia is that property in matter which renders it incapable of self-motion or self-exertion;" and, in order to these manifestations, there must be added "spirit," or an immaterial substance, without which "self-determination and self action" would be impossible; then, does it not follow, that all animals, birds, reptiles, insects, fishes, and the smallest animalcules, possess "spirit," or the immaterial substance, as really as man? for they all are "capable of self-motion, or self-exertion." Shall we not rather conclude that the Infinite, Eternal, and Self-existent Being, who is the Creator of all things, has power to organize matter so as to impart to it life, and endow it with "self-determination and self-action," without the fancied immaterial substance?

Yours truly, in the Gospel of Christ, with much esteem,

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTENAY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

Let us now turn to St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. "The trumpet shall sound, the dead shall be raised incorruptible; this mortal shall assume immortality. Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O Death, where is thy sting, O Hades, where is thy victory!" Here the apostle exults over Hades and Death together, because God, he knew, would on his appointed day rescue the souls of men from their dark dominion; and make an utter end of those evil powers, who, in the strength of sin, had reigned for a time over mankind. And it would appear from his language that the victory of Hades over the soul is as complete as that of death. But if there be an intermediate consciousness, and for the redeemed an interval of most blissful rest, Hades has no victory at all. Death may conquer the body, but Hades, so far from subduing the soul, would actually liberate it from a heavy burden and bondage, and promote "the glorious liberty of the children of God." St. Paul however declares that Death and Hades now reign together: nevertheless, knowing that they shall hereafter be cast together into the "lake of fire," and that an interval of death and unconsciousness, to be terminated on the last Day, is but a momentary decease, and scarcely to be regarded as an evil, he anticipates the final triumph, and exults over them as already subdued. For Hades may be deemed to have no captives, unless she can bind them in everlasting chains.

Departing saints are sometimes known to triumph, in the hour of dissolution, as if their victory were already won. And Christians who "have fought the good fight," are certainly not forbidden thus to triumph, although it be not till the Last Day that Death is swallowed up in victory. For the interval will not be felt; no train of thought will disturb the deep sleep of the dead, sickening the soul with hope deferred: but they shall find that Scripture realised to them, "It is appointed unto men once to die;—and after this the judgment."

Death and Hades however are still permitted to reign; and are destined to exert their destroying power till the end of the world. At the opening of the "fourth seal," in the Apocalypse, St. John "Beheld a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hades followed with him. And power was given to them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth." Here is Hades painted as one going forth to devour and destroy, in league with death. In the same book they are again coupled together, in their present subjection to the Son of Man, and in their final fate. "He hath the keys of Hades and Death," to unlock their dark gates on the predestined day; and when he executes the judgments committed to him, they shall be together cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death," and be themselves destroyed. Shortly before this, in the vision of St. John, the "sea gave up the dead that were in it, and Death and Hades (the supposed abode of living souls) delivered up the dead which were in them."

Still more numerous are the passages of the Old Testament, wherein death and Hell,—in the Hebrew Sheol, in the Greek Hades,—are mentioned together, not as if Hades were a pleasant place of refuge for the disembodied souls, the victims of death, but as if the two were conjoined in the work of destruction. See Job xvi. 6. Prov. xv. 11, xxvii. 20. Hab. ii. 5.

It cannot be pretended that Hades is the place or state of the body merely—or indeed of the body at all. While the body moulders into dust and is scattered to the four winds, the soul is in Hades. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades, nor suffer thy Holy One to see corruption," was David's prophecy concerning Christ. If in any passage of Scripture the body should seem to be in Hades, it is because a locality is given to Hades which does not in strictness belong to it; and it is then placed in the grave. Thought can have no locality: "one might as well say of a disembodied spirit that it is hard or heavy; or a cubic foot in dimensions, as to say that it is here or there." Hades has no more locality than has Death; though both are in Scripture occasionally localized, or personified. But because the body descends into the grave, and will rise again from the grave, the man, body, and soul, is said to do the same. "All men shall rise again, with their bodies;" and before resurrection the dead are said to "dwell in dust;" to "sleep in the dust of the earth." Yet it is plain, that the instant that mysterious tie is severed which connects the body and soul, all that gave locality to mind is wholly lost. When therefore it is said, that on the return of the body to the dust, "the spirit returns to God who gave it," we ought not to imagine, as some do, an ascent of the spirit towards the skies; but simply an assertion of the fact, that the spirit, which when given by the Creator, and detached, as it were, from Him, constituted a living creature, has now reverted back to him who gave it, and become, not by change of place, but of ownership, His property again.

Our Lord declared that as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so should he himself be three days and nights in the heart of the earth. Here the heart of the earth is simply put in opposition to the belly of the whale, and the words do not differ essentially from those of the more usual prediction that our Lord should be three days in the grave. We read also that our Lord "descended into the lower parts of the earth." But no stress can be laid on this, inasmuch as it is not evident that the earth itself is not intended, which in comparison of heaven is termed, the lower (parts or regions.) ta katotera tes ges: as where Isaiah says, "Sing, O ye heavens; shout, ye lower parts of the earth."*

The mention that is occasionally made in Scripture of an abyss, deep or bottomless pit, as the abode of certain spirits, and of the soul of Christ during its separation from the body, deserves consideration in relation to this point. This abyss appears to be the same as Hades, and to be a place wherein spirits are confined. Hence proceeded the locusts of the Apocalypse, and perhaps also Apollyon their king, and hence also the beast, on whom sat the Babylonish idolatress. It is probably a place of confinement for spirits, wherein they are prevented from all exercise of their powers. "I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand, and he laid hold on * * Satan and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss, and shut him up and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more." And it is the same as Hades, for this fate of Satan seems to be precisely that of the rebellious angels of St. Peter and St. Jude. Moreover we know that our Lord descended into Hades; and St. Paul writes, "who shall descend into the deep,—the abyss—that is, to bring up Christ from the dead." That it is a place of confinement would appear also from the treaty of the Legion of demons to our Lord, that he would allow them to go into the herd of swine, and not command them into the abyss. Now the confinement of a spirit seems to be the same as the destruction of all his consciousness; if the mind be reduced to inactivity, all its thoughts perish, activity being of the very essence of thought.* But this imprisonment in Hades, whether of the human soul, or of an evil spirit, need not be local, inasmuch as thought is not local. Strictly speaking, the spirit or soul or life of man neither moves upwards to God and heaven nor downwards to the grave. The union of mind with matter alone can give locality; and it is this union imagined or foreseen, that has occasioned those Scriptural expressions—to "dwell in the dust,"—to "rise again with their bodies."† But these expressions would not have been used, this union during the intermediate state would not have been supposed, unless the condition of the disembodied soul harmonized with that of the body, so that when the one was buried, the other also could be said to sleep, and to be in "a land of darkness."

Again, we may learn something concerning Hades, from the fact that our blessed Lord himself descended into it, and on the third day rose again from the dead. It is evident from Scripture, that the death which our Lord endured did not wholly terminate with his passion on the cross. God raised him up, "having loosed the pains of death," because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.‡ And the heart of Christ was to rejoice, and his flesh to rest in hope, because the Father would not "leave his soul in Hades, nor suffer His Holy, One to see corruption." Now inasmuch as it was an infinite condescension in our Lord to take upon him our nature, and subject himself to the burden of the flesh, what were THE PAINS OF DEATH to him, what the triumph of his resurrection, if death had merely relieved him of the burden of the flesh, and enabled his liberated soul to pass into rest and glory? How was corruption obviated by his resurrection of that body of flesh which he had laid down on the Cross? Some are accustomed to say, that the glory of the resurrection of the saints at the Last Day will mainly consist in the investiture of their souls with glorified, spiritual bodies. But Christ took again the body in which he suffered. Again, "Christ being risen from the dead, it is said, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Death then had dominion over him, until he "rose again from the dead." But for this resurrection the Holy One would, like David, have seen corruption; corruption would have had dominion not over a mere frame of flesh, but over that holy soul in which was no sin. Christ laid down on the cross all that life, which his Incarnation and Nativity had given him,—his human body and soul. "I lay down MY LIFE: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."

And what signify those sublime words, "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore."‡ And, "In that he died, he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Shall we make them mean, "I lay down my body; I have power to lay it down, and resume it." "I am he that am embodied, and was disembodied, and behold I am embodied for evermore." "In that he parted with his body, he died unto sin once, but in that he hath it again, he liveth unto God." Rather we should believe, that our blessed Lord parted with his human soul; parted with that life itself, whereby he now liveth. If his resurrection from the dead had been merely the taking his body again, it would have been no more a victory over death, than was his incarnation; or at least no more than was the creation of Adam from the lifeless dust of the ground. But Hades grasped a human soul; and that, was wrenched from her dark dominion.

* Thus in Rev. xvii. 8, it is written, "The beast which thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." Now if by perdition is meant everlasting punishment in the lake of fire, everlasting consciousness, it would seem that there is no consciousness till the beast passes from the abyss, and goes into perdition. The expression, "is not," may however merely signify, "is no longer upon earth."

† And to that remarkable passage above quoted—"Many bodies of the sleeping saints, (recumbent, reclining saints,) arose, and came out of their graves."

And so glorious was this victory over Hades, that in reference to this Christ is spoken of as the Son of God. He is termed "the first begotten from the dead," he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead;" and we are told that "God hath fulfilled his promises of mercy, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is written in the second Psalm, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.'" Thus also, "they who are accounted worthy to obtain that world; and the resurrection from the dead; cannot die any more, and are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection;" and are said to "groan within themselves, waiting for the adoption,—to wit, the redemption of the body;" for "the manifestation of the Sons of God."

Had the victory been gained on the cross, our Lord's last words would have been those of exultation; sounds of joy and triumph would have filled the heavens, as at the nativity; and angels would have bidden the disciples to weep no more, cheering them as they did on the third day. And the bodies of the saints which slept need not have been detained in their graves until after his resurrection; but at once appearing unto many, might have testified to the subjugation of death.

Some persons are inclined to believe, that our Lord, when he entered the realms of Hades; entered as a conqueror; bringing into these desolate shades a light and life not their own; nay, proclaiming in them that gospel which his apostles afterwards preached on earth. They refer to the words of St. Peter,—"Christ was put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit; by the which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited, in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing." But all that St. Peter asserts is, that our Lord preached to the spirits in prison by the same spirit by which he was quickened; not by any means that he preached while he was numbered among the dead. And indeed, if there be meaning in words, the quick are not to be confounded with the dead; but to be "quickened" is to be raised again from the dead; which happened to our Lord not on the cross, but on the third day after his crucifixion. Then it was that the quickening spirit of immortal life, which utterly abhors and is incompatible with the state of death, visited and reanimated his mortal soul.

Let us consider too by what means Christ triumphed over death. Even by first submitting to death. He "tasted death for every man;" and "through death subdued him that had the power of death." He drank this bitter cup, and drained its very dregs, that the vials of wrath might not be poured out upon guilty men. Whatever gloom then there was in Hades before the advent of Christ, into that gloom he entered; whatever were the "pains of death" for the worst of sinners, those pains he underwent; nay, whatever would have been the utmost tyranny of Hades and Death over men, but for his mediation, to that Christ for a time succumbed. By no less a sacrifice could he have accomplished his great design of subduing death, by first submitting to death.* To suppose that the grave was a more lightsome place to him than it is, or would have been, to the worst of sinners, is to forget the price which was paid for redemption; and to leave room for the conscience-stricken sinner to dread lest he should be excluded from the benefits of the resurrection, since so dark a death as his had not been undergone by the Saviour. By first enduring all, Christ overcame all. Not in descending into the abyss, but in ascending up on high, he led captivity captive. Hades did not acknowledge him as a conqueror till on the third day he broke her bonds asunder, and cast away her cords from him; and mounted his eternal throne on "the holy hill of Zion."

No more inappropriate season for preaching could possibly be imagined, than that which is arbitrarily chosen for the publication of the gospel to the "imprisoned spirits." That they were in Hades at the time we have indeed ample reason to believe; but they were then as it were in the condemned cells, beyond the reach of relieve, and waiting till they should be summoned from the bottomless pit, to go into perdition.

The doctrine of redemption through Christ's suffering of death, as well as the express language of the New Testament concerning Hades, confirms that testimony of the Jewish Scriptures which makes of Hades a land of darkness, and where all things are forgotten; a place wherein (while "the living know that they shall die") the dead "know not any thing." Spirits condemned and under confinement,—the souls of men while subject to the dominion of death,—and the proud city that was to sink to utter ruin and desolation, are alike said to be cast down to Hades, because they are all alike subjected to the Power of Destruction, have gone into darkness, silence, and death; and have become as though they were not. But still their souls are safe, still they live unto God, who have died in faith; even in the faith of Abraham, whose belief was "in God, who quickeneth the dead, and collect those things which be not, as though they were."

[We by no means endorse every expression in the foregoing article, though the general view is correct. ED. EXAMINER.]

* The death to which Adam became liable through his transgression is said to be temporal, spiritual, and eternal, the latter being sometimes held to include the suffering of eternal fire. But erroneously, for not only is the latter punishment a consequence of resurrection unto damnation, not of death; but, had this been a part of the original curse, our Lord, we may venture to believe, must have descended into the flames of Gehenna itself, in order to rescue man, by "tasting of death for him."

INTERESTING FOREIGN ITEMS.

ROME.—THE INTERVENTION AND ITS TERMS.

Letters from Florence of the 10th inst. state that a French steamer from Gaeta had landed the Secretary of the French Legation at Rome at Civita Vecchia, and that he had immediately left for the capital. He was said to be the bearer of the ultimatum of the foreign powers for the reestablishment of the Pope. It appears that a simultaneous movement has been arranged between the powers; the French were to occupy Civita Vecchia, and Ancona; the Austrians, Ferrara; the Neapolitans, the frontier. On the arrival of the steamer from Gaeta, another steamer was immediately dispatched to Toulon with orders, it was said, to embark the expeditionary force. Civita Vecchia was being fortified.

The Postivo of Rome states that the following are some of the terms imposed by France and England on the Pope as the conditions on which they will aid his return to Rome: A general amnesty, a complete secular Government, inviolability of political liberty, abolition of the holy office and ecclesiastical tribunals except in the matter of the Clergy, and the suppression of proprietary religious orders.

SECRETS OF THE INQUISITION.

The correspondent of the Daily News describes a visit he had paid to the many small, dark, and damp dungeons of the Inquisition. The building is out of the beaten track, being in a sort of cul de sac behind St. Peter's. The dungeons, and all their apparatus, are to be thrown open to the inspection of the public, and will furnish a sight not likely to recommend priestly rule to the people. The correspondent says: The officer in charge led me down to where the men were digging in the vaults below; they had cleared a downward flight of steps, which was choked up with old rubbish, and had come to a series of dungeons under the vaults deeper still, and which immediately brought to my mind the prisons of the Doge under the canal of the Bridge of Sighs at Venice, only that here there was a surpassing horror.

I saw imbedded in old masonry, unsymmetrically arranged, five skeletons in various recesses, and the clearance had only just begun; the period of their insertion in this spot must have been more than a century and a half. From another vault full of skulls and scattered human remains there was a shaft about four feet square ascending perpendicularly to the first floor of the building, and ending in a passage off the hall of the chancery, where a trap-door lay between the tribunal and the way into a suite of rooms destined for one of the officials. The object of this shaft could admit of but one surmise. The ground of the vault was made up of decayed animal matter, a lump of which heid imbedded in it a long silken lock of hair, as I found by personal examination as it was shovelled up from below. But that is not all: there are two large subterranean lime-kilns, if I may so call them, shaped like a beehive in masonry, filled with layers of calcined bones, forming the substratum of two other chambers on the ground-floor in the immediate vicinity of the very mysterious shaft above mentioned.—[It must be remembered that of late the power of the Holy Inquisition, even in Rome, was greatly fallen from its former high estate.]

BR. STORRS:—The Examiner is what the community here need. I am glad to see that such honest hearted, bold, influential men as Elder Bates and Hand are investigating the doctrines advocated in your paper. I am glad that Br. Walsh has no mean competitor. Mr. Brewster will probably mount the highest rampart, and ply the largest guns that his side can afford, but when his bulwark falls, (for error can't stand) it seems that the way will be cleared for him to join the victors, and lead on the host that has been shielding themselves behind the same untempered mortared wall. Truth is mighty and it will prevail.

THE NEW WORK.—"The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," by H. H. DORSEY, Baptist Minister, England, is the very best work on the End of the Wicked we have ever seen. It is written in the kindest spirit, and cannot give offence to any. Though kind, it is clear, uncompromising and overwhelming against the popular theory of natural immortality and endless misery; and demonstrating, so far as argument can do it, that utter destruction is the punishment of wicked and unrepenting men. Put this work into the hands of all who will read, not forgetting ministers of all sects and parties. It contains 386 pages, 12mo. Price 75 cts. bound, or 50 in paper cover; this last, only, can be sent by mail. For each dollar, current money, sent us free of expense, we will send two copies of it and pre-pay the postage on them; or, we will send three without pre-paying the postage where the Post Masters will allow them to be thus sent. Since the notice we published in the Advent Heralder, we find that the Post Offices are not uniform in requiring the postage to be pre-paid. In New York City they demanded it, and would not forward them without; but, we find, on our return home, that the Post Office in Philadelphia makes no such demand; so that we can do it or not, as those who order the work may desire.

One-third discount will be made to those who purchase six or more copies, if current money is sent us. Cash, always, with the order.

DEPOSITORIES OF BOOKS.—Dobney on "The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," reprinted from the English edition, may be had in Boston, Mass., of Geo. T. Adams, 87 Hanover St., Hat and Cap Store; Lowell, Mass., of Eld. M. Bates, Chapel St., one door above Elm; Albany, N. Y., at Christian Palladium Office, No. 8 Commercial Buildings; New York City, of Dr. John Burdell, Dentist, No. 2 Union Place, and of Henry F. Johnson, No. 327 Hudson St.; Rochester, N. Y., of Eld. Joseph Marsh, Advent Heralder Office.

All orders sent us, at Philadelphia, Pa., for Dobney, to be forwarded by Express, will be sent to New York City, without expense, going north, east or west.

Our "Six Sermons" can be had, as above, of Eld. Marsh, Eld. Bates, Geo. T. Adams, and Dr. Burdell.

BUSINESS NOTICES.—Elon Everts. We have sent C. W. Speer's paper regularly to Bristol, Vt., this year. We now send also to Charles Speer, Pantown, Vt., as you request. Shall we continue to send to both names? We shall, unless you direct otherwise.

James F. Compton. The "five dollars" your letter purports to contain is not received. Post Master says there is no help for us. The papers and 40 copies of Six Sermons, 12mo., are sent same as if we had received the money.

S. A. Chaplin. All the papers and Sermons have been sent us you desired, and also 8 copies Six Sermons, 12mo., to you.

Eli Cross. We should have paid the postage on the first that you ordered of Dobney—by mistake it was neglected—it is paid on the last. Charge us with the first.

Dr. M. Helm. We have sent you twelve copies of Dobney, James Carless. Books sent as directed: one-third discount on them $1.32 still due you.

James Denabson. Four of Dobney's work were sent you in our absence; we have sent another copy since our return.

If any errors have occurred in answering orders in our absence, send us word, at our expense, and we will make all right.

The Examiner for June will not go to press till the middle of that month.

Our Hymn Book is not yet published; we have not the means to do it. E. Miller, Jr., pledges to take 75 copies. Who next?

TRUE WESLEYAN—IMMORTALITY.

A REVIEW, BY DR. J. T. WALSH.

No. I.

At the request of a friend, I undertake to review the philosophical part of Mr. Lee's argument in favour of natural immortality. I desire the reader to consider this article as a continuation of Br. Storrs' argument, in reply to Mr. Lee's "No. 2," which appeared in the last Examiner. I shall also review Mr. Lee's Scriptural argument, although I consider that my friend Mr. Brewster has managed that part of the subject as well as any one can do it. I expect nothing more conclusive from Mr. Lee; and, indeed, there is nothing new in his philosophical argument; and, if left to my choice, I should pass it in silence; but as some of my friends think a review necessary, at their suggestion I write. And now to the argument:

1. Mr. Lee proceeds to give us the properties of matter, and all he says about the essential properties of matter, is just as applicable to a stone as to any part of the human body. He gives us the essential properties of inanimate matter, and finding no consciousness, no reason, no intelligence in this, he rushes to the illogical and unphilosophical conclusion, that organized living matter cannot think! This foundation—his starting point, is wrong, and his superstructure worthless. The question is, not whether a stone can think, but whether a living man, organized from the elements of nature, thinks by his brain. When Mr. Lee has proved that thought is not an essential property of matter, he has gained nothing. I can prove that sound is not an essential property of a musical instrument, but what will that prove? Will it prove that the harmony of sounds is not dependant upon the organization of the wind (or other musical) instrument? Take the wood of which an instrument is made, and there is no music in it. Let it be organized, and yet there is no music. What is the reason? Why music is not an essential property of wood; this is matter, and there is no music in matter; what is wanting now to produce the "concord of sweet sounds?" We must have the atmosphere, for where there is no atmosphere sound cannot be produced. But the atmosphere is matter, and there is no music in matter? Ah, says Mr. Lee, an intelligent mind is necessary to the production of sound. Yes; but there is no music in the mind. The mind has the power of producing what is not an essential property of itself. And it has the faculty of appreciating the harmony of sounds produced. Now for the application of this illustration: There is no sound, or harmony of sounds, in an instrument, none in the atmosphere, and none in the mind; but, by combining the three we have what was not in either separately. So, there may be no thought, no reason, no intelligence in inanimate matter; but when that matter is organized, as we see it in man, who will affirm it cannot manifest thought? But it may be objected that, in the case supposed, there is an intelligent mind operating upon the instrument and the atmosphere, producing the result.

Let us take another, then; and we will suppose the case of a watch. There is no time in the materials of which a watch is made; and, yet, when organized by an intelligent mind, it will indicate the hour, minute, and second. The maker winds it up, and it continues to perform its functions until it runs down. So with man; there may be no reason, or thought in the component parts of his constitution separately considered; but when organized, and put in motion by the spirit of life in the atmosphere, breathed into his nostrils by his Maker, he awakes to consciousness, to thought and reason.

Mr. Lee has not to be informed, I trust, that by combining, chemically combining, two substances, a third can be produced, possessing none of the properties of the two elements used. He has not to be informed, I hope, that man is chemically formed or organized; and that the light of analogy makes it highly probable, to say the least of it, that matter, thus chemically combined, is capable of manifesting mental functions.

2. Mr. Lee makes "indestructibility," an essential property of matter; perhaps he means annihilation; for "indestructibility" is certainly not a property of matter.

One word as to what Mr. Lee and other natural philosophers term the essential properties of matter. It must be evident to those who reflect, that philosophers have only given us the essential properties of some forms of matter; for Inertia is certainly not an essential property of all matter. We have no evidence that inertia is an essential property of light; on the contrary light seems to be self-moving and ever-acting. This is true of caloric, galvanism, electricity, and magnetism. May it not be true, in a much higher sense, of the aura that pervades the brain and nerves?

One word as to the use of terms. The word nature embraces all created things, animate and inanimate. Thus we have organized and unorganized nature. The organized is again divided into the vegetable and animal. Matter is nowhere in the scriptures, contrasted, or put in opposition to spirit. Spirit is not the antithesis of matter. Animal stands opposed to spirit. We use the term matter as expressive of that which is tangible, or of which the senses take cognizance. But matter exists in ten thousand forms, and is capable of almost endless combinations and sublimations. The term spirit, when used in relation to the wind, to man, and to angels, seems to express different modifications of matter. The word immaterial—not material, not matter, does not appear to be applicable to any thing in the universe. But, for the sake of argument, let us suppose that there is an immaterial thing in existence; how will you prove it? You cannot see it, for if you can see it, it is no longer immaterial. You cannot smell it, nor hear it, nor feel it; it is not tangible to any of the senses; how, then, will you define it? The fact is, that which is immaterial has a name but no local habitation.

Matter may be regarded as embracing all that God has created, but under this generic term we have various orders, classes and species of matter; thus we have matter in its simple, or elementary form, then in its compound form, without regard to chemical affinity; then we have it chemically constituted, without relation to life; then in its organized form, in relation to vitality, as seen in the vegetable kingdom, and in the lowest orders of animalculæ; then in its more refined and exalted form as we see it in the human constitution; and lastly, in its highest degree of refinement and sublimation, called spirit, of which the angelic nature is a specimen. God is alike the creator of all forms of matter; or, if Mr. Lee likes it better, he is the creator of matter and spirit; and why should we affirm intelligence of one and not of the other? How does Mr. Lee know that volition is an essential property of spirit? The fact is, he assumes this, and then argues that gross matter, no matter how organized, cannot think. If God has created beings purely spiritual, they must have been created before they were endowed with consciousness, volition and thought; and therefore thought, &c., would not be an essential property of spirit. Mr. Lee does not know the essential properties of all matter, and therefore cannot affirm that thought is not an essential property of some forms of matter. God who formed matter, can make of it what He wills to make; He can combine, refine and organize it in a thousand proportions and forms, with a view of its manifesting as many functions. From the same original elements of matter He can make a thousand different kinds of fruit—the orange, the apple, the pear, the cherry, &c., &c. Yet these are all matter, but how different their qualities! And as is the organization, so is the quality of the fruits whether of acidity or sweetness.

And so it is in the animal world. Out of matter God makes bones, muscles, ligaments, nerves of motion, nerves of sensation, arteries, veins, glands, &c. Here we have matter in various forms, and each form has its own peculiar function, which it possesses in virtue of its organization. The man, therefore who affirms that matter in none of its forms can think, neither understands what he says, nor whereof he affirms. I shall return to this question in my next article.

A REVIEW BY J. T. WALSH.—No. II.

Mr. Lee says—"If matter can think, thought must be an essential property of matter, or it must be the result of some peculiar modification of matter, neither of which can be maintained. If thought be an essential property of matter, every part and particle of matter must think. If thought be essential to matter, what does not think is not matter."

Mr. Lee's logical powers fail him here, for it does not follow "if matter can think," that "thought must be an essential property of matter." The "essential property" of a thing is that "property" without which it cannot exist. Both matter and spirit can exist without thought, consequently thought is not an essential property of either. It is possible, however, for "thought to be the result of some peculiar modification of matter." But what sort of reasoning is this? "If thought be essential to matter, what does not think is not matter!" We might as well argue thus:

Inertia is an essential property of matter. And that which does not possess this property is not matter.

But light, electricity, &c., do not possess inertia. Therefore they are not matter.

Thus according to the received principles of natural philosophy, we see that light, &c., is not matter; it must, therefore, be spirit, and consequently intelligent; for Mr. Lee holds thought, &c., to be an essential property of spirit; and then, according to his own mode of reasoning, "if thought be an essential property of" spirit, "every part and particle of" spirit "must think!" Thus his whole theory, when exhibited in the light of reason, vanishes into thin air.

Mr. Lee asks the question—"Is thought the result of some modification (of) matter?" His whole reasoning on this question amounts to this—that matter cannot think, because it is matter! This is the alpha and omega of his argument. Now, I ask Mr. Lee, what are the attributes of organized matter, in its various modifications? He answers—"Indestructibility, Divisibility, Impenetrability, Inertia," &c. This is not the whole answer; it does not meet the case. And the question recurs—what are the properties of matter? Now, in order to meet this question fully, let us state a few principles. And,

1st. Spirit is defined to be that which has the power of self-motion, volition, consciousness, thought, reason, and intelligence. And,

2d. Matter is defined as above. (See indestructibility, &c.) Now, we affirm that the true answer is not given in either case. Let us see. Here are four nerves: the function of one is to transmit sounds; the function of another is to transmit light; the function of another is to transmit odours, and the function of another is to transmit the sensation of taste. These nerves are matter, yet they have different properties. One will transmit sounds, but will not and cannot transmit light. This proves that matter may be so organized as to possess different functions. This is true not only of sound and sight, but of taste and smell. Here are two nerves; the one a nerve of motion, and the other a nerve of sensation. They have different functions, but they are both matter. In all this there is no addition to matter, nor subtraction from matter; but matter, by being modified in its organization, develops new properties and functions. There is no infidelity or atheism in this philosophy, for we maintain that matter only possesses those properties with which God has endowed it. Mr. Lee's argument, on this point, is all lost. Man is not God, and therefore it is presumption to argue from the nature of one to the nature of the other. The nature of God is unorganized, while the nature of all other beings is organic. This fact proves them to be material.

But let us come to the point more closely. It is admitted that man thinks, feels, and acts; but how does he do this? Mr. Lee says, "By his rational soul." That is, by his spirit or mind. Now, what are the functions or faculties of man? Let us look at them: Here is amativeness, or the sexual feeling. But this, according to Mr. Lee's philosophy, is not an essential property of matter; and therefore it belongs to the spirit or "rational soul." Here then we have mind, immateriality, immortality, desiring sexual intercourse. But, then, this function is not confined to man, but the whole animal world possesses the same. They, therefore, have the same "rational soul." Mr. Lee, perhaps, may say this is mere instinct. Very well, is instinct a property of matter? Here you are stranded again! Take another human faculty—love of offspring. Is this a function of matter, or spirit? Of matter it cannot be, according to Mr. Lee's theory; therefore it must be of spirit: so we have the "immaterial spirit" exercising the parental function! And the beasts have the same faculty, therefore they have the same spirit!

Take another case. Man has the faculty of love, combativeness, destructiveness, love of gain, &c. &c. Are these functions of matter or spirit? Of matter they cannot be, according to Mr. Lee's theory; therefore they must be properties of spirit; and thus we have the "immaterial spirit" in love with human flesh, quarrelling, disputing, destroying, seeking gain, &c. &c.

But it may be said that the animal propensities are not attributes of the spirit; then, pray, of what are they attributes? Of matter? This would be fatal to your whole theory! For love, anger, sexual feeling, and the love of gain are not among your "essential properties of matter."

But if man possess an immortal mind, which is the seat of all the affections, moral and mental powers, of what use is the body? of what use is matter? of what use are the five senses? of what use is the brain? Just none at all! According to Mr. Lee's philosophy, a man is just as perfect without matter as with it; and, in fact, more perfect:—more perfect in the ratio that spirit is superior to matter! Of what use are impenetrability, divisibility, inertia, &c., in the economy of man? Matter is of no account. These are its only properties! away with it, it is not fit to live! yea, it does not, and cannot live! Man can live, and think, and reason; love, be amative, desire gain, hate and destroy without it! Certainly God degraded Himself by making anything out of it! Why did He create it? Why don't He annihilate it? Mr. Lee's hand and pen, which he uses in advocating error, are made of it. His mouth and organs of voice, which he uses in speaking, are made of it. What a pity! His Bible is made of matter, the baptismal element is matter, his paper is matter, his eyes are matter, his ears, his nose, his palate, his nerves, his lungs—they are all matter, merely possessing impenetrability, inertia, &c. Of what account are they? Surely it was a work of supererogation to create them! The steam he uses in printing is matter, the locomotive is propelled by matter, the magnetic wire is matter, the electric fluid is matter! All is matter!

But, if man be in possession of immortality, he inherits it. And Mr. Lee says—"matter can only act as it is acted upon." Now look at the laws of generation. Here we have matter acting upon matter, producing what? Transmitting what? "Immateriality," says Mr. Lee. That which is material can give birth, then, to that which is immaterial! Matter can produce that which is not matter. But, will Mr. Lee say, "the mind begets mind—spirit begets spirit?" Then it has "divisibility" which is a property of matter? Man has the power of transmitting the elements of his own organization, and if immortality be a part of his organization, he can transmit this. This is self-multiplication—"divisibility"—matter!

Again, life itself is transmitted, together with diseases of various kinds. And here we come to a very important consideration, viz: That which has no constitutional function cannot be diseased. If matter therefore, in none of its forms and modifications, has any attributes or functions, it can never be diseased. And as the body of man is matter, it cannot be diseased! We never hear of marble or stone being diseased. The diamond is not subject to fever; but vegetables and animals, including man, are liable to disease and death.

We come back to the conclusion then, that organized matter is capable of manifesting a variety of functions, which are susceptible of derangement or disease.

But, upon Mr. Lee's hypothesis, disease cannot exist, for matter, having only the properties he ascribes to it, is not susceptible of disease, and immortality cannot be diseased; and, therefore, we come to the happy conclusion, that there is no such thing as disease! This is certainly the long-looked for philosophers' stone!

But the truth is, all parts of man are subject to derangement, disease, and death; and still all is matter; but if the mind be "immaterial" or immortal, it can not be deranged or diseased. And here we leave this argument for the present.

In Mr. Lee's article No. 4, he introduces a long quotation from Mr. Watson, in which it is argued, that because "God is spirit" the mind of man is of the same nature. This argument is not only a lame one, but altogether out of place in this connection; so we shall merely observe respecting it,

1st. That the nature of God is not the subject of discussion.

2d. That God only hath immortality. And,

3d. That men are exhorted to seek for it, which would be absurd if they had it.

SCRIPTURAL PSYCHOLOGY.—No. II.

In Genesis xlii, 21, we read: "And they said one to another, we are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." This is an allusion to Joseph's being sold by his brethren. They acknowledge their guilt. They tell us of "the anguish of his soul," when they were about to sell him to the Ishmaelites, and he "besought them not to do it. Did Joseph have an immortal soul, which was filled with "anguish" at the prospect of being sold? Immortal souls are not the subjects of "anguish;" they are incapable of sorrow or pain. We learn then that Joseph himself was filled with "anguish," and not his immortal soul.

In the 17th chapter, 14th verse, we have the following: "And the uncircumcised male-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people." Here the term "soul" is evidently used as equivalent to "male-child," which, if uncircumcised was to be cut off from Israel.

In Genesis xii. 5th. we read of "the souls" Abram and Lot had "gotten in Haran." Again, "the king of Sodom said to Abram, give me the souls, and take the goods to thyself." Chap. xiv. 21.

"Esau took all the souls of his house," and "went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob;" and these "souls" are defined as "his wives, his sons and his daughters." Chap. xxxvi. 6. The "souls" of Jacob by Leah—"all the souls of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three." xvi. 15. By Zilpha, "sixteen souls;" by Rachel "fourteen souls;" by Bilhah "seven souls." "All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, who came out of his loins—were sixty and six." Now, if these were immortal souls they came "out of Jacob's loins," and, consequently, immortality is transmissible!

"Two souls were born to Joseph in Egypt;" are immortal souls "born" of the flesh? Men are born of corruptible seed; is that which is immortal and incorruptible, developed from a corruptible germ?

Having examined every passage, or nearly every one, in Genesis where the term soul occurs either in the common version or the original, I will now pass to Exodus. Chapter xii. 16, "And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you: no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every soul must eat, that only may be done by you." "Save that which every person or man may eat" is the proper rendering; and Webster so translates it.

Chapter xxiii. 9. "Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger; for ye know the soul of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Mr. Webster renders the term "soul:" in this passage, "heart." "Ye know the heart;"—the feelings of a stranger.

Ch. xxx. 12. "When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul to the Lord." A ransom for his life; and the reason is given—"that there may be no plague among them."

In chapter xxxi. 14, The Lord in speaking of the sabbath, says "Whoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people." Here it signifies person. It has the same meaning in chap. xij. 15, also, in verse 4th, and in chap. xvi. 16. In chap. xxx. 15, where it speaks of making "atonement for souls," it signifies life. See also, 16th verse. The word soul occurs but seldom in Exodus; the above, I believe, are the principal places. Let us turn to Leviticus.

In the following it is used for person or persons: iv. 2, 27; v. 1, 2, 4, 15, 17; vi. 2; xvii. 11, 12; xxii. 11; xxiii. 30; xxvi. 15, 43. In the 11th verse of this chapter, where the phrase—"and my soul shall not abhor you," it is used in reference to God, and is equivalent to "and I shall not abhor you." In the 17th chapter of Leviticus, 10th verse, we have the following: "And whatever man there may be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood, I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people." It certainly requires no extraordinary perception to see the meaning of "soul" in the above sentence. What follows throws additional light on the psychology of man. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls," (your lives); "for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul," or life.

Here we have the important truth, that "the life of the flesh is in the blood." The blood, so to speak, is the menstruum or vehicle of life. The blood, as we have elsewhere stated, is electric and magnetic, as an analysis of its constituent parts will show; but we shall not give an analysis of it at this time. When this position is denied, however, it shall be forthcoming.

Moses was a divine physiologist; he understood the Homœan philosophy, or philosophy of man, far better than Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, or any of the moderns, who ascribe life, intelligence, and every other mental attribute to an "immortal soul."

J. T. W.

ON ATONEMENT.

Far be it from us, that we should be charmed away from the Cross of Christ by any human eloquence or philosophy. What is the doctrine of that Cross whence emanates the life-giving to a lost world? It is, that God has made the soul of his Son "an offering for (our) sins." Isa. 53: 10; that He has "laid on him the iniquity of us all," 6 v.; that "he bare the sin of many," 12 v.; that "he was wounded for our transgressions," and "bruised for our iniquities," 5 v. He was "cut off, but not for himself." Dan. 9: 26. If this language does not reveal the "vicarious" sufferings and death of the Son of God, which some persons affirm is a "pernicious doctrine," what confidence, I ask, can we have in any of the words of the scriptures? The Saviour himself and his apostles confirm the obvious import of the words of the prophets. "I lay down my life for the sheep." John 10: 15. "The Son of man came to give his life a ransom for many." Mark 10: 45. "Christ died for our sins." Cor. 15: 3; "is sacrificed for us," 1 Cor. 5: 7; "that by means of death, for the redemption of transgressions," &c. "to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9: 15, 26. "Bare our sins in his own body on the tree." 1 Peter 2: 24. Without this great and glorious truth of the "vicarious" suffering of the divine Son of the Infinite, "the grand problem" of life for a lost world, finds no solution in the combined wisdom of angels or men.

It was the defence of this very doctrine, that "our Lord Jesus Christ gave himself for our sins," that called forth the anathema of the inspired apostle, "though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel—let him be accursed." Gal. 1: 3-8. This is the only platform on which our Father's wondrous love places its lever to raise a fallen world.

Justice is "offended," and must be satisfied, or sinners cannot be saved. God is the just God as well as the Saviour. How he can be just and save transgressors of his righteous law, is itself a grand problem, solved only by the Cross of Christ. From perverted views of "offended Justice," we may turn aside, but we may not turn aside from the oracles of God. "Awake, O Sword, against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts, smite the Shepherd," &c. "He shall magnify the law and make it honorable." "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of sins that are past—that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth on Jesus."

The doctrine of vicarious suffering and death was shadowed forth by all the sacrifices under the law, particularly by the scape goat. These were types of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." The doctrine may be rejected by the wisdom of this world, yet it pleases God by the foolishness of its preaching, to save them that believe.

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTENAY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

It yet remains for us to consider some passages of the New Testament which have been much relied on in proof of an intermediate state of consciousness. Our Saviour thus exhorts his disciples; "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him, who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell;" that is, "in Gehenna." "What," asks an eminent divine, "can be more clear? If the soul had such a necessary dependence on the body; that when this dies itself must needs die with it; then he that kills the body would with the same stroke murder the soul too. But our Saviour tells us that this is impossible for man to do, the soul remaining even after the death of the body, and being out of the reach of any created power, that is able to destroy it. If it be said that this is meant only of the utter destruction of the soul, which no man is able to effect, God having promised a resurrection to life again, this will appear to be only a wretched shift to avoid the force of the plainest text. For in this sense our Saviour might as well have denied that it is in the power of man to kill the body of another man, that is, to destroy it utterly and finally, because God will raise it again at the last day. But our blessed Lord grants, that the body may be killed by man in the same sense whereby he denies that the soul can be destroyed by him, and therefore speaks not this only with reference to the resurrection."

It may nevertheless be fairly maintained, consistently with the view of the future states which has been advocated above, that our Lord is here speaking with reference to the resurrection only; and wholly passes over without notice the interval between death and judgment. Shortly after, in the same discourse, he prepares his disciples to bear persecution, by a similar mode of encouragement. "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." And in another place, to exactly the same purpose, "He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep in unto life eternal." These passages sufficiently explain what is meant by "not able to kill the soul." Dr. Bull believed that the soul of the renegade, as well as the soul of the martyr, lives after the death of the body. But if so, what is meant by "he that loveth his life shall lose it?" Even on Dr. Bull's supposition, it must signify, not the loss of life in the intermediate state, wherein good and bad men alike live, but the destruction of the soul in Gehenna. Because man cannot effect this, it is said that he is unable to "kill the soul." Agreeably with that doctrine, implied in almost every page of the New Testament,—"It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment;"—they are said to lose, or to keep their lives, in reference to the destruction which will be inflicted, or the immortality which will be conferred on the soul, on that awful day.

St. Luke reports the words of our Lord somewhat differently. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; Fear Him, who after he hath killed hath power to cast into Gehenna; yea, I say unto you, Fear Him." Here there is no allusion to an interval between death and judgment; and not only they who have killed the body have no more that they can do, but God himself, it appears, doth nothing, until the day arrive for the execution of his judgments. Throughout all these passages the things contrasted are, life temporal, and life eternal; death temporal, and death eternal,—and we are not to fear them which kill the body, or inflict temporal death; but Him only who can kill the soul, or inflict eternal death.

Dr. Bull however maintains, as we have seen above, that since the bodies of the wicked rise again, men can no more be said to be able to kill the body than to kill the soul; except in reference to the different states of the soul and body before resurrection. If the resurrection of the wicked unto damnation were in Scripture represented as a temporary return to life, this argument would be unanswerable. But the bodies even of saints are in Scripture termed mortal bodies, and may be killed: though the Almighty can and will at the last day quicken them by His spirit. The temporal life of a sinner being taken away, nothing remains but for him to be "cast into hell;" while the temporal life of the righteous being lost, he still "hath eternal life," in that he has the promise not given to the sinner, "I will raise him up at the Last Day." And so St. Paul labored;—"if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."*

"That the soul is alive after our death," says Jeremy Taylor, "St. Paul affirms: 'Christ died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.' Now it were strange that we should be alive and live with Christ, and do no act of life." Strange indeed: but Christ died for us, and rose again, that we through death and resurrection might have that eternal life. Then, when we rise, he will "come again and receive his disciples to himself, that where he is, there may they be also: then shall they, and not before, 'ever be with the Lord.'"

* Whatever obscurity and difficulty there may be in the subject here treated of, it arises from the singular use in Scripture, of the terms life and death. To kill the body, and send the soul into Hades, a suffering which may be inflicted on the righteous as well as the sinner, and to destroy the body and soul in the flames of Gehenna, are both called in Scripture, Death. The temporal existence common to all, no less than the spiritual and eternal existence of saints in heaven, is termed Life.

That there is an intermediate consciousness has sometimes been collected from the account of the translations of Enoch and Elijah, and the appearance of the latter, with Moses, at the transfiguration of our Lord. The former of which facts, it shall nevertheless be said, does most strongly point to a conclusion directly opposite, which the difficulty concerning Moses cannot reverse, but at the utmost merely neutralize or obscure. Enoch, we are told "walked with God; and he was not, for God took him," and this St. Paul explains by saying that Enoch "was translated, that he should not see death." Here to be taken to God, and to die, are represented as directly opposite things. Enoch was saved from Hades, from the power of corruption, from the state of "the dead who cannot praise the Lord," and admitted to his presence in heaven. Of Elijah we learn that he likewise "was taken up into heaven," without seeing death, without any dissolution of the body, or banishment of the soul to Hades. In both of these cases, undoubtedly, the translation to heaven was a great and a singular reward for singular piety and devotedness. Yet if, apart from resurrection and ascension into heaven, it be, as some believe, a great privilege to be delivered from the burden of the flesh; a privilege involving nearer communion with God, what advantage had Enoch or Elijah? And how can it be said, that God took them, rather than any other departed saints? It may be said, that they were at once admitted to that superior blessedness which God will confer on all his saints when their bodies are raised in glory at the Last Day.* But the account of Elijah's appearance at the transfiguration precludes this idea. It is true that our Saviour's appearance at that time was such as to give the three favored disciples some conception of his future glory. For it was the fulfilment of his promise made a week previously, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." And St. Peter says in reference to the wonderful scene, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty." But still it is plain that his full glory and majesty was not then revealed, even to the chosen disciples. For St. John writes, "we know not what we shall be; but we know that when Christ shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." And this, though St. John had beheld Christ not only at his transfiguration, but also in those greater splendours which he records in the book of Revelation; and though St. Paul, who had ample intercourse with the other apostles, had been favoured with repeated visions of Christ. It is plain then that though the glorious appearance which our Lord put on was, in conjunction with the voice of approval from heaven, a sufficient proof and manifestation of the glories of his future kingdom, yet it was not a full display of them. Jesus indeed "was not yet glorified;" he had not as yet "ascended into heaven that he might fill all things;" nor testified that "all power was given unto him in heaven and in earth." It is not to be supposed then that they who appeared with him had as yet received their full glory. It would therefore be difficult for those who believe in an intermediate consciousness to say in what respect these persons were in a more favored state than other departed saints. And though any one is at liberty to conjecture that some superior degree of blessedness was conferred on Enoch and Elijah, the declaration concerning the former, "He was not, for God took him,"—seems to imply a difference not in degree but in kind, between the fate of Enoch and that of the rest of the dead. For if it be contended, that God "took" Enoch and Elijah, without death, but that this "does not forbid us to believe that he "takes" others, to a similar reward, after their death: we may reply by asking—On this supposition, how does it appear from Genesis that Enoch did not die? The children of Rachel "were not," when they were taken from their mother by death; and therefore when it is written that Enoch "was not," this would rather show that he departed this life in the ordinary way. We can learn that he was translated only from the words, "God took him."

When however the question arises, Whence, from what blissful region did Elijah come, in what form did he appear? much, and indeed inseparable difficulty arises from the appearance of Moses with him. For Moses was not translated that he should not see death; he died upon Mount Nebo. His appearance with Elijah might indeed lead us to conclude that both came from the same world or state, and that the condition of Enoch and Elijah therefore differed not at all from that of the rest of the blessed dead, who die in the Lord. But this notion is wholly incompatible with the fact, that while the translation of the former was a reward, the death of Moses was a punishment. Yet how could it be a privation to Moses to be admitted, rather than to the earthly Canaan, to the heaven of Enoch, and Elijah? And how can we suppose that the disembodied spirit of Moses, dwelling in Hades, enjoyed the same life (if life at all), as they, whose especial reward was that they should not see death; but who were raised, body and soul, to some heavenly region? Surely it is probable that Moses and Elias came from different regions; had been in different states. We are not told whether the two were similar forms. But the power which called Moses' spirit from the grave could render him visible to the eye, for a special purpose, as was Samuel at Endor.* Such similarity of aspect decides nothing with respect to the condition of their souls. It is in the very highest degree improbable that a disembodied soul in Hades should be in the same state as the soul which was raised to heaven, and had never dwelt, as far as we have reason to believe, in any other than a corporeal habitation.

If however any one is inclined to conclude, from his appearance at the transfiguration; that Moses was honored after death with translation into the heaven of Enoch and Elijah, this will by no means render it probable that other departed saints enjoy a similar blessedness to that of these distinguished servants of God.

This conclusion is strengthened by the accounts which the Scriptures have given us concerning the miraculous raising of the dead. For nothing can be collected from these accounts to show, or even faintly suggest, that the souls of the persons raised were summoned from a world of consciousness. They appear to have awakened as from a profound and dreamless sleep. If they had been recalled from the heaven of Enoch and Elijah, would they have foreborne to speak of it; to reveal somewhat concerning this glorious state or place of the dead? Yet tradition, full of fond and vain fictions as it is, does not even profess to record a revelation of this kind; nor even offer us as genuine one single testimony, by any of these persons, in proof of an intermediate consciousness.

Further; it would be hard to imagine in what way resurrection could be a blessing, or indeed how it could be other than a severe trial and affliction, except on the supposition that the dead are, literally, "in a land where all things are forgotten." Let us turn to the case of Lazarus. He "slept;" and our Saviour proceeded to Bethany, to "awake him out of sleep." Did this mean, to summon his soul from the lower heavens; nay, as some would suppose, from the society of angels, and just men made perfect, and bring it back to reoccupy its frail tenement of clay in this world of sorrow and sin? Surely this would be consistent neither with the words, nor the gracious design of our Saviour.

If it be objected that St. Paul has said, "to die is gain;" this can be equally well explained either on the supposition of an intermediate consciousness, or of a momentary hiding in the grave until the indignation be overpast: while on the other hand, the apparent discordance between the words of St. Paul; and the fact of our Lord's raising the dead, is certainly the less, when we adopt the supposition that they were raised from a state of mental torpor.

IS THIS AGE FINAL, OR PREPARATORY?

No. II.

ISAIAH ELEVENTH CONSIDERED.

On this chapter immense labor has been bestowed to harmonize it with the theory of the burning up of the world in 1843; but still it reads just as it always did, and shows conclusively an age in this world that has never yet been seen, and never can be, if there is not a dispensation yet future differing essentially from any that has ever gone before. Here is presented to us a Branch out of the root of Jesse. None will doubt but that the Son of David—the Son of God—is here intended. Under his government the animal creation will become changed so as to be harmless and docile; and "the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for, the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. And in that day [when the earth is thus full of the knowledge of the Lord] there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people: to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious." That is not all: "It shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria," &c. Not the gathering of spiritual Jews, but his people whom he had once before gathered: not a gathering from Babylon, as will soon be seen: that gathering was not in "that day" just spoken of. "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Here the language distinctly marks the two nations into which the posterity of Jacob were divided in the days of Rehoboam, son of Solomon; one nation was called Judah, and the other Israel, and sometimes Ephraim, from the principal tribe of the nation of Israel. This latter nation was not "scattered," but was "cast out" of the land of Israel into Assyria, some hundred years before Judah was carried captive into Babylon. Israel was therefore called "outcasts," as in the text before us: see also 2 Kings 17: 20. Nor was "Judah dispersed" to the "four corners of the earth" till their Temple was destroyed by the Romans. The promise in this text, therefore, clearly relates to their gathering subsequent to that destruction; and as no such gathering ever has taken place, it must still be future, and is not "conditional," and is as certain as a "Thus saith the Lord" can make it. If any doubt remained, the next verse would dispel it: "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

Before Ephraim or Israel was carried away into Assyria, there was continual strife, contention, and war between the two nations. When one shall be assembled and the other gathered, this envy and vexing each other shall be known no more. And let it never be forgotten, these things are to be done "in that day" when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord;" of course future, and a glorious day. In that day, verse 16, "There shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Here we see what the first "recovering" was, which is alluded to, verse 11, where it is said, "The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people," &c. It was their being brought up out of Egypt, and it is "the remnant" of the same people of whom the prophet speaks.

The prophet then goes on to tell us what that people will say when gathered: "And in that day thou shalt say, O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me. Behold, God is my salvation! I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord JEHOVAH is my strength, and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things: THIS IS KNOWN IN ALL THE EARTH. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."—Isaiah 12. This subject is made so plain by the prophet that it does really seem wonderful that any should call in question the meaning of the prophecy, or attempt to spiritualize it. That it applies to any events that have ever yet occurred, can not be shown. That it is not a conditional promise is equally manifest. So surely as the BRANCH of Jesse's root ever reigns on earth, so surely, "in that day," will these things come to pass: so we believe.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—All the numbers for 1848 can still be supplied. No subscription will be received for a less time than one volume. Any person who will send us two new subscribers with one dollar current money, free of expense, shall have, as a premium, one copy of Dobbey, in paper cover, or three copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo. pamphlet of 120 pages: or three copies of the "Christian Psalmody" in paper covers. Please state distinctly which you will have, and how they shall be sent.

"CHRISTIAN PSALMODY, OR PSALMS AND HYMNS FOR THE USE OF ALL CHRISTIANS" is the title of the new Hymn Book we are publishing, and which will be ready for delivery before our distant subscribers receive this paper. The authors of this compilation have labored to present it free from those objections which are justly urged against other selections: and they flatter themselves that no intelligent christian will find cause for objection to the work. The work is designedly small, and yet, sufficiently large to give variety. The largeness of a Hymn Book is no recommendation, as most congregations confine themselves to a select few out of the mass. In that now presented the compilers have labored to embody this select few.

The work is got up neatly, 24mo., 128 pages, in paper covers, at 15 cents single copy; $1 per dozen, or, $8 per hundred. Cash always with the order.

BR. WM. G. MORSE, of Springfield Mass., we are afflicted to learn, died of the Small Pox, in its most malignant form, Friday, May 18th. Br. R. E. Ladd writes, that "He fell asleep as he had lived a consistent, humble christian, and in full hope of a glorious immortality at the coming of Christ." We would mingle our tears with those of his afflicted wife and children; and we offer for their consolation that Jesus our "Lord" will soon be "here," and He is "the resurrection and the life;" so that our beloved brother will sleep but a short time before he will hear that same voice that called Lazarus out of the grave, saying "William come forth." "I will raise him up at the last day" is the promise of our soon coming Lord and Life.

THE TRUE WESLEYAN AND IMMORTALITY.—We ask our readers carefully to examine the "Review," by our Assistant Editor, of the articles of Rev. Luther Lee, Editor of the Wesleyan. Here are two master minds; one on each side of the question. We would gladly publish the articles of the True Wesleyan entire if our room would admit; though we really think, by giving Br. Lee's article "No. 2" entire in the last Examiner, we have given the gist of his whole argument on the philosophy of man's natural immortality. What he has said since is only an amplification of the same points, which when stripped of all their dress are summed up thus:—

1. There are only two primary substances, viz.: matter and spirit. 2. Matter has no power of self-motion or self-determination, however it may be organized. 2. Therefore, wherever we see matter endowed with this power there must have been added to it an immortal spirit or soul.

This, we say, is the very soul of all the Wesleyan has said on the philosophy of immortality; and, if it is true, it endows every animal, insect, or crawling worm upon earth with an immortal soul, just as really as man; and strips Jesus Christ of all the glory of bestowing immortality upon us by his work and mediation.

The "Review," when finished, will be transposed into a book, 18mo.: and we hope friends will be prepared to give it a wide circulation in that form, especially among the readers of the "True Wesleyan." The price of the work will be given when we find what it will cost.

DEFINITE TIME FOR THE ADVENT OF CHRIST.—We see by some of our exchanges, an effort is again made to fix such a time. Whether that discovery will ever be made we shall not argue now; but one thing to our mind is perfectly clear, and that is,—no such discovery will ever be made by the modus operandi now in use: viz., That the "70 weeks," of Dan. 9th, terminated within the period of the first advent, or three and a half years after. Nothing is plainer to us than that the 70 weeks include all the time till "the holy city" was given up to the Gentiles; or, to that time when Jerusalem was compassed about with armies. Our Lord commanded his disciples to "begin," their work "at Jerusalem;" and he never told them to leave it out of their labor till "ye shall see Jerusalem compassed about with armies;" then, and not before, terminated the "70 weeks determined upon thy people and thy holy city, to finish transgression." Then their iniquity was "filled up;" and then the "condemnation to the fire of Gehenna" came upon the city and people; and in the middle of one week, following the 70, the sacrifice and the whole Jewish ritual was made to cease, by the destruction of the temple and its services. Till the advocates of definite time abandon their premises, about the end of the 70 weeks, they labor in vain.

SUPPORT FOR THE EXAMINER.—Just as our paper was going to press, we received the following communication, which we insert by request of the writer, who has long been known by many of our readers.

NEW YORK, May 31st, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS,—I am sorry to see by your last paper, that the Examiner has received so feeble a support: in view of which, allow me to ask your readers if they are aware that Bro. Storrs, from affluence, has become poor since he embraced the great truths of life and death? Do they really know that he has devoted as much time as has been necessary to the supervision of the paper without receiving money enough to pay the printer? Are they willing that it shall now go down without an effort to succor it? I trust not—but that we all, according to our ability, may do something to sustain and extend its influence.

The Examiner may not, upon all points, advocate the views we hold and deem important, but are we for that to withhold our support? Are not the enemies of the glorious truths we believe withering up on every side? and by misstatements and every device of the adversary doing all they can to disparage the truth, and those who uphold it? Whatever may be the opinion of others, it is my firm belief, that the Examiner advocates a view of the divine law of the utmost importance, and one intimately connected with those of the resurrection and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

The paper has contained single articles worth the subscription; and I hope that soon we shall have a weekly instead of monthly, to scatter broad cast these truths through the length and breadth of the land. I would suggest, as Bro. Storrs is not wont to put forth appeals for aid in every paper, that all the friends will hear the call that has been made, and send each according to his ability, as the Lord hath prospered him.

Yours, in the hope of Endless Life,
HENRY A. CHITTENDEN.

N. B.—All who are able, should get as many copies of Dobbey as possible, and circulate in their respective neighborhoods. They will thus not only help Bro. Storrs, but give circulation to one of the most important theological works ever published. One hundred thousand copies ought to be scattered immediately.

H. A. C.

PREACHING every Lord's day by the Editors of this paper at Commissioners Hall, Third St. below Green, morning and evening.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST.—We learn that one objection to the Examiner is, that we do not say enough on the above topic. We firmly believe that event is now "nigh, even at the door;" but we have no idea of attempting to find out an exact day or year for its occurrence, unless events future should shed more light on prophecy and prophetic numbers than has ever yet been elicited; and we think the propensity to do it tends to an intolerant spirit that ill becomes those who are looking for the advent. The leading advent paper (we mean of Mr. Miller's school) said in March 1844—"There are none of the prophetic periods," as we understand them, extending beyond the Jewish year 1843. The above we shall ever maintain as the immutable truth of the word of God, and therefore, till our Lord come, we shall ever look for his return as the next event in historical prophecy." Yet, the same paper made large professions of its wisdom in discovering that the tremendous events of 1848 were a wonderful fulfillment of prophecy, giving evidence that they had always been right in their theory: and they say, in 1849—"We hail the emancipation of the sons of Abraham from their long, cruel, and ignominious political and religious bondage to the Gentile powers of earth, as another evidence of God's faithfulness in fulfilling his word," &c. Now what is all this but saying, indirectly, (for they never "confess" directly) "We thought, in 1844, there was no more historical prophecy to have a fulfillment prior to the advent, but great things have come, to pass that we looked not for: nevertheless, we will turn these things to our account, and make the most of them to keep up the appearance of the truth of our theory."

After the "Jewish year" 1844 had passed away, one of the conductors of the paper, of which we have spoken, held the following language in his Harmony of Prophetic Chronology, and Time of the Advent to be Known, in which he leaves the "Jewish year 1843" and stretches out the period to the "end of 1847." "Those who are brought to view as the subjects of the wrath of God at the Second Advent, are those who reject the testimony of God on the time of that event." Yet, "the time" of this leader has all failed; but his developments since have painfully shown that his uncharitableness, and that of his associates, has not failed. We see that these leaders have been mistaken both in time and in events; and yet they have severely denounced us for "not following" them. After 1844 we looked for and expected to see the breaking in pieces of the monarchies of Europe before the advent; and were not taken by surprise when the French revolution of 1848, and the events following, occurred. We believed, before their occurrence, that such "historical prophecy," or prophetic events, would occur before the "return" of our Lord.

We believe that many "historical prophecies" are still to have a fulfilment on this earth, before the "new heaven and new earth" of Rev. 21; but how many of them are to be prior to the second advent, or personal return of our Lord, we do not know. Were we believers of the school above referred to—that is, believers in the theory that denies the return of the literal posterity of Jacob "to the land wherein their fathers have dwelt"—that maintains the burning of the whole globe at the precise time of the advent, immediately to be succeeded by the new heaven and new earth, and the ending of probation to all the human family, without regard to the unavoidable ignorance of many—we say, were we believers in such positions, we could not, with our present light, believe that the advent would occur for many years to come, unless we were to account many of the prophecies as "cunningly devised fables."

While we by no means approve or condemn all that is published in those papers claiming the peculiar name of "Advent" Papers, we have thought they furnish as much reading on that topic as would answer the largest desires of the class of our readers who feel that subject to be the one on which they delight most to dwell; and we have supposed that these readers of the Examiner take one or other of those papers, which are published weekly. We have always avowed, that the principal object of the Bible Examiner is the full discussion of the Immortality question. And while one of the advent papers, viz., "The Harbinger and Advocate," published at Rochester, N. Y., by Elder Joseph Marsh, gives a considerable amount of matter on the immortality question, there is no paper that enters so largely into the subject, or that has the means of doing it, as the Examiner, and this at a price that places it within the reach of all.

We intend to have more variety as soon as we can find room for it. Yet, we believe our paper is not without variety; and supplies a place that no other in the nation does or can. The development of the spread of the great truths we advocate, of no immortality to man out of Christ, nor without a resurrection from the dead, in England, within the last few years, has disposed us to occupy a large portion of our paper with extracts from that source, to the exclusion of much that would otherwise have appeared in our columns on other topics. We consider, however, whatever others may think, that this question of immortality lies at the foundation of every other truth of the Bible relating to salvation; and that no one can fully understand what man needs, and what the gospel proposes to do for him, that does not understand this subject; nor can he see either the importance or value of the second personal advent of Christ, unless he understands this truth, viz., "If no resurrection, there is no future life," and "if no second personal advent of Christ, then there is no resurrection;" and, consequently, our immortality and future life depends upon that advent and the resurrection by Christ, who is the "resurrection and the life." But our immortality or future life, neither of them, depend upon Christ or his advent, if men are possessed of immortality by creation, or natural generation: and, as a consequence, there would be no use in the resurrection; and the coming of Christ again would be a matter of very little importance. Hence we feel safe in saying, as a general thing, those who believe the common theory of man's natural immortality do not and cannot feel the value of those grand gospel truths—the personal advent of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead.

MORAL DEPRAVITY—ORIGINAL SIN.

No. II.

We now proceed with our examination of those texts which are supposed to sustain the position of the "Assembly's Catechism," as presented in our previous number. It is an easy matter to throw together a number of texts that seem to prove the common theory; and if time-worn traditions are to settle the meaning of those texts, without the aid of other portions of scripture, or the use of the faculties God has given us to search the scriptures, as those who must give account for themselves, we might conclude the Assembly of Divines and their adherents are right in their declaration, that we all inherit a morally depraved nature from Adam, "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil, and that continually."

We shall now take up Psa. 51: 5: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." This text is considered conclusive by the advocates of inherent moral depravity. Truly, if it is, the Psalmist, instead of confessing his sin, hides himself under a cloak, as most other sinners do who believe the common theory. He had committed great sins—murder and adultery. If he does affirm the doctrine usually drawn from the text, he throws the blame first on his mother, and then indirectly, at least, on God. Let us see. "Why did I sin these great sins?" Ans. "Because my mother conceived me in sin;" i. e. "conveyed to me moral depravity." And again, we ask him, "Why did you commit these enormous sins?" Ans. "I was shapen in iniquity;" But who shapened you? Ans. "Thy [God's] hands have made me and fashioned me:"—Psa. 119: 73. We sum up thus—"I have committed adultery and murder, because God made and fashioned me in iniquity in my mother's womb." The blasphemy of such a position is apparent, and it is the legitimate result of the doctrine of inherent moral depravity. Let the advocates of that doctrine not blush to own their own child, if determined to maintain a theory like that of the Assembly's Catechism. If it be asked, what did the Psalmist mean if that was not his meaning? We answer in the language of Wesley on another topic, "It were better to say there is no meaning at all, than to attribute such a sense to the language." To charge the God of truth and holiness—who hateth iniquity—with having caused the birth of untold millions with a moral nature "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all spiritual good, and wholly inclined to all evil," &c. is a blasphemy, one would think, enough to make a devil tremble to utter.

We reply, however, that the language is of similar import to that in Psa. 68: 3: "The wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies." Now we all know that none "speak" at all "as soon as they are born;" and hence, the most that can be made of the expression is, that those who are now wicked, commenced an early course of wickedness. That a want of attention to truth in early life has resulted, as all know it does and will result, in confirmed wickedness and falsehood. So the most that can be made of the Psalmist's sentiment, Psa. 51: 5, is, that in his humiliation and penitence for his sin, he speaks in a style of hyperbole, which is not uncommon under deep feeling, when the mind struggles to give utterance to its emotions; but the exaggeration in such cases is not misunderstood by any who have not a theory to serve.

But again,—if the Psalmist's expression proved, so far as he was concerned, that he was born with a nature morally depraved, which we do not admit, it could not prove that all other men were in like manner. Job affirms the opposite of himself; for, he declares he had cared for "the fatherless and widow," and that he had "guided her from" his "mother's womb;" Job 31: 15-18. Here, then, is proof of one of Adam's posterity that was not born with a nature "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all spiritual good," &c.; for, James declares, that "pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows," &c. Job affirms that he did this from his "mother's womb." Just as early as David was corrupt, Job was pure; so that if we give the advocates of inherent moral pollution the full benefit of Psa. 51: 5, their theory is at an infinite distance from being established; and, especially, when the holy and blessed God has warned us all against using the "proverb that the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge."

The next text urged in support of the common theory, that we will notice, is Job 15: 14: "What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?" If this text proves anything for that theory, it proves too much. It would prove that Jesus Christ himself had a morally depraved nature—he was "born of a woman." Not to press that point, however, we ask, Who utters these words? Do you say, They are inspiration. We reply, Just as much as the words, "thou shalt not surely die," are inspiration. "Eliphaz the Temanite" is the speaker; of him the Lord says, chap. 42: 7: "My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of me right," &c. Here is the Lord's own testimony that Eliphaz's discourses are not inspiration, and therefore are not authority: and mark—when Eliphaz had finished the discourse of which we are speaking, Job commenced, chap. 16: 3, by calling that discourse "vain words." In that same discourse, verse 4, Eliphaz charged Job with casting off fear, and restraining prayer before God; which, to say the least, was not true; and hence we may expect to find other untruths in his talk, and none more so than the insinuation in the verse under consideration.

EPHESIANS CHAP. III.

VERSE 13. Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

Because of the access and glorious privileges spoken of, "I desire that ye faint not"—that you do not despond, or be timid—"at my tribulations" distresses, calamities, the pressure that is on me—"for you"—or, on your account,—which is your glory: that is, they were to conduce to their inheriting the glory of which he had spoken in the previous part of the epistle.

VERSES 14—19. For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

"For this cause"—that you may inherit glory, "I bow my knees"—in prayer—"unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ"—through whom alone we can have access to the Father: and—"of"—from—"whom the whole family"—patria, kindred, tribe, race, progeny—"in heaven"—who have been translated, as Enoch and Elijah; or, who may have been of the number who "came out of their graves after his resurrection"—and in earth are named." The whole race of saints, wherever they are, and whenever they lived, derive their spiritual and divine life from him, as the appointed head of this family; and therefore take his name whose nature they possess; as children take the name of their father. As the head of this family all communications with his Father are made through and in the name of Christ. Thus, to the Father, Paul said, he prayed, "That he would grant you"—of this family, who are still on earth—"according to the riches of his glory"—according to his glorious riches, wealth, or abundance, which is inexhaustible and unsearchable—"to be strengthened with might"—increased in power—"by his Spirit"—which is the efficient agency in communicating power, or might—"in the inner man"—or, that new and spiritual nature derived from Christ, and through union with him, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts"—that Christ may have a home, a permanent place, in your minds or affections, so that every thought shall be under the government of that Spirit with which he was filled. This home, or residence, for Christ in the hearts, or affections, cannot be attained except "by faith," a strong and unwavering confidence in God, through his Son, who is the medium, and the only one, through which the Spirit of God is communicated to men. The apostle prayed that such communication of the Spirit might be made, "that being rooted and grounded in love," taking root, or striking roots into, and made firm in love. The figure is beautiful. Love is the soil in which, and in which alone, the Christian can grow: God is love: Christ is the gift of love; the grand office of the Spirit is to shed abroad the love of God in the heart of believers: they are planted in love: they should strike their roots deep therein, and become firm and unmovable in it: thus will they honor the God of love, resemble Christ in love, become unblamable in love; and so attain unto the full and perfect adoption of children to God, and partake of his immortality, incorruptibility, and endless life, at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And Paul desired that they might now be rooted and grounded in love, so that they "may be able"—fully able—"to comprehend," to understand, to know, to lay hold of—"with all saints"—in company with all the holy ones—"what is the breadth"—how wide—"and length," how extensive—"and depth"—how inscrutable, or unsearchable—"and height"—how high the elevation of the love of God—"and to know the love of Christ:" here the apostle, himself, has attained that elevation in description that his own head, as it were, becomes giddy, and he exclaims from astonishment at his discoveries—"WHICH PASSETH KNOWLEDGE." Well said, truly: it is even so: and the loftiest intellect that shines and expands before the throne of God must now, and will forever, have to make the same acknowledgment. Well, saith the apostle, I will stop here in my effort to describe the love of Christ and God; but I pray, "that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." Truly, this wish is the cap stone of the arch, and all language fails in any attempt at exposition: we will only add—Even so, Amen.

Verses 20 and 21. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

The apostle after his masterly flight, in his attempt at a description of the love of God and Christ, seems unwilling to descend till he had planted a standard even above the cap stone, and he proceeds to give a shout of triumph while he runs up the flag of the kingdom, and says, "Now unto him who is able to do"—how much, Paul?—"all we ask"—yes, and all we think, yea, and—"above"—over, beyond—"all we ask or think:" and not only beyond that, but "abundantly above" it: yea, "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think." We can ask for much, but, we may think of more, perhaps, than we dare ask for; but after all, in our deepest and highest thoughts, we do not, hardly, begin to reach even the outskirts of the treasures God has in store for, and which he is able to give to those that love and obey him through his Son. But, says the apostle, he is able to do these things "according to the power that worketh in us," by which we were formed of the dust, brought up in animal nature, developed an intellectual nature, now a spiritual nature, whereby we are already made partakers of the divine nature: and what cannot that power effect which has already accomplished so much? Who shall fix its bounds? Who can tell where or when it is to stop in its developments in us? Will it stop with this age? No: therefore, "Now unto him be glory in the church"—the assembly of the holy ones—"by Christ Jesus"—who is the head of that assembly; through him let glory be given to God, his Father and our Father—"throughout all ages, world"—aionon, ages—"without end"—or, throughout all the endless succession of ages. This age is not to terminate the wonders of God's love and power. There is to be a continued, an endless number of ages, succeeding each other; each rising higher in glory and in the richness of its developments, without ever exhausting the fullness of God. The idea of the next age being the last is a dream of ignorance, a mere fancy, unsupported by the Scriptures, and at war with the Divine administration, so far as it has yet been developed. What unthought of glories, then, still lie in the future. We have no need of "endless torments" to stimulate us to seek eternal life: "the joy set before us" is ample. The preaching endless torture, as a motive to seek and serve God, has only originated in ignorance and superstition. Let the Scripture truth of God's love and kind designs take its place, and see if we do not have a more consistent race of Christians.

DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT.

We give the following extract from a pamphlet on the above topic, by Eld. Jabez Chadwick, of Enfield Centre, N. Y. The author is an educated man, of the Christian denomination. It expresses our views on the subject, and we cheerfully endorse it.

The atonement is a cardinal doctrine of the Christian religion. And all Christians so regard it. Nevertheless, it is viewed in very different lights. And the views of those, claiming the title of orthodox, have undergone various changes and modifications. Opinions concerning it, which were once deemed of vital importance, are now rejected by a great majority of the churches, as unscriptural, and inconsistent with the grace of pardon, and the justice of damnation. The doctrine, however, is not rescued by these changes and modifications from all perversion and mistake. It is a subject which manifestly requires further investigation.

It will be my object in this essay to remove the misapprehension, and correct the abuse which has attended, and still attends this doctrine, and to place it before the reader in its Scriptural light.

In the first place, much will depend on the right definition of the term, atonement. Things should be called by their proper names, and clear and definite meanings should be affixed to the words we use in relation to any subject. A deficiency here cannot fail to be attended with much confusion and perplexity.

What, then, is the true definition of atonement? Answer, that it is the reconciliation, agreement, or coming together, which is affected between men and God, through the mediation of Jesus Christ.

That this definition is correct will appear from critical examination of the original Greek word which is translated "the atonement." This is "tee katallagee," the true meaning of which is the reconciliation. The word atonement occurs but once in the English version of the New Testament, viz., Rom. v: 11, whereas the original word occurs several times; but, except in the aforesaid passage, it is rendered reconciliation. It also occurs a number of times in its verbal, or participial form, and is rendered reconcile, reconciling, and reconciled. It also occurs frequently in the Old Testament, and is rendered sometimes atonement, and sometimes reconciliation, reconciled, &c.

The above mentioned passage in Romans reads thus: "And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." (Gr. teen katallageen, accusative case, i. e. the reconciliation.) Atonement was formerly used by the English to mean reconciliation and pronounced at-one-ment. Unless the translators considered this as its true signification, it is hard to account for their rendering the same Greek word, letter for letter, once atonement, and twice, at least, reconciliation. I wish it to be duly remembered that the words, "the atonement," in Rom. v: 11, and "reconciliation," which occurs twice in 2 Cor. v: 18, 19, are from the same Greek term, and in the latter cases, as well as in the former, the Greek letter is prefixed, so that it should have read "the reconciliation," instead of "reconciliation." There is manifestly no reason why the article should not be expressed here, as it is in the passage in Romans. "The ministry of reconciliation" or "the words of reconciliation" committed to Paul and others, does not pertain to any method of reconciliation, but to a certain, peculiar, definite method, described in the Gospel; and hence it should have been emphasized by prefixing the definite article, as it is in Greek. It is further evident that reconciliation is the true meaning of atonement, from the fact that the Greek word, from which it is rendered, occurs frequently in its verbal, or participial form in the New Testament, and is rendered invariably reconcile, reconciled, or reconciling. It occurs twice in the context of Rom. v: 11, and is rendered "were reconciled," and "being reconciled." The verbal, or participial form of this Greek word occurs also several times in the before-mentioned v. chapter of 2 Cor., and is rendered "hath reconciled," "reconciling," and "reconciled." It occurs also in the same sense, Rom. xi: 13, Eph. ii: 16, and Col. i: 20, 21.

It is, therefore, perfectly clear that to atone, in the New Testament sense of the term, is to reconcile; and that the atonement is the reconciliation, viz., the reconciliation which is effected between men and God by the mediation and work of Christ.

Reconciliation appears also to be the appropriate meaning of the word, as it is used in the Old Testament. The original Hebrew word is said to have another signification, viz., cleansing; but I believe that all concede that reconciliation is one of its meanings. And it appears that this is the sense in which the inspired writers, generally, if not always, use the word, when speaking of sacrifices, and other means of obtaining intercourse and favor with God.

Atonement was indeed made by various means; but reconciliation is the sense which its different applications will bear. Moses, for instance, made an atonement for the sins of Israel by prayer. Ex. xxxii: 30. "And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the Lord: peradventure, I shall make an atonement for your sin." Aaron, in the time of the plague, made an atonement, by taking a censor, and fire from off the altar and putting incense thereon, and offering it to the Lord, as he stood between the living and the dead. See Num. xvi: 40—48. Phineas made an atonement when he executed summary justice upon Cozby and the Midianitish harlot, by thrusting a javelin through both their bodies. See Num. xxv: 7—13. And from time to time, the priests made an atonement by sprinkling the blood of the victims which had been offered in sacrifice, "upon" and "before the mercy-seat" in the inner court. The atonement did not consist in killing and offering the victims. These were only the means of it. The atonement, itself was made subsequently, by sprinkling the blood as above, or in such other ways as God directed.

In all these cases, we may attach the sense of reconciliation to the word atonement. Indeed, Aaron, in making atonement for "the holy place, the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar," is expressly said to "have made an end of reconciling them." See Levit. xvi: 20. It is also written, ch. vi: 20, "And no sin offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place shall be eaten: it shall be burned with fire." Reconcile is manifestly used here as a substitute for the word atone. Again in ch. viii: 15, Moses is said to have "sanctified the altar to make reconciliation upon it," i. e. atonement. Moreover, in the time of Hezekiah, it is said, 2 Chron. xxix: 24, that the priests killed the bullocks selected for sacrifice, and made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and the sin offering should be made for all Israel." Here the sense of reconciliation is given to the word atonement. It is, therefore, clear that this is the radical meaning. The atonement was not the sacrifice itself; but the end which was thereby effected after the blood was sprinkled as directed. The sacrifice was the means and the atonement, or reconciliation, was the end obtained.

So the sacrifice of Christ, to which the typical atonements referred, was not the atonement itself; but only the means of it. There is as plain a difference, in this case, as in the other, between the means and the end.

The sacrifice of Christ is often referred to, as though it constituted the atonement: whereas it was only the means of it. The atonement itself, i. e. the reconciliation, was a subsequent thing, and was effected by his appearing before God in the heavenly sanctuary, "not with the blood of bulls and goats: but with his own blood," and continuing to intercede in our behalf. The offering of himself, inclusive of his whole mediatorial work, is to be considered in the light of appointed and necessary means, with reference to an important end, viz., the reconciliation between men and God. To substitute the end, which is the reconciliation, for the means, whereby it is effected, viz., the work of Christ, is to confound things which are obviously different. This want of a proper discrimination between the means and the end has led to great misunderstandings, perplexity, and abuse, which I shall show hereafter. For the present, I shall only define the reconciliation in question.

"IMPORTANCE OF THE RESURRECTION."

We give the following extract from Dobney's new work, hoping it may interest our readers so that they will desire to see the book, and send for it. We wish that work scattered far and wide; and as soon as possible. Public mind, religiously, is shaken; and unless some more consistent theory than "endless torment,"—which grows out of the notion of man's natural immortality—can be shown to be the doctrine of the Bible, we may soon see infidelity sweep the churches themselves with the besom of destruction. If ministers would not be swept away with a swelling flood, that is rising, let them learn, and fearlessly proclaim—No immortality out of Christ—and, "All the wicked will God destroy." Some say—"It is non-essential." They may learn otherwise when too late.

It has been already submitted that scripture recognises only two bodies for man—the present animal-body, soma psuchikon, and the spiritual body, soma pneumatikon, and at the same time knows nothing of any conscious existence in a perfectly disembodied state. Which of course makes the resurrection [leaving it as yet an open question, what is meant by it precisely, and when it takes place] to be all-important. It at the same time undoubtedly teaches the immediate enjoyment by the saint of the presence of his Saviour, and the blessedness of heaven. In confirmation of which remarks, the reader is requested to study attentively in its connection—

2 CORINTHIANS, chap. iv.

17. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

18. While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

Chapter v.

1. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven.

3. If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

5. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

6. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord.

7. (For we walk by faith, not by sight:)

8. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord.

At the close of chap. iv the apostle testifies how lightly his manifold afflictions sat upon him. And afflictions were they of no ordinary kind,—"troubled on every side—perplexed—persecuted—always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus—always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake;" or, as he speaks in a subsequent chapter, when he is compelled to compare himself with others,—(in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one: thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren: in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.) Yet with sublimest heroism he points to calamities and sufferings which would drink up the spirits of most of us, and says "These light afflictions! these light afflictions! Do we ask the secret of this victorious composure? He tells us that he was habitually regarding the unseen realities of the next state, 'Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.'"

Here we perceive distinctly that it was his confidence in a resurrection that lightened his spirit of its load, and cheered him on his lonely and stormy way. We ought to compel ourselves to notice this, agreeing exactly as it does with his wont on other occasions. For it was his habit to console himself with the thought of being raised from the dead, which was the "recompense of the reward" unto which 'he had respect'; as the first chapter of this epistle also shows, for having said 'We would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure above strength, inasmuch, that we despaired even of life,' he goes on to say, 'But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God who raiseth the dead.' 2 Cor. i. 8-9.

But let us return to our proper passage. The apostle having said that notwithstanding all his troubles he persevered in his arduous course, animated with the confident hope that God who raised up Jesus would also raise him up, v. 14, regarded without displacency the perishing of his outward man, v. 16, seeing that his afflictions would work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, v. 17. For he was accustomed not to look at the visible, which is the fugitive, but at the unseen and eternal. v. 18.

Let it be observed that all this grows directly and continuously out of v. 14, (v. 15 being parenthetical, and arising out of the last clause of the preceding verse.) The being raised up by Jesus is the thought which, as the grand source of his joy, and secret of his career, he is dwelling on, which reconciles him to the perishing of the outward man, and makes his afflictions light as the gossamer. Our division of chapters here is peculiarly unfortunate; v. 1-8 being but a continuation of the interesting subject, the word, For, marking the close logical connection.—For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, called before our outward man perishing, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, that is, another body,—eternal in the

AFFECTIONATE PREACHING.

There is something in an affectionate statement of gospel truths peculiarly calculated to find its way to the heart. Christianity is a religion of sympathy. It is founded on the principal of human wretchedness. It meets man in every species of sorrow and affliction. It takes him by the hand when deserted by human supports. It pierces the clouds which throw a melancholy gloom over the path of life; and opens before 'the way-worn traveller,' a 'hope full of immortality.' Let us reflect upon this peculiarity of our holy religion, and consider what an advantage it gives us in our public addresses. By far the greater part of our congregations are suffering in one way or other. We cannot enter a family, and be permitted to know what is passing within it, without perceiving that there is a worm corroding the root of their comforts—some poisoned arrow drinking up their spirits—some intolerable burden subduing their strength. To such, how suitable is the invitation of a compassionate Saviour, 'Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you!' How appropriate is the character of the great High Priest who is 'touched with the feeling of our own infirmities!' To such, how adapted are the consolations of the Spirit, the promises of the Gospel, and the resting place of the saints! To overlook such circumstances, and to discuss abstract truths in a cold and formal heartless manner—O what a loss of opportunity! what a mocking of human misery! what dereliction of duty! what a prostitution of office! what a fearful responsibility! Let us, my reverend brethren, pray for the heart of a shepherd—for 'bowels of compassion.' Let us take the sufferer by the hand, and conduct him to the Saviour! Let us lead him to the wells of salvation! Let us pour the healing balm into his bleeding heart, and assure him that there is One who sympathises with his sorrows, and who 'is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.' Forgive my earnestness, and permit me to say, that Christ is the only subject which meets the wants and wretchedness of man; Christ, in his person and offices; Christ, in his doctrines and atonement; Christ, in his spirit and in his government; in his love, his condescension, his mercy, his salvation,—as the guide and support and comfort of his people; as their Redeemer, their Friend, their Advocate, their Forerunner, their Representative; the Fountain of all blessedness, both in time and eternity!—Jarman.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The recent arrivals from Europe bring deeply interesting intelligence. A synopsis of it in the Ledger, of this city, commences by saying, "The whole of continental Europe seems ready to burst into one general conflagration." Such is the truth: and we have long looked, and are still looking for a "conflagration" there, such as will leave in the shade all the horrors Europe has ever witnessed. How soon, or how rapidly it may manifest itself we do not know; but we believe it is at the door, and cannot long be delayed.

The "intervention" of France in the affairs of Italy, which we noticed in the last Examiner, turns heavens.' Which does not mean that the body he would have was at that time in heaven waiting for him to enter into it, but it was a heavenly body, a body invested wherewith, he should dwell for ever in the heavens. But it may be allowed me to paraphrase the entire passage, without pausing to give the reasons for the rendering I shall adopt, which I trust will be obvious to the general reader. Continuing the thought which he had announced towards the close of chapter iv. he thus proceeds,—

"For we know full well, that if our body, which alone persecutors can hurt; or hunger and fatigue affect, were, to be overcome of death, which sooner or later must be, we are quite assured that we shall be found more gloriously arrayed. This indeed is a vile body in which we often groan, feeling acutely the ills of life, but Christ is able to endow us with a body fashioned like unto his own glorious body. And such awaits us. I have called the present body a house, and as such what is it but an earthly house—a house of dust—in the formation of which human beings were (instrumentally) employed; but the body I shall have, or to keep to the figure, the house which awaits me, is in no-wise of human origin [not made with hands] it is celestial [in the heavens] and unlike this changing, decaying structure, is eternal.

"Oh! how I long to find myself in this celestial body; earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with my house which is from heaven." I say, I could long for evening to undress, to lay down this gross corporeal investiture, and find myself in that body of heavenly texture which awaits me. For I have no fear of being found utterly disembodied; and though, if such a thing might be, I could prefer to pass without dying into my ultimate condition as Enoch and Elijah did, yet am I more than ready to welcome the sharpest pangs of death, in order to find myself relieved of all the ills attendant on humanity in its present condition, and invested with that spiritual body in which I shall, oh glorious hour! find myself present with the Lord. For in this body I am absent from my Saviour, in that I shall be for ever with the Lord."

To me it appears that this purposely free phrase gives the exact idea of the passage. In which Paul contrasts the present body with the next; longs to lay down the one—and assume the other, which he calls eternal, and on the assumption of which he would find himself present with the Lord; and recognises nothing as intervening between quitting the one body and finding himself in the other and eternal one, the investiture with which was essential to his being present with the Lord. The eighth verse is the logical conclusion of the whole.

Now remembering that scripture recognises no perfectly disembodied state, and only two bodies, and that the next is the resurrection body, we are again conducted to the same conclusion to which Matt. xxiii. and 1 Cor. xv. brought us, and are again reminded of the grand importance of the resurrection, which is a more capital doctrine in scripture than in our modern systems of theology.

DOBNEY ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.—The first edition of this work is all sold or scattered abroad; but another edition will be ready in a few days. Continue to send us your orders.

out to be, it seems, a mere hypocritical pretence of helping to maintain the liberties of Italy against Austria, while the real design was to restore the Pope and maintain him in power. But the Italians were not deceived by the shameful movement of French republicanism as the following items from Rome will show.

On the 27th, the Constitutional Assembly resolved to adhere to their resolution of opposing the entrance of the French.

Orders have been issued to undermine Milan, on the approach of the French to the side of the sea-board. Cannon are planted on the road and the gates and streets that lead to Civita Vecchia. The long cornered gallery erected by Pope Borgia, between the castle of St. Angelo and the Vatican Palace, has been blown up with powder, and the materials used to block up the entrances to the city.

A deputation of the Central Committee had protested against the invasion, and informed General Oudinot that Rome would resist his entrance by force, and blow up the Quirinal, the Vatican, and St. Peter's which were already undermined.

The French General replied, that his instructions were imperative, and that he would enter Rome by force, if not quietly received.

The following is a proclamation addressed by the Roman Government to the French who invaded their territory.

"Frenchmen, your ancestors brought us liberty, but you bring us slavery. In destroying the Roman republic you will destroy your own. Oh shame! You stood by during the misfortune of Lombardy. You had not a word of consolation for the fall of Piedmont. Your venal writers calumniate the heroic efforts of Hungary.

"On this very day, with an impudent mockery, you come to destroy Roman liberty. Are you, indeed, soldiers? If you are, choose a foe worthy of your courage. Do not come to defy the rising strength of a petty State. If you wish to combat against republican arms, cease to be republicans yourselves. Frenchmen, answer truly, whom do you wish to restore to power? Are they the priests? That hereditary race who have caused so much blood to flow, and occasioned so many woes to France herself? Study your own history, and you will see what you are about to do for us. We have an implacable hatred of sacerdotal domination. You wish to impose it on us by force. You are about to place us on a level with the Chinese. Frenchmen! before undertaking a detestable work, ask of the sky above you, and it will answer that it has been polluted by sacerdotal iniquities in all ages. Ask your youth and our women, and learn of us: uninterrupted tale of seduction, of debauchery, and of venality. Ask of our farmers for whom they have labored. They will answer, for the priests! Ask to whom belongs the fifth part of the State. To the priests! Ask to whom belong the most luxurious abodes, for whom are the most exquisite delicacies, and who are those obeyed by thousands of menials. The reply will still be—the priests! the priests! Frenchmen, your mission is the work of hell!"

The secret of the whole movement is, we think, the French President has sold himself to Papacy, and papal priests; and hence will soon find his fate sealed, as all others will who "worship the image of the beast;" for, they are to drink the "wine of the wrath of God that is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation."

The following items we extract from the remarks of the Ledger on "European Politics." Speaking of the present conflicts in Europe, it says:—

"The Hungarians rose, almost as one man, in defence of national independence; and being aided by Polish Generals and Polish troops, they have driven the reactionary Austrians out of their country, and are now within a short distance of Vienna. The Austrian government, thus menaced, has called to its aid the grand enemy of all popular governments in Europe, Russia. This step has lifted the veil and thrown off the mask; and proclaimed to the people in all Western and Southern Europe, that no faith can be safely kept with Princes, and that their only road to their natural rights is through republicanism."

Thus there seems likely to be a "rushing of the nations;" but we wait for the developments, knowing that the Kingdom of Christ is at hand.

THE NEW WORK.—"The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," by H. H. DOWNEY, Baptist Minister, England, is the very best work on the End of the Wicked we have ever seen. It is written in the kindest spirit, and cannot give offence to any. Though kind, it is clear, uncompromising and overwhelming against the popular theory of natural immortality and endless misery; and demonstrating, so far as argument can do it, that utter destruction is the punishment of wicked and unrepentant men. Put this work into the hands of all who will read, not forgetting ministers of all sects and parties. It contains 326 pages, 18mo. Price 75 cts. bound, or 50 in paper cover; this last only can be sent by mail. For each dollar, current money, sent us free of expense, we will send two copies of it and pre-pay the postage on them; or, we will send three without pre-paying the postage where the Post Masters will allow them to be thus sent. Where the work is ordered to be sent by express, or private hands, on the bound also, one-third discount will be made to those who purchase six or more copies, if current money is sent us. Cash, always, with the order.

DEPOSITORIES OF BOOKS.—Dobney on "The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment," reprinted from the English edition, may be had in BOSTON, Mass., of Geo. T. Adams, 87 Hanover St., Hat and Cap Store.

LOWELL, Mass., of Eld. M. Bates, Chapel St., one door above Elm.

ALBANY, N. Y., at Christian Palladium Office, No. 344 Broadway.

NEW YORK CITY, of Dr. John Burdell, Dentist, No. 2 Union Place, and of Henry F. Johnson, No. 327 Hudson St.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., of Eld. Joseph Marsh, Advent Harbinger Office.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., of Ransom Hicks, No. 215 Pine St. All orders sent us by Philadelphia, Pa., for Dobney, to be forwarded by Express, will be sent to New York City, without expense, going north, east or west.

Our "Six Sermons" can be had, as above, of Eld. Marsh, Eld. Bates, Geo. T. Adams, Dr. Burdell, and Ransom Hicks.

PRICE OF BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS AT EXAMINER OFFICE.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY, (New Hymn Book,) 126 pages, 24mo. paper covers, 15 cts. each; ten copies for $1 00; for 82 00, one hundred copies.

IMMORTALITY.

Review.—No. V.

Mr. Lee says—"Its (the spirit's) improvement, is a distinct matter from the improvement of the body."

What does he mean by the "improvement of the body?" Does he mean the growth of the "body?" What does he mean by the "body?" Does he mean the whole physical organization, or a part of it? If he uses the term as indicative of the whole organism, then it is equivalent to the man; which would be to make "the improvement of the spirit a distinct matter from the improvement of the man." Understanding Mr. Lee, therefore, to mean the physical constitution, the question recurs—does he mean by "the improvement of the body," its growth in bulk or size? If so, I would remark, that stubborn facts establish the law, that other conditions being equal, the development of mind is in the ratio of the development of the physical organization. What are these "other conditions?" The answer to this question is found in the fact, that there are several systems of organs, giving rise to different functions; and modifying the manifestations of mind. The ample development of the glandular system does not increase the mental power; but modifies it. The excessive development of the muscular system does not import mental activity; but it gives durability to body and mind. The sanguineous and nervous systems impart physical and mental activity.

Again, a person may be born with an organization unfavorable to the development of much mind—they may be idiotic; but, in this case, the nervous system will be defective. Again, they may be diseased, and, from this cause, imbecile. Again, education may have been partial and defective; the muscular system may have been cultivated at the expense of the nervous; and then, "the body may grow and flourish in all the perfection of health, and the mind make little or no progress." Again, the nervous system may be developed at the expense of the sanguineous, and "the body," or man, "be of exceedingly frail structure, pale and wan;" but it is not true that "a giant mind may develop itself from within." The mind of such a person may possess great vivacity, sprightliness and brilliancy, but it will be wanting in strength, depth, power and durability. But, in all this, the law holds good, that, as is the organization, so is the mind.

Mr. Lee says—"Some of the greatest geniuses the world has ever produced, have had but just body enough to hold the soul." This is a mere fancy sketch, containing no argument. A man, however, may be a "genius," with little or no talent. Again, Mr. L. says—"These facts certainly indicate that the soul and the body, are not one and the same thing!" Truly! who ever contended that they were "one and the same thing!" The one may be an attribute of the other, and both may be mortal—both matter.—Mr. Lee's "facts" to the contrary notwithstanding!

2. Mr. Lee tells us, that "the body comes to maturity and begins to decline, at an age when the mind has but just commenced its career of improvement." This is a fallacy, for the "career of improvement" begins almost with our birth. "A sound mind in a sound body" is a sentiment, which embodies the truth upon this subject. The nervous system may be healthy, unimpaired and elastic, when the muscular and glandular have declined; and the mind may thus be proportionably active, when the physical strength is partially gone. But when there is a general decay of the whole organization, the mind goes down with the body. And whether a man shall be a dotaire at "fifty, sixty, or seventy," depends upon the strength, soundness and durability of the whole constitution.

3. Mr. Lee alludes to the doctrines of phrenology, and informs us that nothing is gained by admitting their truth—that phrenologists "will not make this the issue, and base their science on the doctrine of materialism, to stand or fall with it." If by "materialism," Mr. Lee means matter, I affirm that phrenologists do base their science on "materialism;" for they base it on the anatomy and physiology of the brain—which is matter; while, at the same time, they may not follow up their principles to their legitimate results. I shall not reflect upon the motives of those phrenologists, who have labored to popularize, and harmonize phrenology with sectarian theology. But, for one, fearless of all consequences, I DO MAKE THE ISSUE, AND BASE THE PHRENOLOGICAL DOCTRINES UPON THE MATERIAL ORGANIZATION OF MAN, INDEPENDENT OF ALL "IMMATERIALITY," IMMORTALITY, OR INCORRUPTIBILITY; AND I CHALLENGE ALL PHRENOLOGISTS, NO MATTER WHO, NOR WHERE THEY ARE, WHETHER IN EUROPE OR AMERICA, TO DISPROVE THE CORRECTNESS OF THIS POSITION.

This is the only view that will, or can harmonize with the volume of Revelation; and every effort to harmonize the sublime science of mind, with the paginated traditions of modern sectarianism, degrades both it and them!

Yes, sir, a voice speaks from the highest heavens, and proclaims to all the sons of men, that they are mortal, having not one spark of immortality, but corruptible and perishing; and mental science—the science of man—sends back the sound, all is mortal!

4. We shall now examine Mr. Lee's concluding philosophical argument, which is this: "The mind often develops itself in greater power and glory, just at the moment of death, shining out from an emaciated body, already wan and cold."

Here Mr. Lee rallies all his powers, concentrates all his forces, and pours along his logical troop! We shall pay particular attention to this argument, not on account of its strength, but on account of its commonness.

"The mind often develops itself in its greatest power and glory, just at the moment of death." This, as a proposition, is monstrous; as an argument, absurd; and as a fact, is not true. "The mind develops its greatest power and glory, at the moment of death!" Did ever the mind of a man, "at the moment of death," develop the powers of a Solomon?—a Bacon?—a Locke?—a Herschell?—a Franklin? Here are specimens of mind in its "greatest power." Did ever the mind of man, "at the moment of death," when the "emaciated body" was "already wan and cold," develop the "glory"—the eloquence of a Cicero, or a Demosthenes? The answer is, and must be, in the negative. But Mr. Lee says—"It is true that in some cases the mind appears to decay with the decaying body, but to prove that it is the body or any part of it, this would have to be always so without exception, which is not the case." Mr. Lee has the argument here by the blade, instead of the handle; and cuts himself rather than his opponent! The mind should never "appear to decay with the decaying body," if it be immortal! If it be neither "the body nor any part of it," there should be no "exception" to the "power" and "glory" of its development "at the moment of death," which, as Mr. Lee says—"is not the case." And how I will explain to Mr. Lee why it is, that some minds are more brilliant in death than others.

1. It depends upon the nature of the disease, and its seat. There are some diseases which preternaturally excite the brain, and consequently, the mental powers. We witness this in various forms of fever. And sometimes this febrile condition becomes so exalted and intense, that the patient becomes eloquent, musical, furious and insensible by turns, according to the nature of the case. In this condition the patient's animal, moral, or intellectual faculties may be principally excited, and develop their functions accordingly. They may shout, pray, sing, or curse, swear and rage, just as their different faculties are the seat of the most intense cerebral action. Some, in this condition may "die shouting glory! glory! glory!" and others die perfectly frantic and furious.

Again, in disease of the heart and lungs, the integrity of the mind is partially maintained till death closes the scene; but this is because the brain is not immediately involved in the disease, and therefore it manifests its functions, though with less power, to the last.

2. Another cause, already hinted at, is, the fact that death sometimes commences at the heart, and at the lungs. The first is called death by anæmia—the want of a due supply of blood to the heart. In this case the faculties may be retained to the last for the reason already given.

The same remarks apply to death by apnœa, privation of breath. The person, being cut off suddenly, retains his senses to the end; or, if not dying suddenly, he gradually wastes away by consumption of the pulmonary organs, and dies in possession of a degree of mental power.

Death by coma may either be sudden, or more or less protracted according to circumstances.

These are some of the reasons why some persons die in the possession of some mental power, and others perfectly insensible. These phenomena are perfectly plain upon the view we take of the constitution of man; but can Mr. Lee, or any one else, explain them upon his hypothesis? "The mind may kindle up at the moment of death, and blaze out with intellectual fire," but it is the mere flickering—the mere flashing up, of the waning intellect, which, like the dimly burning taper, gives signs of its extinguishment! "The body" may be "wan, cold and helpless," and the mind will shine as dimly, and burn as faintly as the expiring lamp! An occasional out-burst—an occasional flash, is not the strength, power and glory of a giant mind; but the sure indications of a speedy dissolution.

Mr. Lee speaks of "the mind, being roused by the prospect of heaven, or seized with the terror of impending perdition," as "flashing with the fires of immortality," and "shedding a living glare as it quits its house of clay and enters upon the destinies of the spirit world!"

The whole of this, is a beautiful delusion! a sublime absurdity!! There is no truth—no argument—no logic in it. This "going to heaven" at death, or down to "perdition," are old wives' fables. They are pagan traditions, newly vampired by the Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth.

No, gentle reader, man is mortal, death is the extinction of life and sense and mind; and nothing but the resurrection can restore these attributes to man. So we come back to our starting point—no organization, no life, no life, no mind.

And here we leave Mr. Lee, to the mercy of his own ill-fated philosophical arguments.

J. T. W.

Review—No. VI.

Having examined Mr. Lee's philosophical argument, I now proceed to his scriptural.

1. His first argument is based upon Gen. 35: 18, "And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name Ben-oni."

The reader will please bear in mind that the subject before Mr. Lee's mind is the "immateriality of the soul," and that this text has been adduced to prove it! But if he can see any connection between it and the subject, he can see far better than I can. Her "soul departed," ergo, it is immortal! Truly, this is an "age of reason." Mr. Lee says, "Her body did not depart. Her brains did not depart!" And was there nothing else which could "depart," and which, in scripture language, is termed the "soul"? Could not her breath—her life depart, and "her body" and "brains" remain? This text proves only one thing, and that is the departure of the woman's soul, life, or breath; and has no bearing whatever upon Mr. Lee's question.

But Mr. Lee thinks his doctrine of "immateriality," is taken for granted in the Bible! This is begging the question. The Bible, so far as I know, takes nothing for granted; and, even if it did, this would not do away with the necessity of Mr. Lee's proving his position, by proving that the Bible takes it for granted. Let him not assume this, but prove it.

2. His second proof is Numbers 16: 22, where God is spoken of as the "God of the spirits of all flesh." What has this to do with Mr. Lee's "immaterial soul?" I admit that God is "the God of the spirits of all flesh," because "in Him we live, move, and have our being;" but this does not prove that "the spirits of all flesh" are the "immaterial souls" of all flesh. Inasmuch as "the spirit of life," or "breath of life," which inflates the lungs, oxygenizes the blood, and gives life to the flesh, is from God; He is emphatically the "God of the lives of all flesh." And, I apprehend, this is the meaning of the passage. In Numbers 27: 15, 16, there is a passage of similar import.

3. Mr. Lee's third argument is Job 14: 22. "But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn." Were I disposed to be hypercritical, I might analyze this thus: First, we have the "flesh;" second, the "him;" and third, the "soul." The "flesh" is not the "him," because it is upon "him;" and the soul is not the "him," because it is in "him." It follows, therefore, according to this mode of reasoning, that neither the "flesh" nor the "soul" constitutes the "him;" or man. How will this tally with Mr. Lee's theory? This shows the folly of all such reasoning. The simple meaning of the text is this: The "flesh upon" his person "shall have pain, and his heart within him shall mourn."

4. His fourth proof is Job 31: 30, "Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul." Here, again, I may ask the question, What has this to do with the "immortality of the soul?" The term soul is often used as a Hebraism for the person, and as often used for life, so that the text and context must determine its signification in any given case. In the text before us, it evidently means life, or the person of whom life was an attribute.

5. His fifth argument is chapter 32: 8, "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." This is the most plausible scriptural argument yet offered by Mr. Lee, but this does not prove his point. Mr. Lee himself admits that this "appears to be an allusion to God's breathing into man the breath of life, after he had formed him of the dust of the ground, by which he became a living soul." In addition to this admission on the part of Mr. Lee, it is remarkable that the spirit is represented as being without knowledge until the "inspiration of the Almighty gives them understanding." Mr. Lee makes another important admission, which I hope the reader will remember. It is this: "Man here denotes the visible, tangible frame, the body; in this there is a spirit." Very well; "man," then, is the "body," animated by "a spirit"—"the breath of life," and God gives them "understanding." Thus Mr. Lee has helped us to the refutation of his argument.

6. Mr. Lee's sixth proof is Proverbs 19: 2, "that the soul be without knowledge is not good." He thinks "this text clearly implies the existence of an intelligent soul, distinct from the body." But how can an "immortal soul," which is self-conscious—self-intelligent, "be without knowledge?" Here Mr. Lee is caught in his own snare! I regard this text, therefore, notwithstanding what Mr. Lee says about the definite article, as being similar, in this respect, to the passage, "the soul that sins, it shall die;" and as referring to man, in relation to that attribute of his nature which is the seat, or sensorium of the mind.

7. His seventh argument is based on Eccles. 12: 7, "Then shall the dust return unto the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." This clearly refers to God's "creating man of the dust, and breathing into his nostrils the breath of life;" and has no more to do with the "immateriality of the soul," than the blood of man. When man dies, that which came from the earth, returns to the earth; and that "breath of life" which God "breathed into his nostrils" returns to him in the expanse of Heaven. In point of fact, however, the body is not less from God than the spirit, or "breath of life." Both are from Him. And this same author, Solomon, as well as Moses, speaks of the beasts as possessing the same "spirit of life." "They all have one breath; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

8. Mr. Lee's eighth proof is Ezek. 18: 4, "Behold, all souls are mine: as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine." Why did not Mr. Lee quote the whole verse? Why did he omit the last clause? Was it because the whole verse would not answer his purpose? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," was too strong for Mr. Lee! He reminds me of a person, who is running along a beautiful lawn, where everything is pleasant to the eye, and grateful to the senses; but suddenly an awful precipice presents itself, and the man starts back with horror at the impending danger! So Mr. Lee, conscious of the truth of his position, passes rapidly from text to text, hoping to fortify his favorite doctrine of "immateriality," when suddenly and unexpectedly he treads upon the very brink of a logical abyss, where all his arguments are in danger of being precipitated to the gulf below. He pauses, starts back, and retreats!! with the words sounding in his ears, and vibrating along the fibres of his brain,—"THE SOUL THAT SINNETH, IT SHALL DIE!" This text, so far from helping Mr. Lee, is fatal to his whole theory; for it affirms that the sinful soul shall die, which is incompatible with his view of the subject.

9. His next argument is founded on Zech. 12: 1, where God speaks of forming "the spirit of man within him." There is no difficulty here, according to our view, whether we understand the term "spirit" to apply to the life or the mind. Both life and mind are "formed," developed, or manifested "within" the man. But Mr. Lee takes a liberty which the rules of logic do not allow him. He proves that man has a soul or spirit, but its nature he takes for granted. He is not required to prove that man has a "spirit," but to prove that spirit "immortal." This he has failed to do; for to do this it is not enough to prove that the spirit is a distinct entity from the body; but he must also show that it is necessarily immortal. This he can never do.

10. His tenth argument is based on Rom. 8: 16, where Paul speaks of the witness of the Holy Spirit "with our spirit." On this I remark that neither God nor man "bears witness," except by words or signs addressed to the minds of men. "The spirit bears witness with our spirits," minds, or hearts, if you please, that we are the children of God: but this "witness" is in his word, and addressed to our understandings; and not to our feelings or passions. The Christian has better evidence of his being a "child of God," than a mere impulse, or feeling, which is the sport of a thousand circumstances. When his heart, his life, his words, &c. are all in harmony with the Gospel, then it is that "the spirit," by that word, "bears witness" with his mind, his conscience, that he is born of God.

11. His next proof is 1 Cor. 2: 11, "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of a man which is in him?" This belongs to a class of texts already examined, and means no more, I apprehend, than that a man is alone conscious of the operations of his own mind.

12. Mr. Lee refers to chap. 6: 20 as a proof—"For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and your spirit, which are God's." This proves that men can glorify God "in the body," although "matter," which, I suppose, is more than Mr. Lee would willingly admit. The text clearly teaches us the whole man, "soul, body and spirit," should be devoted to His cause. That all the physical, moral and mental powers should be consecrated to his service. I see nothing in this to favor the popular theory.

13. He then refers us to 2 Cor. 4: 16, where Paul speaks of an "outward" and "inward man." I am willing that Peter shall explain Paul. See 1 Peter 3: 3, where he defines the "inward" or "hidden man" to be "the heart."

14. His fourteenth proof is 2 Cor. 7: 1, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Apart from the absurd idea that "filthiness" is here ascribed to an "immaterial spirit," it must be evident to those who think for themselves, that the apostle meant no more than that they should put away all evil—all immoral contaminations, and be holy in life, temper and disposition.

15. Mr. Lee's final argument in the article I am reviewing, is James 2: 26, "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." In this passage, it is perfectly evident the term "spirit" signifies "breath," the breath of life; and it is so rendered in the margin. This text is against Mr. Lee, and proves that, after the expiration of the breath, there is not an "immortal spirit" animating the body; but that as "faith without works is dead," so "the body without breath is dead also."

In Mr. Lee's concluding article on the immateriality of the mind, he argues thus: "The same words which are applied to man to describe his spiritual nature, are applied to God," and any criticism which will invalidate the evidence in proof that the human soul is spirit, and not matter, will equally weaken the argument in support of the idea that God is a spirit."

Now, kind reader, that you may see the force of this argument, I will apply it to another matter, thus: "The same words which are applied to the wind," to describe its "spiritual nature, are applied to God," and any criticism which will invalidate the evidence in proof that the "wind" is spirit and not matter, will equally weaken the argument in support of the idea that God is a spirit."

This is Mr. Lee's argument, only it is applied to the wind instead of man; and the reader can at once see its fallacy. I could give examples as Mr. Lee has done, but this is unnecessary. We might as well argue that because certain terms, generally applied to other objects, are used in relation to God, that their natures were similar, as to argue that because the term spirit is applied to man, therefore his spirit is like God's—immortal. The terms "sun," "soul," "heart," "wings," "shadow," &c. are used in relation to Jehovah; but who would thence infer that He is of the same nature with the "sun," or that His "soul" and "heart" are of the same nature with the "soul" and "heart" of man?

Does Mr. Lee really believe that God has a "soul" and a "heart"? If so, He is a compound being, and no compound is eternal. These words are used in reference to Him, in an accommodated or figurative sense; so also is the term spirit when applied to man—to the wind—to the breath of life—to the mind—and to the life itself.

"God is a spirit" in the highest sense of the word; but when this term is applied to the wind, and to man, it is used in a subordinate sense. As well might Mr. Lee argue that because the same word is applied to the beasts, therefore, they have "immortal spirits." Mr. Lee's argument, to be valid, must hold good in all cases to which the term is applied; or else, if there be an exception, I shall maintain that man is an exception.

Mr. Lee refers to the text, "the spirits of just men made perfect," which, I apprehend, applies to persons raised from the dead, and not to men in the flesh. He also quotes the text, "God is spirit; and they that worship him must worship him with spirit and with truth," to follow his reading. What is the meaning of the passage? It is this: that mere outward forms—the "drawing nigh unto God with the lips, while the heart is far from him"—is not acceptable worship. His worship must proceed from the heart—be pure, sincere, and according to the "truth;" for "in vain do you worship me; teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." But the text contains not the slightest proof that the spirit of man is immortal, which is the point to be proved. Mr. Lee has signally failed in this part of his argument; indeed, we may say of them all, that they contain the elements of their own refutation. He set out to prove the "immateriality of the soul," and the reader can judge how far he has succeeded. Sometimes he affirms "immateriality" of the "soul," and then of the "spirit;" he quotes a text to prove this of the "soul," and anon, of the "spirit;" so we are, after all, at a loss to know whether he affirms "immateriality" of both, or of one. The popular theory presents a chaotic system—a confused mass—a perfect Babel, without order and without light. The advocates of it talk of "spiritual substances," and yet deny the existence of spirit-matter, as though there was any difference between "substance" and "matter!" But I have gotten through with Mr. Lee's arguments, and must await his next article. J. T. W.

THE DISCUSSION.—As Br. Lee, of the True Wesleyan, has expended his strength, in his article No. IX. on the immortality of the soul, particularly on a paragraph in our "Six Sermons," we have judged best to give the reader his entire article; and we should be pleased to see Br. Walsh's reply to it in the Wesleyan. We really wish we were publishing a weekly paper; for, in that case, we would give all Br. Lee's articles entire, which would give us much pleasure; and we have been half tempted to give them as it is. We would reply to the following article ourselves, but do not choose to interfere with our Associate Editor in his review.

THE CONSCIOUS-EXISTENCE OF THE SOUL AFTER THE DEATH OF THE BODY.

An argument from the immateriality, or spiritual nature of the soul.

Our first argument in proof that the soul does not die with the body, but maintains a conscious existence after the body is dead, is drawn from its immateriality or spiritual nature. The foundation for this argument has been laid in the preceding numbers, in which the immateriality of the human soul has been proved. We are not called upon here to prove this point, but only to make an application of it as a truth already established.

Before we enter upon the direct argument, it is necessary to state the precise point to be proved by it. It has been misunderstood, and hence, met by a misdirected and insufficient reply. Rev. George Storrs, in his six sermons against the soul's immortality, meets the argument thus:

"It is said—The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal. One single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

It should be remarked on this extract, that as a reply it is defective in two particulars:

1. It assumes that "destruction" means a loss of conscious existence, when applied to the soul. This is not admitted, but as it belongs to another division of our subject, we will not argue it here, but leave it to be attended to in its proper place.

Its capital defect is, it entirely misapprehends the question. The argument does not rest upon the assumption that God cannot destroy or annihilate a spirit after he has created it, but only that the soul is immortal in its nature, having no tendency in itself to annihilation, and must exist forever, unless sent into non-existence by the same Almighty Power which gave it being. There is an important distinction between the natural immortality of the soul, and God's power to annihilate it, which Mr. Storrs entirely overlooked in his attempt to meet the argument. God may be able to destroy what is immortal in its own nature, and what would live forever—but for such destruction; hence, could it be proved that God can destroy the human soul; yea, could it be proved that he will annihilate it, it would not follow that it is not ever living in its own nature. If the soul is not immortal in its own nature, it must cease to exist by the operation of the laws of its being, just as the body does, and can need no destruction from the Almighty, any more than the body, to cause it to cease to exist. To argue that God can destroy the soul, as Mr. Storrs does, implies that it will not die of itself, without the direct exertion of Almighty Power to do it. The body is mortal, is a compound, an organism, and by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force, as is implied when Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul. On the other hand, if the soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible, it must be immortal in itself, and must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence.

This argument then, is not designed to prove that God cannot destroy the human soul, nor even that he will not, but only that the soul, being spirit and not matter, simple and not compound, indivisible and not dissoluble, it must be immortal in its nature, and live after the body is dissolved, yea, live forever, unless destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it being. To this point we will now direct a few thoughts.

1. The soul being an immaterial, uncompounded spiritual essence, as fully proved in the preceding, it cannot be affected by such agents as operate upon and destroy compound bodies and organisms. Frost will kill the body, but no one will contend that an immaterial spirit can be frozen to death. The body is divisible, and may be cut to pieces, but it will not be pretended that an immaterial, intangible, indivisible soul can be cut to pieces, with saws, knives and axes. It is admitted that the soul resides in the body during our natural life; now suppose a machine should be constructed, which at one blow would cut the body as fine as the sand upon the sea shore, would the soul be cut to pieces by the operation, admitting it to be in the body at the time? It certainly would not, unless that which is immaterial can fill space so as to obstruct matter—unless that which is indivisible can be divided.

Suppose you cast both soul and body together into a furnace as hot as the one prepared by Nebuchadnezzar, and what will be the result? The body will be consumed in a moment; but the soul will not be burned up. An immaterial, uncompounded spirit cannot be affected by material fire, any more than it can by frost; it could dwell alike in the sun or in the polar regions. The reader will now see the importance and force of our long argument on the immateriality of the mind. It is a vital point; if we have proved in the preceding numbers, that the human mind is an immaterial spirit, as we trust we have, the above reasoning shows that it must be immortal in its own nature, and that it will live forever unless it be destroyed by God its Maker. By all the conclusiveness, then, by which we have sustained the immateriality of the soul, does its immortality follow.

2. The argument drawn from the immateriality of the soul, not only proves that it is immortal in itself, living forever, if left to the operations of the laws of its own nature, but it proves that God cannot destroy it, in the manner in which destructionists generally suppose. Be particular; we do not say that God cannot annihilate a human soul, or any simple spirit which he has created, but only that he cannot do it in the manner in which destructionists generally contend he will do it. If God should annihilate the human soul, it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created it, and which not only sustains every human soul, but the universe of both matter and mind. This mode of annihilation forms no part of the creed of destructionists; they argue their doctrine from the Scriptures, which threaten and describe the punishment of the wicked; and represent the loss of existence as a part of, and end of this punishment, and as the result of positive infliction and suffering; and hence, they rely upon the words, destroy, burned up, consumed, and other like expressions. The argument founded upon the spiritual nature of the soul, proves that God cannot annihilate it in this way. If God himself has made the soul immaterial, he cannot destroy it by bringing material agents to act upon it. God cannot dissolve that which is uncompounded, or divide that which is indivisible. The reader is requested to bear in mind that the question at this point, is not—would the soul fall back into non-existence, should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power? but—can the soul be burned up, or be annihilated by the exertion of power upon it? We will close this argument, with the following extract from Mr. Drew's essay on the immortality of the soul. It may not be conclusive in itself, but taken in connection with our reasoning, on the immateriality of the soul, is not without its force.

"It has been already proved, that material bodies can never act but when they bring their surfaces into contact with each other. As an immaterial substance has no surface, it is a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with it: to suppose such a contact possible, is to suppose a surface in an immaterial being, which at the same time is excluded by its natural immateriality. Whatever has an exterior, must have an interior; and what has both must be extended: and what is thus extended, cannot be immaterial. An immaterial substance, therefore, can have no surface, and that which has no surface can never be brought into contact with that which has; it therefore follows that the soul must be inaccessible to all violence from matter, and that it cannot perish through its instrumentality. As matter can only act by contact, it follows that without being extended beyond its physical nature, it never can destroy the soul. And to suppose matter to be thus extended, is to suppose it to be matter and not matter at the same time. Nor can any accession of power overcome the contradiction. No acquisition of power can alter the identity of its nature, or communicate to it a force of which its nature is incapable.

"We cannot conceive that an accession of power can cause matter to accomplish everything which is placed within the reach of its nature: but to suppose matter to extend its influence beyond the limits of its own existence, or to act where it is not, is to suppose its presence and absence at the same time. And to suppose it to annihilate a nature with which it has no physical connection, is to suppose it to act where it can have no influence; or that it can act and not act at the same time; which every one must see, is not only a moral but an absolute impossibility. It therefore follows, that the soul cannot perish by the instrumentality of matter, whatever influence be attributed to the application of its power; hence in reference to every material weapon,

"The soul, secure in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its point."

"It is certain that nothing cannot communicate what it does not possess; nor produces what it has not the power of producing. A being which can communicate annihilation, must be one which is in existence, for that which is not in existence can communicate nothing: and for the same reason can produce no effects. And that being which is in existence, cannot from the certainty of its own existence, include the absence of existence within its nature, and consequently, can never communicate to another that absence of existence or annihilation which it does not possess itself. Annihilation, therefore, can never be communicated, either by a being which is in existence, or by one which is not.

"If the soul be annihilated, it must be either by something which is in existence or by something which is not. But that which is in existence, can never produce what is physically contrary to itself; and that which has no existence can never act. The power which is supposed to reduce the soul to a point of annihilation, must either exist in this given point or it must not:—if it exist we have not yet arrived at that point which describes a nonentity; and where nonentity is not, annihilation can never be; and if it exist not in this given point, the soul can never be annihilated by its influence.

"Annihilation must be the result of power or it must not. If it be the result of power, power must continue to operate upon a subject, until the subject itself, through the influence of that power be reduced to a nonentity. But in admitting power to have an active operation, until it produces a nonentity, we admit a palpable contradiction. The admission of a power which is known to exist only because it produces a nonentity furnishes the mind with a chaos of contradictions—because that which produces a nonentity is not power but nothing."

The above extracts from Mr. Drew go to show that the soul cannot be annihilated, as destructionists suppose, by the punishments and pains of hell; and as it (the soul) cannot be annihilated in the way they suppose, and as their arguments all tend to prove that it will take place in this way, so far as they prove anything, their entire theory must fail. But we have got yet to consider the main point, which is the Bible doctrine on the subject.

REVIEW—No. VII.

In Mr. Lee's article No. 9, he takes up the question of "the conscious existence of the soul, after the death of the body." His argument is "from the immateriality of the soul." He tells his readers that "the foundation for this argument has been laid in preceding numbers, in which the immateriality of the human soul has been proved." Those of our readers, who have read his articles, and our Review, will doubtless be prepared to determine whether Mr. Lee has "proved" the "immateriality of the soul." I humbly conceive he has not "proved" it, nor is it in his power to "prove" it, by all the argument he can bring to bear upon the question.

Mr. Lee thinks the question has been "misunderstood," and attempts to define it more accurately. He quotes from Brother Storrs' "Six Sermons" the following paragraph:

"It is said—The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal. One single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

Upon this he remarks, that "as a reply, it is defective in two particulars:—

1. It assumes that "destruction," means a loss of conscious existence, when applied to the soul; which is "not admitted;" but, because "it belongs to another branch of the subject," he does not argue it. I will also let it pass, at present, for the same reason.

2. Mr. Lee says—"Its capital defect is, it entirely misapprehends the question." Let us see: Mr. Storrs states the argument of his opponents thus: "The soul is spiritual, hence indestructible, and therefore immortal." There is no "misapprehension" of the question here, for Mr. Lee himself argues upon this hypothesis; and the very article I am now reviewing, is based upon this assumption.

But, perhaps, Mr. Lee alludes particularly to the latter part of this paragraph, where Mr. Storrs says "one single consideration is sufficient to overthrow this argument, and show that it has no force. He who created can destroy. Our Saviour saith—Fear him who is ABLE to destroy both soul and body in hell."

I apprehend that, if Mr. Lee will examine this argument again, he will find more force in it than he is disposed to admit. The radical idea of immortality, is, not subject to death, or deathlessness. It follows, therefore, that that which is absolutely immortal cannot be "destroyed" by any power in the universe; for, to reason otherwise, would be to make it mortal and immortal at the same time, which is an absurdity. And hence the force of Mr. Storrs' argument—if God be "able" to "destroy" the soul, it is not absolutely immortal, because if immortal, it is necessarily indestructible. There is more argument, therefore, in Mr. Storrs' reply than Mr. Lee could perceive, or, perhaps, was willing to admit. Mr. Storrs' argument stands thus:

That which is immortal cannot be destroyed;
But God can destroy the soul;
Therefore it is not immortal.

But, I apprehend, Mr. Lee himself does not state the question as clearly as it ought to be stated. The primary question, and the one Mr. Lee has been discussing, is this—is the soul naturally immortal? Mr. Lee says it is; and that it is in its nature analogous to the nature of God. If so, it cannot be destroyed, because God cannot destroy himself! But God can destroy the soul, therefore it is not analogous to the nature of God—it is not immortal. Thus Mr. Storrs' argument comes back in all its original force.

We take the broad ground, first, that the soul is naturally mortal; second, that he is able to destroy it; and third, that he wills to destroy it, if wicked. In order, therefore, for Mr. Lee to meet this question fully in all its latitude, he must prove, that the soul is naturally immortal—that God is not able to destroy it—and that he does not will to destroy it! under any circumstances.

3. But, the fact is, Mr. Lee does not know what the soul is. He says "it is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible. Now, how does Mr. Lee know that the soul is "a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible?" All this is mere assumption, without the shadow of a shade of proof! May I not ask Mr. Lee how he knows the soul is "uncompounded and indivisible?" From whence did he get his information? for it must be based upon facts, or be a matter of revelation. If upon facts, where are they? And, if upon revelation, give us the proof.

But he says—"This argument is not designed to prove that God cannot destroy the human soul, nor even that he will not, but only that the soul, being spirit and not matter, simple and not compounded, indivisible and not dissoluble, it must be immortal in its nature, and live after the body is dissolved; yea, live forever, unless destroyed by the Almighty power that gave it being."

Here Mr. Lee argues the immortality of the soul, upon the absurd assumption that it is "spiritual, uncompounded and indivisible!" What an argument! Credat Judeus Apella. But, after all, Mr. Lee virtually yields the question, for he does not introduce this argument to prove that God cannot, or that he will not destroy the soul! Then, pray, what is gained to his cause by his argument? I confess I can see nothing, for he says it "will live forever, unless," yes, "unless destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence!" Well, suppose God should "destroy" it, as he says he will, what then becomes of Mr. Lee's favorite doctrine? It will be as though it never had been! Moreover, in confirmation of this view of the subject, we are taught that the Lord God "drove out" the man from the Garden of Eden, lest he should partake of the tree of life, eat, and live forever, an immortal sinner. Immortality, being an attribute of God—"he only having immortality,"—he cannot destroy that which is immortal, because to do so would be to act contrary to himself. To prevent, therefore, such a result as would have followed the act of Adam's eating of the tree of life, he drove him out, and obstructed his way to the life-imparting tree; knowing that, if he should partake of it, he would live forever as a necessary consequence. All the evidence, then, going to prove that God is "able," and that he wills to destroy the soul of the sinner, equally disproves the "natural immortality of the soul."

But, I repeat it, Mr. Lee does not know what the soul is. He speaks of it as an entity—as a distinct thing or essence, "uncompounded" and "indivisible." But, the truth is, Mr. Lee has been discussing the merits of an attribute, rather than an entity. Life, strictly speaking, is not an entity but an attribute. Immortality is not a thing-entity or essence, but a quality, an attribute of the thing of which it is predicated. Reasoning, therefore, upon a false assumption, what a flourish of "saws," "knives" and "axes!" Mr. Lee makes in his first paragraph. His whole argument on this point, is inconclusive and defective in the extreme, when considered in relation to the truth of his own theory! The fact is, he subverts his own hypothesis, as we shall presently see.

Mr. Lee concludes from his reasoning on the "immateriality of the soul," that "God cannot destroy it, in the manner in which destructionists suppose." Further on he says—"God cannot dissolve that which is uncompounded, or divide that which is indivisible." Thus Mr. Lee's own reasoning brings us back to the point, that, if the soul be immortal, it will, by a necessity of its own nature, live forever. But, as God has declared that, "the soul that sins shall die," it follows, as a necessary consequence, that it is not immortal; and, therefore, that it can be destroyed by an "exertion of power upon it," and also, by being left to the operation of its own laws, as in the case of Adam.

Having subverted his own theory, Mr. Lee invokes the aid of Mr. Drew to effect its annihilation! Mr. Drew's first sentence is a death-blow to Mr. Lee's whole argument on the fancied "immortality of the soul!" Mr. Drew says—"and Mr. Lee endorses it—"It has been already proved, that material bodies can never act but when they bring their surfaces into contact with each other!" This may have been deemed sound reasoning in the days of Mr. Drew, but, at the present time, every school boy of ordinary intelligence, knows better. Mr. Lee appears to have been asleep for a quarter of a century, without even dreaming in the time; and now that he is waked up he supposes every thing is just like it was when he fell asleep! He is waked up in the wrong place! and supposes himself living a quarter of a century past; and, consequently, speaks and reasons in harmony with the ideas which he obtained at that time! But he is behind the age, or else he would never have endorsed the sentence already quoted. Mr. Drew continues: "As an immaterial substance has no surface, it is a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with it," &c.

I am willing to submit it to the reader, yea, to Mr. Lee himself, whether Mr. Drew has not disproved the very position he intended to establish! Let the reader remember, then, that Mr. Drew and

Mr. Lee regard it as "a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought into contact with" that which is "immaterial." It follows, therefore, from their own principles, that, as the body is matter, and the soul, in their estimation, is "immaterial," they can never be brought into contact! They, therefore, have no connection whatever! If this argument is not suicidal, there is no truth in the universe. According to this absurd and "vain philosophy," God, being "immaterial" in their view of the subject, can have no connection with the universe of matter he has created. I hesitate not to say, that this opinion is atheistical in its tendency, and absurd and monstrous in fact!

Mr. Lee, by endorsement, says—"Whatever has an exterior, must have an interior; and what has both must be extended: and what is thus extended cannot be immaterial." Mr. Lee, by the aid of Mr. Drew, has clearly proved, admitting the correctness of their reasoning, that the soul is nothing! The following is their description of it: It is "simple," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indissoluble," without "exterior" or "interior surface," is not "extended," and "can never come into contact with matter!" Thus they have, by laboring to make the soul everything, reduced it to nothing! They have proved the very point we at first stated, viz.: That that which is immaterial is nothing—it is a nonentity!

And, just at this point, let me ask Mr. Lee a few questions: Upon your hypothesis, was the "immaterial soul," as you will have it, created of the dust, or breathed into the nostrils of Adam? If created of the dust, it is not "immaterial," and, if breathed into his nostrils, it had "extension"—"surface," and necessarily came in "contact with matter," and is, therefore, not "immaterial!" Again, how many "immaterial souls" did God create in the beginning? How many had Adam? How many had Eve? Did they have more than one each? If they had only one each, whence have their numerous offspring derived theirs? You say it is "indivisible" and "indissoluble," consequently it is not transmissible! And that which is transmissible comes in "contact with matter," but you say the "immaterial" soul "cannot come into contact with matter;" therefore it is not transmitted; and, consequently, unless God creates an "immaterial soul" for every child born, the offspring of Adam have no "immaterial soul"—ergo, in your opinion, they have no soul at all! So Adam, according to the working of your philosophy, has given birth to a soulless progeny! Thus Mr. Lee, in attempting to prove that men have "immaterial souls," has actually proved that they have none at all!

The remainder of Mr. Lee's article abounds in the same sort of logic; it is suicidal in reference to his own theory! If Mr. Lee can reason no better than this upon his favorite view, he will murder his own cause, and bury it so deep, that no mortal hand shall ever be able to disinter it!

It would be a waste of time to extend the review of this article any further; but the reader, who is curious to see how completely Mr. Lee subverts his own theory, is referred to the article itself.

In conclusion, let me say, that Mr. Lee is utterly unable to sustain his theory by such arguments as he has adduced in the above article; nor do I believe that the man lives who can do it, by any sort of argumentation within the grasp of mortal intellect.

We fall back upon the conclusion, established alike by philosophy and revelation, that man is mortal in every part; and that immortality is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ, by a resurrection from the dead!

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—We have now exhausted all the funds we have to publish the Examiner. We are in debt to our subscribers, who have paid for this volume, four numbers more, which we intend they shall have if we can contrive any way to pay the printer; till then our friends must not look for the Examiner's regular monthly visits. We regret that we are brought to this necessity, but "the destruction of the poor is their poverty," so we submit. We can still furnish the back numbers of the Examiner from January 1848. About three hundred new subscribers for the present year would give us the means to complete this volume; and we can furnish that number with the Examiner from January last; here we leave the matter.

ANY PERSON who will send us one dollar, current money, free of expense, for the Examiner for 1850, i. e. for Vol. V. before the middle of December next, we will, on the receipt of the money, send them one copy of Dobney on Future Punishment, in paper cover; or, three copies of the Six Sermons, 18mo; that is—the pamphlet of 120 pages; and if the Examiner is not published next year, we will send, instead of it, two more copies of Dobney; or, eight of the Six Sermons, as they shall choose. Please state distinctly in all cases which you will have. This proposition cannot apply out of the United States.

LOOK AT THIS.—One of our monthly exchanges, printed on paper about the same quality as our own, with 40 pages to the number, exceeding the Examiner in amount of matter only as 70 exceeds 42, that is, to use a printer's phrase, it has 70 thousand ems, whilst the Examiner has but 42 thousand, is $2 per year in advance. Each number has a paper cover, and so the postage is 3½ cents instead of one, or 1½, like the Examiner. Now look at the following statement. This monthly exchange gives its readers 840 thousand ems annually, at a cost to the subscriber of $2 42 cents, including postage: we now give 504 thousand ems at a cost to subscribers of from 62 to 68 cents!! We propose to give our subscribers for 1850 a semi-monthly, which will make one million and eight thousand ems, [1,008,000] or an excess over our exchange of 168 thousand ems, and all at a cost, including postage, of from $1 24 to $1 36 cents, or about one half the price of our exchange, provided we receive two thousand paying subscribers for the next year. But if we publish only once each month, as now, and yet increase the price of the Examiner to $1 00, we shall then give you nearly five-eighths as much matter as our exchange gives for less than half the money.

BOOKS BY MAIL.—Our friends who order bound books sent by mail are informed, by law they "are not mailable matter;" and our Post Office will not forward them. We have had several calls to send bound Hymn Books and Sermons by mail: we cannot do it. Please remember this.

THE IMMORTALITY DISCUSSION.—Br. Lee, of the True Wesleyan, has nearly finished his side of the question. The Wesleyan of July 14 contained three numbers on the subject; in reference to which the Editor says—"This week's paper contains the whole of the direct argument against annihilation, at, or subsequently to the resurrection;" and he asks "particular attention to this argument;" and adds—"We believe it to be unanswerable, though we are liable to over value our own argument; at least, we could not answer it to our own satisfaction, and that is our rule of testing an argument." We thank Br. Lee for this very candid confession: we should not expect he could answer two sides of any question to his own satisfaction at the same time. We have been in a similar position sometimes ourselves; but further light has shown us that we could answer our previous argument to our entire satisfaction. And we think Br. Lee may yet, with the light that shall be shed on his path, be able to answer his own argument to his entire "satisfaction," so far as he has stated the argument of his opponents clearly; which he has by no means done in all cases. His favorite phrase is "annihilation;" with that he and our opponents generally try to make a sound; and many minds are more affected by sound than sense. Let any one, even Br. Lee himself, read over his entire argument and substitute death for his unscriptural and unwarrantable word "annihilation," which we never use, and the largest portion of his argument will be found powerless. Just here we cannot forbear giving an extract from a letter we received from the late ORANGE SCOTT, founder of the "Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America." Writing us not many months after the first appearance of our views, in 1841, he says:

"**** has been out against you; and, two weeks ago, B**** preached, or rather read a labored discourse against you. It was full of sophistry! and so are P****'s articles!! and so is every thing I have yet seen against you!!! You must, however, expect something when Lee comes out, for he can make a lie appear like the truth. You are likely to have work enough to answer all who oppose you; but you have put your hand to the plow and must not look back."

Br. Lee seems to lay considerable stress upon the opinions of "the fathers" in this controversy, so we have thought to give him a specimen of the opinion of a father of the Wesleyans in America. The letter of Br. O. Scott was written to us before we had put forth the strength which the Lord afterwards gave us, by which he enabled us to bring out the "Six Sermons;" those were not preached till a year later; and to use Br. Lee's language, "We believe" the main positions of our Six Sermons are "unanswerable;" sure we are Br. Lee has not answered them; "though we are liable to over value our own argument." Br. Lee has put forth his strength; and we acknowledge that we expected if any man could show us to be in error, that man was Brother Lee; but skilful as he is both in logic and "sophistry," in our judgment, he has utterly failed, this once, to make the pagan fable [we will not say "lie"] "look like the truth." So far from it, that we now consider the matter settled firmer than ever before, that man has no immortality out of Christ; and no future life except by a resurrection from the dead; and, also, that "all the wicked will God destroy!"—THEY SHALL BE AS THOUGH THEY HAD NOT BEEN!! Ob. 16. Call that "annihilation" if you will: it is what God says of the wicked, in plain words, in opposition to all pagan, papal, and protestant inferences. We rejoice that Br. Lee has made this last effort; and we wish to make no other reply, ourselves, than what is contained in our Six Sermons and views on the intermediate state as found in our 18mo. pamphlet; we will risk that with Br. Lee's "unanswerable argument" the world over, and have no fears for the result in any mind not bound by sectarianism. Our Associate Editor will, of course, finish his Review of Br. Lee's argument so soon as we shall have the means to publish it; and if the "unanswerable argument" is not thoroughly answered and its fallacy fully shown to the "satisfaction" of others, if not to Br. Lee's mind, we are greatly mistaken.

NOTE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that Br. Scott's reference to Br. Lee related only to his logical and controversial powers; not that Br. Scott or we ever had an idea that Br. Lee would knowingly attempt to make a lie look like the truth, but that such is his skill, that if he took the side of error, he could make it seem truth.

THE ATONEMENT.—We have heard that some persons have busied themselves in reporting that "Br. Storrs denies the atonement;" and some, we fear, under the garb of professed friendship, have helped on this falsehood by insinuating their fears that we deny the atonement. If you read the Examiner you need have no fears but that you will know our belief, for we have not shunned to declare our views on any Scripture subject when we thought there was a call for it. Br. E. Miller, Jr., has written on the subject of the atonement in the Advent Harbinger, and we are gratified to see that he advocates the same view that we expressed in the Examiner as long ago as April, 1848. We have not hesitated to express them publicly and privately since. We have no room to enlarge now, though we had intended to do so soon. But those who have read the articles in the late numbers of the Harbinger, by Br. E. Miller, may regard these views as substantially our own. We believe Christ died for our sins, but not in the sense of "paying our debts," nor "in our room and stead;" if so, universal salvation inevitably follows; and it is mockery to ask God to forgive our sins when the debt is paid. Some men's theology converts the God of love into a demon, and then deprives him of all exercise of the glorious prerogative of "forgiving iniquity, transgression and sins." We believe they do it "ignorantly in unbelief," being blinded by the creeds and traditions of men. May the Lord forgive them.

PREACHING every Lord's day, morning and evening, at the Saloon of "TEMPERANCE HALL," Third Street, below Green, west side, by the Editors of the Examiner.

CHOLERA—We are living in the midst of this sweeping scourge. Several of our Congregation have been attacked by it and suffered severely. We have been called to mourn its fatal visitation in the loss of our beloved brother James Masson, who died July 14th. Br. Masson was an every day christian—one of the right sort. He was always in his place in our public worship. He was one of our earliest friends in this city, and could always be depended upon. It is sad to see his place vacant. Great as the loss is to the Church, it is greater still to a large family of children, and other relations, to whom he was a father indeed; and to add to their affliction, Sister Masson, whose health has long been feeble, followed her husband in a few days to the silent grave; and thus are their household, almost with one stroke, deprived of both father and mother. Two more consistent christians are seldom met with: their last end was peace—they fell asleep in Jesus in the full hope that they would be awaked by him at his appearing and kingdom. Happy they who are always ready.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

No. I.

The Saviour inquired of the hypocritical Pharisees and Sadducees, "How is it that ye cannot discern the signs of the times?" This inquiry implies that the indications of the times, if carefully observed and inquired after, will show clearly the position we occupy in the world's history, and need not be mistaken. The times in which men live are to determine, in a great measure, their course of conduct; for it will appear in the course of our remarks that what may be proper and right to be done in one age, or in one period of an individual's life, may be exceedingly improper and wrong to be done in another age or period. We may illustrate this truth in various ways. For example—A mariner may go to sea at once, when his vessel is loaded, if wind and tide favor him, and there are no indications of a disastrous storm about to burst over him; but should such indications appear, so apparent as not to be mistaken by a careful observer of the signs, would he do well to disregard them, and rush out to sea, perilling all, rather than delay the commencement of his voyage? And if he should thus disregard the signs of the coming storm, and launch forth, and is wrecked and all lost in the tempest, is he not justly stigmatized as a fool for his course? And is he not blame-worthy? Did not Paul censure the Centurion of the vessel which carried him prisoner to Rome, because he disregarded the sign he had given him, that if he loosed from a certain port it would be attended with loss and damage? See Acts xxvi. Again—The farmer, when about to gather in his crops, or the fruits of the earth, carefully watches the signs of the weather, waiting for favorable indications to reap down his fields. He will not be guilty of the folly of reaping down his ripe grain, when there are indications of a storm immediately upon him. He watches with care and solicitude signs to satisfy his mind as to the course he is to pursue, and he is governed in his operations by the conclusions at which he arrives in his observations. Does he not act wisely in doing so?

Let us now take Scripture illustrations. Of Noah it is said, Heb. xi., 7, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Noah was "warned" of a coming flood, or had some sign or token, by word or otherwise, of that coming event. He heeded it, and prepared an ark to the saving of his house; and we all say he was wise in doing so. But suppose he had disregarded the sign, or warning, would he not have perished with the ungodly? And we here remark, to illustrate the principle we laid down at the outset, that though it might have been very proper and right for Noah to have bought land and built houses before he received the warning or sign of the flood, it would have been folly and madness for him to do so afterwards, and full evidence that he did not believe the flood was coming. And what a sorry sight it would have been for Noah to be preaching a flood at hand, and instead of giving his attention to building the ark, had spent his time in buying farms, building houses, factories, railroads, or hunting for gold mines. Surely a scoffing world might justly have said he was either a hypocrite or a fool.

Let us look at another case: Heb. xi., 24-26, "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." Moses understood the signs of the times. He knew the period of the bondage of Abraham's seed "in a land not theirs" was near its accomplishment: and he understood that the nation that oppressed them about that time was to be "judged," and Israel brought out, or delivered. Observing these signs of the times, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; or, refused the throne of Egypt, the pleasures of which he saw could only be enjoyed for a season. At a previous period, and under different circumstances, it might have been right and proper for Moses to occupy a place at Pharaoh's court; but the time had come—the signs had appeared—that Egypt was to be judged and Israel delivered. If Moses believed this, could he consistently continue at Pharaoh's court, and acknowledge himself the son of Pharaoh's daughter? Hitherto there had been no harm or wrong in his doing so; but now the case is different. Has he "faith" in God's word or not? He has; and changes his course of life, and departs from a position he could no longer occupy with safety. It is true he was guilty of an act of indiscretion, but even that was overruled to separate him from a position that to him was full of danger. When Moses came from his forty years retirement in Midian to demand of Pharaoh to let Israel go, suppose in connection with that demand he had daily been bargaining with the Egyptians to buy their land, and contracting with them to build him houses; would that have been consistent with his professed faith that God was about to plant Israel in the land of Canaan—the promised land? Surely such a course would have been highly inconsistent; yet it might have been perfectly proper in the early part of Moses' life, but the signs of the times forbid it now.

We take another example. When the Jews were carried away captive into Babylon for seventy years, God, at the commencement of their captivity, expressly commanded them to build houses in Babylon, and dwell in them, and seek the peace of the city, where they might dwell. See Jer. xxix. Hence, it was right, proper, and their duty, to do so at that time. But, by and bye, the times indicate that they are soon to return to Palestine:—would it now be proper for them to be purchasing fields and building houses to dwell in, as if they were still to continue in Babylon? True, many of them did; and of course did not return with their brethren who went up out of captivity: they had no faith or no inclination to share the fortunes of their brethren who left Babylon to return to Jerusalem. Did they act faith in God's promise of restoration? We have introduced this case as illustrating our principle, that what may be right and proper to be done at one time is neither right nor proper at another; and would be a mark of great folly if not of wickedness.

We might illustrate our principle with other examples, but we judge these are sufficient for our purpose: we proceed, therefore, with the application. The Lord Jesus Christ is to return to this earth, and is to receive the throne of his father David; the present age is to end, and a new order of things is to be established on earth. We shall not stop here to prove these points, believing that a large portion of our readers embrace them as settled truths, though they may differ somewhat as to the order and character of the events of the coming age, while nearly all of them will admit that a very great change is coming over the world. Believing, then, that the personal advent of Christ to this earth the second time, and that a great change is to take place in the world at that time, are events to be realised at some period; and seeing great convulsions now going on in the earth, does it not become us to be wise, and inquire what those commotions indicate? or of what times are they the signs? And if satisfied that they are signs of the "kingdom of God" being "nigh at hand"—that fifth universal empire so clearly exhibited in Dan. ii. and vii., and shadowed forth in the Book of Revelation—does it not become us to regulate our pursuits and course of life in agreement with such evidence and such a revolution as the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth implies? We should not suppose any sane man could give any other than an affirmative answer. The point then to settle is—do the events of the times in which we live indicate the soon bringing in of the kingdom of God; or reign of Christ personally upon the earth? In answering this inquiry we do not design to go formally over the prophecies that relate to the four first universal monarchies set forth in Dan. ii. and vii., as those topics have been to the minds of most of our readers often fully presented, and there can remain no reasonable doubt but those four monarchies have had their day, and passed away, and that we have been for many centuries in the divided state of the fourth; i. e. Europe divided into a number of petty monarchies, amazingly controlled by a mongrel power, symbolized by a "horn having eyes as a man." This power being acknowledged by all Protestants to be the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome. This power is again symbolized in Rev. xiii., by a beast rising up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns. This description marks the time of the development of the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome as coming into existence in the divided state of the fourth, or Roman empire, when kingly governments were in existence, as the crowns upon the horns indicate. In the seventeenth chapter of Rev. we are presented with another aspect of the same power: it is the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome, after some of the kingly powers of the divided Roman empire have fallen, so that the scarlet colored beast there, though it has seven heads and ten horns, is presented without any mention of crowns at all; perhaps not because it had no crowns on any of its horns, but because some of them had become republican at the time "the judgment of the great whore" is to take place. It is evident John was shown that power at a period just prior to its destruction, and while the seventh vial of the seven last plagues was being poured out. At that time he was shown a corrupt woman [a corrupt ecclesiastical power] sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast, [a bloody secular or civil power] full of names of blasphemy. To mark its location on earth it has seven heads and ten horns, showing that it is Roman, and can answer to no other power in existence than the Papal, civil and ecclesiastical power combined, as seen in the symbol of a corrupt woman riding and directing a bloody beast, in a time when republicanism had been established in some of the horn kingdoms. If this view is correct, it fixes the time of this aspect of the Papal power to the period since France, "the eldest son of" that corrupt "church," became republican; or subsequent to February 1848.

This corrupt woman, who has a name written upon her forehead, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH," was riding and governing the beast that had been in the bottomless pit, but ascended out of it just prior to the aspect of it presented in this 17th chapter. The same power under another aspect, in Rev. 13th, went into captivity, or descended into the bottomless pit; this was done in the days of Napoleon Bonaparte, when for a time the Papal power was stripped of all its civil authority; but afterwards this beast was re-instated or ascended out of the bottomless pit, though under another aspect: it was the "eighth" king, though in fact "of the seven;" i. e. it is the same power as the beast of Rev. 13th with seven heads, &c., but had now taken its last form. In this last form the beast, or civil power of Papacy, would be brought into circumstances calling for the intervention of the other civil powers, symbolized by the horns, and they should have one mind, and should give their power and strength unto the beast, not to the woman; but to strengthen and establish the papal civil power. And what do we see at this very time? One of the strangest and most astonishing events that has ever been recorded on the pages of history, viz. a nation just emerged from monarchy and thrown the crown from its horn in contempt, volunteers by her rulers, to restore the Pope to his civil power; and in doing this, that nation is seen agreeing with the despots of Europe to reinstate the Pope in his civil power, i. e. they "agree and give their power and strength to the scarlet colored beast!" But mark well, this is only to be done "till the words of God shall be fulfilled;" for, before this conflict is over, there will be a hatred kindled up against the woman—the ecclesiastical power of papacy—which shall only be quenched by eating her flesh and burning her with fire. The woman includes the city where her abominations have been concocted, and from whence they have been carried into execution; and also, most likely, all those kings of the earth, or old Roman empire, that have committed fornication with her, by upholding her spiritual wickedness and bloody persecutions. Hence we are of opinion that Rome itself, i. e. the city, will be utterly destroyed in the conflict, as was ancient Babylon, which was a type of it; and then one principal city after another, whose rulers were in the agreement to re-establish papal civil authority, will meet with a like destruction; and most likely Paris will be the second in the fall, and so on till they are all overthrown, and Europe is a desolation, as the prophecy clearly indicates it will be. This, of course, brings in that state of anarchy which we understand the scriptures clearly to teach as immediately preceding the establishment of a fifth universal monarchy—the kingdom of God—or the personal reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, which Jehovah has promised to give him, in spite of the rage of kings and rulers of the earth of whatever form their governments may be.

We do not feel justified, till we shall have further developments, in going more into details, or particulars, of coming events. The details may vary from any of our calculations, but the great fact that the scarlet-colored beast is soon to go into perdition, or be utterly destroyed, together with the woman who has been its rider, and that the reign of Christ is soon to follow, to our mind, admits not of a doubt. It may, however, be several years, and probably will be, before the whole work is accomplished; but it is nevertheless now in a state of accomplishment.

We may give more on this matter at another time, but rest here for this month. If these things are so, can we live in the same course of management of our temporal affairs that might have been justifiable and proper before the signs of the times indicated that this age is drawing to a close, and that the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ on earth and under the whole heaven is about to be opened? Let conscience do its work, and let us see to it that we do not slight its warning voice in these perilous times.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

FIRST QUESTION.—"How do you harmonize Zech. 14th with Matt. 13: 37—43?" s. w. G.

We suppose this question relates to the fact that Zech. 14, represents that there are persons "left of the nations" who, evidently, are in a state of trial after the advent of Christ, and in that day when "The Lord shall be king over all the earth;" while Matt. 13, seems to convey the idea of the entire destruction of the wicked at the end of the age, or at the time of the second advent of Christ. The 14th of Zech. is too plain and positive on the fact that there will be left of the nations, after the advent, who are in a probationary state, to be disproved either by argument or sophistry, however skillfully managed. We do not believe that a soul who has attempted to explain away that view, has ever satisfied himself yet, for any length of time. It is an impregnable fortress against all and every class of advocates for the termination of probation to all men, without regard to their circumstances for hearing and knowing the truth, at the end of this age. No language could make the subject plainer than that used by the prophet Zechariah, that a state of trial to some of the inhabitants of earth will be continued after "The Lord my God shall come and all the saints [holy ones] with thee."

Our Lord, Matt. 13th, is speaking only of a specified class of wicked men, symbolized by "tares," and those too in a specified location, viz. "among the wheat;" and they grew "TOGETHER" with the wheat; and so nearly resemble it, that men, in the present age, have not sufficient judgment to be entrusted with the work of rooting them up. The original word, "tares," signifies "bastard wheat;" it resembles genuine wheat, and is scattered among it. The symbol therefore shows the class of wicked persons spoken of are professors of religion, and that they are in the nominal churches; the parable relates to them, and to them only. In relation to such wicked professors, with which the devil has filled professedly christian churches, from various motives, such as respectability; to get on better in business; and to cover up their wickedness under the cloak of religion, we have no idea that they will be of the number "left" of whom Zechariah speaks. They are "children of the wicked one"— his offspring, or the fruit of his producing: "the harvest" for them "is the end of the world?"—aiōnos—age: the end of the age that precedes the second advent, or personal reign of Messiah. Then they who have imposed upon true christians, and been a "scandal" to the cause of pure christianity, will meet with judgment, symbolized by being cast into a furnace of fire: their hypocrisy, and wickedness exposed, and themselves cut off under circumstances of shame and anguish which will be a standing monument of God's abhorrence of all such characters. All this has nothing to do with those not included in this specified class; and the fact that our Lord adds—"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," shows there is somebody "left" for them to shine upon; and we are not left in the dark as to whom they are to enlighten, viz. "Every one that is left of the nations," contradistinguished from the nominal churches who have been judged.

SECOND QUESTION.—"Is the city of Zech. and of Rev. 20, the camp of the saints, and that of Rev. 21, which John saw come down from heaven, all one?" s. w. G.

If we understand this question, we answer, no. And with present light, we believe them to be three distinct cities; or, three distinct periods of time are covered by their history. Zechariah's being at a period somewhere prior to the advent, without now attempting to define that period: Rev. 20th being during the thousand years; Rev. 21st, after the thousand years; or, if during the thousand years, then to be regarded simply as a symbol of the glorified church, shining "forth as the sun," as the great city of Babylon was previously a symbol of a corrupt, persecuting, and destroying church. The latter being utterly destroyed, or "burned with fire," the pure and glorified church takes its place on earth, to bless those that are left of the nations, and spread its light and glory on all around, as the corrupt church had scattered darkness and spread a curse on earth's inhabitants before.

THIRD QUESTION.—"Will the saying of Peter, 3d chap., take place at the advent or towards the evening of the day of the Lord?" s. w. G.

We infer that this question relates to what Peter says of "The heavens and earth which are now" being "kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." If Peter is speaking of the literal heavens and earth being dissolved by fire, it must, we think, clearly relate to the close of the day of the Lord, as it is an event connected with the "judgment and perdition of ungodly men;" this, certainly, is not universal till the end of the thousand years. See Rev. 20: 11—15:

SCRIPTURE EXPOSITIONS.

EPHESIANS, CHAP. V.

The apostle now proceeds to caution them against a class of sins which he thus enumerates.

VERSE 3. But fornication, and uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints.

"Fornication"—to which the Gentiles were notoriously addicted, even in connection with the worship of their gods, thus putting a religious sanction upon that abominable sin—"and all uncleanness"—all impurity—"or, covetousness"—pleonexia—same word translated "greediness," chap. iv. 19; signifying "inordinate desires." It may relate to any object; whether money, food, drink, dress, or furniture, or whatever may be used for the gratification of the senses, or animal nature: "let it not once be named"—mentioned, heard of, or known—"among you"—let them have no existence in your midst—"as becometh saints"—those who by profession are holy.

VERSE 4. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.

"Filthiness." The word signifies anything indecent or obscene—"nor foolish"—simple, useless—"talking"—which benefits none and may injure the talker and hearer—"nor jesting"—the primary signification of the word is politeness; but it is used to signify, jesting, buffoonery, scurrility, or low, vulgar abusive language. It is quite as likely the apostle uses the word here to speak against that mock and hypocritical politeness which is so common in people destitute of real love to their fellow men, who seek to make up for it in professions and unmeaning compliments: but, he says, such things "are not convenient"—anekonta—are not fit, not becoming, not proper, ought not to be. "Not convenient" is a very tame translation: as though men might do it, if it were only "convenient!" It is evidently a prohibition—a course of conduct not fit for imitators of God and Christ. "But rather giving of thanks." The word here seems to signify not the giving of thanks, in the ordinary sense, but—"decorous or instructive conversation"—the opposite of the conversation just censured.

VERSE 5. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, or covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

On this verse we need not remark, except again to call attention to what is said of the "covetous man"—he "is an idolater." We ask the reader to look again at our remark on verse 3, as to what constitutes a covetous person. Such persons are now denominated idolaters; and with propriety. That object of sense, which a person sets his mind upon inordinately, that is, immoderately, to excess, or disorderly—becomes his god: he is under its government—pays it the homage of obedience; looks to it as the object of his supreme happiness. Though he, himself, may not be aware of it, through blindness of mind, yet his life and conversation will make it manifest where his heart is. Listen to the conversation of many professing to be seeking a treasure in "the kingdom of God;" what do you hear? Alas! Balls, parties, dress, food, drinks, sensual gratifications, furniture, houses, lands, gold, dollars, offices, honors, &c., &c., all tending to show that they have those inordinate desires which constitute them the covetous persons, who Paul says are "idolaters," and who shall have no "inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." Fearful words! Who has not cause of alarm! "Whose conversation is in heaven?" Who really manifest, by all their course of life, that they esteem the love of God and Christ, and an "inheritance in the kingdom," of more importance to them than all animal gratifications put together?

VERSE 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

This verse is too emphatic to need comment. If any man attempt to make you think these inordinate desires are harmless, beware that you are not deceived by them: God's judgment will fall on all such.

VERSE 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. Be not partakers with them. If partakers with them in their wicked practices, you will be also in their exclusion from the kingdom of God, and in that wrath that is to come upon them.

VERSE 8. For ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.

"Ye were sometime"—in time past—formerly—"darkness"—used figuratively for ignorance: that is, "Ye were formerly ignorant of the wicked character and ruinous end of the course of life you were in"—"but now are ye light"—used figuratively for knowledge; that is, "Ye have now knowledge in regard to those things"—"in the Lord"—by that "word of truth" which has been preached to you, by which you have been brought into union with the Lord, so as to be "partakers of the divine nature"; thus, dwelling in light; therefore, "walk as children of light"—let your course of life correspond with the knowledge and truth ye have received.

VERSE 9. For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth.

It is by the Spirit of God that spiritual light, truth, or knowledge has been communicated, through prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, and its direct operations in the mind by the word of truth: and the fruit it produces is the opposite of the fruit of ignorance in which they formerly had their course of life: it is "in all goodness and righteousness"—piety to God, sanctity of life, "and truth"—verity, in opposition to what is false or wrong—it signifies, also, sincerity. Such is the character of the "new creature," or spiritual nature which is brought out by the Spirit in such as do not grieve and quench it.

VERSE 10. Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

"Proving"—try, examine by the light—the word of truth—ye have received—"what is acceptable"—well-pleasing "unto the Lord."

VERSE 11. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

"Have no fellowship"—no communion or participation "with the unfruitful"—noxious, destructive "works of darkness"—or ignorance; such as described in the previous verses: "but rather"—the more [walking in the light, and in obedience to the word of truth] "reprove," rebuke, or convince "them": that is, show them that their way is destruction.

VERSE 12. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

This verse needs no comment.

VERSE 13. But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

"All things that are reprov'd"—discovered—"are made manifest," or discovered, "by the light"—by the knowledge, or divine illumination imparted to men: "for whatsoever doth make manifest"—or discovers to men the sinfulness of sin, and its dangerous consequence, "is light"—is divine knowledge, or illumination.

VERSE 14. Wherefore he saith, Awake, though that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

"Awake"—egeirai—to arouse one's self to a better course of conduct—"thou that sleepest"—that art slothful, careless, secure in sin—"and arise from the dead"—used figuratively to denote thy destination of divine life—"and Christ shall give thee light"—shall shine upon you. Light here is equivalent to life. "Sinner arouse thyself—break off from sin—rest not in thy destination of divine life—look to Christ—he came that you might have life, and that you might have it more abundantly; pursuing this course you shall receive that life, and thus gain eternal life, which is given unto us in Christ, and in him alone."

VERSE 15. See then that ye walk circumspectly: not as fools, but as wise.

"See," take heed, take care, be cautious—"then, that ye walk"—that you live—"circumspectly"—accurately, or assiduously—"not as fools"—asophoi—unwise, foolish, destitute of true wisdom, pagan; i. e., in the practices he had warned them against—"but as wise"—those possessed of true knowledge, even that "light," or illumination, which "Christ gives" to those who receive spiritual life from him, when they arouse themselves from that careless and slothful state of sin spoken of in the previous verse.

VERSE 16. Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.

"Redeeming"—use, employ—"the time, because the days are evil"—i. e. calamitous, afflictive, distressing: therefore, make the best of them—use, or employ them to the best advantage.

VERSE 17. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

"Therefore"—because the days are evil—"be ye not unwise"—ignorant, or destitute of true knowledge—that is, the knowledge of the truths herein presented to your minds—"but understand what the will"—purpose, design, intention—"of the Lord is." That purpose, design, and intention is, that we should be holy—separate from all those wicked practices and dispositions before enumerated—and that we should be filled with divine knowledge and love, that God's full design and intention may be fulfilled in our "adoption of children to himself by Jesus Christ." How glorious is the design and purpose of God to those who embrace his plan to become holy and unblameable before him in love. Let us understand it and act accordingly.

VERSE 18. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit.

"Wherein is excess"—prodigality, debauchery, rioting—"but be filled with the Spirit"—or spirit of holiness. The use of intoxicating drinks brings men under their animal nature, and prepares them for debauchery, rioting, &c. Being filled with the Spirit, raises them superior to the control and slavery of animal, or merely sensual gratifications; and thus giving the spiritual nature the predominance they rise in the strength of divine life, and ripen for the adoption, or immortality, incorruptbility, endless life. Instead, therefore, of seeking such light and transitory enjoyments as arise from the intoxicating stimulants, to which so many resort, give yourselves to spiritual joys.

VERSE 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord.

"Speaking"—lalounes—recounting, setting forth, narrating, reciting, declaring, [see the song of Moses, and Miriam, Exodus 15, for an illustration]—"to yourselves"—that is one to another—"in psalms and hymns"—sacred poetry in opposition to the light trash used by such as seek only the gratification of the animal senses—"and spiritual songs"—making melody in your heart—"mind; the understanding employed as well as the voice, if we would make melody "to the Lord." How much solemn mockery we have reason to fear there is even in professedly religious assemblies: how much melody of voice with no correspondence in the mind. Let us beware of such hypocrisy.

VERSE 20. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

All we need to remark on this verse is the manner in which thanks are to be offered to God. "In the name"—signifying in, through, or by, the person "of our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the head of our spiritual creation, as we have before shown—no man can come unto the Father but by him: it is in virtue of our relation to him, or union with him, that we are pleasing to God; and our only way of access, by prayer or praise, is by being in Christ—one with him. By that spiritual relation which constitutes us members of "his body, his flesh, and his bones," [verse 30:] that is, God regards us with approbation, or our prayers or praises, only as they proceed from us as of the person of Jesus Christ, His well-beloved Son. Thus appearing, He accepts both our prayers and praises as if they arose from Christ in person; and they really are such, because they are the out-breathings of that "one spirit" that animates his body, and gives vitality, or spiritual life to the whole in connection with its head, Jesus Christ.

EVENTS FUTURE.

By HENRY E. CARVER.

BRO. STORRS.—With you, I also believe that there are events, and momentous events too, in the history of the world to transpire ere that "same Jesus" shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, as brought to view in Zech. xiv. 4, and yet I am also clearly convinced that we may reasonably expect a speedy deliverance from this corruptible state, to that incorruptibility consequent on the resurrection of those who sleep in Jesus, and the change of those who are alive and remain; so that while I look forward, perhaps years, for the fulfilment of Zech. xiv., yet I do believe that it is our privilege to expect the speedy redemption of the body.

In order to harmonize what may seem inconsistent in this, permit me to call your attention to some of the circumstances attending the descent of the Son of Man to earth the second time. The prophet speaking of the day when his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, says: "and the Lord my God SHALL COME, and all the Saints WITH THEE." Again, the apostle declares that it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; and again, "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, THEN shall ye also appear with him in glory." From the above texts we are clearly taught that the saints will be perfected before the descent of Jesus to the place from which he was taken up, for if they are like him when he appears, and appear with him in glory, it is evident that they must have been resurrected or changed, and their vile bodies fashioned like unto his own glorious body, prior to that appearing. This subject is more clearly presented in 1 Thess. iv. 13, 17, where, after warning them against ignorance, concerning them that sleep in Jesus, the apostle says—"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (Jesus.) Here we have it distinctly stated that when God shall send Jesus, whom the heavens have so long retained, those who now sleep in Jesus will come with him. I am aware that this is in conflict with the generally received opinion respecting the order of events at the coming of Christ; but the apostle proceeds to give an explanation of the matter, and dissipates from my mind every vestige of difficulty and darkness, and opens to my view the way in which every jot and tittle of the "Word" will have its perfect accomplishment. The apostle proceeds to explain—"For the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven (where to?) with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Here, then, the matter is set plainly before us. When the Lord descends from heaven with a shout, &c., it is not to earth; neither is there an intimation that the world see him then, but he descends to where his Saints meet him—in the clouds, thus leaving ample space for the fulfilment of scripture between the resurrection and the appearing with all his Saints on the Mount.

Having suggested the subject to your mind, I now leave it with you to canvass; and by searching the scriptures to see whether there be light in it. To me it is plain that the resurrection does precede the appearing of Jesus, and thus, while I rejoice in the hope of speedy redemption, I can also with you look forward to the time when Christ shall come with all his saints, and find the armies of Gog and Magog [or Russia] gathered against Jerusalem in the land of Judea.

That the interval between the resurrection and that coming will be occupied in part with the return of the Jews is very probable; and that the descent of Jesus at the resurrection will be the time when his sign will be seen by the tribes of the earth, causing them to mourn, but will soon be disregarded, as all the rest of the signs have been, seems also plain; and it may be that the sign of the Son of Man will be the signal for the Jews to turn towards their own land.

Your brother searching after truth.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

The views of Bro. Carver, in the foregoing letter, are the same some Literalists take, both in England and America. We think we have impartially and without prejudice, examined that view of the resurrection of the saints, before the appearing of Christ to others, or what is called "two manifestations;" one to raise the saints and glorify them, and the other his appearance to the world afterwards; and we are compelled to regard the subject in a favorable light, though we are not settled that that is the correct view.—EDITOR.

BR. WILLIAM ONGLEY, Chemung Co., N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS,—Praise the good Lord, we find many that are steadfast in the doctrines of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. They seem not to fear the nominal priest or people, who teach fables but not the Bible. Last Lord's day we had a blessed public meeting. After which we retired to Br. Richard House's to spread the Lord's table, to break bread and take the cup free to all that love Jesus Christ. About twenty partook with us, and two or three came out and have made a bold stand for Jesus and his truth. Brethren pray for us, and for those lambs of the flock.

We have sold many copies of your Six Sermons in these parts; to the praise of our God they have been made a great blessing. I wish you to send me some more of them. Yours, waiting for immortality and eternal life.

BR. N. M. CATLIN, Indiana, writes:

BR. STORRS,—Truth is advancing in these parts. There is a great demand for your works on Immortality. I think I could dispose of $10 worth per quarter, if I could raise the means to purchase, but I must do as I can, and I am glad to be able to do a little in circulating the light, for I love truth and its advocates.

Please accept the assurance of my highest regard for yourself, as a brother in Christ.

BR. O. H. HITCHCOCK, Arcade, N. Y., writes:

DEAR BROTHER,—Notwithstanding I cannot see just as you do upon some points, I do think there is interesting and profitable matter enough in each number of the Examiner, to richly pay for all its expense.

We truly live in a very eventful period. Signs I think there is no mistaking, that this world is ripening for destruction, and the greatest event the world ever knew is soon to take place. Judging from my observation in this part of the country, if the Savior should come now but very few would be found ready. May the perilous times in which we live caution us to cling close to the cross of Christ.

BR. S. W. GERRITSEN, N. H., writes:

BR. STORRS,—I am well pleased with the Examiner as a general thing, though there are some ideas in it I cannot as yet fully understand. It appears to be our lot, in this state, to see through a glass darkly, but God has made it our duty and privilege to study his holy word. The Examiner, I am happy to say, has proved a powerful auxiliary in understanding it. The things referred to above are, the return of the Jews and probation after the advent; but I am willing to read; and if I must be in error, I would as soon have Br. Storrs' as any others. I do not recollect having seen Zech. 14th harmonized with Math. 13: 37 to 43. Will you impart light to us on those Scriptures? Is the city of Zech. and of Rev. 20, the camp of the saints, and that of Rev. 21, which John saw come down from heaven, all one? Will the saying of Peter, 3d chapter, take place at the advent or towards the evening of the day of the Lord? A short article in answer to these inquiries will greatly oblige,

BR. R. L. PARTRIDGE, Ohio, writes:

BR. STORRS,—The cause of Christ is rather progressing here. Though we have had bitter persecution, and have waded through strong opposition, yet it seems as if the foundation of heathen superstition in some minds is shaken. While some acknowledge the supremacy of the advent views, as seen in Scripture light, others (fearing Diana may fall) think that the best way to get along with the "infidel doctrine," is to keep still and say as little about it as possible; among these latter are preachers.

But the brethren are industrious, and the subject of life and death is considerably agitated. One individual who has lately united with the M. E. Church during a recent revival, being in class-meeting said, if there is any reality in religion he wished to know it, (he having been trained in the popular theory of the day, and discovering its non-essentials) said that the great question with him is "If a man die shall he live again?" I thought that if it was light he wanted, I might possibly be instrumental in helping him to a new ray, clear from the horizon of scriptural abundance, and consequently handed him a copy of your Six Sermons, which he is now perusing. We have preaching occasionally by Br. Lyons, regular prayer meetings and monthly meetings.

BR. F. J. MANSFIELD writes from Illinois:

BR. STORRS,—We are with you, out this way, on the destruction of the wicked and the state of the dead. I know of none who believe in the soon coming of our Lord in northern Illinois, but what are with you. It seems to me if men would read without prejudice, they would see such an overwhelming amount of evidence in the case, that they would be constrained to say, It is the truth of God.

Your "Six Sermons," together with "Pinney on the Purpose of God," are doing great good. I wish it was in my power to scatter them through this western country. Many are inquiring on the subject and want light. I know of several who are now deeply interested in the subject of the advent of Christ, whose minds were called up to this subject by the Life and Death question. No one can bring himself to believe that Adam was threatened with hell fire when he died. No, that fable was invented by wicked men who made money out of purgatorial fires. The simple truth is—Had not God made provision for fallen man, he would have gone down to death, and would have been as though he had never been.

IMMORTALITY.

REVIEW NO. VIII.

"The common sentiment of mankind."

Gentle reader! I am glad, for your sake, that Mr. Lee has introduced the subject of, and based an argument on, "the common sentiment of mankind!"

He has proved, overwhelmingly and incontrovertibly proved, the PAGAN ORIGIN of the popular doctrine of immortality! He has triumphantly sustained the very position we have long maintained, viz.: That "the immortality of the soul" is pagan in its origin, and was generally believed among pagans.

But, strange to say, while Mr. Lee has sustained the above point, he makes use of it for the purpose of proving the soul immortal! His argument amounts to this:

The ancient Egyptians, Persians, Phenicians, Scythians, Celts, Druids, Assyrians, &c., believed in the immortality of the soul—it was "the common sentiment" of all these nations. Therefore, the soul is immortal!

Or, to state it differently:

That which is "the common sentiment of mankind," is true;

But the immortality of the soul is "the common sentiment of mankind;"

THEREFORE, the immortality of the soul is true!

By this logic Mr. Lee's proposition stands or falls! Mr. Lee says—"If destructionists can prove that the doctrine in question had some other, or if some other sentiment can be named, manifestly false, and equally common in the world, of the origin of which no account can be given, we acknowledge they will evade the force of this argument; but until this is done the argument must prove ruinous to their theory."

I. We are called upon, by the above, to prove that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul had some other origin than the Bible. And, on this point, Mr. Lee, himself, has helped us to a considerable amount of evidence, as we before remarked; but we shall examine the question more closely than he has done. What if the Babylonians, Medes and Persians believed the soul immortal? What if Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Socrates and Plato, taught it? What if the sentiment abounds in Homer, Ovid and Virgil! Do these facts prove the doctrine all divine? If so, the prevalence of other "sentiments," held by these nations and distinguished persons, upon the same principle of reasoning, must also be divine. If Mr. Lee's logic will prove conclusive in one case, it will in another—yes! in all others! If he receive the pagan idea of immortality, he must take along with it the pre-existence of souls—the transmigration of souls—and the rejection of the resurrection of the body! He must not divide the dose, though bitter! but swallow the whole like a man!

The oldest hypotheses of the Oriental World, upon this subject, resolved themselves into the doctrine of emanation and immanation; issuing from the "soul of the universe" at birth, and reabsorbed at death. They regarded the soul as a part of the Deity; thus making him divisible, which is one of Mr. Lee's "essential properties of matter!"

Dr. Good says—"If we turn from Persia, Egypt, and Hindostan to Arabia, to the fragrant groves and learned shades of Dedan and Teman, from which it is certain that Persia, and highly probable that Hindostan, derived its first polite literature, we shall find the entire subject" (of the immortality of the soul), "left in as blank and barren a silence, as the deserts by which they are surrounded; or, if touched upon, only touched upon to betray doubt, and sometimes disbelief. The tradition, indeed, of a future state of retributive justice seems to have reached the schools of this part of the world, and to have been generally, though perhaps not universally, accredited; BUT THE FUTURE EXISTENCE IT ALLUDS TO IS THAT OF A RESURRECTION OF THE BODY, AND NOT OF A SURVIVAL OF THE SOUL AFTER THE BODY'S DISSOLUTION!" Here, then, is an exception to Mr. Lee's universal "consent of mankind."

We have one place—one country—where the popular dogma of immortal-soulism was "blank and barren;" and where the opposite view was "generally" believed. And we find this, too, just where we might expect to find it, viz.: where the light of revelation shed its illuminating beams! That country is Idumea! Here Job, that venerable patriarchal saint, who held communion with the Living God, and not with the Buthos or Demiurgus of the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Assyrians, &c.—here, I say, Job lived; and from this quarter we have, as Dr. Good expresses it, "that astonishing and transcendent composition" called "the Book of Job;" a work," says he—although on Mr. Lee's side of the question—"that ought assuredly to raise the genius of Idumea above that of Greece," &c., and, may I not add, the knowledge of Job far above that of Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Dr. Dick and Mr. Lee—all combined!

Dr. Good continues—"Yet in this sublime and magnificent poem, replete with all the learning and wisdom of the age, the doctrine upon the subject before us is merely as I have stated it, a patriarchal or traditional belief of a future state of retributive justice, NOT BY THE NATURAL IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL, BUT BY A RESURRECTION OF THE BODY!"

Dr. Good makes this belief "patriarchal or traditional," but this is unnecessary, as Job was doubtless an inspired man. Dr. Good's testimony is the more valuable, because he believed in the popular doctrine of immortality.

Whether, therefore, the dogma of natural immortality originated with the old serpent, who said, "Ye shall not surely die," or whether it originated in Egypt, Persia, Media, Babylonia, or elsewhere, it matters not. One thing is certain, it did not originate from God, else Job would have been in possession of it; and I will put Job's knowledge and wisdom against all the Babylonians, Persians, Medes, Assyrians, Zoroasters, and Platos on earth! Again, this is doubtless the oldest book or document extant, and on that account demands the attention of the sincere inquirer after truth on this subject.

"The Hindoo philosophers," says Dr. Good, "TOTALLY AND UNIVERSALLY denying a resurrection of the body, and supporting the doctrine (of future existence) alone upon the NATURAL IMMORTALITY of the soul, and the Arabian philosophers (among whom was Job) passing over the immortality of the soul, and resting it alone upon a RESURRECTION OF THE BODY."

The Hindoo view of this question, is the legitimate tendency of the modern dogma on the same subject—it leads to a denial of the resurrection.

Mr. Lee, then, is welcome to his Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Assyrian, and Hindoostan associates, and their authority! He is welcome to the company of Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Orpheus, Socrates, Plato, and a host of others! He is in learned—but superstitious company! But, to be consistent, he should go all the way with them: he should believe in the pre-existence and pre-intelligence of the soul—that it is a part of God—that it may suffer in purgatory—and that it may be transmigrated!

The Grecian philosophy was imported by Pythagoras from India, whose philosophers reprobated the doctrine of a resurrection. So, when Paul preached through Jesus the resurrection of the dead, in the Argos of Athens, the Athenians declared he brought strange things to their ears, and inquired what the new doctrine was.

Here, then, we have the whole subject before us. On one hand we have Mr. Lee's long array of nations, composing "the heathen world," believing in the natural immortality of the soul, with its kindred appendages. On the other hand, we have the light of truth, concerning the resurrection of the body, pouring its steady rays from the days of Job, through the dark ages, down to the present time.

And, now, I shall turn Mr. Lee's argument against him, by affirming that the "common sentiment of mankind" is wrong! Truth has always been in the minority, and it always will be, until the Lord comes and takes the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven! Error, in some, or all its forms, is "the common sentiment of mankind." And if Mr. Lee were to carry out his rule, he would be compelled to admit the eternity of matter, although he seems to have such an abhorrence of it, for his "heathen" witnesses depose to its truth! Let us now state this argument in form:

That which is "the common sentiment of mankind" is true;

But error is "the common sentiment of mankind;"

Therefore, error is true!

But why should we take "mankind" as the standard of truth? Why not take a nation? A "heathen" nation, to follow Mr. Lee's example? Why not take Europe? or one of the nations of Europe? Why not take Italy? Why not take the Pope? Why not take the most enlightened nation on earth? Will Mr. Lee submit his faith to such a standard? If he were to submit his faith to the "common sentiment" of any nation on earth, he would be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Go to the "heathen world" to learn the doctrine of immortality! Go to Babylon—to India—to Egypt—to the Eastern Magicians, Soothsayers, Astrologers and Philosophers, to learn the doctrine of eternal life? Place these in the collegiate chair, and let the venerable Job, of the land of Uz, sit at their feet, and learn! Place the wisdom of Zoroaster and his associates, which is "foolishness with God," in opposition to the spirit of wisdom divine? A man must be hard pressed for evidence to sustain his faith, when he leaves the oldest and most venerable document on earth, and seeks to the Vedas of the Brahmins and the Zendavesta of the Parsees for light on the question of immortality!

Here, then, is a fact to which we call special attention, viz.: That the denial of the resurrection of the body was as much "the common sentiment of mankind," as the doctrine of the soul's immortality. Among all Mr. Lee's witnesses, only one—Zoroaster—believed in, or taught, a resurrection. Now, I can find as many exceptions to Mr. Lee's "common consent of mankind," in relation to the immortality of the soul, as he can find on the subject of a non-resurrection. Will Mr. Lee give me the "origin" of this "sentiment?"

Mr. L. says—"If the doctrine of a future existence be an error, it is the most general one that ever entered the world," &c. Mr. Lee here makes a false issue; for it is not the "doctrine of a future existence" that is denied; but it is the predication "of a future existence" on the "natural immortality of the soul," instead of the resurrection of the body.

Mr. Lee says—the doctrine of the immortality of the soul "prevails most where the Scriptures are most known and read." But, alas! for Mr. Lee's cause, his evidence is all on the other side of the question! If he had said—that the doctrine in question "prevails most where the Scriptures are least known and read," he would have spoken the truth; and his statement would have harmonized with his "heathen" testimony! For surely he will not contend that the Scriptures were "most known and read" by the men and nations of whom he has spoken!

Again he says—"The doctrine must have had its origin." Of course, Mr. Lee, it had its origin; but was that origin divine? If it was, you have failed to prove it, for your witnesses are pagans. Taking the non-resurrection of the body as a sentiment running parallel with the doctrine of the soul's immortality—among the nations and tribes referred to, I will adopt Mr. Lee's mode of reasoning, thus: As the non-resurrection of the body prevails in the heathen world, "and as no account can be given of its introduction, it follows that it must have sprung from some one of the following sources:—It must be instinct, the result of natural reason, from the light of nature, the impression of God's spirit on the mind, or the principle of revelation contained in the Bible. Now, if it be instinct, it must be from the Creator; if it be the result of natural reason, it cannot be unreasonable; if it be from the light of nature, it is a revelation from God; if it be the impression of God's spirit on the mind, it is no less a divine revelation; and if it be the sentiment of the Bible, none but infidels will deny it!" Thus Mr. Lee's logic will work both ways! It will alike apply to every prevalent sentiment, true or false! It will apply especially to many of the appendages of the immortality of the soul. But Mr. Lee makes a bad use of his own logic; for, will he tell me what sentiment has not sprung from one or the other of the sources he has mentioned? I apprehend he will find that every sentiment extant proceeded from one or the other of those sources. What, then, has Mr. Lee gained by this flourish? Absolutely nothing! What is "natural reason"? If Mr. Lee mean by this unenlightened reason, then I affirm that it has given birth, not only to his favorite doctrine, but a thousand other vagaries and absurdities which revelation repudiates, and enlightened reason scorns!

2. Now, let us look at this subject from another point.

In perfect harmony with what we have said, concerning the origin and prevalence of the popular view, I will remark, that before the Babylonish captivity, and the Macedonian and Roman conquests, the Jews observed the most profound silence upon the state of the dead. They spoke of it as a place of silence, darkness, and inactivity. This fact speaks volumes as to the "heathen" or pagan origin of the doctrine we are calling in question. They knew nothing of natural immortality till they were carried captive to Babylon, and mingled with some of Mr. Lee's witnesses!

Again, "after the Hebrews mingled with the" Babylonians, "Greeks and Romans, they insensibly slid into their use of terms, and adopted some of their ideas on such subjects as those on which their oracles were silent." Hence the peculiar views of the Pharisees, many of whom not only believed in the pre-existence of souls—but, also, their immortality and transmigration. This is the reason why the question was put to our Lord, concerning the man who was born blind. They supposed it possible for the man to have sinned in a previous state, which was the cause of his being born blind. They also thought that Jesus Christ was in possession of the soul of John Baptist, or one of the prophets. Let us now sum up the whole argument:

1. We have seen that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the pre-existence of the soul, and its transmigration, together with a reprobation of the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, was in its origin pagan or heathenish. Mr. Lee has given us ample proof of this. I have given additional proof.

2. That in Idumea or Arabia—the country of Job, who is the author of the oldest document extant, we find the opposite doctrine prevailing; and a future life predicated on the resurrection of the body.

3. That the prevalence of a sentiment is no proof of its truth, or correctness; but, if anything, affords presumptive evidence against it. Truth has always been in the minority.

4. That previous to the Babylonish captivity, the Jews were silent on the state of the dead, regarding it as a state of silence and darkness.

5. But that after the Hebrews mingled with the Babylonians, Greeks and Romans, they adopted their ideas on such subjects as those on which their oracles—the Old Testament—was silent. (See Appendix to New Version.)

6. And that reason unenlightened, has given birth to a thousand vagaries, and among them the dogma of "natural immortality."

But, we are not done with this subject yet; we wish to place it where the hand of mortal disinterment can never reach it! And I now affirm, that revelation has placed the seal of condemnation on the oriental science, of a part of which Mr. Lee is the special advocate.

First, then, in reference to the very nations whom Mr. Lee has convoked as witnesses, Paul says—"Professing to be wise men, they became fools; for they changed the glory of the immortal God into the likeness of an image of mortal man, of fowls, of four-footed beasts, and of reptiles." This will apply to Mr. Lee's Egyptian, Babylonian, Persian, Greek and Roman witnesses. Idolatry was as current among them as the idea of the soul's immortality; so that even in Athens, at that time the most enlightened city of the oriental world, they had thirty thousand gods, and held the natural immortality of the soul; but rejected the resurrection of the body. In the above quotation I have not followed the common version, though I have no objection to it; but have given a better rendering of the language, which is sanctioned by Campbell and McKnight. Here is another: "For this doctrine (the preaching of Christ) is, indeed, foolishness to the destroyed; but to us, who are saved, it is the power of God. Therefore, it is written, 'I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to naught the knowledge of the prudent. Where is the wise man? Where the Scribe? Where the disputers of this world? Has not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?' Again, Paul says—"The world by wisdom knew not God." The Greeks sought after wisdom—the wisdom of the Platonian school, and consequently, the preaching of life and immortality, through Jesus Christ, by a resurrection from the dead, was "foolishness" to them. Paul did not teach "the wisdom of this world"—he did not speak the theological dialect of Greece and Rome. And here we are reminded of an important fact, that, although the words and ideas, concerning natural immortality, are found scattered through the works of pagan philosophers, we have neither the one nor the other in all the revelations of God! Why this singular omission, if it be the doctrine of the Bible? "O!" says Mr. Lee, "it is taken for granted." Taken for granted, indeed! This is a mere evasion of the argument. There is not a particle of truth in it. The Bible does not take one doctrine "for granted," and then teach an opposite one!

"The theological dialect of the oriental and occidental schools is a compound of foolish words and phrases, which make a foolish language," the product of confusion, mythology and ignorance. They taught "a vain philosophy;" the philosophy of Greece and Rome, which Paul justly avers is "falsely so called." Hymeneus and Philetus appear to have been professors of this oriental science. What this science is, we have already seen; and I would here only remind you, that the dogma of a translation to heaven or hell at death, is one item of that profane science by which they overthrew the faith of some in the resurrection. It was upon this hypothesis that "some" among the Corinthians said there was "no resurrection;" and this, I repeat, is the legitimate tendency of the philosophy and theology of my friend Mr. Lee.

In concluding this long review of Mr. Lee's, No. 10, I will, without arguing them, present the legitimate tendencies of the view we are opposing. It is furnished to my hand by an intelligent living author.

1. The dogma of "immortal souls" contravenes the Mosaic account of the Fall.
2. It reduces the Mosaic account to an absurdity.
3. It necessitates a change of the words of the Spirit from their proper to a figurative signification.
4. It is subversive of the resurrection and the judgment.
5. The pagan tradition of the soul's immortality, not only renders null and void the resurrection to life and judgment, but is equally subversive of the personal appearance of MESSIAH ON EARTH AGAIN.
6. THE HYMEANEAN GNOSIS of immortal soul-ism, and ethereal translation at death, abrogates the reign of Messiah on David's throne for a season and a time.

I pledge myself to make good every item in the above indictment, when it is demanded by counter-evidence.

THE ENGLISH DISCUSSION.

"ATHANASIA: OR, FOUR BOOKS ON IMMORTALITY. By John Howard Hinton, A. M."—Such is the title of a book that we have received from England, and of which Dr. Lees, of Leeds, speaks in his letter found in the Examiner for March last. We sent for this book immediately on the receipt of Dr. Lees' letter, but it has been delayed in coming to hand. For the contents of it we refer our readers to Dr. Lees' letter above referred to. We have had time only to glance over that part of the work which relates to his remarks "On the argument as conducted by Rev. George Storrs." If we must be converted back again into the old theory, we should like to be so by such a writer as Mr. Hinton. His manner is kind, christian-like, and well calculated to win our esteem and affection: we certainly feel that he has a brotherly heart, and that, to us, gives great weight to his argument. He is far removed from the narrow bigotry which characterizes most who defend the same side of the question. From the hasty examination we have been able to give his remarks on our "Six Sermons"—for that is evidently all he has seen of our writings—we are much pleased, and may probably be led to modify some of our expressions, while at the same time we are greatly strengthened in the truth of our general position of the sinner's final doom. On a remark of ours in Six Sermons, page 75, that men in the days of our Lord "were not looking for eternal happiness merely, or an escape from eternal misery, but simply for eternal life," Mr. Hinton, quoting the words which we have italicised, says: "Now the author here affixes the idea of conscious being to the word life, as its literal or primary meaning, and so insists upon it. To this I reply, that this is not the primary meaning of the term. Life is a word having primary reference to organized substances in which its organic functions are maintained." p. 364. We let this definition pass for the present. And then it follows that Death is a word having primary reference to disorganized substances in which the organic functions are destroyed; and this, in fact, Mr. Hinton admits, for he says, p. 363: "The primary meaning of the word death is the cessation of the functions of an organized substance; and when we speak of the death of a man, we mean to denote the fact, and nothing more, that the functions of the organized substance which entered into his constitution have ceased."

This definition we will not now object to; and think in the issue it will help us greatly to fortify the general position of our Six Sermons. Our friend—for we truly feel that he is such—has given us a firm foot-hold; but we have neither time nor space to notice him further this month.

The foregoing was written just as the Examiner for August was going to press, and intended to have been inserted in that number, but we were compelled to leave it out. Since that, we have had time to examine the work generally, and commence giving our readers some notes upon it in this number of the Examiner, which are designed to be continued.

NOTES ON HINTON'S "ATHANASIA."—No. I.

The first thing we notice is Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality. He says—"The idea conveyed by this word in relation to man is that he is adapted to live for ever, or that he is not liable to the cessation of conscious being from any natural cause;" pp. 8 and 9. Again, p. 72, he says—"I take the proper immortality of a creature to be his non-liability to death (here understanding the term death of a cessation of its proper being) by natural causes, or by causes proper to itself." On the same page he says of the orthodox party—"Among the evangelical dissenters of the present day I know of no evidence that they, or any considerable number of them, conceive man to be immortal in the sense that he 'positively shall live for ever.'" for, we conclude, even Mr. H. will not and cannot deny but the popular orthodox sense of immortality has been, before "the present day," that all men "positively shall live for ever;" and if that is not the sense in which all the orthodox party in America use the term in the present day, except so far as they have been compelled to modify it in the controversy now going on, then we acknowledge that we ourselves preached twenty years, and was in constant intercourse with ministers, without ever once hearing or suspecting but that they held the definition of immortality to be, in relation to man, that all "positively shall live for ever." But it seems a new era has dawned in England, and we hail it with joy, and hope it may spread its light on the pagan land this side the Atlantic. The point, in "the present day," in England, that they use immortality to signify that man "positively shall live for ever," is given up.

We are glad to hear Mr. Hinton affirm this, and hope he is not mistaken in it; because, if true, it shows that orthodoxy, at least in England, has undergone a radical change in "the present day."

This is a great advance towards the truth: and as immortality, according to Mr. H. and his coadjutors, in relation to man, is only an "adaptation to live for ever, or a non-liability to death by natural causes, or causes proper to" himself, we may fairly conclude that man may not live for ever if some cause foreign to himself shall intervene to bring about his death, or to cause the "cessation of" his "proper being." This Mr. Hinton's theory will not allow him to deny: hence we think he and his coadjutors in England, if they do not stop in their search after truth, will be brought to see, that though man has an adaptation to live for ever, yet he "positively shall" not "live for ever" irrespective of moral character; and that is precisely the ground we occupy. Why is this shrinking, in England, from admitting that immortality has the sense of positive endless continuance in being? Is it not clearly because the truth, from some quarter, whether by the operations of their own minds or otherwise, has pressed upon them, that the orthodox, or popular theory, which till "the present day" has given the sense of positive, eternal, uninterrupted existence to the phrase immortality, is a ground untenable and without foundation in the revelation of God? We believe that is the fact; and the abandonment of such a position in "the present day" shows advance, which gives us much pleasure.

But we now proceed with Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality "in relation to man." We suppose, of course, that it is universal in its application to man. From this word, then, he cannot show that any man, whatever his moral character is, "positively shall live for ever;" all he can do from it is to show that when the righteous put on immortality by a resurrection from the dead, they put on an "adaptation to live for ever," or a "non-liability to death by natural causes;" that is all that can be gained from the word; they stand in the same position that Adam stood prior to his sin. That we are correct in this view of Mr. Hinton's theory, we infer from pages 89 and 90 of his work, where he says—"I speak of man antecedently to sin, and of the adaptation of his nature as a creature of God. I affirm that according to his nature man is immortal * * * that, but for sin, man's existence would never have ceased."

That man by creation was "adapted" to live for ever—that is, the circumstances in which he was created were adapted to perpetuate his existence without end, we as fully believe as Mr. Hinton.

But what were those circumstances? Were they in his nature? They must be, if Mr. H.'s definition of immortality be correct. But we deny that such was the fact. The perpetuation of his existence depended upon the circumstances with which he was surrounded; and hence "lest he put forth his hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live for ever" he is removed from those circumstances upon which his continued existence depended. This certainly does not look as though man by creation was endowed with "non-liability to death by natural causes, or causes proper to" himself. So far from it, it seems as if the natural cause of death was in himself, which could only be stayed or averted by circumstantial causes, and when he was removed from them he naturally fell back again to the dust from whence he came.

If we are correct in these views, Mr. Hinton's definition of immortality, though it may convey his meaning, does not convey the scripture sense; or if it does, we can derive no comfort from Paul's declaration that "this mortal shall put on immortality;" as that, according to Mr. H., necessarily implies nothing more than Adam possessed before he sinned; and hence, for all that phrase teaches, saints may after the resurrection meet with a like disaster to that of Adam, and experience another death. From the phrase immortality, according to Mr. Hinton, we cannot show that man "shall positively live for ever" after the resurrection. Where then shall we look for this assurance? Can we find it in the phrase life?

MR. HINTON'S DEFINITION OF THE WORD LIFE.

He maintains that "Life is a word primarily used to express the active or living condition of organic substances; and it is not," he says, "in its strict or literal sense, applicable to any thing but organic substances, vegetable or animal. When applied to any other objects," he adds, "it is on the ground of some analogy or resemblance; that is, consequently, not literally, but figuratively." pp. 28, 29. Here is some truth and some error. It would be true with regard to created things if we were to amend his definition by saying—"Life is a word primarily used to express the active or living condition of the organic substances of sensitive creatures, whose general condition is one of consciousness; and it is not, in its strict or literal sense, applicable to any thing else." The italic words are our corrections of Mr. Hinton's definition. His definition is an assumed one; but the law and the testimony shall settle ours. We have no need to travel far to sustain our position; the first chapters of Genesis will suffice to give us the primary use of the word life. In the account of creation life is not predicated merely of the "living condition of organic substances." It is not affirmed of the earth after its organism—it is not affirmed of the waters, nor of the grass, nor of the herb, nor of the fruit trees, nor of any of the trees which the Lord God made: no, nor of the sun, moon, stars, or any of the lights of heaven. This fact is fatal to Mr. Hinton's theory. But it is affirmed of all the sensitive creatures, whose general state is that of consciousness. Thus—"God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth," &c. "And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth," &c.; chap. 1: 20, 21. God said to man—"have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every LIVING thing that moveth upon the earth:" v. 28. Again, to man, "God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed, to you it shall be for meat: and to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life," &c. Here, we must think, is abundant evidence of the primary use of the word life: and though the trees, herbs, &c., were an "active or living condition of organic substances," the "strict or literal sense" of the word is not applied to them at all; and hence we may safely conclude it was not "applicable to any" of them, except "on the ground of some analogy or resemblance, that is, consequently not literally, but figuratively."

That the primary sense of the word life, in the Bible, is not applicable to organic substances without sensation, or without the capacity of consciousness, is further evident from the account of the flood, in which the phrase "every living substance" is employed, and is immediately explained to signify "both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of heaven," while nothing is said of "vegetable life," or of vegetables having life. The Lord said, "the end of all flesh is come before me—I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air—I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life—every thing that is in the earth shall die." The Lord then gave Noah the following direction—"Of every LIVING thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee: they shall be male and female—fowls—cattle—creeping thing—two of every sort—to keep them alive—and they went in unto Noah into the ark two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life—that is, clearly, all sensitive or conscious creatures. Then it is added of those out of the ark—"All flesh men that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing—and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died—Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

Thus we see, that "life is a word primarily used to express" the "active condition of" creatures, and of those only, who have sensation, or are endowed with senses, which distinguish them from the "active condition of" mere "organic substances," or "living vegetables." When the word is applied to vegetable organization it is used in a figurative or analogical sense, not in its primary.

The creation of man is equally in point in proof of the position we take on this subject; but we think we do not need to press that point on Mr. Hinton's attention: he cannot fail to see that the word life in the Scriptures has its primary application, not merely to the "active or living condition of organic substances," but "is a word primarily used to express" created things whose peculiar characteristic is, in general, consciousness, or sensation. Whatever may be its definition in the schools of "philosophy," we think it clear we have the Scripture definition, as given by the Creator himself: and we cannot but think, from the general candor of Mr. Hinton in his work, that on reviewing this point he will be led to acknowledge his mistake. It is true, such an acknowledgment is fatal to his whole argument against us, which can only be maintained by saying that the term life primarily does not express a creature whose peculiar characteristic is, in general, conscious existence. If we are right in the definition we have presented, of the primary meaning of the word, Mr. Hinton cannot claim its uniform application in a figurative sense when spoken of the reward of the righteous. It is not, as he maintains, "a choice between two analogical significations" of the word life, but a choice between its literal, i. e. its primary sense and a figurative or analogical one. We maintain that the word life, in the Bible, has its primary and literal sense, generally; if there are exceptions, and we freely admit there are, it is to be shown that the text, context, or other Scriptures require the exception; and we think it not difficult to determine when that is the case. Mr. Hinton, therefore, nor any one else, is to assume that when life is promised and proclaimed, as it is throughout the Scriptures, that the word is used figuratively; that is, for "happiness." We do not admit it. We consider such a view, however undesigned in its advocates, as subversive of the very ground work of faith, and as launching us into the regions of fancy. Life is one thing, and distinct by itself; happiness is another and different matter. As, however, there could be no happiness without life, life is the first and great gospel promise and proclamation—life, eternal life. Such a life must inevitably draw after it happiness: all misery imports decay, and unless arrested must sooner or later result in the extinction of life. That point, however, we shall not argue now.

Page 95 Mr. H. says—"Since the only value of animated, or conscious existence, lies in the happiness derivable from it, life comes in some cases to denote happiness." Again he says—"Life is an expression for the benefits of Christ's death, that is for the whole of them:" p. 33. In a qualified sense we may admit, that it is thus used sometimes: that is, none of all the other benefits could be possessed without life, and therefore to give eternal life is to bestow all other benefits communicated by Christ—they all follow in the train as a necessary result. But if life is by nature, and not one of the benefits, yea, the primary one, upon which all the others depend, then the phrase life must signify, when applied to the benefits by Christ, happiness, as Mr. H. contends. If so, then by a substitution of the term happiness for life we shall have the sense of the word. Mr. H. thus substitutes it in 2 Tim. 1: 1, "The promise of life in Christ Jesus;" and reads it—"The promise of happiness in Christ Jesus;" and says—"I do not see why this should not afford satisfaction in all cases in which life is used to express the benefits of Christ's death, inasmuch as these are all of the general nature of happiness, and readily conceived of as included in the term:" p. 32.

If the term life is to be understood as another phrase for happiness, in relation to benefits received by Christ, it cannot be relied upon to prove future life at all, save by inference: that is, its proper meaning in this relation is happiness, and we infer that to be happy we must be alive. The term, then, according to Mr. Hinton, cannot be urged as direct proof of future life. Then the matter stands thus—To say that man is immortal signifies only that he has an adaptation to live forever, though it does not prove that he "positively shall live for ever." To say that God has promised us life in Christ Jesus, does not prove that we positively shall consciously exist for ever, or that we shall live at all, only by implication; it only proves that we shall be happy: so that neither of these phrases assure us certainly that our conscious existence shall be "perpetuated without end. And if the phrase eternal is brought in to help out of this difficulty, it gives no relief; for that phrase has an "analogical" meaning as well as life; and as life is used in its analogical sense in the case before us, according to Mr. H., it is but reasonable to conclude eternal is also, and therefore signifies only while the subject to which it is applied continues; while the saint continues to be conscious he shall continue to be happy: but, for all the phrase "eternal life" proves, God may at any time blot him out of life proper, provided it only be done without unhappiness; and all evidence from either the phrase immortality or eternal life, that we "positively shall live for ever," is given up and lost, if Mr. Hinton's view is the true one.

Having virtually given up all dependance upon the phrases immortality and eternal life in proof that any one "positively shall live for ever," or even live at all hereafter, Mr. H. must find some other mode of argument to establish those points. Indeed, he has not only virtually given up this point, but has plainly done it so far as it relates to endless conscious existence being a gift of Christ. His words are—"There are no texts that teach never-ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers:" p. 123. Surely, that is true, if he defines the phrases immortality and eternal life correctly. He adds—"The phrase everlasting life is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed; and it cannot, therefore, when so used, be understood according to a different analogy, that is, of never-ending existence:" p. 123. On the previous page he says—"The phrase, eternal life, ought to be taken for one idea—happiness." Hence we repeat it—that all dependance on this phrase to prove that the righteous "positively shall live for ever" is abandoned. We must keep this position in view as we proceed in our examination of Mr. Hinton's theory; and at another stage of our notes, we shall see on what ground, if any, he can establish the eternal conscious existence of men.

"BEARING THE CROSS."

Much is said, among professed Christians, about "bearing the cross;" but we fear little is understood or really practiced in this matter. Some seem to think speaking in meeting is the cross they must bear; and when they have done that they think little more about the cross. We apprehend that is a very small item in bearing the cross. Men are all naturally in love with this present world. To this world we must become crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but few persons are willing to die such a death; there is, however, no other way of entering into the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto" us. Most professed Christians, it is to be feared, have made a covenant with the world, not to part with it; and the tempter satisfies them if they speak in meeting some times, and give something to support the gospel, they may keep their covenant with the world: but, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 15.

How then are we to be separated from the love of the world, and be crucified unto it? First—By a believing view of the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor—was despised of men—a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief—endured reproach—resisted temptation, though he "suffered being tempted"—when he was reviled, reviled not again—murmured not, though wounded, bruised, put to grief, and his soul made an offering for sin, scourged, spit upon, his hands and feet pierced with nails, his soul in agony—all this he bore, and no hisp of impatience ever escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world, go learn of him: contemplate his poverty—his life—his sufferings—his resignation—his patience—his loving and forgiving spirit, till the whole mind is humbled within you: and then realize this truth—"If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. 8: 17. Do you ask what it is to suffer with him? We answer—To suffer with the same meek, patient, forgiving, resigned spirit that he had. This leads us to say—

Second—If you would bear your cross and be crucified unto the world, REMEMBER, every trial of your life—whether temporal or spiritual, personal or family, from friends or enemies, direct or indirect, great or small, of short continuance or long, or whatever be the nature or character of it, is by the appointment or permission of that God who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by all these trials to crucify you unto the world, and fit you to be glorified with His Son Jesus Christ. How shall this design of our heavenly Father be accomplished? It cannot be, unless you "bear your cross." Do you ask again—What is it to bear my cross? We answer—it is to suffer all the trials of which we have spoken, patiently. You are not to quarrel with the instrumentality God may employ, nor indulge in fretfulness under it. If you do, you do not "bear the cross." And though you should speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under any of the trials of life, by which God is seeking to crucify you unto the world, it is hypocrisy for you to talk about your "bearing the cross—you are but deceiving your own soul. God has assured us, "all things work together for good to them that love him." Rom. 8: 28; yet, you can murmur, fret, and complain at those things which God has permitted or appointed!! Alas, alas! Do not dream you are ripening for the kingdom of God while this is the case. No, you are ripening for death—for perdition. Saith our Saviour—"In your PATIENCE possess ye your souls." We shall learn soon, or when it is too late, that those words are words of solemn and awful import. If you indulge in murmuring, complaining, or impatience at any trials, sufferings, or injuries, from whatever instrumentality they may come, and that spirit is increasing upon you, you are just as surely traveling in the road to perdition as God has said—"The soul that smneth it shall die." We speak not "The soul that smneth it shall die," to which all now of one "overtaken in a fault," to which all are liable in the hour of temptation, but we speak of him upon whom this spirit is not abating but increasing—and it is increasing, except we bear our cross daily: for every day will bring some cross, in some form. Happy the soul who is constantly looking to God for grace to bear every cross. We may pray to have the cross removed; but we may not pray for it only in submission to the will of God. "If it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done." That is our example; and we cannot safely follow any other. "My grace is sufficient for thee," will often be the answer; and did we know now what we shall know hereafter, we should praise God for every trial and every cross we have to bear: yea, a living faith will praise God even now, that he does not leave us to our own way, lest we should be like the children of Israel, whose impatient murmurings were answered by giving them "flesh," but "leanness" was "sent into their souls." "Be patient in all things:" that is bearing thy cross; then, when Christ appears you shall have a CROWN.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5:12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—When our paper went to press for August, we had exhausted all our funds, and were about ten dollars in arrears. Through the generosity of a few of our friends, that is cleared off and the present number nearly paid for also; though we are two weeks behind our regular time of issue. We have not asked donations, but they are none the less acceptable on that account. It would, however, be more agreeable to us to receive the amount necessary to complete this volume from new subscribers. We shall put the October number to press immediately on the receipt of funds sufficient to pay for its issue. However the Examiner may be delayed in appearing, our enemies need not exult, nor our friends despair, for it is not dead nor unconscious.

LETTERS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

FROM ELON EVERTS.

VERGENNES Vt., August 5, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS:—I wish that my anxiety for your prosperity, in all the blessings of our heavenly Father commensurate with the stand you have taken on the side of truth, was transmissible. I would quickly diffuse it among the brethren, and incline them to do what is necessary to sustain you in publishing the "Examiner."

I deeply feel the necessity of such a paper, that fearlessly, independently of consequences, diffuses such a broad ray of light, while the popular mass are with all their sophistry trying to darken counsel, preaching fables and deceiving the innocent.

Dear brethren: I will ask you, as I often ask myself,—where were you, some six year ago? How came you to embrace such a clear light of revelation? Did your salaried preachers teach it to you? Did your sectarian creeds guide to your present faith? Did you, of your own selves, dare to think of the Bible truths as you now do? Do you not often exclaim, Oh! how great was my darkness; how traditionized I was? Did you not try your utmost to prove your former theory to be the truth? Yea, did you not wish, that, Brother Storrs would keep such doctrines to himself? O! may the Lord forgive us.

Brethren, seeing what you now see, what would tempt you to wrap that old heathen fable about you again? What would induce you to have the "Examiner" stopped?

I will ask one question more. Are you willing that Brothers Storrs and Walsh, should willingly for OUR sakes, put their time, talents, reputation, living and all, upon the altar of our faith, and be sacrificed there, by suffering the opposition and prejudice of the popular religionists, and poverty and want? Their families need common comforts, as much as ours. Brethren, will you take this into candid consideration? While our brethren may feel it duty to preach the gospel, may it not be ours to sustain them? So reasons Paul.

I have repeatedly said, I would not, for $50.00 be deprived of the "Examiner." Not, that I can see everything as clear as our brethren that edit it: but, in it, we get a free discussion on both sides, of very important bible doctrines, and by the best talents, of Europe and America, so that the honest enquirer is readily assisted to judge.

Brethren, a word to the wise is sufficient. Are there not enough, of a willing mind, to contribute a small amount each to disembarass the "Examiner," that it may speak to our comfort, and to lead others to the truth? Oh! how great may our responsibility be.

Are there not fifty, who will give five dollars each, and as many more, who will give less, and then have more than the "poor widow?"

[Brother Everts letter contained five dollars, thus giving works as well as words.—ED. EX.]

FROM BR. "W. F. F."

PITTSBURG, August 12th, 1849.

DEAR BRO. STORRS:—I was very sorry to see by the last Examiner, a prospect of it not being continued regularly monthly, when it should be published every week, or at least once in two weeks. I trust the friends of "truth" have spoken out "substantially" before this time, and that we may be greeted by its bright beams on the 1st of next month and every month, until it shall come oftener.

A friend of mine (an Old School presbyterian) loaned me a few weeks ago "Dick on future punishment." I had said a few words to him on the subject of the destruction of the wicked which he received as though tending toward infidelity. I read Dick, and returned it to him with Dobney: he read Dobney and is reading it again, and says he can scarcely believe his own senses, that his eyes have been so long closed to that truth—that there shall be "NO PLACE" found for the wicked after their judgment: that they shall be "burned up root and branch;" nothing of them left—be as a thing that "was" and "is not;" he can love his God better, and see a glory in his justice and holiness which before he could not see. I enclose you a trifle [$2.00 Ed. Ex.] to support the Examiner and only regret that it is not in my power to do more.

FROM BR. WM. P. LEMMON.

BALTIMORE, August 15th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS:—I note with regret your want of means to carry on the Examiner, as stated in the last number, and hope the friends of truth will sustain you as they ought. I don't agree with you in all you write, but I think the spirit of candor and kindness that characterises the Bible Examiner, is eminently fitted to correct your errors or mine, as the case may be; and, moreover, I think your paper is intrinsically worth double, at least, what you receive for it; I hope, therefore, that many, if not all your subscribers will agree, not only to double their subscriptions for the coming year but for the present, say one dollar in lieu of fifty cents per annum. Enclosed I hand you ten dollars with my best wishes for the truth's sake.

FROM BR. HENRY E. CARVER.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 23d, 1849.

BRO. STORRS:—Some of your friends here were pained to observe by the August number of the "Examiner" that you had become embarrassed in your efforts to disseminate light by want of funds to pay the printer.

Now for one I have been conscious for some time past that the price of the paper, as it is, is too low, and am willing to pay the advanced price, even with no alteration in the issue. It would be a source of much regret to me to see the Examiner discontinued; for I regard it as the medium of communicating to the world one of the most important, grand and glorious truths ever presented to the mind of man.

The enclosed five dollars is hereby sent by Bro. Royce, Bro. Wibel, and myself. In return, you will please send three copies of "Dobney." The balance of the money you will consider a free-will offering to aid in finishing the present volume. We consider that we have received full benefit for all we have invested in such a paper as the "Examiner."

Your brother in hope of Immortality.

FROM BR. A. A. JAYNE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS:—On opening the Examiner, I learned that, for want of funds, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to issue the paper for the balance of the year. I at once determined to cast my vote for its continuance; and for this purpose I enclose five dollars. If the following numbers of the paper are never issued, I shall not feel that you are indebted to me (or to any of your subscribers) one farthing; for the light which you have been instrumental in shedding upon my mind, on many disputed doctrines of the Bible, is abundantly more precious than the small sacrifice I have made in obtaining it. I read the paper for August with great satisfaction. I think almost every unprejudiced mind would accord to Bro. Walsh the best of the argument, even if they hesitated to admit that he stands firmest upon the rock of truth. The article upon the "Signs of the Times" deeply interested me. I trust you will be enabled to send the following Nos. in due season.

Yours, looking for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, only through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

BACK NUMBERS.—We can furnish the Bible Examiner to any who wish, from January, 1848, but no further back. We cannot break volumes, except to supply subscribers who have failed to receive their papers. Any such we will supply if they will give us notice of the number or numbers missing. As we shall make no charge for supplying missing numbers to subscribers, they will send us word free of postage.

DEFINITE TIME OF THE ADVENT.—If the author of an article on this topic, recently sent us, will read our editorial remarks on that subject, in the Examiner for June, he will see our reasons for not publishing his calculation. We cannot give currency to views on that subject which we are sure will result in no good, and can only add to the number of disappointments calculated to shake confidence in the reality of the advent itself; which we believe to be a glorious truth, and an event nigh at hand. Blessed is the man that watcheth and keepeth himself unspotted from the world, "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

FALLEN ASLEEP.—Sister Sarah Blynn, daughter of Br. James Blynn, of this city, fell asleep in Jesus, July 18, aged 25. For nine years, she endured the most intense suffering from a spine affection. Her spasms were almost unremitted. In '44 and '45, she had a temporary relief, and was enabled to walk a little by the aid of crutches. We felt to praise God for this truly wonderful mercy; but it was of short continuance. Her sufferings since have been indescribable. For near three months before her death, she was unable to speak at all, or scarcely to be moved; and, though sensible, did not open her eyes. From the first year of her sickness to the last hour of life she was never known to murmur or complain; nor did she in any way manifest impatience. She was a firm believer in the second advent of Christ, of eternal life through him by a resurrection from the dead, and of the non-immortality of the wicked. A few moments before she fell asleep in death, she opened her eyes, and with a smile on her countenance, seemed to say farewell to her father and mother, who had watched by her bed side day and night. Unable to utter a word, she could only by signs say: "all is well." Then she fell asleep without a struggle or a sigh, and in glorious hope of a "resurrection at the last day." We might add more, but our limits forbid. We have said this much in praise of that grace which sustained her to the last, and for the information of the many christian friends and ministers who have seen and visited her during her long sickness. She rests from her sufferings, and will soon, we trust, enter into life eternal according to her faith.

EDITORIAL GENEROSITY.

The following communication, with the "Editorial Notes," we copy from the "True Wesleyan," of August 18th. We thank Br. Lee for his "editorial courtesy," and are glad to find that he "always calculates to be a little more generous than some of" his "neighbors." We will assure him, however, that he shall not outdo us in that respect; and we will be most happy to receive a like letter from him at any time, in answer to inquiries, and it shall find place in the Examiner, if we are so fortunate as to be able to continue our paper, which we feared we should not at the time we wrote the following letter to Br. Lee; this fact is our apology, if we need one, for sending our answer to him. That's not all; we will beat him in "generosity" if he will send us an answer to our inquiries to his article "No. II." on Immortality, in the Examiner for May last. We will exceed him in generosity by letting him finish his article without interrupting him by filling it with notes: we will say all we have to say after he has done speaking. We do not complain that Br. Lee placed his figures from "1" to "12" in our article, thereby interrupting us; if that is his taste he has a right to it; we practiced in that way once ourselves till we came to the conclusion that it was bad taste, to say nothing more. Try the principle in a public oral debate and see who would tolerate it. We say again, we will exceed Br. Lee in generosity, at least in this respect, if he will try us with a reply to our queries in the Examiner for May. And we claim that we have already exceeded him in generosity, for we have copied two of his articles, entire, from the True Wesleyan, on Immortality, while he has copied none of the articles from the Examiner in reply to his, nor noticed that any replies were being made to him by our Associate Editor.

Br. Lee, it will be seen, finishes his notes on our letter "by repeating the questions which," he says, "we insist have not been answered." We are perfectly willing, the readers of the Wesleyan and Examiner should judge whether we have answered the questions or not; and there we shall leave that point after a few words at the close.

"ANNIHILATION—DEATH."

BRO. LEE:—Under the above head, in the Wesleyan of the 4th instant, you have noticed some remarks of mine, relating to my objection to the use of the term "annihilation" in the immortality discussion. You conclude with the following questions: "Will Brother Storrs tell us, what he understands by the word death, and by the word annihilation, and what, in his view, is the difference between them?"

By this inquiry, I presume you wish me to give my answer through the Wesleyan, which I will cheerfully do. (1.)

In your article, to which this is a reply, you said—"we mean by annihilation, what is expressed by the words, 'cease to exist,' or 'a state of non-existence,'" and you inquire—"Does Mr. Storrs mean the same thing by death?"

My answer to this inquiry, turns on what definition you give to the term "exist." (2.) For it seems that you, as well as others, have your own definition of terms. (3.) Mr. Hinton, an English writer on the same side of the immortality question with yourself, in a late mighty effort against the view I advocate, says that "death involves no cessation of existence either body or soul;" p. 449. (4.) It is manifest, however, that the "body" becomes entirely unconscious: (5.) that is "death" when the term is used in relation to the cessation of the life of sensitive beings; but it is not "annihilation;" for, as Mr. Hinton affirms, it "involves no cessation of existence" of the "body." (6.) It is for you, Mr. Hinton, and others, on your side of the question to prove that a man only half dies. (7.) I agree with Mr. Hinton, that in man's death there is "no cessation of existence in either body or soul;" [using the term soul in your sense, of a distinct entity, without adopting that sense;] (8.) Hence, your question is answered, according to the language you employ in defining what you mean by annihilation, viz.—"ceasing to exist, or a state of non-existence;" neither body nor soul "cease to exist" either in the first or second death: (9.) and it is perfectly in "the power of God" to call them up to conscious existence after the first or second death, if he will: the only difference in this respect is, God wills to call all men back from the first death, but he wills not to call any back from "the second death;" yet neither the bodies nor the souls of the wicked "cease to exist" in the second death: but they do sink into a state of eternal unconsciousness by the will of God: (10.) But, be it remembered, not beyond His power to awaken them if he chose—such a state would be "annihilation"—their living again all turns on His will. Lest you should think I have given you a new definition in answering your questions, I beg to be permitted to give the following remarks, which I published in the Bible Examiner, June, 1844; and they may close what I have to say to you in reply at this time:

"The term annihilation, as usually understood by common people, means an absolute reducing to nothing. Now, in that sense I am no believer in annihilation, and I never use that term in speaking of the end of the wicked. (11.) I think there is a clear "distinction" between total unconsciousness and annihilation. It is evident to all, that the body is totally unconscious at the first death; but, it is very far from being annihilated. It returns to, and mingles with its mother earth. In the second death the entire man is reduced to his original elements, whatever they were; but the elements to which he is reduced are not annihilated; and God could call him back to consciousness again if he chose. Hence I reject the term, because it makes a false impression. I maintain that when the second death takes place there is a final and eternal unconsciousness of the wicked; or as it is expressed in the 37th Psalm, 20th v.—"The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume: into smoke, shall they consume away." Call that 'annihilation' if you will; I reject the term in this controversy. It has nothing to do with it." (12.)

Yours in hope of eternal life, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.
GEORGE STORRS.
Philadelphia, August 6th, 1849.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

(1.) It may have been a very natural and very modest presumption, but still we intended no such thing. The article was not written for our columns. Bro. Storrs wrote about us in his own paper, and we replied in ours, and asked of him an explanation, which we supposed he would give through the same medium through which he had made the attack upon us. Had not Bro. Storrs been an editor, and had we called on him for an explanation, we should have expected to have loaned him the use of our columns, but as he commenced the attack upon us in his own columns, we supposed it most reasonable to look for the explanation to reach us through the same source, as we specified no other channel. The view Bro. Storrs takes of the subject is this: when one editor attacks another, and the assailed party replies and asks an explanation, he invites his assailant to overlook his own columns, and occupy his whom he assailed. We have not so learned editorial courtesy. Nevertheless, we publish the article, as we always calculate to be a little more generous than some of our neighbors.

(2.) Bro. Storrs knows what definition we put upon the word exist, when we speak of the human mind; there was no occasion for his creating fog where there is none. For a soul to cease to exist, is to cease to be a soul.—With us to cease to think is to cease to be a soul, for we know little about the human soul, more than what we gather from its thinking operations; with us a thought is the mind thinking, and this Bro. Storrs knows, if he has read what he found fault with. A body ceases to exist when it ceases to be a body—when it ceases to be an organism. Throw a human body into the fire and consume it, and the organism ceases to exist, but there will be the ashes left, and the fluid will exist some where, but they are not the body or the organism. But in relation to the soul, whose very existence is thought, which is never known to exist only in connection with thought, and is known to exist only from its thoughts, we know nothing of the ashes or vapor left when it ceases to be a soul, or ceases to think.

(3.) We always use terms in their commonly received sense, unless we give notice to the contrary. We introduced the word annihilation into our articles on the immortality of the soul, with such explanations as preclude almost the possibility of being misunderstood, and what we asked of Bro. Storrs was, to give a like explanation of the sense in which he uses the word death. Had he been disposed to give a frank answer, he could have so answered as not to had his meaning depend upon our definition of words, but upon his own definitions, which he might have appended.

(4.) We did not ask Bro. S. what Mr. Hinton believes concerning death, but what he, Rev. George Storrs, believes; why could he not have answered? We are not responsible for Mr. Hinton's views, nor do we hold Bro. Storrs responsible for them, but only for his own, if we shall succeed in finding out what they are.

(5.) This implies that the body is conscious, for unless it be conscious, how can it become "unconscious?" This is new doctrine; we maintain that consciousness does not pertain to the body. The body is never conscious, and Bro. Storrs is the first philosopher we ever heard talk about the consciousness of the body. Consciousness is purely an operation of the mind.

(6.) We differ from Mr. Hinton and Mr. Storrs both. When we speak of the human body, we speak of it as an organism, and when it is decomposed, we maintain that the body, the organism ceases to exist. The solid part may be blown about by the wind, and the fluid may ascend in vapor and fall in dew, or be lost in the ocean of waters, but we deny that these are the body, a human body; the body has ceased to exist, the organism is annihilated, though the elements of which it was composed may exist somewhere in wide nature.

(7.) We did not ask Mr. Hinton to prove anything; we only asked Mr. Storrs what in his opinion is the difference between annihilation and death, and our readers will not fail to see how he talks about Mr. Hinton to get rid of answering.

(8.) We did not wish Bro. Storrs to answer on the ground of our understanding of the soul, "without adopting that sense," but we wished him to answer in view of his own understanding of the soul.

(9.) For the soul to exist in our sense of the soul, is to be conscious, for with us the soul is a living consciousness, and when it ceases to be conscious, it will cease to be a soul. Bro. Storrs believes the soul dies, and yet continues to be a soul if we understand him.—Do the souls of Adam and Abel still exist? and are they human souls still? and have they maintained a distinct existence separate from all other souls that have existed since? We would like to have Bro. Storrs answer this, yea or nay. He claims to have answered our question, but we do not consider it an answer, but an evasion.

(10.) What does Bro. Storrs understand by the soul of a man? What is it? Is it a spirit, breath, life, bone, flesh, blood, solid or fluid? If it be life, as some affirm, does life die, and still exist after it is dead, so that there is such a thing as dead life? These are queries which his pretended answer naturally suggests.

(11.) Bro. Storrs knew that we did not use the term in this sense, when he complained of us for employing it. If a soul "sink into a state of eternal unconsciousness," it will be annihilated in the sense in which every one must know we used the term, who has read our articles.—Why then did he complain of us?

(12.) This whole extract is a mere declamation, and proves no part of any answer to our questions. If Bro. Storrs really thinks it proves his point by the text which says, "into smoke shall they consume away," he must understand it literally. If so, human souls are converted into smoke, and still they are souls in the shape of smoke. When the smoke settles down in our annual Indian summer, who can say that it is not the return of the souls of martyrs, according to this theory. We have no more idea that the text literally describes the end of human souls, than we believe the end of God's people is literally described, when it is said, "they eat up my people as they eat bread."

We close our remarks by repeating the questions, which we insist have not been answered. They are as follows: "Will Bro. Storrs tell us what he understands by the word death, and by the word annihilation, and what, in his view, is the difference between them?"

The question is, "what is his opinion," &c." No matter what other people believe; they will take care of their own opinions.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF THE EXAMINER.

Br. Lee, in his note "2" says—"With us to cease to think is to cease to be a soul, for we know little about the human soul, more than what we gather from its thinking operations; with us a thought is the mind thinking," &c.

Men "cease to think" when sound asleep: then the soul "ceases to be a soul." Men have been in a state of total insensibility for days, months, and, in some instances, for years; for these periods, longer or shorter, according to Br. Lee, the soul "ceases to be a soul." Suppose then this "ceasing to think" should last from the death of Abel to the resurrection at the last day; of course, as Br. L. will have it, the soul has "ceased to be a soul;" but the power of God has not "ceased" to be omnipotent; and he can as easily revive the soul in the last case as those previously noticed. "With us," says Br. Lee, "a thought is the mind thinking." But in each of the foregoing cases there is no "thinking;" then Br. Lee "knows little about the human soul," as it has no "thinking operations." He has said in his articles on immortality, that "the soul is a simple essence, immaterial, uncompounded and indivisible;" that seemed to imply that he knew a great deal "about" it; but now he "knows little about" it "more than what" he "gathers from its thinking operations." There are times when it does not think, and we judge that Br. Lee is now approaching the truth, viz., that theologians, on his side of the question "know little about the human soul;" the soul, according to them, is, after all, only thought: a glorious soul indeed; and it "ceases to be a soul" generally, once in every twenty-four hours. Br. Lee says expressly, in note "2," "the soul, whose very existence is thought;" and he adds—"which is never known to exist only in connection with thought, and is known to exist only from its thoughts." We will not call this "creating fog," for we think foggy as it is, it is pretty clear: THE SOUL IS THOUGHT, according to this definition. We are almost ready to say Amen. Perhaps Br. Lee would accept it as an answer to his inquiries in note "10." But he says, note "9," "For the soul to exist in our sense of the soul, is to be conscious, for with us the soul is a living consciousness, and when it ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul." Br. Lee has, doubtless, seen persons perfectly unconscious under the influence of chloroform, and their "thought" ceased; hence, according to him, the soul "ceased to be a soul;" there was not a "living consciousness;" cut and mangle the body as you would, there was no consciousness; and the lack of consciousness was not in the body, for Br. Lee says, note "5"—"Consciousness does not pertain to the body. The body," he adds, "is never conscious;" and concludes by affirming, "Consciousness is purely an operation of the mind." This authority, of course, is good in this argument. The matter then stands thus:—

"When the soul ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul:"—

But the soul ceases to be conscious by the use of chloroform:—

THEREFORE it then "ceases to be a soul."

But again, note "2," Br. Lee says—"For a soul to cease to exist, is to cease to be a soul." Suppose we put this together with the foregoing, thus:—

To cease to exist is to cease to be a soul:—

But, under the influence of chloroform the soul ceases to be a soul, inasmuch as it "ceases to be conscious:"—

THEREFORE, it "ceases to exist" at such times.

In regard to Br. Lee's affirmation, at the close of his "notes," that his "questions have not been answered," we will put our answer together as may be found in our letter. It is as follows:—

"Death involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul; it is manifest, however, that the body becomes entirely unconscious: THAT is death, where the term is used in relation to the cessation of the life of sensitive beings, but it is not annihilation: it involves no cessation of existence of the body: it is for you to prove that a man only half dies. Neither body nor soul cease to exist either in the first or second death: and it is perfectly in the power of God to call them up to conscious existence after the first or second death if he will. God wills to call all men back from the first death, but he wills not to call any back from the second death—they sink into a state of eternal unconsciousness by the will of God. But not beyond his power to awaken them if he chose—such a state would be annihilation."

The reader can now judge whether we did not answer Br. Lee's questions distinctly. We think we clearly stated what we understood by death, what by annihilation, and the difference between them; and if Br. Lee had not put "(5.)" in our mouth before we were suffered to finish the sentence, it seems to us he must have seen, and his readers too, that we did expressly answer his first question, viz.: "What do you understand by the word death?" In our letter, which we sent him, our words were made emphatic as in the quotation above; but he chose to remove the emphasis: of that we do not complain, for the reader would not have been likely to stumble without it, if the "(5.)" had not called off his attention before we finished the sentence, so that after reading the "note" he would not be likely to observe our reference in the expression "THAT is death," &c.; especially as the emphasis was removed from it.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

No. II.

We expressed the opinion, in our previous article, that the scarlet colored beast, Rev. 17th, is a symbol of the Papal civil power just prior to its final destruction; or, the last form of that power; and that which it took after it recovered from the "deadly wound" received, by which it was sent into the bottomless pit for a time. Having ascended out of that condition, it is presented in the 17th chap., under the seventh vial, just as the judgment is to be executed upon its rider, or the power that had managed it. The rider of this beast is described as a corrupt woman, distinctly named, "BABYLON THE GREAT," &c., and marked as a power that had shed the blood of the saints, and martyred the followers of Jesus. She is described, at verse 18, as being "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." It is manifest, however, that the walls, streets, bricks, and mortar which go to make up a city, never reigned over any body. When it is said, therefore, that the woman is that great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth, it is clear the meaning is, the power symbolized by this corrupt woman has its seat in that great city, or in Rome. This power is, mystically, Babylon; and takes its name from Babylon of the Old Testament. In order fully to understand this prophecy, we must compare it with the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning Babylon.

Here we wish to state a principle which we believe will be found true of many of the prophecies of the previous dispensation. It is this—That those prophecies frequently embrace events which in their fulfilment are at a distance from each other; or, a part of the prophecy has its accomplishment in events near, and another part at a more distant period; perhaps centuries after. Or, we would distinguish them thus—near and remote events, yet combined in one prophecy without, perhaps, any notice of this distinction; leaving the developments to settle that point. None can doubt but this is the case in those prophecies relating to Messiah's sufferings and reign, or the first and second advents. Nor had the Jews, or Disciples, at first, any idea that Messiah must have two advents to accomplish all that was written of him. It is easy to illustrate this point by several prophecies which have had a partial fulfilment, but we do not deem it necessary now to go into the evidence further.

In examining the prophecy concerning Babylon in Rev., we shall need constantly to refer to the prophecies of Babylon in the Old Testament, which will be found to contain parts which either never have had a fulfilment at all, or only a partial one, and that mainly as a "figure of that which was to come." If this fact is kept before our minds it will help us much in understanding Revelation.

We will, before going on directly, make a more minute enquiry as to what power is symbolized by Babylon, designated as a corrupt woman. We begin with Rev. chap. 17:1. It is there called "the great whore." The original word is, pornees, which signifies one that prostitutes herself for gain, —an idolatress—figuratively, a corrupt and idolatrous church. It is used frequently in the Old Testament in reference to the departures of the Jewish church from God, her husband, by her idolatries. The very first idea, therefore, in the Revelation, is that of a corrupt and idolatrous church, prostituting herself for gain; a "great" church worshipping idols, and multiplying gods, for the sake of gaining money and power. Again, in verse 5, she is called "the mother of harlots." She is therefore the chief church—"the great" church. There is but one such church to be found on the earth; and it seems almost useless to argue the case. No church can answer to the description except the "Roman Catholic Church." She has multiplied gods, from the virgin Mary down through the whole catalogue of real and imaginary saints, and worshipped them, or prayed to them who are dead, and "know not anything;" and hence is just as guilty of idolatry as if she had done homage to wood or stone. She has also multiplied "images" innumerable, and thus shows herself the prostitute church designated "the great whore." She is indeed "the mother church"—but she is "the mother of harlots"—porneis—unchaste females, prostituting themselves and the gospel for gain. It is not difficult to see who are the daughters. If you see money-loving churches, conforming to the world for gain or popularity, you cannot fail to know they are of the mother of harlots. But our object being now to speak of the "judgment of the great whore," or mother, we shall not, at present, dwell upon her daughters. She is first described as a corrupt woman—then as the mother of other corrupt women—then riding and managing a corrupt civil power, symbolized by a scarlet colored beast, full of the names of blasphemy, with which she is in union. Next she is shown as a bloody persecutor; drunken—intoxicated with the blood of saints, &c. She is then presented as conducting herself in such manner, when God's words are about to be fulfilled upon her in judgment, that she is hated by the horns, or civil powers who had given their strength and power to the beast with which she was in league, and which had "carried her," (verse 7), and they "eat her flesh and burn her with fire," i. e. destroy her. The 18th chapter gives a detailed account of the judgment upon her, the reasons for it, some of the means by which it is inflicted, and the feelings of those interested in her continuance, and who had enriched themselves by her. All this is done under the symbol of a great and prosperous city suddenly destroyed, and the consternation and terror of such an event. A great part of the scenery here is drapery, thrown in to heighten the effect of the picture, but not to be understood as literally taking place; we speak of that part particularly from the 9th verse onward, which describes the feelings and sayings of those in the interest of this corrupt church, or Babylon.

In the 17th chapter, John was shown the beast, that this woman rode, in such circumstances as called for the "intervention" of the "power" of the horns, or governments, that were under the woman power, or ecclesiastical influence of this corrupt church. It was the woman that "reigneth over the kings;" or governments "of the earth," or old Roman Empire, that invoked those governments to interfere to sustain the scarlet colored beast, or civil government the woman had ridden and controlled, and which had "carried" her in all her bloody course. After noticing that "intervention," by which the horns "agreed and gave their power and strength to the beast," it is said, "these shall make war upon the Lamb," &c., thus intimating that this combination with the beast, at the bidding of the woman, was to constitute one of those agencies that should be specially engaged in "the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Having thrown out this hint, at verse 14, the prophecy, before proceeding directly to an account of the battle, stops to take a particular notice of the judgment on the woman, or Babylon, which is briefly noted, verse 16, but given in detail, chapter 18; though that chapter, chronologically, we think, synchronizes with the 20th verse of the 19th chap.; but being an event of such vast importance, a particular description is given of it by itself, and of the rejoicing at its fall, before arriving at the general account at the close of chap. 19. Here also we may as well remark, we think in the order of events the narrative, Rev. 19: 1-10, of the rejoicing at Babylon's destruction, follows Rev. 20: 3, and forms the introduction to Rev. 20: 4, and onward.

We are now prepared to proceed to notice the particular account of the judgment on Babylon. It is introduced as a special and separate scene, and therefore an angel is represented to come down from heaven, to open it and declare the reasons for this terrible judgment. He first announces that Babylon is fallen—epesen—one sense of the Greek word is, to fall in judgment. She had been tried and condemned, and the sentence is now about to be executed. This judgment is righteous, or just; she has "become a habitation"—a place of, a dwelling of—devils—daimonion—deities, idols, or "knowing ones"; the character of whom is next spoken of, viz. "foul spirit"—pneumatos—"foul" tempers, dispositions, feelings, affections, inclinations; all these were the result of her idolatries; as the worship and sincere service of the true God is productive of holy tempers, dispositions, feelings, affections, and inclinations, so Babylon's worship of images, dead saints, &c., had made her "a hold"—phulake—a den "of every foul," impure temper, disposition, &c.; "and a cage of every unclean and hateful," detestable, loathsome "bird"—birds that feed on carrion, putrid flesh. What a description! But answering exactly to Roman Catholic Christendom. We preached on this subject a few weeks ago in this city; a secular paper here, without any knowledge of what we had said, had an article the next morning on "THE CONSEQUENCES OF EUROPE," in which it said, "Most of Europe, especially the Catholic portion, is demoralized. Jesuitism, Fourierism, fanaticism of all kinds, have made it a moral chaos . . . distracted by extremes, either of superstition or infidelity, despotism or anarchy." It added, speaking of the various causes—"All, operating together, have converted all Europe into Pandemonium. This Greek word signifies All the Devils, or The Place of all the Devils." When we read this, we were half inclined to think the editor of that paper had been listening to our sermon the day previous; or at least been looking at the prophecy; but the former we presume he never does, and the latter we think not often, for he is still dreaming of the ultimate triumph of republicanism in Europe. Even politicians can see that "Catholic Europe" is the "Place of all Devils," but they do not see its doom.

A further reason announced by the angel for the judgment to be executed on Babylon is—"For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication"—she has spread her corrupt and idolatrous religion every where; and hence if she is not soon destroyed she will make "all nations" as corrupt as "Catholic Europe." "And the kings of the earth"—tees gees—the land, i. e. where she holds sway, or the old Roman empire, otherwise, "Catholic Europe"—"have committed fornication with her"—have joined in her idolatries and sought her protection; thus casting off reliance upon God, and becoming as black in idolatry as herself; hence we shall find in the sequel, chap. 19: 19-21, that they are destroyed with her, though the description of her fate is separately and at large presented in this 18th chapter; we shall find, however, that those countries that have been under her power will be prominent actors in her destruction, as represented chap. 17: 16, which work they will do in "the battle" as set forth chap. 19: 20, corresponding with chap. 17: 16, those two verses synchronizing together.

We may as well say, in this place, that we regard "the battle of the great day of God Almighty" as now going on; and as having commenced with the seventh vial of the seven last plagues, which we think began either with the French revolution of 1848, or within a few years previous to that time. That battle is made up of a series of events, passing over several years; we pretend not to say how many—time will reveal that. We are not to look for that battle in one event, but in a protracted conflict, made up of various events, or conflicts both of principles and of physical force, which we cannot doubt are now in progress. The scenery of that battle in chap. 19 we regard as all symbolical; and have no idea that "the kings of the earth, the beast, and the false prophet," &c., in that battle are to see Christ or his army, or will know that they are fighting against him, any more than the Jews knew they were "crucifying the Lord of glory." But let us not be mistaken in these remarks; we do believe that battle is to be followed with the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, and the personal reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, with his dominion over all the earth.

Let us not then be bewildering our minds about a battle literally to correspond with the symbolical representation in Rev. 19. As we presume no one supposes that a literal "sword out of Christ's mouth" is to be employed in that battle, so let us not blind our eyes to the truth—solemn, awful truth—that we are now actually living in the time when that battle has begun, even "the battle of THAT GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY," which is to close up this age, and bring in the age of Messiah's personal reign. But the children of God who expect that reign may have need of patience; for most likely it will be several years before the battle will terminate; for aught we can tell, however, God may take up his saints to meet Christ "in the air" before the battle is over; we are inclined to the opinion that he will, yet we have no positive assurance of it. If not so, then there may be several years of trial still awaiting them here; and they will need to heed their Lord's admonition—"In your patience possess ye your souls."

We shall say more of the battle, chap. 19, when we come to explain that part of the prophecy; and give our reasons for the suggestion we have thrown out, that the armies and powers engaged in it, opposed to Christ, will be ignorant of what they are doing.

The next thing we notice in the account of Babylon's destruction is the cry—"Come out of her, my people, that ye receive not of her plagues." We remark, in the first place, that Babylon has territory as well as power and seat. It is therefore to be surveyed as a whole; the judgment falls off her and on those occupying the territory over which she has held ecclesiastical sway, as all together go to make up Babylon. The people here called to come out of her reside on the territory under her sway, but are not as a body of her religion—they are clearly a distinct people, though some of them, from various causes, may have been ecclesiastically connected with her. Again we remark, it is a people that have been oppressed by her, and suffered severely from her; for they are directed to "reward her even as she rewarded" them, &c., verse 6. To find out who are this people, we must have reference to the unfulfilled part of the prophecy concerning Babylon in the Old Testament; or those prophecies that had only a partial accomplishment in events relating to Babylon in Chaldea. "For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor JUDAH of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel: FLES out of the midst of Babylon and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense." Jer. 51: 5, 6. The facts here presented, and the exhortation given do not correspond with the facts of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, nor with any events prior to the Christian era. This truth is so obvious that it does seem really unnecessary to spend time to prove it. The most that could be claimed with any show of truth is, that there was a partial fulfilment. But the first proclamation in favor of the Jews, at that time, was by Cyrus king of Persia; and they left the seat of their captivity not to escape judgment coming on Babylon, or to escape her plagues. Here then is a part of the prophecy that is to be carried forward for its full accomplishment to the time of the New Testament Babylon, or the Babylon of Rev. 18. Again, Jer. 51: 41-45, it is said—"How is Sheshak [a mystic name for Babylon] taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations! the sea is come up upon Babylon; she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof." [that is, with the waters where the whore sitteth,] which "are peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues." "My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord." Here is an exact correspondence with the language, Rev. 18: 4, and which had no correspondence in any facts relating to the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon of Chaldea. We cannot but think, therefore, that the people called out of Babylon, Rev. 18, is that people so long oppressed and crushed by the idolatrous Mother of Harlots who has heaped upon the offspring of JUDAH such untold wrongs and sufferings. We are the more inclined to this view from the prophecy of Isa. 51, where we have the following language—"Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out. . . . Thus saith thy Lord, the Lord and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thy hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink of it AGAIN; but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee," &c., verse 17-23. That this prophecy relates to the posterity of Jacob none, surely, ought to deny; and it shows that a time should come after a long season of cruel oppression when the hand that had crushed them should be taken off, and the cup should no more AGAIN be put to their lips, but their oppressors shall drink it. What do we see in these days? The Catholic nations of Europe have been and are removing their hands from off this long oppressed people, and at the same time judgments fall thick and fast on those nations; indicating that the hour of Mystical Babylon's judgment has come; and that the people so long oppressed by her are called by the "voice" of Providence "from heaven" to "come out of her; that ye receive not of her plagues." Before leaving the territory and dominion of mystic Babylon, however, they will try to sustain the Catholic nations where they reside, denominated by Jeremiah an effort to "heal" her; but this effort will prove abortive. It is thus expressed by the prophet, Jer. 51: 8, 9, "Take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed;" which effort being unsuccessful, it is added—"forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country, for her judgment reacheth unto heaven," &c. At this very hour the Jews are trying to heal the Catholic nations of Europe, or to prevent their utter ruin, by fighting in her battles, and loaning large sums of money to the governments to save them from bankruptcy and ruin. True, all this may be but a selfish principle in them, that they may save the millions of dollars before loaned to those governments, and which must probably be a total loss if those governments crumble to pieces. Hence the effort to heal Babylon; but she will not be healed; and when the monied Jews clearly see this, the next effort will be to seek a refuge elsewhere before they wreck all in the useless effort to sustain that falling power. Such a discovery will be to them as "a voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people;" and it will be obeyed. This constitutes, in our opinion, one of the events of the battle of the great day of God Almighty; and will be one of the most mighty engines in breaking Babylon and all Catholic Europe in pieces—producing entire bankruptcy, and annihilating their power, bringing in a state of anarchy, fully described by "doubling unto her double according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double"—producing "torment and sorrow" in all her borders. So the prophecy of Jeremiah, Jer. 51: 20, says—"Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war; for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms." The removal of that people out of Catholic Europe, with what wealth is yet in their power, would be indeed the death blow to Babylon and her adherents; literally "breaking in pieces the nations, and destroying kingdoms." These things happen immediately after a time that Babylon had exultingly said—"I sit as a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow;" the exact state of that power two years ago, when almost all the world were ready to extol the head of Babylon to heaven, and her praises were in every land; but already the hisses of hatred to the whore begin to be heard on every side, and indications increase that the period is just at hand when her flesh will be eaten, and she burned with fire. Then will the wailing described in the remainder of Rev. 18, be heard from those who have been in her interests, and who have enriched themselves by her idolatries and corruptions. The joy of the saints at that event, chap. 19: 1-9, we shall consider in another article.

LETTERS.

Sister C. C. WILLIAMS, Bowyer Dam, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—I know not how it is with others, but for myself I can say it is a great satisfaction as well as pleasure to be able to do a little towards disenthraling the mind of the mass, which the Man of Sin has so long kept enchained. I rejoice that his hour seems near, and his destruction certain. The invincible sword, the Word of God, I feel will triumph. Truth will and must prevail. Man will find out what he is, and what he needs, and those who learn that, cannot but adore the Being who planned and executed such a work as has been wrought for them, to secure to them something worthy of being brought into being, and for undergoing here a course of trial—viz.: eternal life. I love to think, talk or write upon it: yes, and work too, to spread the light abroad. I think it must be truth, it looks so light. Error does not thus, but blinds, looks mysterious; and the more one tries to extricate themselves the more entangled they become. But this, to me, seems a potent way of combating self-styled Orthodoxy: and is cheap, too: to put these works on immortality into the hands of all who will read them. And I think they can hardly fail of exciting a spirit of inquiry to know whether or not these things are so. I wish more would feel the importance of doing so, as well as the comfort of it, and we should soon see the battle raging and volunteers enlisting; either on the side of Truth or Error, a stand would be taken. I desire to see the work go on.—[3 enclosed.—Ed. Ex.]

Br. PARKER SAWYER, Hampton, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—It gives me pleasure to be instrumental in extending the circulation of the Examiner, Dobney and the Six Sermons, for I believe they are and will be productive of great good, founded, as I firmly believe, upon the Eternal truth of God, as revealed in his word. They are full of life and comfort to the Christian, and contain a rational appeal to the sincere Universalist, who, on new ground to him, is met and refuted; whilst the Infidel listens with almost profound silence. I am with you with all my heart, now and ever in the fearless defense of Gospel truth, though foes may deride and friends forsake. Yours truly.

Br. J. B. TYLER, Lockwood, N. Y., writes:

BR. STORRS:—By the smiles of a good Providence, two months past I have had comfortable health, after a tedious afflictive five months under a chronic inflammation of the bronchia. I have enjoyed the monthly visits of the Examiner, and often think how little the earthly compensation you have for the care and responsibility of its publication. Will you send me eight or ten copies of your Six Sermons, quarto? I think to circulate them among my neighbors. Enclosed is one dollar for subscription and sermons; I wish it were $10 for the same; or that I could help you in your labor more. I hope to help you more in future. From your well-wishing and praying brother.

Br. GEO. W. BURNHAM, N. Y., writes:

DEAR BR. STORRS:—Your works are in considerable demand, the people will investigate the question—the Bible question of their final destiny.

"Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me"—says Christ. The question arises who is to be rewarded, and what is that reward. God has spoken who shall not fear? We are interested in the investigation of this subject.

Our late tent meetings have been the means of good to the people. New ones, and men of influence, have stepped into our thinned ranks. Present movements among the nations are rousing up the lovers of the Bible to inquire what of the night? what do these things indicate? Our faith is unwavering in the speedy advent of Zion's Deliverer.

May God preserve you, and the Saints with you and us, in the truth, until that day. Yours, in the hope of Eternal Life in the Kingdom of God.

Br. JAMES DONALDSON, Detroit, writes:

BR. STORRS:—May grace, mercy and peace be with you and all the Israel of God. Amen.

I was sorry on receiving Examiner No. 5, to hear that you were embarrassed with your paper. I sorrow to think that you should be devoted to the dissemination of truth; and in return be encumbered with debt. This must not be; no, no. I hope your readers will comply at once with your request, to furnish new subscribers, and thus relieve you from embarrassment. Not only so; but express their readiness to pay one dollar or two per year. I hope a determined effort will be made to secure the weekly or semi-monthly publication of the Examiner. I am glad you have noticed objections to the Examiner. Many of your readers, so far as I am acquainted, say, we are with Br. Storrs on the immortality question, but want more on the advent: we wish to hear more from Brs. Storrs and Walsh on the Kingdom, and don't agree with you that the advent papers make up what is wanted. We desire an exposition of the Prophets, to enlighten the heads and warm the hearts of those watching for Christ from Heaven. My prayer is, that you may be abundantly blessed in your labors for truth. Yours, in hope of eternal life.—[2 enclosed.—Ed. Ex.]

☞ BOOKS.—D. Roberts, P. M., Tremont, Ill., sent us a letter dated Aug. 18th, stating that there is a package of nine copies of our Six Sermons in the Post Office at that place, addressed to "J. G. Yariak, Bloomington, Ill." He says, "We know of no place of that name in this State," &c.; and states they will be retained at Tremont until he hears from us. We have no knowledge of sending the above named "package," and presume it must have been sent from Rochester, N. Y., or from some of our friends in Michigan. We give this notice, hoping that whoever forwarded the package will attend to it, and write to the Post Master of Tremont on the subject. ## IMMORTALITY.

REVIEW No. IX.

Mr. Lee's article, No. 11, is devoted to "the well known opinions of the Jews," in reference to the state of the dead.

In the opening sentence of this article, Mr. Lee says—"The Jews have ALWAYS believed in the conscious existence of the soul after the death of the body, and in its immortality."

This is not a fact—it is not true—and its evidence has failed to prove it, as we shall see.

1. We have before shown that, before the Babylonish captivity, the Jews observed the most profound silence in relation to the dead; and spoke of their state as one of darkness, silence and inactivity.

2. That after the Babylonish captivity, and the Macedonian and Roman conquests, they adopted their language and ideas, on such subjects as those upon which their oracles were silent. Let these facts be remembered, for they disprove the assertion of Mr. Lee, that "the Jews have ALWAYS believed in the conscious existence" of the dead, and the "immortality" of the soul. Let the reader, also, notice, that Mr. Lee's testimony does not extend back to much less beyond this period. He has failed, then, to prove his first point.

Mr. Lee quotes from Josephus; and here let me state a principle in giving testimony. A witness, in deposing to a fact or truth, is required and expected to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Josephus tells us what the Jews believed in his day; but he does not tell us they "always" so believed. He gives us to understand that they believed in the immortality of the soul, in a restricted sense; but he does not stop there, and, if his testimony upon the subject is to be received as evidence of the truth of the doctrine, we must receive it all or none. Josephus says—"The Pharisees believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards and punishments." This was the great "national doctrine," to use Mr. Lee's word. Let Mr. Lee, then, be a Pharisee in all this, as the doctrine was not specially condemned by our Lord! This testimony proves too much, and what proves too much, proves nothing. This is all in harmony with Mr. Lee's pagan witnesses. They also proved too much for Mr. Lee's cause.

While it is admitted then, that the mass of the Jews believed in the pagan doctrine of immortality, Mr. Lee gains nothing from the admission; because we have seen from whence they derived these ideas—ideas upon which their oracles were silent. And the fact, that they placed "rewards and punishments UNDER THE EARTH," clearly enough indicates their pagan origin.

According to the testimony of Josephus, the Pharisees did not believe in the resurrection of pagans: for he says "they believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them; and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life: and the vicious are to be detained in an everlasting prison, but that the virtuous shall have power to revive and live again." Antiq. B. xviii. C. 1. 3. In another place he says—"they say that all the souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies"—that is, they are transmigrated. In a word, from all the testimony of Josephus, we come to the following conclusions: 1. They believed the heathen: would not be raised from the dead. 2. That the righteous children of Abraham only would rise. 3. That his unrighteous children would not rise, but be detained in the prison house of the dead forever. 4. That the souls of good men passed into other bodies, or were transmigrated. So that Josephus' testimony proves more than Mr. Lee desires; and, if it be good on one point, it should certainly be received on collateral points. But the Lord has put the seal of condemnation upon the doctrines of both Sadducees and Pharisees. He said to his disciples—"BEWARE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE PHARISEES AND OF THE SADDUCEES." They were both wrong; the Sadducees occupied one extreme, and the Pharisees another. And, as we have before seen, these views were Babylonish in their origin; and are not supported by the Jewish Scriptures.

Mr. Lee refers to the "Jews' Service Book," and in reference to this I will only quote the language of Christ—"In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." And again—"Ye make void the law through your traditions."

Mr. Lee also goes into the Apocrypha; and for what purpose does he go there? To prove that "the Jews always believed in the immortality of the soul?" If so, his evidence fails, because the Apocrypha, according to his admission, was "written before the Christian era;" but not before the Babylonish captivity! But, were I disposed, I could show from the very passages Mr. Lee has quoted from Esdras and the wisdom of Solomon, that he totally misapprehends and misapplies all the quotations he makes. But I do not deem the document of sufficient importance to do so. I will, however, proceed to show that the most authoritative parts of the Apocrypha, those bearing the names of some of the authors of some of the books composing the Bible, teach a very different doctrine from Mr. Lee's.

First, then, as a specimen, read 2 Esdras vii. 31, "And after seven days the world, that yet waketh not, shall be raised up, and that shall die that is corrupt." If this refer to the resurrection, which it appears to do, from the context, then it proves the "second death" of the "corrupt," which Mr. Lee denies. Again, at the 15th verse—"Now therefore, why disquietest thou thyself, seeing thou art but a CORRUPTIBLE MAN? and why art thou moved, whereas thou art but MORTAL?"

But let us examine the "Wisdom of Solomon," which has a much higher claim than the Book of Esdras, and see what he says on the question of death and immortality. Chapter i. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16—"Seek not death in the error of your life: and pull not upon yourselves destruction with the works of your hands." For God made not death: neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living. For he created all things that they might have their being: and the generations of the world were healthful; and there is no poison of destruction in them, nor the kingdom of death upon the earth: (FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS IS IMMORTAL;) but ungodly men with their works and words called it to them: for when they thought to have it their friend, they consumed to NAUGHT, and made a covenant with it, because they are worthy to take part with it." This certainly does not teach the natural immortality of the soul. Again, in the 2d chapter, "For God created man to be IMMORTAL; and made him to be an image of his own eternity; nevertheless," notwithstanding this purpose on the part of God, "through envy of the devil came death into the world; and they that do hold of his side do FIND IT." Here it is clearly taught, that God, when he created man, designed his immortality—his eternal life, but that through the envy of the devil, death came into the world, and those who hold of his side, find death their portion. The passage Mr. Lee quotes from the 3d chapter, he totally misapplies. "In the sight of the unwise they seemed to die," in the Sadducean sense of not living again, "but they are in peace." "This hope is full of immortality," which it could not be, if they already possessed it, for "hope" relates to the future—"the time of their visitation," which is spoken of in the 7th and 8th verses. The reader is requested to turn to the 7th chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon, and read the five first verses, and compare it with what we have already quoted here; and, also, what we have elsewhere said on the nature of man.

I will quote one passage more from the Apocrypha; it is found in Ecclesiasticus xvii. 27-32. "Who shall praise the most high in the grave, instead of them which live and give thanks? Thanksgiving PERISHETH FROM THE DEAD, AS FROM ONE THAT IS NOT: the living and sound in heart shall praise the Lord. For all things cannot be in men, BECAUSE THE SON OF MAN IS NOT IMMORTAL." Again, he says—"All men are but earth and ashes." The Wisdom of Solomon was doubtless written before the Babylonish Captivity, and Ecclesiasticus appears to have been written about, or a little after that time. Thus we have proved, first, that the Jews did not "always" believe in the immortality of the soul; and, secondly, that, even after their return from Babylon, one of their principal writers, the author of Ecclesiasticus, did not teach it; all of which is in harmony with the Bible. Mr. Lee's cause has gained nothing; I apprehend, by going into the Apocrypha!

He next appeals to the Bible; but, alas! for his theory, he crucifies it afresh, and puts it to public shame! He quotes Math. xiv. 26; and Luke xxiv. 36-39, Mark vi. 49.

In Matthew and Mark the original word is phantasma, a phantom; and such is also the marginal reading in Luke. In the cases recorded by Matthew and Mark, the disciples thought they saw a phantom, but they were mistaken, as all other persons have been ever since. Let the reader notice, then, that in the only cases recorded, where the disciples supposed they saw a phantom—ghost, they were deceived; and that there is not a case differing from this on record!

In the case referred to by Luke, we have the subject presented in all its power and force. The Lord Jesus had arisen from the dead; his Father "had shown him the path of life," and "demonstrated him as his son, by his resurrection from the dead"—"death" now "had no more dominion over him,"—he was immortal—and as such he appears in their midst! "They were terrified and affrighted and supposed they had seen a spirit—a phantasma, or phantom—ghost. And now he proceeds to correct their ideas of such things by asking, "Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet; that it is I, myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit—a phantasma—hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet." Thus correcting their errors on the subject of spirit, or phantoms, and, at the same time, demonstrating the MATERIALITY OF SPIRITUAL BODIES!

Here is "a quickening spirit," as Paul says, with "flesh and bones, hands and feet." Here we have a glorious specimen of a spiritual, immortal body—not "immaterial," but material—real—tangible; something which could be "handled" and "seen." What becomes of Mr. Lee's "immaterial soul" in the light of this fact? His theory is exploded! his foundation demolished! his superstructure crumbled into dust and his theology a thing of nought! the ignis fatuus of a day! This fact, I repeat it, sweeps away Mr. Lee's whole theory of "immateriality," demolishes Mr. Drew's logic, and nullifies all the rhetoric of Pythagoras, Plato, Socrates, and Zoroaster. It eclipses all the philosophy of Babylonia, Egypt, Media, Persia, Greece and Rome! It swallows up all the traditions of the Jewish Service Book, Josephus, and the Apocrypha! It casts into the shade all the learning of Pharisees and Sadducees, ancient or modern! because it IS LIFE AND IMMORTALITY BROUGHT TO LIGHT!

Mr. Lee refers to Acts xxiii. 8. Mr. Brewster made a better use of this than Mr. Lee has done; and as we have fully responded to his arguments on this point, we must refer the reader to our discussion with Rev. Wm. H. Brewster. Mr. Lee's logical reputation is greater than his philosophical and scriptural strength. Truth is mighty above all things, and will prevail!

IMMATERIALITY.

The following communication is from a Methodist Minister; who, though not with us on all points, says, in a private note,—"On the great question—'What will be the doom of the wicked?' I am fully with you; and intend ere long to give public utterance to the truth of God on this awful subject." He adds—"I feel thankful to God that I have seen your Sermons and Dobney's book. For years my mind has been painfully perplexed with the doctrine of interminable suffering: I have thought and read of hell as a world of immortal woe, where countless millions curse themselves, each other, and the Almighty, until I have been confounded: but I have done with the doctrine and all its perplexities. The wicked shall be burnt up with unquenchable fire; and afterwards every creature in heaven and on earth shall ascribe blessing, &c., to Him that sitteth on the throne and to the Lamb for ever."

The name of the author of this communication has never appeared in the Examiner: he is therefore a new accession to this side of the question: but he alone is responsible for the sentiments of his article. We hope to hear from him again.

If the Human Soul be Immaterial, how can we account for the origin of its existence?

BR. STORRS:—I have recently been much interested in this question. The following article is submitted to your consideration; which you may print if you think proper to do so, and if not, you may return it at my expense.

Admitting the human soul to be immaterial, there are four ways, in any one of which we may suppose it to have originated. 1st. We can suppose it to have been created out of previously existing immaterial substance. 2d. We can suppose it to have been created out of the immaterial substance of one or of both the parents who were the means of its existence. 3d. We can suppose it created out of the Divine substance. 4th. We can suppose it to have been created out of nothing. These include every possible mode of accounting for the origin of the soul, if the soul be an immaterial essence. Assuming this view of the nature of the soul, I propose to show that it could not in any of the above ways come into being, and therefore there is no such immaterial soul in existence.

I. Did God create the soul out of previously existing immaterial substance? I answer, 1st. The existence of such substance is hypothetical. I do not know of any immaterialist of the present day, who maintains such an opinion respecting the origin of the soul. 2d. If such immaterial substance did exist previous to the creation of our immaterial soul, it either possessed the essential properties of spirit, or it did not. If it did not, then immaterial substance is not necessarily spirit. Suppose then this substance did possess the essential properties of spirit. In this case, according to immaterialists, it must have had thought, consciousness, and all the elements of personality. In other words, it must have been an intelligent, spiritual being; essentially one and the same; immutably and eternally incapable of multiplication or division. Immaterialists themselves being the judges, our immaterial soul could not be created out of the essence of such a being.

Let us suppose this immaterial substance to have been impersonal, unconscious, and unintelligent. Still it must have been essentially one, or it must have been multifarious. If essentially one, then it is plain it could become the subject of only one consciousness and personality. No more than one soul could be created out of it. If there were different kinds of such substance, then each kind might become one soul, and only one. There must then have been as many different immaterial substances as there have been human souls in existence. Such a notion is surely too absurd to be maintained by the advocates of immaterialism.

If, however, any should incline to adopt this method of accounting for the origin of the soul, we have other difficulties to suggest to them. How came this previously existing immaterial substance into being? How could immaterial substance exist, and yet be utterly destitute of moral and intellectual properties? How could an unconscious and unintelligent substance be rendered conscious, intelligent, and the subject of personality? Immaterialists tell us that what is not matter is spirit, and that spirit is essentially conscious, intelligent, and active. Of course, if this be so, there could not be any unconscious, unintelligent, immaterial substance, out of which human souls were created.

II. Does God create the souls of children out of the immaterial substance of one or both of their parents?

"Suppose the soul of a child to be created out of the immaterial substance of its father." But here we are in difficulty again. The soul of the father, we are told, is essentially an unit; it is indivisible. It cannot, then, be divided. It cannot furnish from its own essence the elements of a new existence. Passing over this difficulty, we will still suppose the soul of the child created from the soul of its father, and another difficulty is presented as formidable as the last. The father having parted with a portion of his immaterial essence, no longer has a soul, whole and entire. The second child of the same father must be supposed to receive another portion of his spirit, and so of all the succeeding children. Thus the father, after communicating, at different times, portions of his own essence to a score of children, can hardly be supposed to have any soul left. It is also evident, that before he became a father he must have had twenty times more immaterial substance, or soul, than any one of his children. Thus souls are diminishing in quantity, or amount of essence, every generation. In the course of ages, souls may become as small as immaterialists affirm them to be,—without extent, having no size, in other words, they exist nowhere.

The idea that the soul of a child is created out of the soul of his father, is evidently absurd, and must be abandoned. And if we suppose the soul of the infant to be created out of the immaterial essences of both parents, absurdities are increased and multiplied. In this, as in the former case, we have indivisible spirits divided, which is a contradiction. Neither father nor mother has a complete soul after the production of the child. And as the child is supposed to have a soul, which is compounded of the substance of two immaterial, conscious, and immortal spirits, he must have in himself a double life, a double consciousness, a double identity; he must be the subject of a two-fold immortal existence. Such are the contradictions and impossibilities in which we are involved, by supposing the soul of a child to be created out of the immaterial substance, of one, or both of its parents.

III. Does God create souls out of his own essence?

This cannot be, according to immaterialists, for they tell us God is one, and indivisible for ever. But if souls be created out of the divine essence, God is divided into as many parts as there are human souls in existence.

"If the human soul be a part of the essence of God, it must be a partaker of the attributes of God. The attributes of God inhere, essentially and eternally, in the divine substance. If, then, human souls are portions of the divine essence, they must share in the divine perfections, many of which are said to be incommunicable. In reality, God is the only intelligent Being. Every human mind is a ray of the infinite light; a drop of the eternal ocean. In the language of Pope:

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole, Whose body nature is, and God the soul."

It either follows, then, that whatever is, is right, or if there be such a thing as moral evil, the Divine Being, in his innumerable individualizations, is the only transgressor of moral law. Every false opinion; every evil passion, every wrong action, is thus charged upon that great and glorious Being who is Light and Love, and in whom there is no darkness at all. Now, no immaterialist will contend for such absurdities. We are thus forced to the conclusion, that God does not create human souls of his own essence.

IV. Does God create human souls out of nothing?

I formerly entertained the common opinion of the origin of the Universe, that it was produced out of nothing. But I have been compelled to abandon that idea, as involving an absolute impossibility. None will pretend that finite immaterial minds can create something out of nothing; while many do maintain that the Almighty did, from nonentity, call all things into being. Let me ever speak of God with the deepest reverence. I believe he can do whatever in the nature of things is possible; but there are some things which are beyond the limits of omnipotence. God cannot annihilate his own being. He could not create a being equal to himself. I doubt whether God could compress all the matter in the Universe, so that it would occupy no more space than a grain of sand. According to immaterialists, God cannot divide a soul into parts, nor destroy a soul by the action of matter upon it. I do not accuse them of irreverence for holding such opinion, nor shall I be rashly censured by candid men, when I assign the following reasons for not believing in the production of something out of nothing.

1st. I cannot find that the Bible anywhere teaches the creation of anything out of nothing.

2d. If something was produced out of nothing, it must have been so produced by the action of Deity. But action necessarily implies two things: 1st, an actor; 2d, an object acted upon. The actor may act upon himself, or upon something which is not himself. Let us try both cases.

1st. Does God produce immaterial souls by acting on himself?

This brings us to view the subject again, very nearly in the light in which it is presented in our third supposition. Now, if we answer the question just proposed in the affirmative, we must maintain that God has divided his indivisible essence into parts, and of these parts constituted human souls. Here we have a contradiction and an absurdity;—a contradiction, because an indivisible essence cannot be divided; and an absurdity, because, according to this view, every human soul, and every devil, is a part of God.

Again: These separate parts of the divine substance, which are supposed to be individualized in different souls, either have their original properties or they have not: if they have, then the consciousness of every soul is the consciousness of God; the will of every soul is the will of God; and the errors of every soul are the errors of God. This will not be maintained by immaterialists. Let us, then, suppose that these portions of the divine substance have not their original properties. Here are two difficulties: 1st. These parts of the divine essence could not exist for a moment, after being deprived of their essential properties. 2d. New properties in the abstract could not be created and made to inhere in these parts of the divine nature. It is therefore impossible for human souls to be created out of the essence of God, by the action of God upon himself.

I may here remark, that if God could produce souls by acting on his own nature, these souls would not be created out of nothing, which is the point now under consideration.

Does God, then, create souls by acting on something which is not himself?

This could not be, according to most immaterialists, for they tell us there was a period when only God existed. Besides himself, there was neither matter nor spirit. Of course, then, out of himself there was no object to act upon. Now, as an exercise of power necessarily implies an object to be acted upon, it follows, that if there ever was a period when nothing besides God existed, nothing but God could have existed to all eternity.

All will admit that the creation of something out of nothing is an impossibility with finite beings; but many will maintain that such a creation is possible with God because he is omnipotent. I believe in the divine omnipotence; but what can omnipotence do without materials to work upon? What can it effect when set in operation (if this were possible) on boundless nonentity? In the arithmetic of morals, a thousand times nothing amounts to nothing, and this is an absolute and immutable truth in the multiplication table of God Almighty. The fact that our power is limited, and God's power is infinite, does not touch the question. No being, finite nor infinite, can think without a subject of thought. No being can exercise desire or love without some object to be desired or loved. None will pretend that God could exercise his benevolence upon nonentity. So neither can power act upon nonentity. Hence the production of souls out of nothing is an infinite and eternal impossibility.

I am thus led to the conclusion that an immaterial soul could not be created out of previously existing immaterial substance, nor out of the souls of parents, nor out of the divine essence, nor out of nothing. And as an immaterial soul could not be produced in any other way, I am compelled to believe there is no such thing in existence.

As my sheet is not full, I will suggest whether the notion, that the soul was created by God out of nothing, is not utterly inconsistent with the doctrine of man's constitutional depravity. Here let me quote Wesley, who represents the thoughts of millions on this subject. "In Adam all died, all human kind, all the children of men who were then in Adam's loins. The natural consequence of this is, that every one descended from him comes into the world spiritually dead; dead to God, wholly dead in sin; entirely devoid of the life of God; void of the image of God, of all that righteousness and holiness wherein Adam was created. Instead of this, every man born into the world now bears the image of the devil, in pride and self-will; the image of the beast, in sensual appetites and desires. This, then, is the foundation of the New Birth,—the entire corruption of our nature." Such is said to be the state of a human being "when he comes into the world." This is affirmed of the immaterial soul, and of it only; for immaterialists tell us the body possesses no quality of an intellectual or moral nature: every such quality belongs to the soul. Now, if the soul be made out of nothing, a human father can have no more to do with the production of the souls of his children, than with the creation of so many worlds. How, then, can a father's acts affect the moral nature and condition of the souls of his children; and the relation of these souls to God? To me this seems impossible. If the soul alone develops thought and volition, and if it be created by God out of nothing, then we must refer the first moral state of the soul to God, and not to Adam. If the soul is naturally destitute of holiness, God made it so. If the soul has in itself the germs of pride, malice, envy, bitterness and blasphemy, God put these germs into it. If the soul go astray from the womb, speaking lies, God interwove a principle of falsehood in its constitution. Whatever is natural to the soul must be referred to the being who gave the soul its nature, and not to the beings who were merely the instruments of providing for it a house of clay, in which it might pass a short term of existence.

THETA.

Mass., September 14th, 1849.

DR. I. F. LEE, AND THE BAPTISTS.

To the BAPTISTS scattered throughout the bounds of the Moriah Association, and elsewhere, greeting:—

Whereas the Meadow Branch Baptist Church has charged the undersigned with the promulgation of sentiments heretical, and subversive of the Christian system, thereby justifying themselves in his exclusion from their body, hoping that no church will receive the letter of dismission granted him upwards of two years ago, and which they are led to think he still retains, contrary to the wish of said church: Be it known unto you, 1st. That the sentiments, which the undersigned has promulgated, are not contrary to Scripture. 2d. They are not therefore either heretical, or subversive of the Christian system. 3d. As to the letter of dismission, he neither retains it still, nor holds it contrary to the wish of the Church, and therefore cannot present it to any other church whatever. The letter then of the Meadow Branch Baptist Church is a misrepresentation from beginning to end. The undersigned might, in strict propriety, let the matter here rest, and demand the proof of their assertions, but he prefers an exposure of the misrepresentation, believing it will be acceptable to his friends, serviceable to his enemies, and instead of subverting the Christian system, establish the truth of those sentiments, and prove hermeneutically that they are the Revelation of the Almighty, and not the inventions of man.

The Meadow Branch Baptist Church was apprised of the fact, that he was not a member of their church at the time (Feb. 1849,) nor for upwards of twelve months previous; that he had disposed of the letter of dismission in the summer of 1847. What then, dear brethren, can you think of a church, who wilfully and deliberately publish that which they know is a misrepresentation? What could have prompted them to such an act? It has been said that it was slavish, servile fear—the fear of man—the fear of the Moriah Baptist Association! That if they did not exclude Dr. Lee, the Association would exclude them!! That is, if they did not exclude an individual who was not a member of their church at the time—an impossibility—aye, if they did not commit an impossibility, the Moriah Association would sever them from her sisterhood!! And this egregious folly was premeditated by a very few, (it is feared, not some of that few who are saved,) while the majority, an overwhelming majority, of the Association knew nothing of the plot. How strange! to bear false testimony against a neighbor, to indulge in wilful misrepresentations, to take fiction for fact, and fact for fiction; to take Scripture for heresy, and Bible sentiment as subversive of the Bible; and call all this orthodoxy! Strange as it may seem, it is nothing more than the Meadow Branch Baptist Church has done, under the penal law of the Moriah Baptist Association. Two or three very active agents in the plot believe that the soul of man is the essence of God! And that the wicked will be raised incorruptible, immortal—spiritual bodies. Glorious! For, saith one of these essences of Deity, Paul, in the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians, is speaking of the resurrection of the wicked as well as the saints! Is this orthodoxy? If may be the Moriah Baptist Association's sentiments, but not surely the declaration of God. But what are these sentiments which the Meadow Branch Baptist Church, in common with the Association of which she is a beloved and pious sister, believe to be heretical and subversive of the Christian system, and a renunciation of which would be a great recommendation to an ordained minister of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ? Let us look into that gospel, and examine and see if it contains such sentiments as Dr. Lee has openly promulgated. And if, after impartial and thorough examination according to the sacred canon, we find sentiments verbally, hermeneutically such as Dr. Lee believes and has promulgated, it must necessarily follow that they are scriptural, not heretical; and instead of subverting Christianity, they are in verity a part of that Divine system itself, how subversive soever of the sentiments of those who reject the word of God, and prefer the blasphemous idea that the soul of the wicked is the essence of Deity, and therefore is undying, and must live forever!

To the law and the testimony. 1st. Dr. Lee believes and has promulgated the following sentiments, which the Meadow Branch Church pronounces heretical and subversive of the Christian system.

Gen. 3: 22: 'And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: Therefore,' &c. 23. The sentence of death is passed, and, in mercy, God expels Adam and Eve from Paradise, or the garden of Eden; for he did not wish them to live for ever in a state so wretched. The penalty of mortality was not remitted, for "dust thou art," &c., and the penalty of the law, death, eternal death, were it not for the interposition of mercy, through a Saviour, would have been inflicted on Adam and Eve.

Ezekiel 18: 40. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Rom. 6: 23. 'For the wages of sin is death.' 21. 'The end of those things is death.' 2: 12. 'For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law'—16—'in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel.' 1: 32. 'Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death.' This, then, is the judgment of God, that the wicked are worthy of death—that they shall perish in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel. What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, his life? Or what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul—his own life?

Job 21: 30. 'The wicked is reserved unto the day of destruction—they shall be brought forth to day of wrath'—death—eternal death. Ezk. 18: 18, 24, 31, 32, 26. 33: 9, 13, 18. Matt. 3: 10, 12. 5: 29, 30. 7: 13, 16, 19. 10: 28. 13: 40, 50, 16: 23, 28. 18: 8, 9. Acts 3: 23. 8: 20. 2 Peter 2: 1, 17. Here it is declared that the wicked shall be destroyed—shall lose their life—be burnt up—shall perish—utterly perish. Again, John 3: 36. 'he that believeth not the Son shall not see life.' And again, Malachi 4: 1. 'For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.' From the foregoing passages it is evident that the final destiny of the wicked is destruction, everlasting destruction, death, eternal death. And we think we have the mind of the Lord when we say, that eternal death, and not eternal life in misery, is the judgment of God against the wicked. This we believe from the force of testimony more numerous and overwhelming, in one sense of the word, than that in favor of baptism being immersion. We have one solitary word to prove immersion, i. e. baptizo. This, with the phrase, going down into the water, &c., in Jordan, and buried with him in baptism, &c., constitutes all the proof we have, and all that we require. Let us now return to the future punishment of the wicked, and what hermeneutically is the testimony in its favor, and who is the author of that testimony or evidence by which we believe? Consume, devour, destroy, destruction, perdition, die, death, perish, utterly perish, everlasting destruction, eternal death, are the words chiefly employed, when speaking of the future and final punishment of the wicked, &c. We would request then that you study them hermeneutically, and consult a Latin Dictionary. Look carefully and critically at the words, consumo, destruo, devoro, destructio, perdo (from per and do literally, to depart wholly,) perditio (from perdo, entire loss, utter destruction,) and then turn to Webster's large, and enlarged Dictionary, last published, 1848—and say whether these sentiments are heretical and subversive of the Christian system? But the public mind, says Mr. Forcible Feeble, is against the doctrine, aye, and the overwhelming prejudices of the churches. Yea, verily, adcs Deacon S.; and then how are we to alarm sinners, if we take away the fear of undying torture in eternal and devouring fire? Alas! the man who will yield to public opinion or the prejudices of the whole religious world, when that opinion and prejudice is contrary to the word of God, is not fit for the Church of God, and is a dishonor to the ministry. We know we have the mind of the Lord when we say, that it is not the fear of undying torture, but the goodness of God, that leadeth man to repentance.

All the classic Greek writers, all Lexicons, have been sifted and examined, minutely, thoroughly, to prove what? That baptizo means to dip, plunge, immerse. Must a man, then, renounce his reason, his knowledge of other words besides baptizo—deny the import and meaning of the words used in speaking of the punishment of the wicked—declare that the judgment of God relative to the wicked is heresy! and that the doctrine contained in the word of God is contrary to the word of God; and that God, therefore, does not mean what he says;—must a man do all this before he can be received again into full fellowship and fellow feeling with the Meadow Branch Baptist Church? The import of words must first be changed; all Dictionaries and Lexicons altered essentially—nay, even then the judgment of God remains immutably the same. Think you, brethren, that all the proofs in favor of the punishment of the wicked being that of utter destruction and not eternal life in misery, have been enumerated? Throughout the whole Bible there is not one passage, not one solitary phrase, that favors the common notion of immortality in sin, or eternal life to the wicked. No, not one text to show the soul is in its present condition undying or immortal. True, that immortality is promised to those who, by patient continuance in well-doing, are seeking for honor and glory and immortality, eternal life. These great and glorious blessings are promised to the saints, through Jesus Christ. They are not inherent in man—not even in the righteous, much less in the wicked. Nor are they conferred on mortals, before the resurrection. Corruption must put on incorruption—mortality, immortality; the natural body must be raised a spiritual body. When does this take place? At death? Nay, but in the resurrection.

Christ was manifested in the flesh, that he might destroy the works of the devil. This the devil himself believes. Art thou come to destroy us before the time? The belief of the Meadow Branch Church, then, is not so correct on this point as that of the devil. He knows the truth in this respect, believes it, and trembles. But the Meadow Branch Baptist Church denies the truth of God, and neither fears nor trembles, but unblushingly publishes to the world that the truth of God is heresy! Would to God that they had the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove.

LETTER FROM BR. J. B. FRISBIE.

The writer of the following letter has been a minister, and traveling elder, we believe, in the Protestant Methodist Church, for a number of years. Some months ago our Six Sermons were put into his hands, if we recollect right, by Br. Catlin of Kingsbury, Ind., which he has examined with Dobney on Future Punishment, comparing them with the Scriptures, the result of which will be learned from his letter. Our Br. Catlin and other brethren in the west are doing their work faithfully in scattering the doctrine of immortality only through Christ, and that by a resurrection from the dead; thus showing the importance of the "second advent," as our only hope for a future life. We trust they will abide in this good work and not compromise it to please men.

SYLVAN, MICH., Sept. 7th, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS,—It is with pleasure I now inform you that I have closely examined your Six Sermons, and also Mr. Dobney on Future Punishment: able works, the truth of which nothing but prejudice, and a blind zeal for creeds, sects, and parties, can gainsay or resist. With much interest I have perused your valuable paper, and have been delighted with the discussions therein, and have faithfully compared them all with the Bible.

About seven years since I was fully convinced that the idea of the natural immortality of the soul was a heathen doctrine; but have believed that immortality was in Christ, by virtue of the atonement, for all, but am now ready to acknowledge that the Bible does not teach the immortality and eternal life (which I consider synonymous) for any but those, "who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and IMMORTALITY, ETERNAL LIFE." It appears that Christ, by his obedience and death, abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: 2 Tim. 1: 10. It is strange, that some should labor to prove that life and immortality should be brought to light through the light of the impress of the heathens, or reason, or the light of nature. To "put on immortality," (1 Cor. 15: 53, 54,) does not look much like an immortal soul's putting on an immortal body, or a mortal body's putting on an immortal soul, but "this mortal shall put on immortality," in the resurrection. Under this I will place, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4 and 20. Also, "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." James 5: 20, does teach that a sinner's soul may die. Solomon says, "Man hath no pre-eminence above a beast" at death: Eccl. 3: 19. "The dead know not anything." David says, man without redemption is "like the beasts that perish." Ps. 49. "While I live I will praise the Lord—while I have any being"—"his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Ps. 146: 2 and 4. I am not so clear on the intermediate state as I could wish. One reason why, I suppose, is, I had imbibed the notion that demons were the spirits of the wicked dead, according to Josephus, W. B. 7, sec. 6.

As to the destruction of the wicked after death, I feel very well satisfied on that point, at present. As sure as eternal life means future and endless life, so sure the opposite must be future and endless death, perish, and destruction, which are the common terms in contrast with life, eternal life, &c. Nowhere can I find that the wicked are to have eternal life, or that they are immortal, or are to put on immortality in the resurrection. For this is spoken only of brethren or Christians, who have sought immortality: Rom. 2: 7; they put on immortality in the resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 50—54. "He that hath sown to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Now this I see is not the first death that we inherited in Adam. For, this is for our own deeds, and contrasted with life everlasting, which places it in the future, viz., the second death—"Death unto death"—"Utterly perish"—"End destruction"—"Destroy both soul and body in hell"—"punished with everlasting destruction." A word as to the resurrection, then I close this article. I came to the firm conclusion that if I could find proof in the scriptures that the wicked might rise mortal, that assuredly they would die again. No sooner had I come to this conclusion than this text came to my mind, satisfactory to the point—"Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection." Heb. 11: 35. The contrast is between the women's children raised by the prophet back to this mortal life, and the better, or immortal resurrection. If these worthies had accepted deliverance, it appears they would never had a better resurrection than a mortal one, and die again. This is in exact agreement with the text, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal." Here the contrast is between the life in this world and life eternal; which makes its loss one with death eternal. See Mat. 10: 39, Mar. 8: 35. Yours in the hope of immortality.

"INFANTS—SOUL AND BODY."

Under this caption, the True Wesleyan, for Sept. 1, takes exceptions to a sentiment of some of its exchanges, which is this, "the body of the infant is corrupt or fallen, and depraved. This depravity is hereditary; but the soul is a new creation of God, not derived from the earthly parent." The Wesleyan uses up this notion very handsomely, and says, "The Bible affirms that God is the Maker of the body as clearly as it does that he is the Maker of the soul." It adds, "'Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob.' But if souls are not begotten as well as bodies, Abraham did not begot Isaac, or else the term Isaac does not include a soul. If men are not begotten, then souls are no part of men."

The Wesleyan overthrows its exchange in the argument, but demolishes itself along with it, for the doctrine of the Wesleyan is, that the soul is "immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible."

Now if it is "immaterial," how does the action of matter, in generation, communicate it? And if it is indivisible, how could Abraham give or communicate a soul to Isaac? It could not be an offshoot from his own, for that would make his soul divisible, and the Wesleyan says it is "indivisible." We cannot see, if Abraham communicated Isaac's soul to him, but what it must still have been Abraham's soul in Isaac, if the soul is not divisible; and then we do not see how there can be more than one soul for the whole human family; and as that is "indivisible," it is a family soul: hence it follows that the action of any one man must be the action of the family soul; so if one man sins, it is a family sin, or if one man acts virtuously it is a family virtue. Again, as the soul is "indivisible," all men must have the same common destiny: say, for example, that if Abraham should be lost, Isaac must be lost, for the soul can't be divided; and so, whatever is the fate of the first man, Adam, must be the fate of all the men of his race, or else the soul must be divisible; and then, what would become of the Wesleyan's theory of its indivisibility? Happy for man, however, we have the assurance that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are saved, and that proves Adam and Eve were, and that all their posterity must inevitably be so too—for "the soul is indivisible." Truly the Wesleyan has helped our opponents to a short and certain route to universal salvation. Can you get out of that dilemma, Br. Wesleyan, without abandoning your theory? The Examiner is open for your answer, and we will show you how we can equal you in "courtesy."

We see Br. Lee's difficulty. It all grows out of the assumption that the soul is an entity—a real being or existence—and not an attribute. The soul of man is an attribute of man, an inherent quality, that which pertains to man as man, as an organism. To use one of Br. Lee's own expressions, "The soul, whose very existence is thought." Never did a theologian better define the soul than he has done, fatal as it is to his entire theory, which he has labored to sustain in "22" articles in the True Wesleyan.

The question between the Wesleyan and its "exchange" stands thus: Are the souls [thoughts] of men, or of infants, a new creation of God, or are they propagated by generation from father to child?

According to Br. Lee, (see last Examiner) the soul is a "living consciousness," and "is known to exist only from its thoughts;" now, how little "living consciousness" does an "infant" manifest? and as the soul "is known to exist only from its thoughts," how will Br. Lee prove that "infants" have any souls at all? Does he know anything of their thoughts? He has said that "animals do not think;" that what appears to be the result of thought in them is only instinct. There are very few animals but what are quite equal in this respect to infants just born. After all, then, Br. Wesleyan, may it not be, according to your theory, that infants have no souls at all? So that you and your exchange may both be wrong.

The matter now seems to stand thus:—

The soul is thought, and can be known only by its thoughts:

But the infant is not known to think:

Therefore, the infant has no soul, so far as known. Is this position true? And if not, how will our Br. Wesleyan disprove it, without abandoning some of his main arguments? Again, we say, the Examiner is open for Br. Lee's answer, with this proviso, viz., if we can possibly get funds to continue our paper. Now is a chance to prove our generosity.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—The present number of our paper has been delayed from two causes; first, absence of funds; second, our own absence from the city. Since our last we have visited New-England, and conversed with numbers of our friends, all of whom express the desire that we should continue to issue the Examiner; and are unanimous that the subscription price ought to be increased to one dollar per year; they assure us they will cheerfully pay that sum. Several persons have pledged themselves to be responsible for subscribers to the amount of the following sums for the coming year, viz:—

Adam Warthman, Philadelphia,	$15.00
Jacob Johnson, Millville, N. J.,	10.00
P. Dickinson, Boston, Mass.,	10.00
R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass.,	25.00

Br. Wm. Swinburn, Patterson N. J., writes, that we may calculate upon six or eight subscribers there for next year, where there were only four the present. Here is a good and encouraging beginning. Let us now hear from all our friends at once; because, we wish to be able to determine how many papers we shall print monthly before we commence the new volume. To print more than are called for is a loss to us, and not printing enough we shall fail to supply new subscribers. Cannot our friends say at once for how many dollars they will be responsible during the coming year? They need not remit to us only as they obtain subscribers, but let us know how much we may certainly depend upon from you to help us through the next volume. A monthly issue is all we can promise at present. We have no funds on hand for the November and December numbers of the Examiner, yet we shall issue them during those months in full faith that the expense will be met.

THE TERMS of the Examiner hereafter will be one dollar per year. For five dollars six copies will be given; and for ten dollars thirteen. Having made this arrangement it is thought advisable to withdraw the offer of a "premium" made in the August number. The back numbers for 1848 and '49 will be furnished at the same price as heretofore. All communications and remittances relating to the Examiner should be directed "Geo. Storrs, Philadelphia, Pa."

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.—We invite the attention of our friends to this work. We believe it to be at least equal to any other: modesty perhaps forbids us to say more; but, we should be glad to have it compared in the matter it contains and its neatness of execution with any other. It is free from sectarianism, and we believe can be used by "all christians." It contains 205 choice Psalms and Hymns; selected, but altered and abridged, of such character, we think, as are fitting to be sung in public assemblies. Lighter hymns may be used at other times; and a plenty such can be found in every place without our contributing to multiply them. Several congregations besides ours in Philadelphia have procured our "Christian Psalms." For price see last page.

MORE ENCOURAGEMENT.

FROM BR. WM. SWINBURN.

PATTERSON, Sept. 10, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—Enclosed you will find $2 from Br. Isaac Van Blarcom and myself, to be appropriated for the continuance of the Bible Examiner, to aid you through the present year. We think your valuable paper is worth one dollar a year, and we would prefer giving $2 per annum if the paper could be issued weekly or semi-monthly. We think some six or eight subscribers could be obtained here another year, at $1 monthly or $2 published oftener. Your article in the last number, on the "signs of the times" was rich, and well worth attention. We should like to hear more on the same subject. My own opinion is, that the sons of Judah will not start for the land of their fathers until after the first resurrection. I feel fully satisfied that the battle of the great day has already commenced.

FROM EDWARD TURNER.

BLACKWOODTOWN, N. J., Sept. 21, 1849.

MR. STORRS.—Dear Sir.—Enclosed I send you $1 to be added to what I paid for the Examiner the present year, being satisfied all the while you were publishing too low by one half or more. I should be sorry not to have the pleasure of reading the Examiner at even four times its present cost, and think a large majority of your subscribers would be of the same opinion.

I therefore, would suggest, that you should at once make an estimate of the cost for publishing the Examiner, together with a sufficient sum to pay all labor, expenses, &c. Then make a division of the deficiency amongst your subscribers, and I think there would not be one who would be dissatisfied with the amount extra they would have to pay, and would most gladly do so, rather than have the paper discontinued.

ADDITIONAL DONATIONS since our last to finish the present volume.

IMMORTALITY.

A REVIEW OF REV. LUTHER LEE.

This work is now being stereotyped, and will make about 120 pages. The subject of immortality is philosophically and scripturally discussed. The work discusses the immortality of the soul, the consciousness of the dead, and the destiny of the wicked. It will be ready for delivery about the first of November, at 25 cts. per copy, or five copies for a dollar in paper covers, and mailable. About one half the matter has appeared in the Bible Examiner, but the remainder will not be published in the paper as that course would very much delay the appearance of the book. Persons desiring the work will please address their orders immediately to JOHN T. WALSH, 63 Ogden street, Philadelphia, Pa.

J. T. W.

ALBANY AND UTICA, N. Y.—The Editor of the Examiner designs to spend Lord's day, the 21st inst., in Albany, and remain there till the latter part of that week; then go to Utica to spend Lord's day, the 28th, and continue there a few days. He will be glad to meet in either place those who desire to see him.

NOTES ON "ATHANASIA."

NO. II.

Mr. Hinton uses Luke 20: 36, "Neither can they die any more," as a positive declaration of the immortality of all men. He makes the question our Lord answers to be one about the "future life," excluding its exclusive application to the resurrection. If so, the text does not prove a resurrection at all on his own principles, elsewhere laid down, that a word cannot have its literal and analogical meaning at the same time. Hence this text is fairly given up by him as proof of the resurrection, the term being used analogically for "future life," (see p. 427.) there may be no resurrection of the dead at all for all this text proves. Again, as the term "die" has an analogical signification, it may be, for all Mr. H. can prove from the text or context, on his theory, used to signify misery, or unhappiness. Then the text means, "Neither can they be unhappy any more;" and as he supposes he has proved its applicability to all men, or all the human race, has he not proved all a universalist could desire? Thus all men shall be possessed of a future life—then they cannot be unhappy any more, "but are as the angels of God in heaven;" Matthew. This expression of Matthew, Mr. H. endeavors to avoid by saying it does not relate to their moral character or holiness; p. 437. If it has no relation to a resemblance in holiness, it has the appearance of excluding wicked angels from the possession of that which these men possess, or there would have been no need to say angels of God in heaven. But Mr. H. says, p. 436, "The point of similarity intended . . . is only that they will 'neither marry nor be given in marriage since they cannot die any more.'" Still we ask—Why contrast good and bad men with the angels in heaven? If all men are included, as Mr. H. contends, irrespective of character, why not all angels be the pattern without selecting the good only?

By Adam came death, by Christ came the resurrection from the dead: hence it follows—if the death of Adam was literal, the resurrection is literal; "not die any more" refers to a like death, and Mr. H. admits die in this text has "the sense of extinction;" p. 479: then the first death must have been "extinction" for the text plainly has reference to the first death by the words "any more." Further: if resurrection in this text is to be understood only as a "future life," as Mr. H. contends, and the soul does not die at all with the body, then the phrase neither can they die any more is without any obvious sense or force; for the words "any more" import that those of whom they are spoken had died once; but according to Mr. H., their souls had not died at all. Then these words are a redundance; and to prove Mr. H.'s view should have been omitted. But if they had been, it would still make the expression quite useless; for, it might as well be said of men in this state they CANNOT DIE, as the future; for death cannot touch the soul now according to his theory. There would have been much more force in the words, if Mr. H. is correct in his theory, to have predicated that future existence itself upon the deathless nature of the soul now; but as our Lord did base his argument for a future life on resurrection, as is evident from his adding the words "any more" to the expression, we are safe in concluding that Mr. H.'s exposition of the text is erroneous. Nor will Mr. H.'s definition of death help him here. Let us look at it. "Death," he says, "in its strict and primary import, signifies nothing more than that condition of an organized substance in which the organic functions have ceased;" p. 33. This then cannot be the death of which our Lord speaks, if Mr. H.'s theory be the true one, for the soul is necessarily spoken of according to him; and yet he admits that our Lord uses the term die, in this text in "the sense of extinction." Yet, he says, p. 448-9, "A dead man" is "a man in whom the functions of the animal organization are no longer performed . . . but the man still exists . . . nothing has occurred but the stoppage of certain organic functions, entailing a change in the condition, or mode of existence, of the being concerned. This is death," he adds. Such a death surely, Mr. H. will not pretend our Lord spoke of if he was talking of the future life before the resurrection, as he maintains; and yet it is most evident our Lord speaks of a like death to one previously experienced, when he adds the words "any more." Let us take still another amplification of the meaning of death. Mr. H. says, "In the case of man, the cessation of the animal functions terminates his connection with this world, because it reduces him to a mode of existence to which this world is not adapted; but it involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul;" p. 479. Such a death as this our Lord did not speak of Lk. 20: 36; for Mr. H. has admitted that the term "die," there, is used in "the sense of extinction." In Mr. H.'s expression that the "cessation of the animal functions" in death "involves no cessation of existence in either body or soul," he makes an admission which will put him to the proof that the soul does not become equally unconscious as the body. Thus the body exists, though the animal functions have ceased: the soul also exists, but where is the evidence of its consciousness?

Again, Mr. H. says, "Death is a change in the mode of human existence, affected by the cessation of the organic functions, but one not interrupting the conscious being of the individual;" p. 136. Then we remark once more, that our Lord could not have been speaking of the future state prior to the resurrection, Lk. 20: 36, when he said "Neither can they die any more;" because, if the soul has any organism, it has not died once, if Mr. H.'s theory be true; hence, the expression "neither can they die any more" is inapplicable to the soul; therefore our Lord was not speaking of a "future state" prior to the resurrection. If Mr. H. chooses to take the ground that the soul has no organism, it does not help the matter; for that which has no organism is without beginning—is eternal—uncreated; consequently cannot be spoken of as though it was not "any more" subject to death, because it never did die, never was subject to death; and hence it would be useless to say neither can it die any more. Thus, whatever view we take of the subject, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that our Lord spoke of the dead subsequently to the resurrection, and not prior to it; and therefore our friend Mr. Hinton loses all countenance from this text, that the dead are conscious, though they "exist"—and we readily grant that both soul and body exist after death—and he also fails to establish that all men will live for ever; or, to use his borrowed pagan sentiment, he has failed to prove that "Those who die are immortal, since they will not die any more." From this sentiment we appeal to the Scriptures, and especially to Luke 20, that it is the children of God, in the restricted sense of the phrase, and they only—and that after the resurrection—that cannot die any more, and therefore are immortal. For God calls himself "the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," as quoted by our Lord, Lk. 20: 37, we apprehend, in the same sense that Paul uses it when speaking of the faith of ancient worthies, Heb. 11: 16, and says—"Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." In this connection Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are specially mentioned, and Paul evidently refers to the same passage in Moses' writings as does our Lord in Lk. 20. Here is certain evidence from Paul that God called himself the God of these patriarchs in special reference to their faith and obedience. Did not our Lord assert the same truth? If so, the point is settled that he did not speak of all men. Luke 20.

Mr. Hinton says, p. 425-6, "The question framed by the Sadducees must, in all propriety, be held to relate generally to the subject of a future life, rather than the fact of the resurrection of the body." And he adds—"This view is not at all inconsistent with either the etymology or the use of the term anastasis, which, when it relates to a future state, is by our translators uniformly, but sometimes unhappily, rendered resurrection."

We cheerfully admit that "our translators" have "unhappily, uniformly rendered anastasis resurrection." But "unhappily" for whom? Why, of course, for all who hold that "soul and body both exist" after death, and that the soul has a conscious existence. Truly our translators have done an unhappy thing for them; and left them no ground for the pagan notion before spoken of, that, "Those who die are immortal, since they will not die any more." That "the question framed by the Sadducees must be held to relate to the subject of a future life" BY A RESURRECTION from the dead, we trust is now sufficiently manifest; yet, lastly, we call attention to the fact that the question of the Sadducees expressly binds down the "future life," about which they inquired to the resurrection state. The question is thus stated by Mark 12: 23. "In the resurrection, therefore, WHEN THEY SHALL RISE, whose wife shall she be of them?" Now, if Mr. Hinton's theory be correct, this language certainly does not favor it; and of this it seems he must have been aware, as he takes no notice of it.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES—NO. III.

"THE BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY."

It will be our object in this article to bring together the points in Revelation relating to that battle, with some remarks upon the events introduced. The first place where it is alluded to is in chap. 11, under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. That trumpet in our opinion commenced about 1789, at that convulsion in France which was followed by the career of Napoleon Bonaparte, and has continued to the present time. It contained the seven last plagues, which constituted it a "woe" trumpet. The last verse of the 11th chapter has these words, under this trumpet—"The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices and thunderings, and an earthquake, and a great hail." This subject though interrupted by the three following chapters, is resumed distinctly in the 15th chapter 5th verse, in these words, which show the connection.—"I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened." Then the seven angels are seen coming "out of the temple, having the seven last plagues," &c. These plagues were to "fill up the wrath of God" on the anti-christian powers; or, to "destroy them which destroy [corrupt] the earth," or land: that is, the inhabitants of those countries where the anti-christian powers, now to be destroyed, had carried on their abominations. Under the seventh trumpet, and during the time of the pouring out of the seven vials, "the nations were ANGRY." This we regard as the first intimation of the battle of the great day. The next direct presentation of it is in chapter 16: 13-16, or the work of the unclean spirits which go forth to gather the kings of the earth to the battle; and it is said they are gathered together to a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon. Here we may as well remark on the place before we pass to the other connecting points in the prophecy.

"Armageddon"—the mountain of Mageddon; or Mageddo, a city situated in a great plain at the foot of mount Carmel. Here king Josiah was slain in battle, (see 2 Chron. 35: 22-25.) here Barak and Deborah overcame Sisera and his great army, (Judges 5: 19.) It was a noted place for scenes of carnage; and hence is used, Rev. 16, symbolically for the place of the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Europe and western Asia have been the places where the blood of Jews and Christians has been shed like water. Europe especially has been the Papal slaughter-house. Europe then is the place symbolized by Armageddon—that is the valley of slaughter and judgment.

Having now connected two points concerning this battle, as presented in chapters 11 and 16, we are again interrupted by a view of the judgment of the great whore on the scarlet colored beast; but in that description, chap. 17, we are once more presented with some of the elements that go to make up the army of anti-Christ; viz., The ten horns—or kingdoms under Papal influence—which give their power and strength unto the beast, or papal civil power for a time; "These," all combined, "shall make war on the Lamb," &c., v. 14. Then our direct view of the battle is again interrupted by a presentation in a separate form of the judgment of Babylon, or the great whore, and with the joy that arises to the holy ones at her fall. Passing all this we come once more to an open view of the gathering and battle field with its result.

The scene opens at chap. 19: 11, and continues to chap. 20: 3. The whole is a symbolical representation. Let none forget this fact. From verse 11 to 16, is a representation of "The Word of God;" or, in other words, Christ. We have in a previous article expressed the belief that the armies opposed to Christ do not actually see him, or know that they are really fighting against him. Here we call attention again to chapter 16, where it is expressly said—"Behold I come as a thief." Come to what? Evidently, to the battle of that great day. Look at that text again in its connection. A description is given of the working of the unclean spirits, preparing the kings of the earth for that conflict. At this point the language, "behold I come as a thief," &c. is uttered; showing that it is something connected with the battle, and is accompanied by a caution to saints not to be drawn into the corrupting influences which will be everywhere in operation to turn off men's minds from a constant preparation for the final result. They are to keep their garments—keep far removed from the war spirit that will go forth from nation to nation, so that whoever shall allow themselves to fall into its current will become defiled and be stripped of those garments of meekness which characterize a christian; and thus stripped, his shame will appear; because he will be manifested to be destitute of the peaceable spirit of Christ, and thus demonstrated not to belong to him. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments" pure from the spirit of war, and the love of the world.

We now ask, how does a thief come? Not openly, but secretly; unseen and unsuspected by those who are to be the victims visited. So Christ will come to that battle, and cause these angry nations to be gathered to the terrible conflict which is to result in their overthrow and ruin. "In righteousness does he judge and make war." These anti-christian powers have "made war on the saints" and on the truth for centuries; and done it in a most unrighteous manner: but the Lamb, now "King of kings," maketh war on them in righteousness, and in just judgment for their violence to his truth and his people. He now "treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God;" a full description of which had been prophesied of in Isa. 63: 1 to 6, and now the time has come; but Christ comes to it as a thief—unseen—unknown by his enemies, while they will be made the instruments one upon another of executing the wrath. We may illustrate this secret presence of Christ in this battle by the case recorded in 2 Kings, 6: 15—17. The king of Syria had sent an army to seize Elisha the prophet. They came, "horses and chariots, and a great host, by night and encompassed the city about." And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city, both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, alas, my master! how shall we do? And he answered, fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man: and he saw, and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

Here we see a great army from heaven, "even more for" Elisha than they were against him; but they were there "as a thief"—invisible to the opposing army—exerting an invincible power which made the victory sure. Thus we apprehend it will be in the battle of that great day. Christ, with "the armies of heaven" will be there, though invisible; but the war so far as physical power is brought into the conflict, will be that of the hand of every man "against his neighbor" or, one nation will be the instrument in executing judgment against another; and so in turn destroying each other. The scenery of calling the fowls of heaven to "the supper of the great God" indicates the greatness of the slaughter of that awful period. Then the fact is stated of the actual gathering of the kings of the earth and their armies to make war against Christ and his army. Next the "beast was taken;" by which we understand the scarlet colored beast, which we regard also as the "image to the beast which had the wound by the sword," chap. 13; being as we have said in a previous article, only another aspect of the same beast; or, the aspect given it a short time before it goes "into perdition;" and with him is taken "the false prophet which wrought miracles" or wonders—"before"—or in the presence of—the beast.

Before proceeding, it will be necessary to inquire, what power is symbolized by the false prophet? A false prophet is one who speaks in the name of the Lord when God has not commissioned him; see Deut. 18: 20-22. The character of a false prophet is accurately described in Acts 13th chap. in the case of "Elymas the sorcerer." He is "full of all subtlety"—withstands the truth—seeks to turn men from the truth—full of all mischief—an enemy to all righteousness—a perverter of the right ways of the Lord, consequently a "child of the devil." See Acts 13: 6-10. This power corresponds well to the "two horned beast," Rev. 13: 11-18. We regard this two horned beast and the false prophet as identically the same power under two aspects. They both wrought miracles or wonders, before the beast. We are of the opinion that the Pope and Cardinals in the exercise of civil power are, or constitute the beast with its two horns like a lamb—a mild, Christ-like power, by profession, but speaking with its mouth like a dragon. The time was when the clergy generally had a voice in the choice of the Popes; and the emperors confirmed the choice; but some where in the twelfth or thirteenth centuries the Cardinals assumed the sole power to elect and constitute the Pope, and have held that power to the present time, or over 600 years, how near "666" we do not know. This dragon-lamb—this Pope and Cardinal beast, has "exercised all the power of the beast before him;" and has had all the characteristics of the false prophet described Acts 13th. This power, we think, is the false prophet taken with the beast, in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty;" and "these both are cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone;" corresponding with "eating her flesh and burning her with fire," chap. 17, and denotes their utter and irrevocable destruction, so that they shall never recover; it is a final overthrow of that anti-Christian power with all its abominable delusions and superstitions; and then it follows that "the remnant," viz. "the kings of the earth" &c., "were slain with the sword," &c. These were made instruments, first, through hatred to the whole, of destroying her with all her appendages; and then are the sword, or agents in one another's destruction, till both the Papal power is ruined; and those nations overthrown; and their governments destroyed, who had been corrupted by her sorceries and abominations.

Having thus briefly noticed the fate of some of the powers engaged in the battle of that day, we must not pass by an other power concerned in the same conflict. This is liable to be done by separating the 19th and 20th chapters, which should be regarded as inseparable. The dragon power is most assuredly engaged in that war, though not mentioned in chap. 19; yet the 16th chap. clearly shows the dragon as a principal actor in the scenes of that day. It was out of his mouth one of the unclean spirits came that was to gather to the battle. We may depend, therefore, that that power will not be overlooked. The account of the battle in Rev. 19th should be read to the close of the 3d verse of the 20th chap. without interruption; thus we shall get the fate of all the powers engaged in the conflict.

We are now, then, to inquire what power is symbolized by the Dragon; after which we will notice its fate. In introducing this power, chap. 20, it is called "The Dragon, that old serpent; which is the Devil and Satan." The whole description here we consider symbolical; and not designed at all to represent a personal being usually denominated "the devil." This remark, however, is not to be construed into a denial of the existence of such a personal being; we only say, that in this text he is not the power spoken of. Dr. Eadie, in his Biblical Cyclopædia, a new English work, on the word "Dragon," says: "In the Apocalypse it seems to be a symbol of the dark, malignant spirit of Evil, either in himself or in those human influences which he inspires or employs." On the "serpent," the same author remarks: "In Egypt and other nations the serpent was a common symbol of powers. Idolators regarded it as a personification of all evil." Kiersey, in his "Cyclopædia of Biblical literature," another English work of great merit and reputation, says: "They anciently represented all great destructive agents under the form of a Dragon, or monster serpent." He further remarks that there were temples built to Dragons, some of which were several miles in length, and built in a serpentine form."

As a sign of power, Moses seems to have used it when sent to Pharaoh; see Exodus 7: 9, where the Lord told Moses his rod should become a serpent—a dragon—before Pharaoh. The word here translated serpent is the same that is rendered dragon, Isa. 27: 1. It was the sign of Moses' power; received from God, to deliver Israel. The words devil and satan are the Greek and Hebrew words expressing the same thing; and literally signify "adversary," leaving it the connection to determine what particular adversary is spoken of. The expression, "the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan," therefore, signifies a dark, malignant power, which is to act a prominent part in the transactions of "that great day of God Almighty;" and which is to be the last disposed of in the conflict, and is not to be utterly destroyed at that time, but reserved for another period, hereafter to be spoken of. The question now returns—What power is it? We have said that the symbols by which it is represented only signify a malignant and destructive power. We now add, that we are not to suppose, because we find these symbols employed in regard to one destructive power, that that is the power always intended. If this were the case, we should have to confine its application wholly to the Imperial power of Egypt; for, in Ezekiel 29, the Lord expressly calls "Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon." This passage goes to confirm the position that it is a symbol to denote an extraordinarily malignant or destructive power, and a power too that has specially been an oppressor of Jacob's posterity. Such was the Imperial power of Egypt; such was the Imperial power of Rome, and hence symbolized by a dragon, Rev. 12th; but in Rev. 19th and 20th we have come to a period where the symbol cannot apply to Rome; Imperial, nor to Rome Papal; the latter is described by other symbols, and the former had passed away. The Dragon, then, in chapters 16 and 20 is another power. To find this power, we shall again have to revert to the prophecies of the old Testament; we shall there find more in detail, a description of a part of this same battle of the great day of God. We turn then to Ezekiel 38 and 39. Let us examine some of the powers here introduced.

The 38th chapter commences thus—"Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of [Rosh] Mesheuk and Tubal." We have inserted "Rosh" on the authority of the Septuagint. The 6th verse speaks of "Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters," &c. These powers are among those that are found in the conflict described in that prophecy. These are all descendants of Japheth, as may be learned from Genesis 10: 1-5.

They peopled Asia Minor and nearly all Europe; called "The isle of the Gentiles," in the time of Moses; see Gen. 10: 5. "Gog," then, is to be found some where in Europe, and the Septuagint gives us the clue to the power intended, viz. "Rosh," or Russia. Gog was in ancient times the name of the king of the northern country, as Pharaoh was the common name of the kings of Egypt. Hence Gog is the name of a Dynasty of kings or emperors; and, if the Septuagint can be relied upon, it seems it is the Russian Dynasty. Russia has been a great oppressor of the Jews, and is still their greatest scourge; and, in this respect, is entitled to the appellation of "the great Dragon." Whether that power is literally to invade the land of Israel, as indicated, Ezk. 38 and 39, or whether the scenery is laid there only, because the legal inheritors of that land are the subjects of Gog's malignant operations, we need not now decide—time will soon determine that point—but that Gog, the chief prince of Rosh, or Russia, is one of the most active and malignant powers engaged in the terrible conflict immediately to precede the establishment of the reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, is clearly evident. It is not our design now to give an exposition of this prophecy in Ezekiel, but only to introduce it so far as to identify the power with that denominated the Dragon, Rev. 16 and 20. In further confirmation of this view, we have in Rev. 20, the fact that, when this power is loosed at the end of the 1000 years, the same powers are introduced into the scene as in Ezekiel, viz. "Gog and Magog." We stated, then, to the conclusion that the Dynasty of Russian Emperors is symbolized by "the Dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan." The Russian Imperial power began to assume its present importance and form under Peter the Great, in the commencement of the last century. It has steadily marched on to its present greatness, and its dark, malignant character; and most unquestionably has a part to act in the battle of the great day of God Almighty, which is not to be passed over under the general name of "the kings of the earth"—tees gees—of the land, or Roman Catholic earth, or territory where that Romish power had held sway. Russia is not, and never was, of that land; but is, and always has been, a separate and distinct power, and also is of the Greek religion, which is hostile to the Papal authority and religion. The difference between the two religious systems may be seen by consulting the "Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge," but we have not space to note it now.

If we are correct, then, in fixing upon the Russian Imperial power as the Dragon power, we are now prepared to contemplate its fate. The other powers, let it be remembered, are utterly destroyed in the battle; and the symbols employed denote a destruction from which there is no revival—their destruction as organized powers is final. Not so with the Dragon power; and this forms a sufficient reason for introducing its fate in a distant scene as found at the commencement of chap. 20. An angel is represented as coming down from heaven. By this expression, however, we are to understand nothing more than that the angel is a symbol of the agency that God shall choose to employ in accomplishing the work to be done. It is quite useless to speculate as to what agency precisely it is, that is symbolized by the angel, or that God will employ—time alone can certainly determine that. This power is represented as being commissioned to bind and imprison the dragon—that is, to cut off and curtail his power so that it can perform no organised work of evil for a specified period: but the dragon is not to be destroyed now as the other powers are; and it will have a revival, after which comes its final doom.

The work now to be accomplished is represented by symbols easy to be understood. The dragon is bound—i. e. deprived of all his power; then he is shut up; i. e. kept securely: in the "bottomless pit"—abussos. This Greek word occurs only twice out of Revelation, and seven times in that book. It may be proper here to inquire as to the meaning of it. One thing is certain, it never means hell, in the popular sense of that term. The first place where it occurs is in Lk. 8: 31; and is there translated "the deep." Dr. Eadie, on this word, in his Cyclopedia, says—"Rendered in our version sometimes DEEP, and uniformly BOTTOMLESS PIT, either by itself or in connection with another term, in the book of Revelation. A deep without a bottom—a very deep pit, referring often to that vast body of water which in Jewish opinion was laid up in some cavernous receptacle within the earth. It refers sometimes to the dark sepulchres of the east, which hew out in the rock, and descending far beneath the surface, formed a kind of under world. In the Apocalypse, it symbolises the abode and the doom of those powers which are hostile to Christ and his Church."

This definition may help us in further examining this point. In Rom. 10: 7, Paul uses the word thus, in speaking of our Lord—"Who shall descend into the deep?"—abussos? "That is," says the apostle, "to bring up Christ again from the dead." Here the word is used for the sepulchre—the tomb—the state of the dead. The other places where it occurs are in Rev. 9: 1, 2, 11; and 11: 17; and 17: 8; and 20: 1, 2. In the last place, which we are at this time considering, it is used to indicate, that as in a state of death a man is deprived of all power to accomplish anything, so the Dragon should be placed in such circumstances that he can accomplish nothing against those who had previously suffered from his malignity; and the world, under the reign of Christ and his associates in government, will remain unmolested till the end of the period specified; after which the Dragon power will revive for a short period, and then share the same fate that the beast and false prophet had done at the battle of the great day: which is symbolized by being cast into the lake of fire, and being tormented day and night for ever and ever; which language implies no more than the awful nature of the destruction of that power, and the perpetuity of its overthrow. Whether there be a personal devil, yea or nay, this text and context has nothing to do with his final destiny. It is an anti-Christian organism, national in its character, whose fate is here brought to view. In another article we may say more of the signs that "the battle of that great day of God Almighty" is now going on.

RESPONSE, TO B. B. JACKMAN.

BR. STORRS.—I noticed in the Examiner of July an answer from B. B. Jackman to my question in the number for May. As it is clearly seen that he has failed to prove when and how Christ is to accomplish the great object of his coming into the world, that is to destroy the devil and his works, I consider the question unanswered.

Friend Jackman, according to his article, believes that devils and sinners, or they that are filthy, will exist in a conscious state as long as God exists. Now he will not deny but that as long as these beings exist, the works of the devil remain also. He may say that the devil would be destroyed if confined. But, would that destroy his works while sinners were eternally sinning? Certainly not. John the Baptist speaks thus concerning the workers of iniquity, Mat. 3: 12, "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into his garner, but the chaff (filth) he will burn up with unquenchable fire." And St. John says, 1 John 3: 8, "For this cause the Son of God was made manifest that he might destroy the works of the devil."

He also speaks of the meaning of the words eternal and everlasting, and seems to believe that they are to be understood strictly literal throughout the bible; but if he will turn to Gen. 17: 8, and chap. 49: 26, he will find there, and in other places, that they are applied to things that have an end: and to make it still plainer to his mind you will please send him a copy of your Six Sermons, and charge to my account; which I think he will gladly and with much profit peruse. Yours for the truth,

E. W. KNIGHT.

ON THE COMING OF THE LORD.—Too little, alas! are we affected by the anticipation of the glorious appearing of our Redeemer and of our participation in that glory. Where is the praise, the gratitude, the joy, the holiness, that this anticipation ought to inspire?

Where the grateful praise to our Father for his wondrous love to sinners who deserved everlasting destruction, in making us "joint-heirs" with his best beloved Son to such an inheritance? Expecting soon the thrilling welcome to enter through the gates into the city, how should the incense of praise to the Rock of our Salvation ascend perpetually from the altar of our hearts! Hoping so soon to enter into the joy of our Lord; to see him as he is and be like him forever; why are our acknowledgements of obligation to him who has loved us and given himself for us, so cold and infrequent?

Where is the joy which the assurance of awaking from the dust, in the perfect image of our Saviour, to reign with him in the everlasting kingdom, is so well adapted to excite? Do not the felicities of the Holy City eclipse all the glory of this present world? Why then are we so much affected by the things which are seen and temporal and so little enraptured by those which are eternal? Can we not reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us? Why then are we so cast down in the hour of affliction and adversity? Why do we not rejoice in tribulation also?

Where is the holiness; the victory over the carnal influences of this world, and the powerful examples of holy living becoming the candidates for immortality in the presence of God and the Lamb? "What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness" who expect soon to inhabit the city where nothing that defileth can enter?

H. GREW.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

Christ's cross is the sweetest burden that ever I bare; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my harbor. Hold fast Christ, but take his cross and himself cheerfully; Christ and his cross are not separable in this life, however they part at Heaven's door.

To be crucified to the world is not so highly accounted of by us as it should be; how heavenly a thing it is to be deaf and dead to this world's sweetest music!

Make others to see Christ in you, moving, doing, speaking and thinking; your actions will speak of him, if he be in you.

Go where you will, your soul will find no rest but in Christ's bosom: Inquire for him, come to him, and rest you on Christ the Son of God; I sought him, and I found in him all I can wish or want.

Lose not sight of Christ in this cloudy and dark day; learn not from the world to serve Christ, but ask himself the way; the world is a false copy, and a deceitful guide to follow.

All come not home at night who suppose they have set their faces heaven-ward: it is a woful thing to die, and miss heaven; how many a mere professor's candle is blown out, and never lighted again. Many, now, take Christ by guess; therefore, I say, be sure you take Christ himself; his sweet working in the soul will not lie, it will soon tell whether it be Christ indeed whom you have met with.

The day of the Lord is at hand, when all men shall appear as they are: there shall be no borrowed colors in that day; men borrow the lustre of Christianity, but how many counterfeit masks will be burned in the day of God.

I wish our thoughts were, more frequently than they are, upon our country! heaven casteth a sweet perfume afar off to those who have spiritual senses.

Go on in the strength of the Lord, and put Christ's love to the trial, and put upon it burdens, and then it will appear love indeed; we employ not his love, and therefore we know it not.

More I can neither wish, nor pray, nor desire for you than Christ, singled and chosen out from all things, even though wearing a crown of thorns. I am sure the saints are at best but strangers to the weight and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not half of what we love when we love Christ.

I would not have believed that there is so much in Jesus as there is. It is little to see him in a book; but to draw him to Christ is another thing.

That Christ and a sinner should be one, and share heaven between them, is the wonder of salvation; what more could love do?—Rutherford's Letters.

SINNERS AND THE ATONEMENT.

We find the sermon preached by Rev. B. I. Lane, of Cambridge, before the Massachusetts Conference of Baptist Ministers, in the Evangelical preacher. It deserves well the place it there occupies. Though we gave at the time an outline of this discourse, the following extract on pointing sinners to the atonement, will interest the reader.—Reflector.

Threatening may awaken fear and force submission, but it cannot beget love—it cannot reconcile the heart to that from which it has been estranged.

It is not in its nature to do so. We repeat, that we are not speaking against alarming the sinner, and pointing him to the coming wrath. It is important that we do so. The doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, and the final judgment, together with other great truths, must be often and carefully insisted upon. But we must go further. And the point on which we are insisting, does not, it appears to us, hold that prominent place in the ministry of most preachers, that it does in the Bible. It may be coldly stated, and a few passages of scripture in relation to it indifferently repeated; but it is not earnestly and affectingly dwelt upon in its place. When the sinner stands trembling upon the brink of woe, when he is appalled in view of the fearful miseries that await the wicked, it is not the time to point him to Sinai's lightning, or to a burning hell; but the love and compassion of God in the atonement should be exhibited, as the arm of God stretched over the pit of ruin to catch the helpless penitent. This is the top-stone of the spiritual temple, 'brought forth with shouting, crying grace! grace unto it!' This truth, clearly stated, understood and embraced, will complete the work of truth, and reconcile the sinner to God. He may be awakened, he may be convicted, but he will not, he cannot be converted—the affections of his heart cannot be won to the love of God by any other means than the melting tenderness of the gospel. 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them;' this is the word of reconciliation committed to us. In this word, illustrated and enforced in ten thousand ways, we have the grand instrument of genuine revivals. With this word, you may successfully assail the citadel of the 'strong man armed.'

When, my brethren, everything else fails to change the affections of sinners, and bring them to a cordial love and obedience of the gospel; when the ordinance of reason fails to make an impression; when the weapons of terror fall upon sinners' hearts as pebbles upon the shield of Achilles; when the battery of a coming wrath fails to bring one sinner upon his face, then, in 'burning thought and breathing words,' charge upon them from the humiliation of Bethlehem, the groans of Gethsemane and the deeper agonies of Calvary. Let that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them,' and you shall presently see the mighty effect of it in the inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

LETTERS.

FROM DR. FIELD.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., Sept. 6, 1849.

BR. STORRS:—I have had a desire for some time to hear from you, but have had so little time for writing, that I have hitherto neglected to open a correspondence with you. If you are publishing a paper I wish to become a subscriber, and would be glad to have one of your books containing your Six Sermons, and some small essays on immortality.

Would it be possible to induce you to come west on a missionary tour, and spend some time with me? I am exceedingly anxious to have the aid and co-operation of brethren who hold my views. Perhaps you know that I have been forced to constitute a new church here, on free and independent principles, which has been in existence now two years, and is in a prosperous condition. We number about one hundred. What say you to a tour West? If you cannot come, can you send a young man of good talents and character, to aid me in my labors? I need assistance very much. A preacher or two West, of bold and persevering character, could be sustained.

Yours, in the hope of immortality,
N. FIELD.

If the Lord permit, we will endeavor to visit you and others, in the West, before many months. It has been on our mind to do so, if health and pecuniary circumstances would allow. We hope to answer the calls of old friends there before long.—

FROM BR. WILLIAM ONGLEY.

TOWN OF THORALD, C. W. Sept. 22, 1849.

DEAR BR. STORRS:—My wife joins with me in love to you and your family, praying the God of all grace to keep and preserve you all in perfect peace and blameless, unto his coming kingdom; we hope you will be made a blessing in preaching the word to the people in these last days. The subject of Life and Death, it seems to me, is the last truth to stir up the people; get them to see this, and they are ready to hear on the second advent of our Lord, and other Bible truths. It appears to me it was the first preached to Adam in the garden, by God himself, and it will be the last, connected with other truths. Myself and wife are holding meetings in Canada West, for the present, and are expecting our King before 1850 runs out. I suppose you think we shall be disappointed; if we should, we will continue to wait, but with earnest expectation, and would say come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen.

I remain yours, waiting for eternal life, when Jesus comes, to change these mortal bodies, and make them like unto his most glorious body.

FROM BR. ANSON WALKER.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1849.

BR. STORRS:—I read the welcome Examiner with interest and profit; and was pained to learn that there was any probability that it might be discontinued. I need not express my satisfaction as to its spirit, and the "exceeding great and precious promises" and blessings it is bringing to light from the darkness of sectarianism, together with the fearless and able manner they are set forth and defended; and it must, I think, carry conviction to every unprejudiced mind who will carefully read it. What but the spreading power and force of truth, the glory and consistency of the doctrines advocated in the Examiner, and their influence on the minds of men, has called out the True Wesleyan into the field against you? Others, less capable than the Editor of the Wesleyan, and more firmly bound in sectarianism, seem unwilling to lend a helping hand to sustain the downward tendency of immortal-soulism, but seem to choose to let it quietly wreck, as the "orthodox" of England have done, by assuming that immortal does not mean "positively shall live forever." From what I see here, I judge that the arguments of the Examiner are too conclusive to allow of many venturing into the field against you, lest they meet the fate of others who have made the trial; for surely the Examiner is conducted with ability enough to merit the attention of wise men.

TRIALS OF THE WORLD.

"This world is full of suffering; along the mournful air

The notes of sad complaining are ringing every where. Love shieldeth not its idols from death's unsparing darts,

And the whole wide earth is teeming with crushed and broken hearts.

Yet were no clouds of sorrow along our pathway driven,

This world would be a Paradise we scarce would change for Heaven.

"This life is full of trial, yet we know that One above Looks ever down upon us with a sympathizing love, And pitieth our infirmities, though others may deride, For the heart hath not a sorrow with which He was not tried.

Oh let us then be patient, be meek and murmur not, Though clouds and gloom and shadows surround our earthly lot;

And when the heart repineth, think of that Holy One Who meekly bore and suffered to win for us a crown.

Then let us place the anchor of our confidence and trust

On the might of the Creator, the Omnipotent and Just,

Whose will we may not question, nor His hidden motives tell,

Yet rest in His assurance that 'He doeth all things well.'"

FUTURE STATES.

By REV. REGINALD COURTNEY, A. M.

ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

St. Paul's declaration that "we are come to the New Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, and to the spirits of just men made perfect," has, sometimes, been held to indicate an intermediate consciousness. Thus Dr. Watts argues in his "World to Come," "The Gospel or the Christian state brings good men into a nearer union and communion with the heavenly world and the inhabitants thereof, than the Jewish state could do. The inhabitants of this upper world, this heavenly Jerusalem; are here reckoned up: God as the prime Lord or Head; Jesus the Mediator as the King of his Church; the innumerable company of angels as ministers of his kingdom; the general assembly of God's favorites or children, who are called the first-born;—which may, perhaps, refer in general to all the saints of all ages past, and to come, whose names are written in the Book of Life in heaven; and particularly to the spirits of just men who are departed from this world, and are made perfect in the heavenly state."

It has been objected," continues Dr. Watts, "that the spirits of the just are not yet made perfect in heaven, because the apostle says, 'These all, i. e. the saints of the Old Testament, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises; God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.' Now these had been dead for many generations, yet they received not the promises, nor were made perfect. Thus saith the objection. But the evident meaning is, that they lived and died in the faith of many promises, some of which were to be fulfilled, after their days here on earth, but were not fulfilled in their lifetime: they did not enjoy Gospel blessings in that perfect manner in which we do, since the Messiah has come, and, by offering himself, 'perfected for ever them that are sanctified.'"

In the sense which Dr. Watts has here given to the word, just men now on earth are as truly "perfected," as those spirits which he imagines to be so in an intermediate state. When it is said that they who are sanctified are "perfected," it is plainly meant that (though they are still required to go on unto a further "perfection,") yet in as far as their redemption depends on, or rather consists in, the shedding of the blood of Christ, it is a work perfectly accomplished. But in general they are said to be "perfected," who have received their "perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in God's eternal and everlasting glory," who have obtained all that God has promised to bestow. In this sense, as the context proves, the spirits of the just will be found to be perfected, when we, who are now emulating them on earth, are admitted, at the Last Day, into their joyful society. For the promises, which they are not to receive without us, are as yet future; are not to be realised, as Dr. Watts maintains, either on earth, by those who live under the gospel dispensation, or by disembodied spirits in the intermediate state; but by the saints of the old, not without those of the new dispensation, in heaven itself, after the Great Judgement-day. For St. Paul is plainly referring to that rest, (in the heavenly Canaan, the New Jerusalem,) which yet "remaineth for the people of God;" a rest, promised to the Jews, but to them in common with the whole Christian community of believing children of Abraham. In this view, he says, shortly after, "Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." We then who are now living by faith under the Gospel dispensation, have not received the promises, nor are as yet made perfect, nor shall be perfected until Christ comes.

It is indeed abundantly plain that the "promises" spoken of in the epistle to the Hebrews are all to be realized at the resurrection. The thing promised is "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." And this city does not mean, as Dr. Watts supposes, that Christian Church, or that Gospel dispensation, which was established by the Messiah at his first advent. For they who died in faith, not having received the promises, sought (not merely spiritual privileges such as might be enjoyed in common by just men made perfect in earth, with just men made perfect in heaven, but) emphatically, a "heavenly country." Their hope was "to obtain a happy resurrection," to enter and enjoy "a kingdom which cannot be moved" after the removal of the present heavens and earth. Here they had not, nor have we, any continuing city; but we are still to seek, even as they sought, one which is "to come."

In the same view said St. Paul, I sacrifice all things, "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfected." But he pressed forward, that he might obtain the prize, even that crown of righteousness which the Last day should bring him.

We are come to the spirits of the just made perfect, and to the other concomitant blessings, in this sense—that we are invited now to realise faith by and hope, as far as we may, the blessedness to be experienced in the future world. Even now we are to act as if in the visible presence of our Judge, and of the myriads of attendant angels; as if the heavenly Jerusalem had already come down from God; as if in the society of all those blessed spirits who shall by regeneration receive their perfect consummation and bliss. In the same sense also are we come to Jesus the Mediator, and to the blood of sprinkling. The benefits of his mediation and atonement are as yet received by us only in part, as far as we may receive them by faith and hope; for we have not yet obtained our promised joint inheritance; our “crown of righteousness” is as yet laid up; our “kingdom that cannot be moved” still awaits the promised shaking of the earth.

It is remarkable that St. Paul mentions both the church of the first-born, and the spirits of the just made perfect. He appears to be viewing the same persons under two conditions, first, as members of the invisible church on earth* in all ages; and secondly, as perfected in heaven. To the former we are already come in part; our communion with the latter is reserved for another world.

“To this end,” says St. Paul, “Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.” Hence Calvin argues, that the dead must be in a state of consciousness;—“for he cannot be Lord except of those who are in being.” But God is not the God of the dead; and St. Paul’s words point rather to the resurrection. Christ is Lord of the dead, just as He is Lord of Death. He has the keys of Hades and Death, but has not yet unlocked their dark gates, nor disenthralled the souls in bondage to their power. “All power is given unto Him in heaven and earth,” but He has not yet “taken unto Himself His great power and reigned.” We must not judge our brethren, says the apostle; seeing that we are to live and die unto the Lord alone, before whose judgment seat both quick and dead shall stand.

“A testimony against them [who hold the sleep of the soul] is borne,” says Calvin, “in heaven, before God and His angels, by the souls of the martyrs, who with a loud voice cry from under the altar, ‘How long, O Lord, dost Thou not avenge our blood on the inhabitants of the earth. And white robes were given unto them; and it was said unto them that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, were fulfilled.’ What, O slumbering spirits, are white robes to you? Are they cushions on which you may repose in sleep? The white robes suit not sleep. They must needs be awake who are clothed thus. Doubtless the white robes signify the commencement of that glory which Divine Goodness confers on the martyrs, while they await the judgment-day.”

Probably Calvin is perfectly right in this. And these martyrs are the same with “those that came out of great tribulation, and had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and the same as “the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the word of God; * * who sat on thrones, and had judgment given unto them, and lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.” And Calvin is probably correct also in his opinion, that St. John “sets forth a twofold resurrection; one of the soul, before judgment, the other when the body is raised.” For it is expressly said that “the souls of them which were beheaded, etc. lived and reigned with Christ;” and that “the rest of the dead” (souls surely?) “lived not until the thousand years were finished.” And what is a resurrection of the soul before judgment, or a soul’s living with Christ while the rest of the dead live not, but a restoration to life and consciousness?

Some have maintained that “the first resurrection” is corporeal: but even admitting this, it cannot be admitted, that when souls are said to live, it is meant that bodies only are restored to life, and that the souls were alive before: and also that, when it is said, “the rest of the dead lived not,” corpses only are intended. But in order to obtain from the above passages a proof of intermediate consciousness, continuing from the time of death, we must further believe that the first resurrection includes all the dead, who die in the Lord: whereas the Scripture speaks of martyrs alone.* They will live, i. e. their souls will live for a thousand years before the rest of the dead are restored to life: but there is no ground for supposing that the souls and bodies of all the redeemed will enjoy a millennial reign; supervening upon an indefinite period of hopeful consciousness. It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment;—not two protracted states of intermediate life. The martyrs indeed shall be in a state to cry unto God, and receive white robes, for a little season before that judgment on their persecutors; on which, as it appears, the millennial reign of Christ shall ensue. But we need not expand this little season even in their case, much less that of others, into untold thousands of years.

Strange it is, seeing that death and judgment are in Scripture brought so near each other, that there are many who have familiarized their minds to the belief that two states must be passed through, and each of great length, before the deceased Christian encounters the final judgment seat, to “receive the things done in the body, whether they be good or bad.” Many expect to be in great bliss and glory, emancipated from the bondage of the flesh, and with Christ, immediately on their departure from this world; and hope to exchange this wholly spiritual state for a Millennial reign with Christ upon the present earth, before the second resurrection. And this their millennial state, in which the body is, as they suppose, re-united to the soul, is of course expected to confer on them an addition of happiness and glory. But let them consider well, what further bliss they reserve, in their imaginations, for their fourth state, after the judgment, when heaven and earth have passed away. In truth, they practically reserve none: but appropriate to themselves, in their second or third state, every particular form of blessing which God has promised to confer at, and not before that time when the “blessed of the Father,” having been finally judged, “inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.” Nay, in too many instances, they actually, apply to their supposed third state all the magnificent language in which the closing chapters of the Apocalypse describe the new post-millennial heavens and earth!

* It has been observed that to those that were slain for the witness of Jesus are added those “which had not worshipped the Beast;” or as many as (voluntaries) had not worshipped. But these also are martyrs; for “as many as would not worship the image of the Beast were killed.” Rev. xiii. 15.

There yet remains one important passage, which is commonly held to convey the most direct proof, not of consciousness merely, but of peculiar happiness and glory, during the intermediate state. To the believing robber on the cross, who prayed, “Lord, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom,” our Saviour replied, “To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise.” Beyond dispute, the reward promised was not one that might be conferred at the general resurrection; for thus Jesus would merely be remembering the suppliant “when he came in his kingdom;” though in what it actually consisted is less evident. But be it what it may, nothing can be more presumptuous and unwarrantable, than to expect the same reward, or even any reward like it, for all believers in Christ. As well,—nay, less presumptuously—might we expect that all who “walked with God” should be translated with Enoch and Elijah, and never see death. For as far as we can judge, the faith of the penitent robber exceeding theirs; as it exceeded that of the apostles, and probably of every follower of our Lord. When the enemies of Jesus, to all appearance, prevailed, when he submitted to stripes, insults, and finally the most ignominious death, the triumph of the unbelievers was complete, and the last hopes of his followers seem to have faded away. One of them had betrayed him, another repeatedly denied him, the rest forsook him and fled. His enemies exulted in the proof, which, to their minds, his degrading death afforded, that he could not be the anointed of God; saying, If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross and we will believe: that he should save himself was the only way they could imagine of his making good his pretensions. And accordingly one of his fellow sufferers reviled him in the same terms, “If thou be the Son of God, save thyself and us.” Then it was that the other malefactor not only rebuked his companion, and bore testimony to the innocence of Jesus, but acknowledged him as a triumphant sovereign about to enter upon his kingdom.

His faith stood a trial before which that of all the other disciples was shaken. Having once, on good and sufficient grounds believed on Jesus as the Christ, he remained unshaken in his trust, even at the moment when the enemies of the crucified King were filled with triumph, and his disciples with doubt or despair. * * Whether any of us does actually possess faith equal with this man can be known only to the All-wise God. But we may be sure that none of us can display equal faith with his, because the circumstances are such as can never occur again. To those therefore, who do not claim for all Christians a faith equal to that of the penitent robber, it must be a matter of comparatively small moment to attempt to determine what is meant, by being with Christ in Paradise.

In all probability however the Paradise intended is the same as is mentioned elsewhere in the New Testament. “To him that overcometh,” our Lord declared by St. John, “I will give to eat of the tree of life, that groweth in the midst of the Paradise of God.” This is evidently a promise of a reward after the general resurrection, when the redeemed shall be permitted to eat of the precious fruit mentioned in the last chapter of the Apocalypse.

The same place of bliss was beheld in vision by St. Paul, who was “caught up into Paradise,” and there heard unutterable words. Into the same place the believing robber was probably admitted as soon as Jesus himself entered it. But notwithstanding the weight due to the expression “to-day,” it may be questioned whether our Lord entered Paradise before his ascension, or at the earliest, before his resurrection. For was he in the place to which St. Paul was “caught up,”—in a region belonging to those new heavens which are eventually to “come down from God,”—at the very time of his descent into Hades? Was he,—was his human soul,—at once above earth and below it, of whom St. Paul says that he who ascended “first descended into the lower parts of the earth?” This seems improbable; and therefore, if a strict interpretation of the expression “to-day” be contended for, there is no alternative but to place Paradise below, in that Hades, into which our Lord’s human soul most certainly descended. But this alternative would probably be found no less inconvenient: for it is hard to believe that our Lord’s human soul was in Paradise both when he was in Hades, and also when he left it; or to place it in the Hades which shall eventually be “cast in the lake of fire.” Paradise is probably above, and was entered by our Lord at his ascension. The question is certainly obscure; but whatever may be understood by Paradise, it can never be shown, that Christians in general have a better claim to be admitted to the privileges of the robber, than they have to be translated or transfigured with Enoch, Elijah, and Moses.

Questions may perhaps be raised,—whether the condition of souls in Hades was not changed for the better by the first advent of Christ? or whether the partial victory over death, obtained through His death and resurrection, operated before the event, so as to render the conquest of death, over the souls of those who died before our Lord’s coming, less complete than it would otherwise have been? Both inquiries are important in reference to the question of an intermediate consciousness. If such consciousness be, as has been maintained above, altogether anticipatory of resurrection, not necessarily or naturally consequent on death, they who died before Christ’s coming must have been unconscious, (at least until His coming,) unless His resurrection operated by way of anticipation. And that it did so operate is more than can be proved from Scripture. To Adam was given the promise “Thy seed shall bruise the serpent’s head.” The victory was ordained, but not accomplished; the Old Serpent Satan did not immediately feel his deadly wound. The liberation of the souls which were to pass into Hades was also ordained; but it does not follow that the power of the grave was then impaired, and “the gates of hell” shaken, and that the fetters forged by Death for souls yet unborn were then wrested from his hands.

And if Christ’s resurrection did not operate before the event, neither did it immediately after.

wards.* "The whole creation," says St. Paul, "groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now;" that is, "up to this present time," long after the ascension of the Lord. It groaneth thus, every creature groaneth, waiting for the "manifestation of the sons of God," at the resurrection. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Certainly this passage is unfavorable to the belief, that the death originally introduced through Adam is in any wise removed, through Christ, excepting at his second coming, at which the "dead men shall live."

Again it deserves to be considered, that since our blessed Lord himself, as has been argued above, "tasted death for every man, and through death overcame him that had the power of death," he must, as it appears, from the very nature of the case, have partaken of the full unmitigated penalty of death;—tasted of death, such as, but for his coming, it would have been to the soul of every child of Adam. If this be so, it follows that death is, to the soul of every Christian, what it would have been, but for Christ, to the souls of all men; unless we prefer to believe that the faithful followers of our Lord have, as we are nowhere informed, a better passage through the dark valley than their Lord himself!

But rejecting this supposition, we must needs conclude that death is now both such as it ever has been, and such as (allowing the supposition) it would have been, but for the Advent of Christ: not being changed as yet, in any degree, either in its nature or power, by his first coming, either at the time of his resurrection, or before that event: but still reigning over every deceased soul, forbidding it,—since the God in whom we live and move, and have our being, is not the God of the dead,—to live, to move, or to be.

BAPTISM.

The following communication was received too late, last year, to be inserted in the December number, where we thought best to terminate a discussion which we had reason to think our readers did not care to have continued. Br. Magruder, however, thought it due to him that we should publish his "final" reply to Br. Grew. We have concluded to let them both speak once more, which will be considered the end of that controversy in our columns, for the present. All will understand, that these brethren are equally strong in the belief of immersion being essential to baptism: they differ only as to its necessity to salvation.

ESSENTIALITY OF BAPTISM DEFENDED.

REPLY TO MR. GREW. No. II.

In the hope that the reader will keep in view the question in debate between myself and Mr.

* Except perhaps in the case of the comparatively few "saints which slept," who arose and came out of their graves after Christ's resurrection, manifesting thus, (and not by any mere change in their disembodied souls,) His power who now held the keys of Hades: and who, as there is reason to conjecture, never returned to the tomb.

Grew, I proceed to offer some reply to his "Response" (in the October number of the Examiner) to my first article.

It is not advisable to expend time and space in combating minor arguments, and seeking small advantages, in such a discussion as this. If triumph, instead of truth, were the object of our pursuit, such acts might subserve the purpose, but as I hope and believe the discovery of truth—that "pearl of great price"—and the vindication of God's ways to man, to be the great object of both, I shall not be tempted to turn aside from the plain and direct path before me. What, then, is the simple issue before us?

I maintain that the baptism or immersion of a believing and penitent subject, is one of the conditions of salvation from sins—pardon—regeneration—remission of sins—adoption as a child of God, &c. This Mr. Grew denies. Holding the affirmative, of course, the burden of proof devolves on me, and I accept the task, and appeal to the only infallible standard—the word of God—either directly expressed, or clearly implied. Here there can be no mistake. What, then, saith the Scripture? "How readest thou?" I cite the following passages from the sacred record, reserving comment for the present.

1. Mark xvi. 16. "Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

2. John iii. 5. "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

3. Acts ii. 38. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the remission of sins."

4. Acts xi. 13, 14, in connection with Acts x. 43, 47, 48. The angel said to Cornelius, Peter "shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." And Peter said, in fulfilment of this promise, the "words"—"to him give all the prophets witness that, through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins;" adding, (when he witnessed the descent of the Holy Spirit on these Gentiles) "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized?" . . . . and commanding "them, to be baptized in the name of the Lord," by all which "words" or commands (baptism included) he and "all his house" were saved, as promised in the 14th verse of the 11th chapter.

5. 1 Cor. xv. 2, in connection with Acts xviii. 8. "The gospel I preached unto you—by which also ye are saved," &c. Read 1 Cor. xv. with Acts xviii. 8: "Many of the Corinthians hearing believed and were baptized." Thus, they were "saved" by belief and baptism.

6. Acts xxii. 16. Ananias to Saul, "And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

So far the testimony of the "Gospels" and "Acts," the historical records of the sayings and acts of our Lord and his apostles in the progress of their proclamation of the gospel "for the obedience of faith among all nations." I shall now cite the testimony derived from another part of the same record, addressed to persons differently situated, viz: that contained in the "Epistles," which, we know, were letters addressed to those who were already Christians. I shall show, from this authority, that these were addressed as those who had been baptized, and were thus recognized as "saved," "washed," "regenerated," "renewed," become "the children of God," &c., with direct, plain, and undeniable citations and allusions to baptism as one of the means by which they had changed their state before God. "To the law and to the testimony" again!

1. Rom. vi. 2—5. "How shall we (Christians) that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so, we also should walk in newness of life;" i. e. after baptism the "newness of life" begins, and not before.

2. 1 Cor. vi. 10, 11. "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God—nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, &c. &c. And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus," &c. Now these very Corinthians, we have seen, were "saved" by belief and baptism, according to 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2, and Acts xviii. 8.

3. Gal. iii. 27. "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." How, then, of those who have not been baptized into Christ? Have they "put on" Christ? Mr. Grew will hardly say so, I think. If not, then baptism is an essential condition of putting on Christ.

4. Ephesians v. 25, 26. "Husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." A plain allusion to baptism as a means of sanctification.

5. Coloss. ii. 12. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him," to that "newness of life" spoken of, under the same figure, in Rom. vi.

6. Titus iii. 5. "According to his mercy he saved us,"—(How? I ask,)—"by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," &c.

Is not the "washing of regeneration" baptism? If not, what is it? Will Mr. Grew accept the learned Dr. McKnight's rendering—"According to his own mercy, through the bath of regeneration" (adding in a note, i. e. "THROUGH BAPTISM") "he saved us," &c.

7. Hebrews x. 22, 23. "Let us draw nigh with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Is not here an allusion to that preparation—baptism being a part of the process—which is essential to acceptable worship, "in the full assurance of faith?"

8. 1 Peter iii. 18—22. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water." The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

I pause here, and I submit it to Mr. Grew and the candor of the reader, if this testimony from Holy Writ does not establish the position; beyond doubt or question, that baptism is essential to salvation? Peter declares above, that Noah was "saved by water,"—and immediately adds, so, too, baptism, of which the flood was the type, "doth also now save us." Yet Mr. Grew insists it does not save us. That we are saved without it. Well, I only reply again, Mr. Grew and Peter are directly at issue, and it is vain to escape this dilemma by his reply, "the question is, is Mr. Magruder's construction of the passage correct?" for it is not a question of construction. I offer no construction. I cite Peter's plain and positive declaration, "baptism doth also now save us;" and it is that Mr. Grew combats and denies. I hope he will candidly acknowledge the error, and not impeach the apostle's veracity. In any other than an unkind spirit, I beg my respected and intelligent correspondent to remember the solemn injunction in Romans iii. 4.

It would require more space than the "Examiner" can spare, to present a commentary on the several passages of scripture which have been cited above. I regret that the time fails me to show how they all, when fairly and intelligently construed, harmonize, and sustain the general conclusion.

In religions, as well as in all other controversy, extremes are apt to beget each other. Thus has it been with baptism. The Roman Catholics, the earliest apostates and corrupters of the truth—by administering the rite to infants and idiots—by the absurd practice of clinical baptism, and similar mummeries, drove the Reformers to the opposite error of undervaluing the ordinance, and denying its essential efficacy, even when properly administered to a fit subject; so that while the Romanist yet upholds its necessity, and even superstitiously magnifies its virtue, the Protestant, concluding the very opposite must be right, argues that it is wholly unimportant, and therefore either neglects it altogether, like the Quaker, or contents himself with the Paidobaptist apology of sprinkling, whilst the Baptist sectary, afraid of his orthodoxy, invents a compromise, by holding it important enough to be made a test of fellowship at the Lord's table, but not so essential as to interpose a barrier to fraternal relations in any other respects. This last, with strange inconsistency, rejects those whom the Lord has received; for if Christians, though unbaptized, and on that account denied his fellowship, it is not clear that, in his zeal for his sectarian badge, he has been driven to the exclusion of those who (being in Christ, as he allows,) have been recognized and adopted by the Master! Such are the consequences of a blind adherence to sectarian tenets, rather than the "word of the truth of the gospel."

Mr. Grew will pardon me, I trust, for presuming to say, in conclusion, that I think I discern the source of his error in regard to the subject in debate. It is of easy discovery, and belongs to all that class of disputants whose minds have reached a foregone conclusion, and, instead of following out the testimony to its legitimate results, look around for authority to support an opinion already embraced. He argues that baptism cannot be essential, because salvation is so often associated with faith as its instrumental cause. This is granted. But it is not thence to be inferred that baptism is excluded, any more than repentance, holiness, the love of God, the blood of Christ, good works, &c. The truth is, that all these together, and no one or two alone, are so many means to an end. In the scriptures, we are said to be saved by faith, by grace, by hope, by baptism, by works, by the blood of Christ, by holiness, by the word, by the spirit, &c. Now, while Mr. Grew would exclude some of these—baptism, for example—I would insist on all as essential to the grand consummation. What God has joined together, I would not put asunder. To quote passages to show that salvation is by faith, and thus argue that baptism was a non-essential, would be as wise and pertinent as to cite authority from a work on architecture to prove that a foundation was a necessary part of a house, and therefore the walls and the roof were non-essentials.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

H. GREW'S REPLY.

By reference to my former articles, my friend will find my arguments to disprove his construction of some of the texts he has adduced in the present communication. I shall not repeat all these arguments. I submit it to his intelligent consideration, whether or not, as "an ally" to Dr. Thomas, he ought to show, if he can, the fallacy of my arguments, instead of re-quoting the texts and repeating the objectionable constructions. Other passages, however, are now quoted, which demand our impartial consideration. Far be it, that any of us should seek "triumph instead of truth." I desire to bring every theological opinion to the test of that word which abideth for ever: even the opinion, which consigns thousands of the holiest and most devoted servants of the Lord Jesus, since the days of the apostles, to the lake which burneth with brimstone and with fire, which is the second death! We must not shrink from the scriptural investigation of a tenet, although it clearly implies that such men as Martin Luther, Philip Melancthon, John Knox, George Whitefield, Philip Doddridge, and a host of holy men, who have willingly gone to the stake for the truth of the Lord Jesus, because they did not understand their duty to be immersed in water, will be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power!"

Mark 16: 16, and John 3: 5, I have already considered.

Before commenting on other passages, I beg leave to call attention to a scriptural fact which may aid us in coming to the knowledge of the truth on the question at issue. We find two classes of passages in the holy volume. One class teaching us all Christian duties, and another teaching us what will certainly exclude us from the kingdom of God. These must not be confounded. Our Lord makes this distinction, Mark 16: 16, between faith and baptism. Many true Christians "suffer loss" by their prejudices against, and misapprehension of, some truths; yet they shall be saved. A man suffers inconveniences and delay, by not choosing the very best road to the place of his destination. This, however, is no proof that he will never arrive there.

Acts 2: 38 connects repentance and baptism with "the remission of sins." In the case of Paul, washing away of sin (in some sense) was connected with baptism. Col. 2: 12, rising with Christ is connected with it. Peter, 1 Epis. 3: 21, connects it with salvation. Are we not, by other passages relative to the subject, to ascertain in what sense baptism is to be understood in these texts? Now it is a remarkable fact, that in every one, baptism is connected with something else, without which it would be worthless! In one it is connected with faith, in another with repentance, in another with "calling on the Name of the Lord," and in another, with "the faith of the operation of God." Yea, in the only passage which declares that the figure of baptism saves us, the inspired apostle precludes the idea of this "figure" saving us, in any other sense than figuratively, by saying, "not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God." Were Simon Magus, Ananias and Saphira, Demas, &c., saved by immersion in water, in any other sense than figuratively or professedly? I ask my opponents whether a "figure" (1 Peter 3: 21) saves really or figuratively? Mr. Magruder's comments and inferences on this passage are as unworthy of his good sense as of his Christian charity. He remarks, "Mr. Grew and Peter are directly at issue." What does Mr. Grew say? I say that baptism is a figure of our salvation, and that it does not really save us, nor is it absolutely essential to real and eternal salvation. What does Peter say? He says that baptism is a "figure," and saves us, but that it is "not the putting away the filth of the flesh (i. e. by water) which saves us, but the answer of a good conscience towards God." My friend objects to my question, "Is Mr. Magruder's construction of the passage correct?" adding, "I offer no construction." Is it no "construction," to say that the passage imports the essentiality of immersion to eternal salvation? Does Peter say this, or any thing which necessarily implies it? Let every candid reader judge. Mr. M. further remarks, "I cite Peter's plain and positive declaration, 'baptism doth also now save us,' and it is that Mr. Grew combats and denies." Mr. G. does not deny this. I admit it in the sense which Peter explains it in the entire passage. Mr. M.'s citation is partial. Why did he not fairly quote the whole of it? I deny my friend's inference that the passage implies that no man can be saved without immersion in water. For this he is pleased to represent that I "impeach the apostle's veracity!" Suppose that I misapprehend the apostle, in understanding him that the "figure" of baptism saves us only figuratively; is this impeaching his veracity? I ask, with Christian meekness, that Mr. M. would consider the fact, that, on a mutilated passage, withholding that part which supports my view, he bases, not only the above serious charge, but implicitly (by referring me to Rom. 3: 4) the more awful one, of being a liar against God! "Judge not that ye be not judged," &c.

Acts 2: 38. The plain and numerous promises of pardon to penitent believers in the scriptures refute my opponents' construction of this passage. I have examined their reply to this declaration, and endeavored to show the fallacy of it. It remains for them to prove that I have not done so.

Acts 11: 13, 14, in connection with 10: 43, 47, 48. Peter "shall tell these words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." What words? "To Him (i. e. Jesus Christ) give all the prophets witness that through his Name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins." Thus do "all the prophets witness" against my opponents, who teach that there are thousands who believe on the Savior, who never "receive remission of sins." The apostle indeed "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." May we justly infer from this that no man can be saved without baptism? What are the premises from which this inference must fairly flow? That the knowledge of, and obedience to, ALL the commandments of the Lord is essential to salvation. This is a false principle, for it is in manifest contradiction to scriptural precept and to scriptural fact. It is opposed to the imperative requisition to receive the "weak" (or ignorant) who are "in the faith" of the Lord Jesus. Rom. 14: 1, 3. It is opposed to the fact of the believer being recognized as a Christian by the apostle who, like modern trinitarians, had not a correct knowledge of the divine unity, (1 Cor. 8 chap.) a subject of much more importance than a correct knowledge of the figurative ordinance of immersion. The argument proves too much, and, consequently, proves nothing. You may as well quote Acts 2: 42, to prove that the Christian, who conscientiously declines the literal breaking of bread in commemoration of the death of Jesus Christ, understanding it (erroneously) merely in a spiritual sense, cannot be saved. On the same principle we must make the correct knowledge and practice of all things pertaining to the order of the Christian church essential to salvation.

1 Cor. 15: 20, in connection with Acts 18: 8, proves that we are saved by the truth of the Gospel. The declaration that the Corinthians "hearing, believed and were baptized," certainly does not necessarily imply that baptism is essential to salvation. Indeed if the declaration was, that they were saved by hearing, believing and being baptized, it would no more necessarily imply that they could not be saved without baptism, than the declaration that A. was saved from drowning by B. C. and D. necessarily implies that he could not have been saved without D.

Acts 22: 16, must be understood figuratively. The sins of Simon Magus were not really washed away by baptism. To have our sins cancelled or washed away and to be justified, are synonymous expressions. We are justified by faith, which precludes baptism.

Rom. 6: 2—5. It is preposterous to understand this passage otherwise than figuratively. The allusion is indeed to our literal baptism, but were we literally "baptized into his (Christ's) death?" Our immersion in water is figurative of our holy change, we die to sin and rise to "newness of life." So far from the figurative ordinance being essential to this holy "newness of life," it is an undeniable fact that among real Christians, we find some unimmersed more holy in their habitual walk than some of the immersed.

1 Cor. 6: 10, 11. Here are the persons enumerated who shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Alas! for our opponents, the unbaptized are not among them. It is well for the penitent believing thief and many others of the golly. It is for Mr. M. to inform us the reason of this important omission from this and every similar passage in the oracles of truth.

Gal. 3: 27. The question, "Have they (who have not been baptized) put on Christ?" I not only answer in the affirmative, but affirm that some of this class do so, more than some real Christians who are immersed. They are indeed in fault, neglecting, through ignorance, to put on Christ in the ordinance of immersion. I ask my friend if he will deny, that those put on Christ, who "put off the old man" and "put on the new," who "put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another?" I pray that he may put on Christ by forbearing his weak brother.

Eph. 5: 25, 26. I admit that baptism is, to believers, "a means of sanctification." This, however, is no proof that all other means, without this, are inadequate to that sanctification which is essential to salvation.

Col. 2: 12, I have answered.

Titus 3: 5. I have no objection to McKnight's rendering. "The bath of regeneration." I admit the allusion to be to immersion. But I ask, was their immersion real "regeneration," or was it a figure or profession of their previous renewal? Was Demas really regenerated by baptism? No man is qualified for baptism who is not previously regenerated.

Heb. 10: 22, 23, admits of a similar answer. Baptism is an important part of that worship which is "acceptable" to God; but this is not proof that it is so important that no worship can be acceptable without it.

1 Peter 3: 18—22, is answered.

You think that the Romanist "superstitiously magnifies (the) virtue" of baptism. Surely he may say, "Physician heal thyself."

I cordially unite with you in your charge of inconsistency against those baptists who make immersion "a test of fellowship at the Lord's table," but not "to fraternal relations in any other respect."

In my remarks on the term "born of water," B. Ex., Vol. III, page 116, you will find a reply to some of your closing remarks. You should have proved this fallacy of this reply, if you can. "I would insist" on obedience to all the holy principles, and also to all the ordinances of the Gospel, as essential to the perfect Christian. Blessed be God, he does not reject, or allow his children to reject, the "weak in the faith," because they are not thus perfect. You say, "what God has joined together, I would not put asunder." To this my inmost mind responds. The question is, Has God joined together, faith in his Son, &c., and baptism, not only as duties, but as duties essential to salvation? What is the fact? What has Jesus Christ done in relation to this matter? In the great Commission, when he sent forth his disciples for the salvation of a lost world, he joined faith and baptism as duties, and separated them as essential to salvation, reeking final and eternal condemnation on unbelief only. Mark 16: 16. You therefore, I think, join what Christ has separated, which is no less objectionable than to put asunder what he has joined.

I hold that God's promise of salvation to the believer in Jesus excludes every thing, as essential to salvation, but what is essential to faith in his Son. If not, his promise fails. Faith and love, i. e. obedience to all his known commands, are inseparably connected. Baptism is not so connected. This is an important truth, overlooked in your argumentation. The pertinency of your final illustration depends altogether on the question, whether or not baptism is as essential to salvation, as the walls and roof of the house are to the existence of the house? "To quote passages" which show that baptism is a duty and essential to a perfect christian, and argue that without it no man can be saved, "would be as wise and pertinent, as to cite authority from a work on architecture, to prove that" a variety of things are necessary to a perfect house, and then conclude that if one of these is lacking, it is no house at all.

In the commencement of his article, my friend expresses his "hope," that "the discovery of truth" is "the object of both." I regret to perceive that, in the close, his charity takes wings. He sits in judgment on my motives, and traces my supposed error to a disposition "to support an opinion already embraced," instead of "following out the testimony to its legitimate results." I pray the Lord to grant us both a single eye to his holy truth.

BIBLE EXAMINER.

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER, 1849.

ENDLESS LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 12.

BIBLE EXAMINER.—Our absence has prevented the appearance of the Examiner sooner this month; and now we have not half funds enough to pay the printer. Still we will redeem our pledge to issue the November and December numbers to complete this volume, trusting that the expense will be met. So far as we have conversed with the readers of the Examiner, there has been but one expression in regard to its continuance, and their willingness to pay one dollar per year for it, just as cheerfully as they have paid fifty cents heretofore. We expect to be able to interest our readers the coming year not less than the present, but of that they will be able to judge as we proceed. The greatly increasing interest on the immortality question in England will furnish us, we expect, with much matter of instruction.

Terms of the Examiner, for 1850, one dollar. For $5 six copies will be sent, and for $10 thirteen, to any address that may be ordered.

All communications and remittances designed for the Examiner, should be addressed, "GEORGE STORRS, Philadelphia, Pa."

LATE VISIT NORTH.—Since the last Examiner was issued we have visited Albany and Utica, N. Y. We spent about one week in each place, and had good and attentive congregations. Albany is where we originally preached our "Six Sermons." In our visit there, now, we dwelt mainly on the prophecies. At Utica we had never preached on the question of immortality. We were residing at that place in 1837, when our attention was, for the first time, drawn to contemplate the possibility that wicked men might utterly perish, though we did not become settled in that view till 1840, some two years after we removed from there. We now felt a satisfaction in visiting that place; and the reception we met with from some of our old friends was truly comforting and refreshing. We know not when we have passed a few days with so much satisfaction. For the first time, in that city, we opened our mouth on immortality, eternal life, as no part of man's inheritance by creation or generation; but only a gift bestowed by God through Jesus Christ on those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for it. Truly, never did we realize more of the presence and blessing of God, for a few days, than in our ministrations at Utica; and we cannot but believe that the word spoken will prove a savor of life unto life to some who heard it. Two evenings, after our discourses, we gave full liberty for any who chose to question us; and about half or three-quarters of an hour was thus occupied each of those evenings, which, we trust, gave satisfaction to all, and tended much to give interest to the subject, as many questions were asked and answered.

VOLUMES OF THE EXAMINER BOUND.—We shall have the volumes for '48 and '49 bound in one immediately after the next number is issued. Those who may wish the work must send their orders soon, as it is only a limited number that we can now furnish for both years. The price will be $1.25 single copy, or five copies for $5.00.

"WHO WILL LIVE FOREVER?"—We have just received "A Reply to the Rev. John Howard Hinton's Criticism on Luke xx: 36, with an Appendix on the Signification of the terms Life and Death. By Edward White, Minister of the Church of Christ at Hereford," England. We presume we are indebted to the author, or Dr. Lees, Leeds, for the favor. Whichever it may be, he will please accept our thanks. We shall give a part if not the whole of it in future numbers of the Examiner.

We have yet much matter by the English writers on the immortality question, which has been necessarily crowded out this year, that may be expected in our next volume, and new matter is multiplying by the discussion in England.

TO THE READERS OF THE EXAMINER.—Two years ago I became associated in the editorial department of the Bible Examiner. I have now deemed it best to withdraw my connection, and, in doing so, I desire to bid a kind farewell to all its readers. It is not necessary to enumerate the reasons of my dissolving this connection; and I will therefore detain you no longer, but most devoutly pray, that "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit may ever be with you." JOHN TOMLIN WALSH.

NOTES ON "ATHANASIA."

NO. III.

Mr. Hinton maintains that "There are no texts that teach never ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers." "The phrase everlasting life," he says, "is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed; and it cannot, therefore, when so used, be understood according to a different analogy, that is, of never-ending existence." p. 133.

The question is not whether the phrase is sometimes used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed, but—is that its general or uniform use? We maintain that it is not; and that it is not its primary use. And we appeal to Mr. Hinton, himself, whether that phrase could alone, or by itself, without other texts of Scripture, prove the happiness of the redeemed at all? and whether we are not dependant upon more explicit declarations as to the happiness of saints beyond this state? The saints live now, but they are far from being always happy. Eternal life, then, for all that phrase alone can determine, may not be always happy. To quote a solitary text, in which Paul says, "Now we live if ye stand fast in the faith," to prove the phrase life is sometimes used analogically to signify happiness, and then come to the conclusion that "The phrase everlasting life is unquestionably used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed," is truly a summary way of coming to the conclusion that in the multiplied times in which the phrase occurs, it does not mean "never-ending existence." But to do Mr. H. justice, we say, his language is very guarded here; yet to us it seems strangely contradictory. He says, "the phrase is used to express the entire felicity of the redeemed, and when so used, cannot be understood of never-ending existence;" which language implies an admission that it is not always "so used." Pray, then, what does it mean when not so used? for he says—"There are no texts that teach never ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers;" yet the phrase eternal or everlasting life is either directly or indirectly used uniformly to teach something that is the gift of Christ, or the gift of God through Christ, to his followers. Pray what is it, if not never-ending existence, when not used for happiness? On this point Mr. H. has left us in the dark, and we must wait for light.

We now join issue with Mr. Hinton on his assumption that "There are no texts that teach never-ending existence to be the gift of Christ to his followers." We begin with Rom. 5. Here the apostle "is unquestionably" speaking of death in the primary sense of the term. And for the sake of meeting Mr. H. fairly, we will let him have his own definition of the term. "Death," he says, "in its strict and primary import, signifies nothing more than that condition of an organized substance in which the organic functions have ceased:" p. 38, Rom. 5: 12.—The apostle says—"By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men: * * * * Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression: * * * If by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness [followers of Christ] shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ: * * * as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation [to death—"dust thou art unto dust shalt thou return:" see Gen. 3: 19, the only condemnation Paul could have referred to:] even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life; [the exact opposite of what came upon all by Adam's sin, viz. a resurrection from the dead;] as sin hath reigned unto death, [in the primary sense,] even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."

Here is plainly life and death contrasted. That the word death is here used in its primary sense, we presume Mr. Hinton will not call in question: life, then, must also be used in its primary sense. Let Mr. H. have its primary sense according to his liking, viz: "the active or living condition of organic substances;" and then it follows that the future active or living condition of the organic substances entering into the resurrection organism of the followers of Christ is a free "gift," bestowed "by Jesus Christ;" and that organism is said to be "eternal" to such as "receive" the grace of God, and the "righteousness," or holiness which is essential to ensure the eternal life promised. Here then, to our mind, nothing can be plainer than that the phrase "eternal life" is used to signify "never-ending existence" in a conscious state. If this were the only text to prove this point we should think we have fairly shown that Mr. H. is mistaken in his assumption: or, at least, it forms an exception to the uniform use of the phrase in the sense of "happiness," and leaves us at full liberty to use it generally, yea, uniformly, to denote eternal conscious existence, unless it can be shown that there are exceptions, and then these particular cases will not affect the general use of the term to express "never ending existence."

Thus far we have proceeded on the ground that Mr. Hinton's definition of the primary sense of the words life and death is the correct one, and have met him on his own ground: but we dissent entirely from him in the definition of those words. Our previous articles give our reasons for doing so on the word life; and as he, after defining what is the primary sense of the term death, p. 38, says,—"Life is no doubt its opposite," we do not judge it necessary to spend labor to show what is the primary meaning of the word death. We have attempted to show, in our first article, what is the primary meaning of the word life; if we were successful in that attempt, as he has admitted death and life are opposites, we have equally established the point that his view of the primary meaning of the word death is erroneous: it is not merely the disorganization of organic substances, but the cessation of conscious existence. This being lost by the first death, is restored to men by Christ through a resurrection, but is eternal only to those who have become righteous under whatever dispensation they may have lived. Though they have never heard of Christ, their future life, by a resurrection from the dead, comes through and by him; and whether that life shall be eternal, depends upon whether they have "feared God and worked righteousness" according to the light they had. Christ came that men "might have LIFE, and that they might have it more abundantly;" even an ETERNAL LIFE. See John 10: 10.

THE "TRUE WESLEYAN" AGAIN.

The editor of that paper, in his article which we copied into the August number of the Examiner, says:—

"If the soul is not immortal in its own nature, it must cease to exist by the operation of the laws of its being, just as the body does, and can need no destruction from the Almighty, any more than the body, to cause it to cease to exist. To argue that God can destroy the soul, as Mr. Storrs does, implies that it will not die of itself, without the direct exertion of Almighty Power to do it. The body is mortal, is a compound, an organism, and by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force, as is implied when Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul. On the other hand, if the soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, un compounded, and indivisible, it must be immortal in itself, and must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence."

There are several points here to which we wish to call attention. Br. Lee admits the body is not "immortal in its own nature;" and that "by the operation of the laws of its elemental and organic nature, must wear itself out and cease to exist, [be "annihilated?" En.] without being destroyed by the direct operation of external force," &c. Br. Lee here affirms too much. What is it but a plain declaration that the "body" "must cease to exist"—be "annihilated"—whether man had sinned or not! So Br. Lee fully gives up the natural immortality of man's body; for, the body would "die of itself, without the exertion of Almighty Power to do it," he says. According to this logic, "death" did not "enter the world by sin," as Paul tells us it did; for our logician plainly affirms that "the body must cease to exist [be "annihilated"] by the operation of the laws of its being." So it turns out that Paul was mistaken, and man's body would have died—"ceased to exist"—been "annihilated"—if sin had not entered into the world. Thus, after all, man was only half immortal at creation; then our opponents admit half we contend for; that's something gained in the argument, though we do not hold ourselves responsible for the position on that point Br. Lee has assumed. But as man naturally was only half immortal, let us see how Br. Lee disposes of the other half, viz., the soul.

He says—"The soul is a simple spiritual essence, immaterial, un compounded, and indivisible." We ask, where is the proof of this assertion? Of course it is in his logic, for it is not in the Bible. He says the soul is an "essence." What does he mean by "essence?" The essence of a thing is "the nature of a thing." Sometimes it signifies "existence." We do not know in which sense he uses the term; nor does it matter. He admits that the soul is created. If it is created, it is something that has "organism;" for the very idea of creation is organism: if it has organism it must be compounded; if it is compounded it is divisible, and Br. Lee's assumption falls to the ground. There is no way that we can see to avoid this conclusion but to deny that the soul is created; and we hope for the honor of Christianity he will not assume that pagan fable. We state the matter thus—If the soul is created it is an organism: if it is an organism it is compounded: if it is compounded it is divisible: if it is divisible it is not in itself immortal. And, if Br. Lee's reasoning is correct about the body, it follows that the soul will "die of itself—wear itself out and cease to exist," unless causes out of itself prevent it.

But, says Br. Lee in another part of his argument, if the soul dies with the body there can be no resurrection—it must be a new creation—it is another man. But we ask him to stop and look at his statement that the "body must cease to exist [be "annihilated"] by the laws of its being." Then at death, according to his own theory, and to use still his own phraseology, the body is "annihilated." If so, then on his theory, its resurrection is impossible—it must be a new creation—another body which the soul had never seen before; and for aught its own consciousness could determine might be entirely a new one; and thus his theory is as fatal to the resurrection of the body as he would try to make it appear ours is to the resurrection of the soul.

But his entire blast so far as aimed at us, or our Six Sermons, to use a phrase of brother Hinton, was "discharged into a sand bank." In other words—a creature of his own imagining. Br. Lee says—"Mr. Storrs affirms that God can destroy the soul by the direct operation of external force." His reasoning against us is all based on this expression, which he says, "is implied" in our position. If he had quoted us a little further his argument might have been saved. We add—"God can, if he will, destroy, or cause to cease to have existence the souls he has made." Now God can "cause to cease" from conscious existence any creature he has made by a direct act of power, or by withholding that power by which he upholds living beings. Does Br. Lee doubt this? We presume not. Our argument which he quotes, and labors to destroy the force of, had reference to only one point, viz. the assumed position of our opponents that "Nothing can be destroyed:" i. e., "no power can destroy any thing, and especially the soul." Without stopping at first to reason out the case that every created thing would go to destruction of itself if not upheld by its Creator, we dashed at once in the face of our opposers the power of God. "He is ABLE to destroy both soul and body." Remember it is what our Lord affirms, not "Mr. Storrs" only, as Br. L. insinuates. This blast, it seems, near put Br. Lee's eyes out; for to the end of his chapter, on that topic, he could see nothing but the power of God must be used to destroy the sinner, if destroyed at all; which we did not "affirm." But we can excuse Br. Lee for not seeing it: the first bolt we threw from the Bible against the favorite theory he was trying to prop up, closed his eyes to all that followed.

But Br. Lee says:—

"If God should annihilate the human soul, it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created it, and which not only sustains every human soul, but the universe of both matter and mind. This mode of annihilation forms no part of the creed of destructionists; they argue their doctrine from the Scriptures, which threaten and describe the punishment of the wicked; and represent the loss of existence as a part of, and end of this punishment, and as the result of positive infliction and suffering; and hence, they rely upon the words, destroy, burned up, consumed, and other like expressions."

Without going into a labored argument, we will show the inconclusiveness of the remarks by supposing Abraham to have said concerning Sodom and Gomorrah—"If God should destroy those cities it would require a simple withdrawal of that Almighty Power which he put forth when he created them—therefore it is folly to talk of their destruction as the result of positive infliction and suffering." Because "it would require a simple withdrawal of Almighty Power" to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah, must God therefore have his hands tied so that he cannot bring about their destruction by "positive infliction and suffering?" Is this our brother's logic? If so, it is not ours. We believe as fully as he can, that "it would require"—necessarily—only "a simple withdrawal of Almighty Power" to affect the destruction of the sinner; neither would it have required any more to destroy Sodom, or the inhabitants of the old world; but is God shut up to this method to destroy men? or, may he do it with open marks of his abhorrence of sin by effecting the destruction of the ungodly by "positive infliction and suffering?" And if he has said he will do it in this latter way, shall our opponents say he "cannot do it?" Shall Br. Lee, or any one else, say—"God cannot annihilate [destroy] in this way?" But adds Br. Lee—"If God himself has made the soul immaterial, he cannot destroy it by bringing material agents to act upon it." Suppose we were to admit that, would that prove that He who "made" it could not "act upon it" to destroy as well as to "make?" But we reply again, as in our previous remarks, to talk of immateriality being "made" is talking a palpable contradiction. Br. Lee further says—"God cannot dissolve that which is un compounded, or divide that which is indivisible." In this we are agreed. But the soul [using the term soul in Br. Lee's sense of a distinct entity] being "made" is neither un compounded nor indivisible.

Again he says:—

"The reader is requested to bear in mind that the question at this point, is not—would the soul fall back into non-existence, should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power? but—can the soul be burned up, or be annihilated by the exertion of power upon it?"

Thus he seems to admit that "the soul would fall back into non-existence should God withdraw his creating and sustaining power." Power then brought the soul into existence, by its "exertion;" but he affirms that God its Creator "by the exertion of power upon it" cannot send it back to

"non-existence." Has Br. Lee learned in the schools of immortal soulism to limit the Power of the Almighty! Or, did the dreadful text we shot in our Six Sermons—"God is able to destroy both soul and body"—so completely bewilder him that he knew not what he was doing? But we will not press him any further now, "lest he should be swallowed up with over much sorrow;" for sure we are he has made a fearful plunge towards Atheism in his attempt to save immortal-soulism, and has denied what he at first seemed to admit; for he said in the first quoted paragraph the soul "must exist forever, unless actually destroyed by the Almighty Power that gave it existence."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—NO. IV.

LUKE 21: 23 to 36 CONSIDERED.

In this portion of Scripture our Lord speaks of things future relating to the Jews—their city—the Gentiles—signs to be witnessed—his own second coming—the redemption of his people, and concludes with solemn admonitions and cautions. To these things we "do well to take heed." A large portion of what our Lord here utters in prophecy, has since become history. The fulfillment of so large a part makes it certain, that whatever may remain unfulfilled will assuredly come to pass. This prophecy, in the part accomplished, is demonstration of the truth and divinity of our Lord's claim to be the Messiah, and establishes the truth of revelation beyond any attempt to overthrow it; and infidelity is as powerless for evil, to a sincere inquirer after truth, as the foaming waves dashing against the rocks of Gibraltar. Said the Saviour: "There shall be great distress in the land and wrath upon this people"—the Jews. Did it not happen exactly as prophesied? Will any one pretend to deny but that unparalleled distress fell upon that people? Let them read the history of the Jews, particularly from the time Jerusalem was "compassed about with armies," in A. D. 67, to the siege and fall of the fortress of Masada, A. D. 74.

Luke 21: 21, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

"They," the Jews, "shall fall by the edge of the sword;" that is, in war, many of them; not all. Hundreds of thousands of them did thus fall. The remainder of them were "led away captive into all nations;" thus the prophecy has had an exact fulfillment; and the Jews are a standing and perpetual monument, that Jesus, whom their nation abhorred and rejected, is in truth the Messiah of whom Moses and the Prophets spake. They bear an unwilling testimony to this great gospel declaration, that Jesus of Nazareth was approved of God, and is the anointed Saviour. But the prophecy goes on to say,—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down, [i. e. be made subject to, or be under the government] of the Gentiles, [i. e. other nations, as distinguished from the Jews,] until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." So it has come to pass. From the days of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, no Jew has held power or authority there, and much of the time has not been permitted even to approach the city; or, if there at all, only in the most abject condition. "The times of the Gentiles," of course, is an appointed time, indicated in some other prophecy; most likely in the book of Daniel; but of that we shall not now inquire; it is sufficient for us to know, that the time of Gentile rule over Jerusalem has its bounds beyond which it cannot pass. Our Lord next proceeds to give signs which were to indicate to the watchful and sincerely inquiring mind, that this treading under foot was about to terminate. These are as follows:

Luke 21: 25, 26, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Men's hearts failing them, for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of Heaven shall be shaken."

The signs in the sun, called in other places the sun being darkened, are supposed by some to have had a fulfilment in the dark day of 1780. We cannot, with present light, assent to that view. The darkening of the sun on that day was not on the prophetic land at all. It was confined mostly, if not wholly, to the United States, and was witnessed only by a small part even of these. The phenomenon, or signs, according to the analogy of prophecy, must appear in the prophetic earth, or land. This, at most, embraced only the old Roman empire, which was in its imperial glory when this prophecy was uttered. If then, these signs in the sun and moon are to be witnessed in those literal orbs, we are compelled to the belief that they are future. We suggest, however, a different interpretation; which, if not correct, is at least very remarkable.

We learn from Genesis 1: 14-18, that the lights in the firmament of heaven were not only to divide the day from the night, but "for signs;" and that the sun was "to rule the day," and the moon and stars to rule the night." Hence, in very early times, the people of God used them as signs of authority and dominion. Thus, we find Jacob interpreting Joseph's dream of the sun, moon and eleven stars, making obeisance to him, as an indication that the father, mother, and his other sons were to do him homage, or become subjects to Joseph. Whence this conclusion, but from the well known fact, that these heavenly bodies were signs of power and authority? The sun was the sign, or symbol of the highest authority; which, in the case before us, pointed out Jacob the head and supreme ruler of his house, or tribe. The moon denoted the next in authority, viz, the mother of the family; then came the stars—the sons, or rulers of an inferior class. This use of the sun, moon, and stars is seen throughout the Jewish prophets, and we may therefore conclude such was the design of our Lord in the text before us, Luke 21.

We now proceed to an inquiry as to what ruling powers are denoted by these luminaries in this prophecy. We conclude we are to look for them in the Roman empire; and that which most naturally presents itself, as symbolised by the sun, is the imperial power of Rome, which was holding its sway at the time the prophecy before us was uttered. That the sun is used as a symbol of that power, by the "faithful and true witness," Rev. 8: 12, is admitted, so far as we know, by all commentators. This point established, then, in symbolical language, the darkening of the sun, or signs in the sun, will signify signs of its decay and exinction. Centuries ago there were signs of the decay of the imperial power of Rome, but its extinction did not occur till the present century. That power was removed by Constantine to Constantinople. There it continued till 1453; when, in the eastern empire, it gave place to the moon power, of which we shall soon speak. Before the imperial power was displaced in the east it had been restored in the west by Charlemagne, A. D. 800. In the western Roman empire it continued down to the days of Napoleon Bonaparte. The earliest date that can be given to its extinction is 1806, when Bonaparte overthrew the Emperor of Germany, or Austria, in whom resided this power at that time. It may, however, be doubted whether that time is the proper point at which to date its extinction, as Napoleon claimed and exercised this power as the "successor of the Cæsars." If then, it was continued in him, as seems most likely, it was not finally extinguished till the battle of Waterloo, 1815, which sealed the fate of Bonaparte, and put an end, as we believe, forever to the imperial Roman power. If this view of the subject be the true one, we have the first and most prominent sign of the times of the Gentiles being about to end directly before us, and in our generation. Let it not be forgotten, that the signs given us in this prophecy were to be marks of the end of Jerusalem's bondage to other nations, and the signal of the near approach and reign of David's son on David's throne.

We now proceed to inquire after the power symbolised by the moon. Let it be remembered it must be found in the old Roman earth, or land; and it must be second in magnitude to the Imperial. Thus situated, we are at no loss to designate the power, viz, the Mohammedan. It is remarkable, that the "Crescent"—the increasing moon, is the standard of that power. And further, that this power has held possession of Jerusalem ever since A. D. 636, with the exception of about one century that it was in the hands of the Crusaders. This power waxed stronger and stronger for a long period; but within the last century it has given "signs" of waning—and what is remarkable, in about six years after the extinction of the Roman imperial power, in 1815, the Mohammedan, or Ottoman power began to wane and fall with a rapidity that made even her enemies afraid. From the commencement of the Greek revolution, 1821, a series of calamities fell upon this moon power, that marked her certain and speedy downfall. She now gives "signs" of soon being turned to blood, or, of having her light, as a ruling power, extinguished. Here, then, is another sign of the end of "the times of the Gentiles," and of the establishment of the kingdom of God.

Having thus prepared the way, we can have no hesitation in saying, that the various monarchies of Europe are the powers symbolized by "the stars." Just prior to the times of the Gentiles ending, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, under the reign of David's son, on the throne of his father, there would be "signs in the stars"—or indications of these lesser monarchies being extinguished. Here we need hardly enter into any details. The late convulsions in Europe, though they seem at times to be at an end, proclaim, with a trumpet tongue, that this part of the prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes, which leaves us in no doubt as to the point in earth's history which we now occupy. Every throne in Europe has been shaken within the past two years in a manner that indicates they are soon to fall, like stars from heaven, to rise no more; but more on this point as we proceed.

"And upon the earth, [epi tes ges—in the land—same words used in verse 23—signifying same territory ruled by sun, moon, and stars,] distress of nations, with perplexity." This prophecy is being fulfilled in the history of the nations occupying the old Roman Empire. The cause and effect of those things is next spoken of. "The sea and the waves roaring." We have no idea that this language has any reference, as a sign, to any literal commotion of the ocean; but, like the sun, moon, and stars, is a symbol which we will try to search out and apply. By turning to Isa. 17: 12, we read thus: "Wo to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the sea; and to the rushing of nations that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters!" [That is, "the waves" of the sea.] "The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters." So the destruction of Babylon is represented by the figure of the sea coming up upon her; see Jer. 51: 42. So also of Tyrrus, Ezek. 26: 3, see Psa. 93: 3, 4; and particularly Rev. 17: 15, where "many waters" are expressly declared to signify "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

Thus then, "the sea and the waves roaring" is a symbol of an uprising of the people, who have long been the victims of lordly, kingly, and imperial misrule and oppression. When they rise up like the waves of the sea, lashed to fury by winds, their despotic rulers will find themselves, like a time worn and dilapidated ship, unable to stand the storm; yet there may be, for a short time, a calm, but the storm will gather strength. If we cast our eyes over Europe and mark the events of the past two years, have we not beheld a rising up of the people—the multitudes? And, what has been the cry of this rising mass? Has it not been republicanism! Self-government? No more despots! Down with thrones! And, what is the effect of this uprising of the masses? "Men's hearts failing them for fear," &c. What men's hearts are these? Not all men's; but a specified class, viz: The great men—kings, nobles, lords, despots of every class. This is evident from what follows, which is the reason assigned for the fear, viz: "For [gar—a causative conjunction—because,] the powers of heaven [the sun, moon, and stars,] are shaken." The sea and wave-like convulsions of the people shake down those symbolic powers, and overturn them, carrying consternation and horrible fear among the tyrannical dynasties of Europe, who have revolved in their political heavens so long as to think the people only lived for them, and not they for the people. And while they found the political heavens so convulsed that their power seemed ready to come to end, their hearts failed them for fear. At this moment they are far from feeling assurance of quiet: they "are like the troubled sea."

We now ask our readers, whether the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, the sea and waves roaring, are not being manifested before our eyes? And may we not know with certainty, that the times of the Gentiles are ending? Ought we not to enquire what is to come next? Or, what is before us? This, however, will be the subject of future remarks.

TRUTH ALWAYS IN HARMONY.

When our Lord stood before Pilate he made this glorious declaration: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice."

Truth is always in harmony; men's opinions are often discordant. That view of revelation which makes harmony must be the correct one; and the correct view of revelation will equally harmonize with the known works of God as manifested to the understanding, or reason of man. If this were not the case it would not be revelation, but the very reverse—darkness—mystery—secret.

To harmonize the Scriptures we should always remember, that there are two agencies—God's and man's—or God's free grace, or favor, and man's free will. In all that pertains to our deliverance from sin, and ultimate salvation, God's free favor lays the foundation, without which there could be no deliverance from sin and death. That foundation being laid, men must build thereon, or their free will must co-operate, else they will fail to attain unto the salvation offered. In the common affairs of life all men see and acknowledge these truths: all understand, if God had not given soil, the sun, rain, and suitable seasons, no effort of man could fill store-houses and barns: and they are equally sensible, that with these gifts of the God of providence there would still be a failure if men refuse to co-operate with God in bringing forth the fruits of the earth. The works of God and man in the common affairs of life have their counterpart in the work of salvation, or deliverance from sin, and the attaining unto eternal life: and he who does not bear this in mind will be ever erring in regard to what is truth, and may err fatally. There is a Covenant of Grace. God is one, and the primary party; but, in order to the full establishment of that covenant, man must become the other or second party. Each has a part to act: both are essential to the full accomplishment of salvation.

Dividing truth, and magnifying one part to the neglect or denial of the other, is injurious, if not fatal. This has always been the policy of the adversary. "Cast thyself down; for it is written, [a truth,] He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." Here is an artful attempt to magnify God's faithfulness and care, so as to cover up the obligation, of the confiding party, to be always found in the ways of obedience. This promise of protection could only be claimed in the path of obedience to God, or in the performance of that part he has assigned us to act—in other words, God's grace and man's agency are essential and inseparable; and he that does not understand this and practice upon it will never attain deliverance from sin, nor gain eternal life.

We may contemplate this subject in relation to the remission of sins. The Scriptures represent, that we have remission of sins through the blood of Christ: Eph. 1: 7. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. And other texts of like import; particularly Revelations 1: 5—"Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Baptism, also, is represented as being "for the remission of sins;" see Luke 3: 3 Acts 2: 38, &c. Some men exalt one of these truths to the neglect or denial of the other: at least, they so magnify one, or the other, as to obscure the opposite, and thus "divide the living child." by not understanding the object either of Christ's blood or our baptism.

By not understanding the object of Christ's "shed blood," they magnify it into the "paying our debts," or "dying in our room and stead;" and by not understanding the design of baptism, it is made the point on which hangs all our salvation, and as the only means by which to wash away our sins. The blood of Christ and baptism are both important; but, we apprehend, for a very different reason from that assigned for the magnified views attached to them by those partisans of whom we are speaking. They are both important, because they are both seals; one on God's part, the other on our part, of the Covenant of Grace; one of the promises of which, is "REMISSION OF SINS." Does any one ask, for what did Christ come into the world? And for what did he shed his blood? The answer is—"To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." And again, "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers;" Rom. 15: 8—that is—to confirm, on God's part, the Covenant of Grace; for the promises made unto the fathers, referred to, were gospel promises, and circumcision was the seal, on the part of the fathers, of this gospel covenant; this, however, we shall not attempt to show particularly now; but we will here refer to the language of Peter, Acts 3: 25, 26. "Ye [Jews] are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant [singular, i. e. one] which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed;" [surely that is the Gospel Covenant]—"unto you, [Jews] God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." Here, then, it is plain what covenant and what "truth of God," Christ came to confirm. Christ died, or shed his blood, to confirm that covenant that was made with Abraham, in its now still more ample development. Thus, the Saviour saith, Mat. 26: 28. "This is my blood of the new testament, [covenant] which is shed for many, [all the families of the earth] for the remission of sins." This blood sealed, on God's part, the new covenant—the covenant of grace—which contained the promise of "remission of sins." This was one of the grand objects of Christ's coming into the world: other objects we may notice at another time. When we are baptised we set our seal to that covenant, and confirm our faith in the truth of all the promises God has made in that covenant; one of the first of which is, "I will be merciful unto their unrighteousness: their sins and iniquities will I remember no more," Heb. 8: 12.

Another grand object of Christ's advent is expressed in the text we have quoted from Acts 3: 26. "God having raised up [brought into the world, or raised up unto David, see Chron. 17: 11; raised up to manhood] his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." God sends his Son to do what? "Pay our debts!" Is that the way he was to "bless" men? Was he sent to bless men by dying in their "room and stead?" No. How then, did God send him to bless men? By turning them away from their iniquities. That is the only way in which God can bless any man permanently. Sin is a curse—the way of sin is the way of "death" by an unchangeable law of nature's God. Sin is violence done to the order infinite wisdom, goodness, and love has established; and must necessarily result in death. No sober, reflecting man doubts this, so far as his physical nature is concerned. A constant violation of our physical constitution tends certainly to dissolution, or death. The repeated and continued violation of the law of our moral nature tends to its insensibility—to brutalizing it—consequently, to its extinction, or death. We can only be blessed by being turned away from our iniquities.

What is iniquity? Every thing that is contrary to love: "God is love;" the opposite to love is opposition to God, or, is iniquity. The love which is the fulfilment of the law, relates to God and our neighbor, or fellow men. Jesus Christ is the great example of both. Every departure from his example is a departure from love, and hence a departure from God, who is love; and it is iniquity. Our Lord, Jesus Christ, not only taught love to God and man by precept, but example; and we are taught to "walk even as he also walked," 1 John, 2: 6.

Any violation of the principle of love—the God-like principle—tends to death or extinction of being. Do you ask how? We answer; by benumbing or deadening our moral sensibilities and searing the conscience, till the man sinks down to the state of a mere brute; governed by no other law than that of the flesh, or animal nature, which has now so completely mastered him, that, like a brute he lives; his moral nature having become so near extinct that it has no control over his animal nature, and he is "carnal, sold under sin," which, "when finished, bringeth forth death," or extinction of being—he shall "be as though he had not been," Obediah, 16:—or, "be destroyed forever," Psa. 92: 7.

On the other hand, if our moral nature predominates, and we "keep our bodies under," [See 1 Cor. 9: 27.] by patterning after the example of love set us by Christ—or, learning of him who was meek and lowly in heart—our moral nature rises—becomes the all controlling power of our being; and thus we are brought to life eternal, by being turned away from our iniquity. But this life eternal is not of debt; it is "the gift of God through Jesus Christ, our Lord."

AN INQUIRY.

Jeffersonville, Ind. Oct. 8, 1849.

BROTHER STORRS.—How do you reconcile Matthew 25: 31—41, with your views of probation after the advent? I am an inquirer after truth, and am desirous of more light on this subject.

N. FIELD.

REPLY TO BR. FIELD.

If our theory, that the age of Messiah's reign, to follow the present order of things, is inconsistent with the text of which you speak, the theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked, till the end of that age, is equally irreconcilable with it. But, in our mind, Mat. 25: 31—41 indicates the entire period of Messiah's judging or ruling the world on "the throne of his glory" till he has finished the work of judgment, by a demonstration of the equality of his government, in the reward of his followers and the destruction of his enemies; which will not be accomplished in a day or year; nor, probably, in a "thousand years." One of two things is certain to our understanding, viz: Either there is to be a state of trial to those "left of the nations" after the advent, or the second advent will not occur for a very long while to come. The latter we do not believe, and therefore we are shut up to the former: and if that point is not capable of demonstration, we confess we despair of demonstrating any truth of the Bible—to us nothing is clearer.

"GOG AND MAGOG."

DEAR BR. STORRS.—I have for some time had in my possession a manuscript copied from the "Hebrew Archives," which I had intended sending you for publication some time since, but neglected it until now. I have had it re-copied, thinking at this particular juncture of affairs in Europe, it would prove highly interesting to your readers, especially so as coming from a Jewish source.

Respectfully,

Philada., Oct. 25, 1849.

Translated from the French.

THE EMPEROR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS—GOG AND MAGOG.

Extract from a discourse delivered by Rabbi Carrillon, of the Reformed Synagogue of Spanishtown, in the Island of Jamaica.

"There is but little ground for debate, but that the prophecy of Ezekiel, relating to Israel's last enemy, points conclusively to Russia, unless a radical change, from which, may God preserve us, takes place in the mind and in the political constitutions of Europe, we need not fear that any other nation than Russia will oppress the Hebrews. On the contrary, indeed, the Hebrews are continually making new advances in the esteem and friendship of all other people, both Christian and Mahomedan. Gog is pictured to us as a man filled with the ambition of subduing the whole world, and we do not know, in the existing state of affairs, any nation of Asia or Africa which conceives a project so bold. America is out of the question, and the power is equally balanced among the other nations of Europe, the majority of them friends of peace, they hold in horror every species of warfare and of conquests; even those who are not actuated by religion, public opinion and the arts and sciences. Russia is the single empire which has the disposition, and can command the means of undertaking a like campaign; and it is worthy of remark, that a prophecy is in vogue in Russia, its origin I know not, predicting that at a certain future period the Russians will become Lords of the Universe. True or false, this prophecy has a tendency to fortify them with courage, and of itself already bears witness into what extremities they are inclined to plunge in this gigantic struggle. In addition to these, there are several other reasons which induce us to believe that Russia is the empire predicted by Ezekiel, and the chief reason is drawn from the description of the country itself. In the tenth of Genesis we find the children of Japheth to have been Gomar, Magog and Madai—Javan, Tubal, Mesech and Tiras; and the sons of Gomar, Ashkenas, and Riphth and Togarmah—from them the Japhethal nations are descended, that is to say, the Chinese, Tartars, Greeks and Persians; the Germans of the North, Muscovites and other Slavonian races; and these are the very people whom Ezekiel names as forming the sources, or as being the tributaries from whence Gog is to issue. In chapter 39th the Prophet says, 'turn thy face towards Gog, of the country of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal.' The general name of the country in Scripture is Magog, and the name of its prince is Gog; but the country itself is divided into three principalities, Rosh, Meshech and Tubal. The Prophet afterwards tells us that the prince described will be accompanied with a powerful army, composed of divers nations, of the same names as those which are mentioned in Genesis, as being descendants of Japheth and Gomar; and the most of these nations the subjects, or allies of the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal, are represented to us as coming from Northern countries. We remark that the name of Rosh is not to be met with anywhere among the sons of Japheth. We know, however, that the first Czar of Great Muscovy was called Rosh, and that it was from him the empire derived the name it now bears. We know also that in former times Russia was divided into three independent States—Russia proper, or, according to some authors, Muscovy in Europe—Muscovy proper, or Russia eastern and southern—and Tobolsk, or northern Russia. The three States were finally united under the common name of Russia, and they held in subjection several nations of the Tartar and Slavonian origin. Persia itself may be considered as a dependency of Russia, or the Emperor of these three States united of Roshy, Muscovy and Tobolsky, this being the true pronunciation, and of the tributary and independent countries, is called in Scripture Gog, and his empire Magog. It is very probable this name has been given to the State because the population descends in a great measure from Magog, and Gog seems to be an abbreviation of the name of Magog, and is applicable to the chiefs of this empire. The names of the three States that compose this empire are mentioned in Scripture word for word—"Son of man, turn thy face towards Gog, of the country of Magog, the Prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal;" Rosh is Russia—Meshech Muscovy—and Tubal Tobolsky. Another combining circumstance is, that no other country is made up of so many other different nations. The prophet further tells us that these diverse nations which will march under the colors of Russia, will be armed after the fashion of the ancients, with shields, bows and arrows, and with javelins and lances, for as we are aware, notwithstanding her wide extent, Russia cannot raise an army exceeding 5 or 600,000 men in number, who are drilled according to the tactics of modern warfare, while the great mass of her troops still use arms of various kinds of darts, which were only in use among the ancients. Under still another aspect, the prophecy may be applied to Russia. It is, moreover, foretold, that of a sudden such revolts will burst forth from the numberless army of Gog, that, using the expression of the prophet, every man's hand will be raised against his brother. This portion of the prophecy is eminently applicable to Russia; for it is almost certain that Russia, engaged in a universal war, on the first reverse will witness Poland and all the portions she holds under the yoke turning their arrows against her. It is thus almost established by evidence, that Russia is the country of Magog, and that Nicholas or one of his successors is the Gog announced by the prophet, and that there is reason to believe that the latter days are not far off; let us, therefore, be on the watch and in continual prayer, that we may not be overwhelmed by a torrent of events, as a thief taken in the night!"

LETTERS.

Marysville, Ohio, Oct. 9th, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—For the edification of ourselves and the furtherance of the cause of Christ, we trouble you again for books. Our brethren in the distance have persuaded us out of those volumes of Dobney that we received, even before we had read them, and consequently we now send for more. I am very sorry that my present circumstances will not permit me to make a donation to the Examiner; but you may look for a subscription from me and some others for the next volume at $1.

BR. JOHN HUTCHINSON writes:—

Oshkosh, Wis., Oct. 7th, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—I would say for your encouragement, that through your Six Sermons and Dobney on Future Punishment one Congregational Minister, John Ingersal, in Milwaukee, has been brought into the truth. He has preached two sermons on "No immortality out of Christ." Truth is at work on this great and important subject in this region. I believe, with you, in the return of the Jews and probation after Christ sets up his everlasting kingdom. To me these truths are as clear as the sun at noon-day.

HENRI ST. CLAIR writes:—

Lafayette, La., Oct. 8th, 1849.

MR. STORRS.—Dear Sir:—Enclosed you will find two dollars, the amount due you for one copy of "Dobney," five copies of Six Sermons, and Bible Examiner for 1848 and '49. I am very much pleased with the Examiner. It has thrown a light on some passages of the Bible, and altogether strengthened my belief and faith. Myself and wife have been believers in the doctrines [of the Bible] as taught by you for more than three years;—not without opposition you may well believe;—we have read the Examiner faithfully, and I trust with some profit. I have circulated your Sermons, since I received them, to the best of my ability, and I think the truth is spreading; people are investigating the subject. You may count on me for the subscription for three copies of the Examiner from the beginning of volume three. I do sincerely hope that you will be able to sustain the paper.

BR. N. BOND writes:—

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 7th, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—I have read the Examiner a part of the time since its first publication; but moving from place to place, I have not seen all you have published—but have read sufficient, comparing it with the word of God, to fully establish the truth to my mind that the great principle you are endeavoring to establish and defend in the Examiner (viz: the doctrine of life and death,) with kindred doctrines are second to none taught in the word of God, and show to my mind most clearly the wisdom, benevolence and justice of God. The personal reign of Christ with his Saints on the earth is a doctrine which stands out very prominent and clear in the word of God. I have been a confirmed believer since 1840 that the Kingdom of God was near, even at the door. The great battle I believe is commenced; and events will thicken and hasten until no doubt will be left. As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the earth.

DR. N. FIELD writes:—

Jeffersonville, Ind., Oct. 8, 1849.

BR. STORRS.—We are much pleased with the Examiner, and wish you success in its publication. I hope it will be liberally patronized and that it will become the organ of a growing and intelligent body of people scattered abroad who are advocating the true doctrine of immortality. It should be made a medium of an interchange of views, around which the friends of truth should rally. The principles we advocate are rapidly extending.

EXAMINER FOR 1850.—Our friends will please bear in mind that one number more completes the present volume. We have decided on continuing the paper another year; but we shall adhere to our terms of payment in all cases in advance. If any, therefore, do not receive the Examiner for January, 1850, they will understand the reason is—we have not received the subscription price for it. We invite all our present subscribers to continue their favors to us. Agents should not fail to remit money in their hands before January. The following pledges have been made to the Examiner for 1850, since our October issue:

Henry F. Johnson, New York,	$5.00
J. B. Frisbie, Sylvan, Mich.,	5.00
Henry Grew, Philadelphia,	8.00
Wm. Mayell, Albany, N. Y.,	3.00

Business Notices.—For price of books see the Examiner for October.

Br. Joseph Cherry 462 Washington St., New York, is acting as Agent in the sale of Dobney on Future Punishment.

Br. C. Swartwout, Utica, N. Y., is Agent for the Examiner in that city, and has for sale Dobney—our Six Sermons, and the Christian Psalmody.

Dr. Perkins, Albany, N. Y., has Dobney and the Christian Psalmody for sale, and will act in receiving subscriptions for the Examiner.

Br. Henry Grew, of this city, has published a new edition of his pamphlet "On the Intermediate State of the Dead"—a very valuable work, of 24 pages, 12mo. Price, five cents single copy, or 83 per hundred. He can now supply any amount ordered.

Br. Henry Heyes wishes us to say, that his Post Office address is Springfield, Mass: care of R. E. Ladd.

All orders for Walsh's Review of Luther Lee must be addressed to John T. Walsh, 83 Ogden St., Philadelphia. Price 25 cents, or five copies for $1.

GENTILE TIMES: WHEN DO THEY END?

BY CHAS. T. RUSSELL.

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled."
—Luke xxi. 24.

Doubtless our Lord intended to communicate to His disciples some knowledge, and possibly it was addressed more to the disciples in our day, than to the early church.

Let us then search what times the prophecy, which was in Christ, did signify. Of course, if it be one of the secret things of God, we cannot find out; but if a secret, why should Jesus mention it? If, on the contrary, it is revealed it belongs to us. Shall we guess and suppose? No: let us go to God's treasure-house; let us search the Scriptures for the key.

Jesus does not foretell its treading under foot of the Gentiles, as Rome had her foot upon them at that time. He does tell us, however, how long it will continue so, even the disciples thought "that it was he which should have delivered Israel."

We believe that God has given the key. We believe He doeth nothing but he revealeth it unto His servants. Do we not find part of the key in Lev. xxvi. 27, 33? "I, even I will chastise you seven times for your sins; . . . and I will bring your land into desolation . . . and will scatter you among the heathen." Israel did not hearken unto the Lord, but disobeyed him, and this prophecy is now being fulfilled, and has been since the days of Zedekiah, when God said, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, . . . I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, . . . until He comes whose right it is, and I will give it unto Him." Comparing these Scriptures, we learn, that God has scattered Israel for a period of seven times, or until "He comes whose right" the Government is, and puts an end to Gentile rule or government. This gives us a clue at least, as to how long until the Jews are delivered. Further, Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, the head of gold, is recognized by God as the representative of the beast, or Gentile Governments. "A king of kings and wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, hath God given into his hand." Dan. ii. 38. God has taken the crown off Zedekiah and declared the Image, of which Nebuchadnezzar is the head, ruler of the world until the kingdom of God takes its place (casting it on its feet); and, as this is the same time at which Israel is to be delivered, (for "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled"), we here get our second clue. viz.: these two events, noted of the Scriptures of truth—"Times of Gentiles," and "Treading of Jerusalem," are parallel periods, commencing at the same time and ending at the same time; and, as in the case of Israel, their degradation was to be for seven times, so with the dominion of the Image; it lasts seven times; for, when in his pride the "Head of Gold" ignored "The God of heaven," the glory of that kingdom (which God gave him, as a representative of the Image,) departed, and it took on its beastly character, which lasts seven times. Dan. iv. 23,—and, (pre-figured by the personal degradation for seven years, of Nebuchadnezzar, the representative) until the time comes when they shall acknowledge, and "give honor to the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom." Dan. iv. 34; for all the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord when He is the Governor among the nations.

Our next question naturally, is, How long are seven times? Does God in his word, furnish us any clue from which to determine the length of that period? Yes, in Revelations we learn that three and one-half times, 42 months, and 1260 prophetic days, literal years, are the same (it has for years been so accepted by the church,) and it was so fulfilled: if three and one-half times are 1260 years, seven times would be twice as much, i. e., 2520 years. At the commencement of our Christian era, 606 years of this time had passed, (70 years captivity, and 536 from Cyrus to Christ) which deducted from 2520, would show that the seven times will end in A. D. 1914; when Jerusalem shall be delivered forever, and the Jew say of the Deliverer, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for Him and He will save us." When Gentile Governments shall have been dashed to pieces; when God shall have poured out of his fury upon the nation, and they acknowledge him King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

But, some one will say, "If the Lord intended that we should know, He would have told us plainly and distinctly how long." But, no, brethren, He never does so. The Bible is to be a light to God's children;—to the world, foolishness. Many of its writings are solely for our edification upon whom the ends of the world are come. As well say that God should have put the gold on top instead of in the bowels of the earth; it would be too common; it would lose much of its value. So with truth; but, "to you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom."

We will ask, but not now answer, another question: If the Gentile Times end in 1914, (and there are many other and clearer evidences pointing to the same time) and we are told that it shall be with fury poured out; a time of trouble such as never was before, nor ever shall be; a day of wrath, etc., how long before does the church escape? as Jesus says, "watch, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape those things coming upon the world."

Brethren, the taking by Christ of His Bride, is evidently, one of the first acts in the Judgment; for judgment must begin at the house of God.

RAGGED TOM AND HIS SURETY.

One Sunday afternoon a big boy stood at the door of a Sabbath-school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sabbath before. His father and mother had brought him, and begged that he might be received again. The Superintendent said,

"We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school, sir," said the parents, "but he is ten times worse at home; he will be lost if you do not take him back."

"We would take him back if we could secure his good behavior. I will see," said the Superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again, but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behavior. Will any one be surety for him?"

A pause followed; the elder boys shook their heads. They said they knew him so well. The others did not care for him.

But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry that no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The Superintendent soon heard his little voice saying, "if you please, sir, I will, sir."

"You, Tom! a little boy like you! Do you know what it means to be surety, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, if you please; it means that when he is a bad boy again I'm to be punished for him."

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the Superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with down-cast face, walked across the room. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that. I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—never!" I think God had put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was graciously helping Tom's work as the surety.

As the children were leaving the school, the Superintendent saw this big boy and little Tom walking and talking together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage where Tom lived, he said to the mother, "Where is your son Tom?"

"O, he is just gone up stairs with a great boy that he brought with him. I don't know what they are doing."

"May I go up?"

"O yes, sir."

The Superintendent went slowly and gently up the stairs, and as he reached the top he could see through the door that Tom and the big boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice saying, "O Lord, make this boy that has been the worst boy in the school, O Lord, make him the best boy."

The Superintendent knelt by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them. The big bad boy became one of the best boys in the school. God raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and after that sent him to a missionary college. He is now a missionary, and is preaching to the Africans about Jesus, who became the surety for sinners.—Church Union.

THE LIGHTS IN THE TENNEL.—I was traveling upon a road which I had never passed over before. There was a long train of cars crowded with passengers. In the afternoon, while there yet remained an hour of daylight, I noticed the lamps were being lighted. We journeyed on, and I watched their faint glimmering flames; scarcely could they be distinguished in the bright light of day. I wondered why they were lighted so early. Suddenly we passed into darkness. Then the lights shone with a strong, steady ray.

GENTILE TIMES: WHEN DO THEY END?

THE BIBLE EXAMINER.

This number completes the twentieth volume of the EXAMINER; also, its fifth year since its revival, or since the EDITOR took his present advanced position on the Government of God and His designs concerning the human race. He heartily thanks his gracious Lord and Master for the divine aid and comfort he has received in this new field of theology; and he thanks those friends who have so nobly stood by him, and aided him in his work, while he has been battling against the false conceptions of good and bad men in regard to the DIVINE administration over the children of men. By strict economy, and the careful use of funds that friends have furnished, the Editor has been kept clear of debt to this time; and to-day owes no man anything "save love and goodwill." He has the happiness to know that many have been emancipated from both their old and more recent traditions, and have been led to see the character and government of God in a light that has relieved their minds from a life-long burden concerning that portion of our race who have been supposed to have left this life in an utterly hopeless condition. They have learned that God has His "due time" to make known His great love to "the world," or to all men,—the entire race,—and that "due time" is not confined to this life, but reaches forward into "the ages to come;" or "the endless succession of ages;" so that "all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest;" for "God will have all men to come unto the knowledge of the truth;" which truth embraces the fact that "Christ gave Himself a ransom for all men," and "is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world;" and that "He will see of the travail of His soul, and be satisfied." But, believe it who will, He never will and never can be satisfied to have one of the race perish hopelessly, without having made known to them "the only true God and Jesus Christ," whom God "sent into the world to give life to the world," that none should perish except by their own "wilful" rejection of the "LIFE-GIVER" after they have received the knowledge of the truth."

The EDITOR intends to commence volume xxi. immediately, and trusts it will be no less interesting than previous ones have been. He would be glad to retain all the previous subscribers, but has no expectation of that, as some are still behind in payment for the past volume; which, while they offer no excuse for non-payment, indicates that they have no interest in the object of the Magazine; and the Editor does not wish to impose on them by sending it, and paying the postage himself. His practice uniformly has been, in years past, to discontinue all such when the volume closes.

A large number have received the EXAMINER the past volume on the "Club" principle. All such will now be discontinued unless they renew by complying with the offers as set forth in this and the last month's issue, or pay as single subscribers.

Individuals who have taken from two copies up to thirty, should notify me immediately what their wishes are as to the number to be sent them of Vol. xxi.; and old subscribers who have paid in full for the past should notice, without delay, as to their wish with respect to having their subscription continued. They may not be able to pay now, but they can say what their intention is, at a cost of only one cent for a "Postal Card." These matters may seem small to an individual, but they are of great importance to the Publisher: he need not tell how.

QUESTIONS OF INTEREST.

QUES. 1. "Do you believe that Christ is coming personally on this earth to reign?" M.

Ans.—I do, without a doubt. "The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." Luke i. 31-33. David's throne was never in any other place than on "this earth;" and his reign was a literal, visible, and tangible matter, and no fanciful or spiritual affair. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. Here is no spiritual going away, nor will it be a spiritual coming back; but the same Jesus. To call it a spiritual return, is to set at nought the testimony of the angels, and unsettle all divine testimony; destroying faith. Those who reject the literal return of Christ, sooner or later, are led to reject the literal resurrection of the dead. The denial of this doctrine destroys all rational faith in Christianity itself. If Christ is not personally to return, all other testimonies concerning His work of redemption are thrown to the winds, and are but chaff to disappoint our hope.

But, thank the Lord, the foundation standeth sure: Christ will come personally from heaven; for He said to His friends, "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you." John xiv. 28. Just as certain as He went away bodily and personally, so certainly will He come again "in like manner."

QUES. 2. "If so, when and where?"

ANS.—As to a definite answer to the inquiry "When?" I have none to give; except, it is near; and "in such an hour as ye know not, the Son of man cometh." Matt. xxiv. 44. As to where He will reign, that admits of no doubt to the mind of faith. It is on David's throne, and in Jerusalem: "For the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; and He shall judge (rule) among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks . . . and learn war no more; . . . and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever." Micah iv. 1-7. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. Then, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ, and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15. For then, to the Son of man "was given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve and obey him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 14. This kingdom is to be "under the whole heaven" (verse 27); and not in some other location.

It may be said, "That makes Christ's reign too material." Yes, too much so for those who deal in fancies, and construe everything by spiritualistic ideas. They might as well tell us the Jews were justified in rejecting Christ at his first advent, because He did not come to them riding on a spiritual "ass;" for the prophet had said, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." Zech. ix. 9. See John xii.

14. This was a matter altogether too material for the proud Pharisees, and they wished Jesus to stop the shouting of the multitude, and said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples." It was too much for them to have such a literal fulfilment of the prophetic utterance.

The same spirit and misapprehension exists now among a large portion of religionists. They turn everything relating to the return of Christ from heaven into some spiritualistic fancy; and are so deluded, both priests and people, that the second Advent of Christ will "come upon them unawares," and take them "as a snare." Luke xxi. 34, 35. Let us "beware" lest we, also, are led away with the delusion of a spiritual coming of our Lord, and a spiritual reign instead of a literal one. Just as certain as Jesus, the Christ, was literally on earth, He will be here again literally. Just as certain as He literally suffered on earth unto death, just so certain will He also reign literally on earth: and if "we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him," and "be glorified together with Him." 2 Tim. ii. 12, and Rom. viii. 17.

As certain as the kingdoms of this world have been literal, so will the kingdom of God and his Christ be a literal one, and will supersede these worldly kingdoms, which have all been conducted on selfish principles, for the aggrandizement of the few, while the interests of the many have been but little regarded: war, strife and violence have prevailed, with all their horrors; but the kingdom of God and his Christ will root out and for ever annihilate these evil principles and practices, and "every man sit under his vine and fig tree, and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." Micah iv. 4. Ed.

THE ORDER OF THE RESURRECTION.

Some seem to suppose my views embrace a simultaneous resurrection of all classes to be revived from the dead. So far as I now recollect, I have expressed no such idea; for certainly it is not my belief. "Every man in his own order, or band, or cohort," is Paul's idea (1 Cor. xv. 23); that is, Christ is the head of the first-fruits, and first in the resurrection; "afterward, they that are Christ's at his coming:" that completes the first fruits, or the "Body of Christ"—the "joint-heirs with Christ," who are then "glorified together" with him (Rom. viii. 17). This constitutes "the first resurrection" (Rev. xx. 5, 6). These are pronounced "blessed and holy," and "on such the second death hath no power."

At this point commences the reign of Christ and his saints, made immortal, on the earth; or the establishment of the kingdom of God spoken of in Dan. ii. 44, which will "break in pieces and consume all these" earth-born kingdoms that have ruled over men with oppression and wrong; those rulers and their dominion shall "become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind" will carry them away; their reign is eternally ended.

This view of Daniel's prophecy, and that in his seventh chapter, is confirmed by all the other Prophets since "the world began." This kingdom of God is "never to pass away, but shall stand forever;" yet it has various stages in its progress, and is divided into an "endless succession of ages." (Eph. ii. 7; iii. 21.) See Macknight's translation.

The first of those "ages to come" is that, at the commencement of which, Christ and his saints (who cannot "die any more") "take the kingdom" and their reign on earth begins, and "the kingdoms of this world" (Rev. xi. 15) "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Here begins the "age to come," next following the present age. At that point the resurrection of those who "are Christ's at his coming" takes place, or has taken place: "This is the first resurrection" (Rev. xx. 5, 6), "neither can they die any more" (Luke xx. 36); they "shall not be hurt of the second death" (Rev. ii. 11); because they are "blessed and holy" and "overcame" in their day of trial, and are now immortal, and therefore deathless like their Head. No others of the race are raised from the dead at that time. "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." (Rev. xx. 5.) This text I once thought spurious, but was several years ago convinced that it is genuine.

No resurrection of dead ones will probably occur during that age of "a thousand years;" but that period, whether literal or symbolical, will be devoted to the establishment and administration of the first perfect government earth has ever witnessed. The "righteous Branch," for David's throne, will be King on that throne, and "He shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." (Jer. xxiii. 5.) "In His days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely" (Verse 6). "The law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem: and He shall judge (rule) among many people," (the "left of all the nations," Zech. xiv. 16, and Isa. lxvi. 18-20), and He shall "rebuken strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; but they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." (Micah iv. 2-4.) "In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted; and I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever. And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem:" (verse 2-8.)

In this article it is not my object to show extensively the work to be done in the age next to come, but merely to hint at it as a work to be accomplished before the rest of the dead shall live again." To show that work, in its fulness, as revealed by "holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," would lead us into the examination of a host of prophetic utterances, wide as the Bible itself. Not until the work of reducing "the left of all nations" to a perfect harmony, and a perfect subjection to Christ and His "joint heirs," or, the wilfully rebellious of that age are cut off (Rev. xx. 8, 9), will any of "the rest of the dead" live again.

After that period, commences the work of disposing of such as had no part in "the first resurrection." Whether all of them will be called forth to a final trial at one and the same time, is not made known, nor is it material to know; yet, as an opinion, it seems likely Paul's idea of coming forth, viz., "every man in his own order," cohort or band (such is the idea of the text), is the true notion of the resurrection to follow "the thousand years."

It may probably take place in classes; either as regards nationalities, character, circumstances of previous life, more or less enlightened, childhood or age, or some likeness of previous condition; and that each class will be disposed of before another is called forth; but that all who left this life in ignorance of God's love to "the world," and that Christ "gave himself a ransom for" them, will hear that testimony "in due time;" that is, in God's own appointed time, without regard to men's traditions; such traditions ever have made, and do now, make void the counsels of God; but they will have an end when the developments of "the ages to come" shall manifest "the exceeding riches of God's grace in His kindness towards us through Christ Jesus" (Eph. ii. 7), and "the unsearchable riches of Christ" shall be so made known as "to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world (ages), hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ," (or "according to the purpose of the ages," etc.)

The foregoing remarks are designed merely as an outline of my views on the subject, to prevent misconception as to my position on the question of the dead living again. Ed.

ADAM IN PARADISE AND OUT.

Adam's childhood was in a Paradise—a garden of delights. But he was not yet prepared to appreciate it; for he knew no contrast; all was enjoyment from the commencement of his existence; and it was thus impossible to understand the greatness of his CREATOR's love, or the unbounded happiness God designed for him in the future. Hence, he must be taught by contrast with evil. "The knowledge of good and evil" was the lesson to be learned. How could this be accomplished? Not by making evil impossible; nor by forcing man to do evil; but by a simple prohibition (temporary, of course,) not to eat of that tree. He should have waited till the prohibition was removed; for there is no evidence that it would never have been removed; for to be perfect in the highest degree the time must come when man would know evil, because that is essential to a moral training; and God says, "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." (Isa. xiv. 7.) The introduction of evil, then, was of God's appointment; but SIN is another matter. Man's SIN was in not waiting God's time for the knowledge of the evil: he ate before the injunction was removed, and learned evil in a way to make it far worse to him than it would otherwise have been; but not in a way which infinite wisdom and love had not made ample provision to overrule for the highest good of the race, in the end.

Of this latter fact, God gave, on the spot and at the time, a promise, though under a veil, of the entire reversal of all the evil that had been introduced. "The Seed of the woman" was to be the RESTORER. He should undo all the evil resulting from the first transgression—"take away the sin of the world" (John i. 29); "bruise the serpent's head" (Gen. iii. 15); "destroy the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8); "destroy death" (1 Cor. xv. 26; Heb. ii. 15, and Rev. xx. 14.)

*Adam's transgression has been magnified by theologians, and God represented as exceeding angry, taking vengeance on the whole race for the one offence of Adam, etc.; all of which representations give a false view of the MAKER's character and designs toward the race. True, Adam and all his posterity were excluded, temporarily, from the tree of life, and subjected to death; but with the assurance of an ultimate restoration of the tree of life and a deliverance from death. All this was promised, it is true, under a veil in that dispensation; but no less real on that account, as God has more or less veiled all his promises and designs toward the children of men; which veils are removed in His own time. The exclusion of man from the tree of life, and subjection to death, as, also, his expulsion from Paradise, were all acts of love, and not of anger, as a depraved theology has long maintained, to the dishonor of the CREATOR, as if he had been a blind adventurer who undertook a work which he had neither skill nor power to accomplish and did not know what the result would be. Such thoughts of God, the CREATOR of all things, are worthy only of the dark ages of paganism and papal superstitions, when men's passions gave their gods a like spirit with their own. It is time there was an end of such blasphemy against God and his works.

Man at his creation was blind as to moral evil. His moral faculty, though existing, had no development—"his eyes were" not "opened" to a sense of right and wrong. A command was a necessity to bring the moral faculty into action. That command might relate to something that was right or wrong in itself: or it might relate to an action which was not wrong in itself, but made so by a command. Eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil was not wrong in itself, but it was made so by the command given. Hence, if it had not been given, man might eat thereof innocently; or, if he had waited his MAKER's time for withdrawing the prohibition, he would have come to the knowledge without the entrance of death. Adam's sin, then, was not of the highest character; i. e., it was not doing that which was evil in itself; but it was evil because he was commanded not to do it; he sinned not against a moral precept, but against a positive one; yet this was sufficient to "open his eyes" to a knowledge of good and evil, though the act was not, in the design of his MAKER, to fix his final state; as a RESTORER was provided "before the foundation of the world" (Eph. i. 4, 5, 9, 10), and proclaimed immediately after the transgression (though veiled) in the declaration of the triumph of the "seed of the woman." (Gen. iii. 15.)

Man sent out from Paradise, goes forth to learn evil by experience, and is sustained by the remembrance of that garden of delights, to which he had a promise of restoration after a season of painful trial, which, under Divine grace, shall prepare him for a higher enjoyment than he ever could have possessed without it. ### THE PERSONALITY OF CHRIST.

I would like to know your views with regard to the personality of Christ; the nature of the relationship of the Son to the Godhead bodily. If He be not God, one with the Father, how could He give His glory to another? What is your view of John i.? B.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

I am always glad to give light where I have it; but I have seen, heard, and read so much on the great controverted question, "Who is the Lord Jesus Christ?" that I have become settled that none of the contending parties—whether Trinitarians, Arians, Unitarians, or Socinians—know anything about it, so far as their theories are concerned; and they are all striving to do that which our Lord and Master has plainly said is one of those things which is not revealed, and, therefore, cannot be known; and yet each of the contending parties assume that they do know, and so put themselves "in the seat of God;" for Jesus saith, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father" (Luke x. 22; and Matt. xi. 27).

I may be met in relation to these texts, by the opposing parties, with "home-made Scripture." They quote it thus: "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father, and he to whom the Father revealeth him." Will these parties turn to these texts and see if they can find their reading? I know they cannot. The whole verse, Luke x. 22, reads thus: "All things are delivered to me of my Father; and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." Matt. xi. 27, is in nearly the same words, and expresses the same thing; both show that the knowledge of "who the Son is" is confined to the Father alone: and that no man knoweth this secret.

After laboring for years on the puzzling theories of the different contestants, and looking over their contests in the church for long centuries past, and seeing the fruits and bloody persecutions which had attended these controversies, and contemplating the spirit of proscription and the uncharitable spirit that has been produced by them, near twenty years since I became settled that all these contending parties are at war with each other from a disregard (whether ignorantly or not, God knoweth; I do not,) of the words of our Lord Jesus Christ; they wish to know, or profess to know what he said, "No man knoweth but the Father." Their controversy is with Christ himself, and is an assumption (whether wilful or not I know not; God knoweth) of knowledge belonging to the "Father" alone. Hence, the fruit of such controversy has been to fill the church with a spirit of hatred and persecution, instead of love and good will to all who accept Christ as God's appointed Redeemer and LIFE-GIVER.

As to myself, I have no test theory on this question. I have an opinion; but an opinion is not faith; hence, I have hitherto never put my opinion in print. It is much easier to give an opinion than to prove who the Son of God is: for that "no man knoweth." Hence, there is no evidence by which to demonstrate that the opinion is correct. I have not the slightest objection to giving my opinion, so far as I am personally concerned; yet if it is given, how many would at once seek to enter the arena of controversy on the subject; and I have long since determined that I will never state my opinion on the question and allow myself to be drawn into controversy about it for the reason that "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father," and therefore, to state an opinion as to who he is, and attempt to defend it for truth, would be to act in disregard of our Lord's words, just as all Trinitarians, Arians, Unitarians, and Socinians are doing, and have done for centuries past; for they all pretend to know who the Son is, and just what relation he holds to the Godhead.

Now, perhaps my inquiring friend will be more puzzled than ever. Very well; I can help him out of it, if he will follow my direction, so that his mind will be at perfect ease on the whole subject, as mine is. It is simply this: Receive every inspired declaration of the Bible concerning Jesus Christ, unquestioningly. "But how shall I reconcile this declaration with that which seems to speak opposingly?" you ask. I answer: Do not attempt it; let both stand, and receive them as they read, and allow no man to put a construction on them to alter, or to attempt to harmonize them, as they will call it. Remember, this question of who the Son is, is the great mystery of the Bible; and because it is so, and no man knoweth who He is, therefore, receive what ever inspiration saith of Him, and leave the explanation with "the Father," if he ever chooses to make it. Perhaps He never will, any more than He will explain His own self-existence. Be content, then, and not strive to be "wise above what is written." Receive Christ as having "all power in heaven and in earth given into His hands:" so that, by the Father's appointment, "He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him." Let alone all those sectarian and anti-sectarian speculations as to who the Son is, as they gender not only inexplicable puzzles, but strife, hatred, separations among Christians, and destroy love, and thus make us unlike God, and so unfit us for that pure and holy society which is to be established in the kingdom of God. Pursue this course, friend "B.," and you will find rest on this subject that is impossible to find in any of the labored and laboring theories in christendom, which have so long rent the body of Christ, been the reproach of Christianity, and shed the blood of martyrs.

May "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion [koinovia]"—the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, be with you all. Amen" (2 Cor. xiii. 14). "If there be, therefore, any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship [koinovia] of the Spirit . . . fulfil ye my joy that ye be like-minded," etc. (Phil. ii. 1, 2).

MICHAEL AND CHRIST NOT IDENTICAL.—Nearly thirty years since I gave my reasons for rejecting the idea that Michael and Christ are identical. To my mind they are clearly two distinct persons. Whoever reads Dan. x. 5-14, and believes that Daniel saw in vision the coming Messiah, and heard him say, "Michael, one of the chief princes came to help me," must be satisfied that the two are distinct persons. Jude tells us Michael is "the archangel," (verse 9); that is, he is the chief or head angel; and Paul informs us "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel," etc.; clearly making a distinction between the two; and besides, Christ is not an angel in nature; for, "He took not on him the nature of angels;" an expression unmeaning if he was already an angel; and Paul saith, "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they: for unto which of the angels said he [God], at any time, Thou art my Son?" etc. (Heb. i. 4, 5, and ii. 16.)

These testimonies settle the fact that Michael is an angel, and Christ is not; hence the standing up of Michael is not the same as the advent of Christ, however near it may approximate that event.

"TIMES OF RESTITUTION."—"Times," Acts iii. 21, is chronon, marking a succession of events, and not kairos, a point of time, a fixed, definite period, as in verse 19. (See Acts xvii. 30). Chronon includes, necessarily, protracted time, and often a long time: (see Matt. xxv. 19; Luke viii. 27, xx. 9; and John v. 6). Sometimes chronos has the qualifying term mikron, little, connected with it; (see John vii. 33; xii. 35). This expression shows that there is a long chronos; and when expressed, as in Acts iii. 21, signifies a protracted period, without defining its length, but, implying a long time; besides, the term achri, translated "until" in the text, gives the plural form to chronos, making it chronon, and hence utterly forbidding a short period. "The times of restitution," therefore, is a protracted period. It commences with the heavens unveiling Christ on his return from heaven to earth, and terminates with making all things new (Rev. xxi. 5, 6); and "it is done." "The ages to come" will continue to succeed each other, as the ages past have done, until, "in the fulness of times" He shall "gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and in earth, in Him" (Eph. i. 10).

ELD. JOHN FOORE, Kansas, writes: I cannot possibly see how any man can evade the truth we hold with regard to the fact that every one of Adam's children shall have one opportunity for an endless life. It appears to me, that none but a sectarian bigot can desire to disprove this glorious truth. Brethren, the views, held by Bro. Storrs and others, on this subject, are just as far ahead of the "Non-resurrection" view, as the doctrine of "Life only through Christ" is ahead of the "Immortal soul" theory. Go on, Bro. Storrs, and proclaim it. I do think our dear brethren will soon get their eyes open, and will lend a helping hand, and subscribe for a periodical that will show forth the love of God to a dying race. I will do all in my power to advance the cause. I send herewith the pay for two new subscribers.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—I thank Bro. FOORE for these words of encouragement, and for the remittance. The credit is given to the new subscribers on the EXAMINER forwarded from January, 1876.

The following essay is No. viii, of a series of essays, taken from a work entitled "Eruvin, or Miscellaneous Essays on subjects connected with the Nature, History, and Destiny of Man," by the Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D., F. R. S. and F. S. A., Second Edition. London, F. and J. Rivington. 1850. As time will permit, I will endeavor to send one or more essays from the work for the benefit of the readers of the EXAMINER. I would be, however, understood thus far;—whenever I send copies of articles, it by no means follows that I identify myself with every expression of the writer's thoughts, but only, that I sympathize and agree with the main position he takes.

THE KINGDOM OF MESSIAH.

First offered to the Jews—parable of the marriage of the King's Son—present dispensation—destiny of the heathen—heirs and subjects of the Kingdom.

All power, both in heaven, and in earth, is given to Him who is the Redeemer of man. "By Him are all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him and for Him."

But He has many crowns; and one of them I believe to be that which He receives as Messiah—the Redeemer of man. The Kingdom of Messiah, received from the Father is, I think, represented in the Scriptures as the reward of the sufferings in the redemption of man. For this "joy which was set before Him, He endured the cross, despising the shame." (Heb. xii. 20.) "He had humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name." (Phil. ii. 8-11.)

A Kingdom, then, distinct from His other sovereignty, belongs to Him in His character of Messiah. What is revealed concerning it, we may find a future opportunity more fully to enquire; for the present, we may observe, that a share in the Kingdom is offered to some of the human race, to whom the Redeemer will appoint a Kingdom, even as His Kingdom has been appointed to Him by His Father. I am not speaking with reference to any particular view respecting the Divine decree, when I say it is offered to some, of the human race; but am merely stating a matter of fact; for by far the greater part of mankind have received no offer of a participation in that Kingdom. It is offered only where the Gospel (emphatically called "the Gospel of the Kingdom") is made known.

[Note: "Jesus went preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom," (Matt. iv. 23; ix. 35), and He declared that before the end should come, "the Gospel of the Kingdom should be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations." (Matt. xxiv. 14.)]

The high privilege of inheriting this Kingdom, as co-heirs with the Messiah, I imagine to have been originally granted to the descendants of Abraham, in the line of Isaac. They were, as our Lord declares, "the children of the Kingdom." (Matt. viii. 12.) To them alone, (until they had actually rejected it) was that Kingdom ever known; and to them alone, was the doctrine of a redeeming Messiah revealed.* Their law nowhere commanded them to make known the dispensation which was revealed to them, and the people of Israel, while they were forbidden, under the heaviest penalties, to join in the idolatry of their neighbors, received no commission to make known the Kingdom of God to surrounding nations. Their law indeed provided for the reception of "a stranger," who should offer to join himself to them; but it did not direct that any means should be used for making proselytes, or bringing strangers into the congregation of Jehovah.

Something perfectly analogous to this may be found in the conduct and command of our Lord, previous to His rejection by the Jewish nation. "I came not," said He, "but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel;" and though (as in the cases of the Centurion, and the Syrophenicean woman) he did not reject the prayers of Gentiles, yet he did not go to seek them, and he forbade his disciples to do it. He sent them forth and commanded them, saying, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." (Matt. x. 51.) They, though then as sheep without a shepherd, were the children of the Kingdom; and it was not until they had rejected that Kingdom, and it had been "taken from them," that it was ever made known to the rest of the world.

Our Lord, who at other times had withdrawn from the populace, when they desired to make Him a King, on one occasion openly assumed that character. He came to them in the manner in which it had been predicted their King should come, and He did so in order to fulfil the prophecy. That was, as He expressed it, (Luke xix.

* I would say "fully revealed."—H. Britain.

44), "the time of their visitation," and as they knew it not, the things which belonged to their peace, were thenceforth hidden from their eyes.

Thus, when He came to those who were, in a peculiar sense, "His own," and "His own received Him not," the command was given to preach the gospel to "every creature;" and the fall of the seed of Abraham became the riches of the world.

This matter may, I think, be well illustrated by the parable, in which our Lord compares the Kingdom of heaven to the celebration of the marriage of a King's son. In that case the entertainment was not provided or intended for all the king's subjects. The invitation was given to a certain part of them; and it was not until they had refused to come that the servants were sent forth into the streets and lanes of the city, and afterwards, with a more extended commission, into the highways and hedges. They were commissioned to bring indiscriminately, any whom they might find; but it was not intended that they should bring in all the subjects of the King, but only so many as that the house might be filled. (Matt. xxi. 1: and Luke xiv. 10.) It was obviously not the intention of the King to call in the whole population of his Kingdom, but only so many that the wedding might be furnished with guests. (Matt. xxii. 10.)

To apply the parable to that Kingdom of heaven, respecting which it was professedly delivered by our Lord, I would say, that it appears to me that the period during which our Lord offered Himself and sent out His disciples, to those to whom exclusively He came—and which He has called the time of their visitation—answers to that in which the servants are represented as going forth to inform those guests who had been already invited, that the supper was ready. The rejection of Christ by the Jewish people, answers to the refusal of the guests. The sending forth of the servants with more extended commission, was (when our Lord delivered the parable) prophetic of that commission which He meant to give to His disciples, and under which the Gentile church has been, and is being collected, and upon which she now acts. I am not fond of pressing resemblances too close, but I cannot help imagining some reference to what certainly has been the case. The servants were sent first into the streets and lanes of the city. They executed their commission, and returned saying, "Lord it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room." They were then directed to go out into the highways and hedges, and compel those whom they should meet to come in. Is it fanciful to suppose that, in this two-fold commission, some allusion is made to two periods—the first, that long period in which the preaching of the gospel was confined almost entirely to Europe, or at least, to what was once the Roman Empire, and the second, a period but recently begun, in which unprecedented exertions are making to spread the knowledge of the Gospel of the Kingdom over the whole world? It may be fanciful, but I seem to recognize in the missionaries to Greenland, to Otaheite, to New Zealand, to the Indians of the East, and of the West, to the Caffre and the Hottentot, those servants who were sent into the "highways and hedges." But whether this is well founded or not, we see, I think, in the sending forth of the servants to seek guests indiscriminately from all the King's subjects who had been hitherto uninvited, a clear reference to the bringing in of the Gentile church; and learn, perhaps, something of the reasons why that Church has been formed, and of the extent to which we may expect it will be increased.

Following the language of the parable, I should say, that from the time of the rejection of the Jews to the present moment, the marriage supper of the Lamb has waited, because there are not so many guests brought in as those for whom it has been provided, or, in other words, because God has not yet "accomplished the numbers of the elect." In the meantime the table is gradually falling from the highways and hedges. Gentiles are taken to fill up the place of the Jews; and, perhaps, those who are thus brought into the Kingdom of heaven from that filling up or "fulness of the Gentiles" of which the apostle speaks; and when that fulness shall have come in—when the table shall be furnished with guests—then shall be celebrated the marriage supper of the Lamb. Such appears to be the expectation of those who pray that God "would speedily accomplish the number of the elect, and hasten His Kingdom." "When the fulness of the Gentiles shall thus have come in, all Israel shall be saved, for the Redeemer shall come out of Zion; their God and their King shall be seen upon the throne of David, and upon the Kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from thenceforth, even for ever."

In the meantime a dispensation exists, in which there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek—whosoever hears the Gospel of the Kingdom is invited to share the glory of the Redeemer, to come, whether from the East or the West, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of God. The servants of the King are sent forth to call, nay, to compel, whomsoever they may meet, "the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind, the good, and the bad." It is impossible that they should exceed their commission, for it is to "preach the Gospel to every creature;" and whosoever will, is invited to come. The guests, drawn from the highways and hedges, stand (as it respects their character of guests,) in the same situation as those who were at first invited. The wall of partition between Jew and Gentile, by which the order from the common-wealth of Israel was shut out from the Kingdom of Messiah, is broken down; and, whatever national distinction may remain in Christ Jesus, so far as relates to all the privileges of the sons of God, "neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision."

It will be obvious, that I consider those persons to whom the Gospel of the Kingdom is made known, as persons specially privileged; as receiving an offer not made to all, of glory and blessedness intended for only a part of mankind; and as being raised in that glory and blessedness, to a state to which it was never intended that the whole human race should use, either on the supposition of man's continued innocence or of his redemption. "They are not of the world," but are given to the Redeemer "out of the world," which, by the Father's love, and by His own good will, He came to redeem, that they may be with Him sharing His glory, and heirs with Him of that Kingdom which is the reward of His work. They are raised above the nature and destiny of man, being "equal to the angels." I must again recur to the parable, as affording the most concise and clear illustration of my meaning. Those whom the messengers met with, were called to a dignity never intended for all the subjects of the King, and to which all his subjects never had been, and never would be invited. Those whom the messengers did not meet had no offer, no knowledge of this dignity. So far as that was concerned they remained precisely where and what they had been. They had not this honor offered to them by the King; and, on the other hand, they did not incur the responsibility laid on those to whom the offer was made. Thus too the gospel of the Kingdom, wherever it goes, takes with it a responsibility commensurate with the glory which it offers. It is a "savor of death" as well as "of life." "He that believeth not shall be damned." Everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, (but not that I can find, prepared for all mankind,) becomes the portion of him who despises the offer of eternal life, and rejects the Gospel of the Kingdom when it has once reached him. It tells him that there is no other name given under heaven whereby he may be saved, except the name of Christ, and that if he neglects by faith and repentance to seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness, the only alternative is the damnation of hell.

I apprehend, however, that neither of these alternatives applies to him who has never heard of the Kingdom of God. That the Gentiles who are without the law and the gospel, and never heard of either, can only be saved through the work of Christ, admits of no question; but I doubt not that they will be restored to life, and redeemed from the effects of the fall, by Him in whom all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, and who is "the Saviour of all men" though "specially of them that believe."

With respect to those persons who shall have passed through life without having ever heard the sound of the Gospel, the Scripture affords us but little detailed information; and why should we expect it? To recur again to the parable (which I only do for illustration), is it likely that the invitations originally given for the guests, contained the purposes of the King towards those who were not invited? Is it probable that the messengers who were sent out were directed, or enabled, to tell those whom they met, the intention of the King toward those whom they should not meet? Surely it is not. When they met any man, their business was to call him to the supper, and explain to him the danger of neglecting the invitation, and not to tell him what would have happened to him if he had not met the messenger. It was safe for them to tell every man that he was bound, on pain of the King's displeasure, to obey the summons—that every one who did not obey it would be counted a traitor and a rebel, and punished accordingly. They might safely declare this; for though there might be thousands of subjects who might not come—who it was never intended should come—and who might nevertheless, be guiltless in the matter, yet their proclamation must be true to every man who heard it.

So with the Gospel of the Kingdom; it is strictly true, and can lead to no error. To say, "He that believeth not shall be damned," because every one who hears it is, by the very circumstance of hearing it, brought out of the number of those who may plead ignorance, or rather, of those for whom common sense and Scripture plead, on the ground that they cannot "call upon Him in whom they have not believed, nor believe in Him of whom they have not heard, nor hear without a preacher."

I repeat my belief, then, that the everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, is the portion of those only to whom the Gospel of Christ has been offered and by whom it has been rejected. I am anxious to be clearly understood on this point, because some who have maintained the salvability of the heathen have been accused (and I will not say always unjustly) of lessening the responsibility of those to whom the Kingdom of God is made known; and have been hard pressed by some parts of the Scripture, which, on their principles, they have been unable to answer. I do not however, feel embarrassed by them. I believe as fully as any one, that no man can enter into the kingdom of God unless he be born of the Spirit—unless by repentance and faith in the sacrifice of Christ, he is justified in the sight of God—and receives from Him even in this life, the spirit of adoption, which only can enable him to call God Father, and which is the earnest of his inheritance. But the reader will recollect that I do not expect the unevangelized heathen to be heirs of that Kingdom. All that I expect for them is redemption from the effects of the fall, and how far I suppose this to extend, may be seen by referring to the third and fifth essays. The heathen who have never heard the Gospel, though redeemed and restored; (and of the force of these terms I hope to speak in the next essay) will, I apprehend, remain men not raised above the original state of man; and though, as flesh and blood, they cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, yet, when flesh and blood shall no longer imply sin and sorrow, they may be the subjects of that Kingdom.

But the privilege of those who are sons of God, and equal to the angels, is much greater—so high that I feel safe only in stating it in the words of Scripture. It were tedious to cite all passages in which it is said, that they shall receive a kingdom and reign (see James ii. 5; Matt. xxv. 34; 2 Tim. ii. 12; 1 Thess. ii. 12; Rev. iii. 12.) “Do ye not know,” says the apostle, “that the saints shall judge the world?” “To him that overcometh power shall be given over the nations.”

Many commentators, indeed, tell us that, by the saints judging the world, we are to understand that they shall be assessors with Christ at the day of judgment, and join in the sentence which condemns the ungodly to perdition. If they mean by this that the saints will approve and assent to the sentence, as contradistinguished from their disputing its justice, or opposing its execution, it really seems to be saying little or nothing. We might as well call all the spectators in a court of justice judges if they concur with him who is properly the judge, because he has the power of deciding. If they mean anything more than this—anything that can, fairly, and according to the proper use of words, be called judging—it seems to me, that they join the Socinians in asserting that such judgment (namely, the final judgment, or the eternal state of man,) may be, and, in fact, is to be, committed to mere creatures.

The ideas, however, which we commonly attach to the words judge and judgment, are by no means those which are necessarily, or even properly, implied by the original word. The title of judge suggests to the mind of an English reader, simply one whose office is to try criminals, or to hear and decide suits at law. This, however, though undoubtedly included in the idea of the original word judge, is not its full meaning; but one that is accidental. The reader will immediately remember that the Judges of Israel held an office very different from that of our Judges. Their office was (as far as it could be) that of a King, or to say the least, a Governor or Ruler. “The Lord raised up Judges which delivered them out of the hand of those that spoiled them.” “When the Lord raised them up Judges, then the Lord was with the Judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies. (Judges ii. 16–18.) Thus we find shortly after, that when the children of Israel had served Chusnan Rishathaim eight years, the Lord, in answer to their prayers, raised up a deliverer in Othniel (who had been before signalized by his military powers, Judges i. 13), “and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he judged Israel and went out to war, and the Lord delivered Chusnan Rishathaim into his hand.” The same military character is recognized in his successors, Chud, Deborah, Gideon, Tola, Jephtha, Samson, and, in fact, the whole of the Book of Judges shows that by a Judge we are to understand one who exercises the function, though without bearing the name of a King. The Lord was their King, and that title was not as yet given to any other; but when the rebellious people desired a King, they did it in these very terms: “Make us a king to judge us like all the nations. And the thing displeased Samuel when they said, Give us a King to judge us. Here it is evident that the whole royal function was meant; and the meaning of judgment is further evident from the 9th and 11th verses (1 Sam. viii.) where our translators have rendered it “manner.”

From this it is evident that “to judge” is, in the language of Scripture, very commonly “to reign;” and, where it may be applied to any exercise of regal authority, it does not appear to me to express any one in particular. When, therefore, I read, that those who suffer with Christ, “shall also reign with him,” I take it to mean the same as that, “thrones shall be set and judgment given to them,"—when it is said, "the saints shall judge the world," it seems to be equivalent to saying, that they "shall reign on the earth,"—when our Lord said, "I appoint unto you a kingdom," it was that they should "sit on thrones judging."

Let me not be misunderstood as denying the fact of a general judgment in the sense in which we commonly use that word. All that I am contending for is that although there will be such a judgment, yet that is not all that we ought to understand by the words which relate to judgment and judging in the Scripture. What we commonly understand by judging is a part of the royal office in every monarchy, though in all human governments it must needs be executed by deputies, and it may be so, if it please God, in that great judgment. He to whom all judgment is committed, may appoint that judgment to others whom he may render capable of exercising it; but I must say that I see no proof or probability of this; and that it does seem to me highly improbable, that in that judgment, men should be in any proper or intelligible sense, judges or assessors with the great Judge of all.

Another point is worthy of our attention. If the saints expect a kingdom and reign, they are not themselves the subjects of that kingdom.

Undoubtedly, men and angels—all created beings are, and ever must be, subjects of the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, in the sense of inferiority and subjection to sovereign and infinite power. Again, it may be truly said, that believers in Christ are the subjects of that kingdom of grace, which He rules as Head of all things to His Church. This dispensation, however, is "the patience of the saints;" it is in this period that they suffer with Him. When they reign with Him, in whatever other sense they may be subjects, they cannot be subjects of that kingdom which they rule. Let me repeat, that I am not so absurd as to deny their infinite inferiority in all states and circumstances to Him who is God over all, blessed for ever: I only mean to state, they do not form (if I may so speak) the population, but the government of that kingdom. If they inherit a kingdom, and reign, they must, in respect to that kingdom, have subjects; and these, I imagine, will consist of "the nations of the saved," of whom I have already spoken, or of the race of man redeemed by the Saviour of all the world from all the consequences of the fall and replaced in a world restored to its original goodness by the "restitution of all things."

Acts of severity are seldom acts of policy.

THE WICKED DEAD.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

It is urged as an argument against the doctrine of future probation for the dead, by that class of Adventists who claim that none but the righteous will be raised, that the Scriptures plainly teach that the wicked dead will not have a future life. I shall not attempt to dispute this position at all. The controversy between me and this class, is not whether the wicked dead will be made alive; but the question is, what class of humanity now in death are to be reckoned "wicked dead?" There must be some definite rule by which this question can be correctly decided. That the entire race, as a race, are under sin, possessed of a sinful nature, a nature that always prompts to evil, and which if followed will lead into sin, is plain. I think, in the teachings of the holy Scriptures. It seems needless to quote Scripture in proof of the correctness of this position. Those who require testimony on this point, will please read the following quotations. (Rom. viii. 6-9, 13; vii. 19-24; iii. 9-18; Eph. ii. 2, 3.) These Scripture quotations prove that every member of the race is under the power of sin.

Are they sinners in that sense that if dead when Christ comes, they are excluded from a resurrection because they are wicked? It would seem strange if this be true, when it is certainly true that they are in no way to be blamed for being in this condition. "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly." (Rom. viii. 20.) The EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT translates as follows: "For the CREATION was made subject to frailty, not voluntarily." MURDOCK translates the text, "For the creation was subjected to vanity, not by its own choice." It is perfectly evident that the creature here referred to, is the race of men, and that with respect to their coming under the influence of sin, or a sinful nature, their choice was not consulted at all. They are not therefore, criminal on account of being possessed of a fallen, or sinful nature. Never can any member of our race become wicked in a sense to exclude him from the Divine favor until he has knowingly transgressed the divine law. "The wages of sin is death," I fully believe; but mark, "the strength of sin (to kill finally) is the law." (1 Cor. xv. 56.) It is the law that works wrath; and where there is no law there is no transgression. See Rom. ~~ix~~ 15. There is no knowledge of sin without the law; no man, therefore, can be an actual sinner till he gains a knowledge of the Divine law, and with that knowledge transgresses, or breaks that law. See Rom. iii. 20. The inspired John gives the definition of actual sin in plain, and simple language. It is this: "Sin is the transgression of the law." (1 John iii. 4.)

All men out of Christ do evil, commit sinful acts; but, "Sin is not imputed when there is no law. (Rom. v. 13.) It must be perfectly evident to all who will read the last quotation, and kindred texts, that it is not only true that individuals and classes have been, and are now destitute of the knowledge of the Divine law, but there was a period when the race, as a race, were destitute of law, and therefore, could not be on probation for an endless life. That period was "from Adam to Moses." There were individual exceptions, it is true; but this was the rule. The same idea is plainly brought out by St. Paul in other portions of his writings and teachings. When this apostle came to Athens, he stood on Mars Hill, and reprov'd the Athenians for their idolatry; but he did not reprove them unreasonably. His doctrine is plainly this: up to the time of his presentation of the Gospel to that people, they were in ignorance of the true God, and Jesus Christ; and, consequently, in their case "God winked at," (over-looked, EM. DIA.) their sin of idolatry; "but now He commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (See Acts xvii. 26-31.

This principle of making men accountable only so far as they have knowledge of the Divine law is brought out in the declaration to Israel that God will punish them for their sins because, unlike any other nation in that dispensation, God made known to the nation of the Israelites, His character and laws. (See Amos iii. 1, 2; Deut. iv. 32-35; vii. 6-9; Psa. cxlvii. 20; Acts xiv. 15, 16.)

Thus, I establish the position, beyond the power of refutation, that no man, either dead or living, is "wicked" in such sense as to exclude him from the Divine favor, unless he has knowingly, and with intent there-unto, disobeyed the Divine law. All, then, who have died out of Christ, are not wicked dead. If they are, and are, as the result, excluded from a resurrection, then all who have died in infancy are hopelessly dead; for, they are not in Christ, either by nature, or by faith. "If any one be in Christ, he is a new creation; the old things have passed away; behold! they have become new." (2 Cor. v. 17, EM. DIA.) All who are in Christ have experienced the above change; infants have not experienced, neither can they, while infants, experience such change; therefore, infants are not in Christ. There is no possible way that they can get into Christ except that they come to years of knowledge; hear of Christ, and "believe in Him." If all who fail to get into Christ in this life, are thereby deprived of a future life, then no opportunity will ever be offered infants to get into Christ, and thereby secure an endless life. This is forbidding the resurrection of a class that none believe is wicked.

With this view of the matter all is confusion. When my brother quotes texts that really prove that "the wicked," the wilful transgressor of God's law shall not be raised to a future life, I believe those texts just as firmly as he. When I am referred to such texts as the following, "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead;" (Prov. xxi. 16,) I can very readily see that no man can wander out of the way of understanding, unless he has first been in that way. If he has been in the way to life, and wilfully apostatized from that way, he will not come from death, of course.

If I am referred to John iii. 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life;" I very readily answer, I most fully believe it. Yea, I believe it just as it reads. But I do not believe that a just God will exclude any man from life because he does not believe on the Son, when no opportunity, whatever, has been given him to gain even a knowledge of the Son of God. To assume this, is to charge God with partiality, and infinite injustice.

When again I am referred to John vi. 40, and am told that none are promised a resurrection at the last day save those that believe on Christ; it is not proof to me that those who have never had an opportunity to believe on Him, either in this, or past dispensations, will never be raised from the dead. They may not be raised at the last day of this dispensation; but if impartial justice rules God's acts and decisions, they as well as others, will be granted an opportunity to believe in Christ, and have an endless life, though the granting of that opportunity necessitates their resurrection from death.

When the text is quoted that reads, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you;" and quoted to prove to me that millions of our race will be eternally cut off from life, for failing to comply with the above named condition, who have never had the smallest opportunity to even hear that there is a Christ; those who quote Scripture for this purpose have attempted the accomplishment of an impossible work. I shall believe the text as it stands, and doing so, I know it contains a conditional offer; clearly implied, of life, endless life; and the man that tells me that such a text teaches any will be deprived of life as a penalty for not eating, when all opportunity is taken from them of eating, is either self-deceived, incapable of logical investigation, or so wedded to a theory as to completely becloud his understanding.

Once more. When Editors of religious papers, professed religious teachers, or any body else, quote such texts as the following, to prove that all who do not form a life union with Christ in this life—even the unenumerated millions who have never heard that there is a Christ—are eternally cut off from life, I pity their folly. Here is the text; “He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.” The text is true, and the great principle enunciated in the text is indeed a principle of truth. The only truth intended to be taught by that declaration of Scripture is this, There is no eternal life to any save through Christ; and therefore, he who is not in Christ, is wholly destitute of even a hope of eternal life.

What has such a text to do with proving that there is no future probation for those who have had no opportunity to know of, and believe in Christ in this life? The text, to every comprehensive mind, develops a conditional plan, of life through Christ, instituted by a God of infinite love, wisdom, and justice; and contains a notification that those who do not obey the condition, will fail of life at last. It must require a large amount of ecclesiastical legerdemain to so twist, and turn texts of the above character as to make them to appear to teach that the wise, loving, and just God, who formed the plan, will doom to eternal death countless millions for failing to comply with the conditions of this plan, who never have been favored with a single word, or conception, that there is such a plan. Some among us have been called “crazy,” “cracked,” “demented,” and other delicate (?) names by Adventist Ministers; but I feel to thank God, with a heart filled with love to Him, and with admiration of the glorious plan, that we are sufficiently sane never to adopt such conclusions from such texts, as I have given above. A man that will admit that God has offered salvation to the entire race, through the plan He has devised in Christ, and then claim that He will damn thousands of millions of the men and women He has made, because they have not complied with the conditions of that plan, when they have lived and died in utter ignorance of even the existence of such plan, and even of the God who arranged it, ought not to complain if he is supposed to be laboring under some mental disability.

The man, however, who will intentionally “wrest the Scriptures” in an attempt to sustain such a theory is a blasphemer.

This is, however, the kind of warfare that is waged against us by non-resurrection Adventists; and the texts I have quoted are a sample of the Scriptures they quote, in their textual effort to prove that none will be raised from the dead, except such as form a spiritual union with Christ in this life. I have asked for such texts but none can give them. I have never found a man, or woman, that has attempted to point out to me one positive declaration of Scripture that probation for all the race ends with this life. I have been urged instead, to believe their expositions, glossings, and explanations of texts; I have been told that God has given some of them the truth while on their knees, and shown them that I am wrong. I have nothing to do with their expositions, or explanations; and I have not the slightest faith in any new revelations, whether they come through Shakers, Mormons, Spiritualists, or Adventists. They are all trash to me, and although I am cast off wholly from the sympathies of my former brethren, for doing so, I shall cast all this chaff to the winds, and rest wholly on the plain reading of the word of God in settling the question as to what I believe. I may have to suffer in consequence of pursuing this course, for Adventists are as sectarian and bigoted as any other ists; but if I do suffer for the truth's sake, it makes that more priceless in its valuation, and my suffering will, I trust, work for my good in preparing me for a high and holy calling in the great work that will be done in “the endless succession of ages.” That time of suffering will be short; for, it is but a little way before us, and our Priest-King will sit, and rule in justice, love, and power, on His father David's throne; and we, having, like the Captain of our salvation, been made perfect through suffering, shall reign side by side with Him, and minister in the priestly office, till the great work is accomplished, in bringing this earth back in harmony with Him who first spake it into being.

When that time shall come, and we shall stand redeemed, immortal, and enshrouded in the “eternal weight of glory;” and as successive ages roll away, and we see millions added to millions as the trophies of our joint work with Christ in “subduing all things unto Himself;” till at last on every hill, in every dale, o'er all the mountains, and throughout every valley, yea, over all this planet the kingdom of Christ and His Bride, His Queen, shall be extended by the joyful consent of those who have become its willing subjects, a multitude that cannot be numbered; O, how shall our hearts glow with such joy as cannot now even enter into our imagination, or heart to conceive, at the contemplation of the most bitter trials through which it was necessary for us to pass in order to fit us to fulfil this mission, do this great work, and reach this great culminating point of exaltation and glory.

In the strength that God giveth, with such prospects before us, we will gird the armor more tightly on, grasp more firmly the sword of the Spirit, and fight the battle through; fight against all the odds against us; leave the Sanballats, the Tobias, and the Geshums, to grumble, and find fault, and scold, and talk infidelity, and commit sacrilege in the plains of O, no; while we keep faithfully about our great work, till our Elder Brother shall say to us, Come up higher. That voice will, in a very little while, be heard. Yea, the voice that will speak to life from the dead, all the elect now sleeping; speak into immortality all the chosen ones of Christ, and then shall we be crowned to reign with Jesus in a Kingdom that shall never end. Amen.

THE WORK OF REDEMPTION PROGRESSIVE:

OR, "AGES" EMPLOYED IN ACCOMPLISHING IT.

The Christian church have been right in believing in the eventual conversion of the world, no doctrine of the Bible is so clear and unmistakable; but they have failed to distinguish between the work of the gospel of the kingdom, and the kingdom itself; the one being a preparatory step to the other.

If the reader will but entertain the natural and Bible outcome of this progressive plan; that "the world to come," belongs after the "world that now is;" that the passage from the one to the other, is but a change of dispensation, greater than occurred at the first advent between the law and the gospel, but still only a change of dispensation from the Gospel of the kingdom to the kingdom; a change involving a resurrection; for, "as in Adam all die, so in Christ, shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order;" he will see that "a restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began" (Acts iii. 21), is not a forced doctrine, but a necessity. He will also see that as yet, no one has entered the "world [aión, or age] to come," nor can until this one ends.

And that therefore, the Adamic death is but a sleep; and only when "they that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake," do they enter upon a future life.

Probation to a restored human family . . . is not consistent, it is true, with the idea that the heathen, and all the unconverted go to a place of torment at death; but is consistent with the statement so universal in the Bible, that they are not dead, but sleep. The almost unanimous testimony of Scripture, when one was said to die, was, that "they slept with their fathers, and were buried" &c.; "They that sleep in Jesus, will God bring with Him." And Christ said of more than one who was buried, or ready for burial, "He is not dead, but sleepeth."

This is what the Bible terms "sleep," but there is a death; to distinguish it, it is called the "second death." And it is a clearly Scriptural position that no man can die the real death, without committing that one sin which is, "unto death;" "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that ye shall not pray for it" (1 John v. 16); a sin which Paul claims that one must "taste the good word of God and the powers of the world to come," and thus be brought "to the knowledge of the truth; if such sin wilfully, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for of fiery indignation" (compare Heb. vi. 4-6, and x. 26, 27.) A sin Jesus says, "Can be forgiven, neither in this world; neither in the world to come." But one must sin wilfully after having been brought by the Holy Spirit, to the knowledge of the truth, before they can commit the sin "that is unto death." But God has declared that "He will have ALL men come to the knowledge of the truth." Before the plan of redemption is finished this will be accomplished. God has promised a resurrection to all; and a universal restitution; and that "All nations which thou hast made, shall come and worship before thee." Even the Sodomites are promised a restitution back to their "former estate." (Ezek. xvi. 55.)

There is much positive scripture, to be adduced, to prove that there is to be probation in the world to come, for all who have not been brought to the knowledge of the truth in this world, and committed the unpardonable sin. Christ gave Himself "a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." (1 Tim. ii. 6.) God "is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe." (1 Tim. iv. 10.) Not that He saves all men eter- nally; but He will save all men from the Adamic fall. Every person must and will be saved; that is, come to the knowledge of the truth, taste of the good word of God and power of the world to come; and have their sins forgiven, before they can "fall away" into that fearful condition for which "there remaineth no more sacrifice." "I have sworn by myself, the word has gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess." (Isa. xlv. 23.) Paul in reasoning "that Christ both died and rose, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God" (Rom. xiv. 11), is proving a resurrection; and that all, both dead and living, will, in the day of judgment, or millennial age, be brought to this good confession.

If it be asked, Why did not God bring these extinct nations to the knowledge of the truth before they fell asleep, if He ever intended to do so? I answer, God having arranged that there was to be a second Adam, and a second Eve, the "wife" of this second Adam (see Rev. xix. 7); and that through this second Adam all that was lost through the first Adam should be restored; has, thus far, been doing only a preparatory work. The Jewish nation supposed the promise of God that "All the families of the earth should be blessed," through the Seed of the woman, would be fulfilled under the law; while the Christian church have, with as little authority, claimed all for the gospel. If God had satisfied the Jewish nation, much Scripture in relation to Gentiles would have remained unfulfilled. If God satisfies the nominal Christian church, much prophecy irreconcilable with "the narrow way," would remain unfulfilled. But He has said that "He will be for a stone of stumbling to both the houses of Israel."

The salvation under the law, was for a class, and not for all mankind. The salvation under the "Gospel of the kingdom," is for a class, "the bride, the Lamb's wife." Hence, the way is narrow, and few there be that find it. Hence, "many are called, and few are chosen." Hence, "No man cometh unto me except the Father draw him." But in the kingdom, the waters of life will be broad and deep; and there, will the "Spirit and the bride say Come, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

As the "marriage of the Lamb," and beginning of "the restitution of all things," follows the second advent; the salvation of the world does not commence until then. Hence, Christ says, "I pray not for the world, but for them thou hast given me" (John xvii. 9); and adds, (ver. 20), "Neither pray I for these [the twelve] alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one. . . in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Notice carefully the meaning; He prays, not for the world, but for His own, His bride, all that will believe through the word of the twelve, that they all may be one with Him; "they twain become one;" and the outcome of this mystical marriage, is "that the world may believe. And, to show that this is the true order, the marriage is placed at the end of the Gospel dispensation.

The positive proof that there is an opportunity for the world after this present dispensation ends, after the second Adam and his "wife" are joined together, is gathered, first, from the order of progression given in 1 Cor. xv. 45-49. The apostle, be it remembered, is speaking not of the individual, but of the race of Adam: "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul [person]; the last Adam a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural [or animal]; and afterwards that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

The apostle's reasoning is, that the first stage of this progressive development of the human family, is to bear the image of the first man, male or female, for "they were one flesh;" after which, they are to bear the image of the "second man," who also has a "wife" who becomes one with Him. And to suppose the apostle is speaking of only the "second man" and his wife, simply the bride of Christ, is just as absurd as to suppose when speaking of the "first Adam," he meant only the individual pair. He is showing that the earthy animal man, precedes the heavenly, spiritual man, as God's true order; and therefore, the work of the "first man," precedes that of the "second man." And God does not perfect separate individuals, but works by dispensations. . . . Hence, "David hath not ascended into the heavens" (Acts ii. 34); nor has any man, "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." (John iii. 13.) And the second Adam does not begin the re-generation of the "children of the kingdom," until the "marriage of the Lamb, when His wife hath made herself ready."

As the natural [or animal] man has multiplied and replenished the earth; so also, "In the re-generation, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of His glory," will He multiply and replenish the earth with a spiritual family; "and a nation shall be born in a day." And the evidence is conclusive, that when He sits on the throne of His glory; when "the kingdom is the Lord's, and He is the governor among the nations," "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to the Lord; and all kindreds of the nations shall come and worship, before thee." But it is only when He comes in His glory, and during the sounding of the seventh trump, that "the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of our Lord (Rev. xi. 15), and He thus becomes "the governor among the nations." Hence, it is after the marriage of the Lamb; after this present dispensation is ended; and in the "world to come," that the conversion of the world, is due.

If God has been trying to save "the world before the "second man" and his wife were perfected [in opposition to His own pre-arranged plan], He has taken a strange way to do it. Why, for more than two thousand years, did He let the human family go down in death [for death reigned from Adam to Moses], with no effort to bring them to the knowledge of the truth? Why, if He was trying to save the world under the Jewish dispensation, did He make it "unlawful to give the children's meat to the dogs?" Why should Christ command His disciples, "Go not in the way of the Gentiles; and into any city of the Samaritans, enter ye not?" They were dying day by day, and if modern ideas be true, were going to hell, to eternal torment; and Christ, who was about to give His life for the world, would not allow the "bread of life" to be given them; and excused Himself by saying, "For I am sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

If there was to be no "restitution;" and this life was indeed the end of all hope to the sinner, such apparent indifference to man's eternal interests, could not be reconciled with God's professions of love to the world; "all men," "every man that cometh into the world," &c. Not a Gentile saved, or even an effort in that direction, until a pre-arranged and definite point of time had arrived; and yet God no respecter of persons: "And when the fulness of time had come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law;" and until the day of Pentecost, He made no provision for any other class. He did not come, at His first advent, to save the world; for He was sent only to those under the law. He did not even pray for the world, "I pray not for the world." (John xvii. 9.) He took upon Him our nature, "that He might taste death for every man; and "gave Himself a ransom for all; to be testified in due time." (1 Tim. ii. 6.) And this "due time," is after His second advent . . .

The Gospel is designed [now] to reach only a class, "a royal priesthood, a holy nation;" to become one with Christ; truly a wonderful exaltation, . . . exalted above angels, principalities, powers; "know ye not that ye shall judge angels?" But the gospel dispensation must end, and a new order of things commence, before the world can be reached. Here, we are to be "pilgrims and strangers," separate from the world. Here, we are to suffer, and obey the powers that be. Here, the way is narrow, "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, and few there be that find it." Here, "many are called and few are chosen;" wheat and tares grow together; evil men and seducers wax worse and worse; even as it was in the days of Noah. How then can "all know the Lord, from the least to the greatest," and "the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth, as the waters do the sea," in this dispensation?

When the "second man," Christ and His body, are complete; then begins the process of re-generation, and "the restitution of all things." "And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, [that lost by the first Adam], and the kingdom shall come to the daughters of Jerusalem (Micah iv. 8.); the bride, "the Jerusalem that is above; the mother [in prospect] of us all."

Eve was a part of the human family; and was "the mother of all living."

Then, indeed, when Christ "takes to Himself His great power and reigns," the nations will be subdued under Him. And He will rule them with a rod of iron; "and when thy judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." (Isa. xxvi. 9.) And this is the song to be sung by the immortalized bride on the "sea of glass;" "All nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest." (Rev. xv. 4.)*

* Note. The word "judgments," in Rev. xv. 4,

"Come and let us reason together, saith the Lord." If God has been trying to save the world during the gospel dispensation, He has made as great a failure as during the Jewish age. And if He was not trying to save the world during the Jewish age, nor for the thousands of years prior to that, if He did not then care how many human beings went to hell, what put the happy idea into His heart, even at this late day, to send Jesus to suffer and try to save a few; for under the Gospel, He claims but few, "narrow is the way, and few there be that find it?" If it be claimed that perhaps there was some way, before the first advent, for the myriads who never heard of a Saviour, to be saved; then it was a cruel thing to send Christ; for now there is no other way, "or name given among men, whereby we can be saved." And with all the dark ages under the papacy, there has not been one million in a hundred millions, since the Gospel began, who have had any knowledge of Christ, or the way of salvation. If any man of ordinary ability could have been in possession, for these eighteen hundred years, of one half the means of Him, whose "are the cattle upon a thousand hills," he could have placed the simple story of the Gospel before every human being on this earth.

Is God's arm shortened that it cannot save? Does He not care for perishing men? Or peradventure He sleepeth, and must be awaked; or on a journey, and left the eternal welfare of His children to a few church societies, trusting that they will successfully carry out the great plan of the redemption of a lost world.

Are God's ways unequal; or is it our theology which is unequal? It is true Christ sent His disciples with a world wide commission, to gather out from all nations a chosen people; but it is not true that He commissioned us to send all others to hell. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, shall be damned." (Mark xvi. 16.) The Greek [katakrino] "damned," occurs eighteen times, in sixteen of which it is rendered condemned. "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this" in the Greek, is (dikaionai), and means righteousness; and is so rendered, in most cases in the New Testament. And the Hebrew word occurring in Isa. xxvi. 9, (mish-pah) has precisely the same meaning. The same word occurs in Psa, cxii. 5. "He will guide His affairs with discretion," [margin, judgment.] Hence, the above texts are equivalent to saying, When Christ guides the affairs of the earth, when He is the governor among the nations, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

generation and shall [katakrino] condemn it; because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here." (Matt. xii. 41.) This has no connection with eternal torment, but means that the repentance of the Ninevites is a precedent which will condemn, or put to shame the nonrepentance of the Jews. In the next verse, the queen of the south is to condemn that generation. The Jews condemned Christ by rejecting Him and choosing Barabbas. Many thousand men and horses, were sent to the front and condemned, in our late war, being unfit for the service. And the great mass of mankind will be condemned as unfit for the service of the Master, in this "high calling." "Many are called, few are chosen." He that believeth shall be chosen, he that believeth not, shall be rejected.

If the second Adam and Eve, are to restore what was lost by the first Adam, they must of necessity restore this rejected class. And there is to be not only a restitution, but a re-generation, or reproducing. Even the Sodomites, who are held up, all through the Bible, as an example of wickedness; and "as suffering the vengeance of eternal fire" (Jude vii.); are to share in the restitution. "When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them. . . . When thy sister Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate: and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate. . . . Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elders, and thy younger; and I will give them unto thee for daughters: but not by thy covenant." (Ezek. xvi. 53-61.)

Long before this prophecy was written the Sodomites were submerged under the dead sea; and if, in the restitution of all things, they are restored to their former estate [and if the above is true, they certainly will be], Why may not Pharaoh and his Egyptian host also be restored? even if God did raise him up, and harden his heart for the express purpose "of showing forth His power."

Because God has "foreordained and predestinated certain men to destruction, is no evidence that they are not to share in the restitution, for the evidence is conclusive that such destruction, however strong the language used, has only to do with this Adamic life. Christ "tasted death for every man," Pharaoh as well as Moses. As the potter has power over the clay, to make one vessel to honor, and another to dishonor, that is, to be used for a less noble purpose; so God has power to mold the works of His hands. But that does not prove that all who are not called to this "high calling in Christ Jesus," are to be tormented to all eternity. O how lovable is the God of the Bible; and how hideous is the God of theology!

Election is a glorious doctrine; it is choosing out a few to become the bride, the spiritual mother of a redeemed world. And "we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe." (1 Tim. iv. 10.) And the fact that "He gave Himself a ransom for all, will be testified in due time" (1 Tim. ii. 6); and this dispensation is only a preparation, "that in the ages to come, He might show the exceeding riches of His grace, in His kindness towards us, through Christ." (Eph. ii. 7.)

There is a second life, as well as a second death. "As in Adam all die; so in Christ shall all be, made alive," and if any man die the second death, it will be because he crucifies Christ afresh, after having been brought to the knowledge of the truth. And "for such, there remaineth no more sacrifice, but a fearful looking for of fiery indignation."

In all the Bible, there are but two or three passages which appear to conflict with these views, and they are parables, given to illustrate certain truths; and, like the "rich man and Lazarus," refer to nations, or churches, but never to individuals.

Let it once be admitted that there is to be a restitution, that man sleeps in death, but is to live a second time, that this re-generation, or reproducing, is as universal as the generation of the first Adam, and Scripture becomes harmonious, the ways of God are equal, and His foreordinations, and denunciations, refer only to this present forfeited Adamic life; and would have been eternal in all their consequences, had not Christ, when there was no arm to save, stepped in, and as the second Adam, taken upon Himself to reproduce and restore what was lost in Adam. This being true, the other class of texts have some meaning, Christ tasted death for every man: He gave Himself a ransom for all; He is the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

There are myriads of men who have come into the world and passed out of it, who never saw this light; "How can they hear without a preacher; how can they preach unless they are sent?" And if that is true, they must receive that light hereafter.

Some think this is too good, that if the threatenings of God's wrath are confined to this Adamic life, that if Christ is to step in, and restore, and give every man a fair opportunity; men will cease to fear, and a great inducement to repentance will be lost. Indeed! then let us go back to "priest, candle, and purgatory;" if error is better than truth, let us have it in abundance. —Dr. N. H. Barbour.

DRUIDICAL RELIGION: ITS MODERN PERPETUATION.

If the reader will turn to Gen. xiii. 18, he will find it written, "Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord." On referring to the Septuagint version, the phrase rendered "in the plain of Mamre" is pura tiu drun mambree, "in, or among the oaks of Mamre." The word "drun," oaks, has the same root as the word druid; and it is well known that druidical worship was offered in the vicinity or under the umbrage of the oak-tree. A similar phrase is to be found in Gen. xiv. 13; also, in Gen. xviii. 1, it is said, "And the Lord appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre."

This reads in the Septuagint "pros tee drui tee mambree," in or among the oaks (drui) of Mamre. It is among the oaks of Mamre that Abram builds an altar to the true God; it is there also God appears to him. It is in Beersheba Abraham planted a grove or tree (Gen. xxi. 33), "and called there on the name of the Lord, the everlasting God." It is under an oak by Shechem (Gen. xxxv. 4.) Jacob hides the strange gods, and "beneath Bethel, under an oak," "Deborah was buried. (Gen. xxxv. 8.) Joshua writes the words of the agreement made between Israel and God, and then "took a great stone, and set it up there under an oak, that was by the sanctuary of the Lord." (Josh. xxiv. 26.) An angel of the Lord comes and sits under an oak in Ophrah, and addresses Gideon as he threshes wheat by the winepress (Judges vi. 11.); and on the rock under the oak the repast prepared by Gideon is consumed (19-21). It is in the same chapter (25-32) the fact of the altar of Baal having a grove by it is clearly stated.

As the worship of the eternal God was connected with altars under trees, so also the worship of false gods, was also carried on in connection with trees. It is needless to refer to the passages bearing on this worship in their entirety, the Bible student will easily find them. Suffice it to say, that Ezekiel (vi. 11-14.) says, when speaking of the punishment of Israel (ver. 13): "Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols, round about their altars, upon every high hill, on all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols." And (Hosea iv. 13): "They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms; because the shadow thereof is good."

It will have to be gleaned from other sources as to the doctrines taught by the false worshippers; but in connection with the true worship, it is known from Gen. iii. 24, that the way of "the tree of life" was kept by cherubim, so that man might not live for ever in sin; and the tree of life does not come within the range of man until the New Jerusalem descends from above, and the throne of God and of the Lamb are set in it. (Rev. xxii. 1-4.)

It has been shown that the term "drui" is first found in the Scriptures in connection with altars and worship to God. Pliny (lib. 16. cap. 44.) derives Druides from drus, an oak. The Celts called the oak Deru. Diodorus (lib. 6 and 51) mentions that the Druids were called Saronides (saron, an oak); so also Bochart. The Greeks anciently called the oak saron or sarnnis. (See Pliny, lib. 6, cap. 5.) The Druids used the Greek letters.

In the Encyclopedie Nouvelle, article "Druidism," writer Jean Raymond, Lucan, addressing the Druids, says, "According to you, the shades go not into the silent realms of Erebus, and into the pale kingdom of Pluto; the same Spirit guides, in other worlds, other limbs. Death, if what your hymns contain be true, is nothing but a period in a long life."

Pomponius Mela says, "The only doctrine which was popular was that of the immortality of the soul."

Cæsar says. "The Druids tried to persuade others that souls do not perish, and that after death they pass from one world to another; and they deem that this excites men greatly to courage, causing them to despise the fear of death."

Diodorus Siculus says, "The Gauls deposited letters written to the dead by their friends, so that they should be read by those who had gone before."

Valerius Maximus found it an ancient custom of the Gauls, "who agree, as it is known, to lend each other money, mutually to be repaid after death, because they are persuaded that the souls of men are immortal."

To the same effect also Pomponius Mela, who also states that "there are Gauls who place themselves voluntarily upon the funeral pile of their friends, so that they may continue to live together after death."

The oak was considered as a tree symbolical of the Divinity, and the mistletoe as the image of man. The mistletoe, living upon oak of a different nature to itself, and by means of it; which was like man living from God, and by means of Him, although by nature different from Him.

That God was known is manifest; for, in the religion of the Gauls, Hesus was the supreme God; this word signifying, "I am He who is." Both Polyhistor and Ammianus Marcellinus say that Pythagoras obtained from the Druids the precepts of his philosophy; and, Aristotle (so Dio- genes Laertius), with Celsus (so Origen), considered the Druids of Gaul the instructors of Greece, and the wisest and the most ancient of nations. And, later on, St. Cyril of Jerusalem, in his treatise against the Emperor Julian, when sustaining that the belief in the unity of God had existed among the strange nations before being spread among the Greeks, alleges the instance of the druids, whom he places on the level of the disciples of Zoroaster and Brahma.

The Druids are however stated to have originated from Thibet, by E. Pococke, Esq. (See his "India in Greece," pp. 100-3 and 68, for this and the subsequent remarks.) "The river Duras, Dras, or Draus, of Thibet, flows through a valley of that name in Ladakh, at a short distance north of the northern frontier of Cashmir. Rising on the 'Bultul' or 'Khantal Pass,' it flows northward to the Indus, which it joins opposite to the valley of the Morul." And by this river Dras were settled the Dryopes (Druo-pes) or chiefs of the Dras; the people of the land of the Dras were the Drui-des. The symbol of the of the Druids was the crescent, because the chiefs were of the Indu-Varisu, or Lunar race. Situated also near to the Dras are the Himala Mountains, from whence is derived the word Himmel, or "Heaven." And rising from these mountains is the Ganges or Heaven's River; the Ganges being named also the Sverga-apaga—(Sverga, heaven, and apaga, a river.) Another also of the rivers of North-Western India, the Indus, has its rise in its longest and principal stream north of the Kailas Mountains, which gave the term “Koilon,” heaven, to the Greeks, and “Cœlum” to the Romans.” Mount Kailas is regarded in the Hindoo mythology as the mansion of the gods and Jura’s paradise.

This writer enables us to trace the origin of the Druidic teaching to its primary source. The emigrants from the east carried with them their doctrines into the western countries in which they afterwards settled, or amalgamated with the original occupiers.

Some of the Druid doctrines then are:—1. Death is a period in a long life; 2. The immortality of the soul; 3. That the dead have “gone before” into another life; and, 4. That men do not cease to hold intercourse with each other after death. The least attention to these statements, and the most casual comparison, will enable the reader to perceive the identity between Druidic teaching and the religious teaching of the present day. As a well-known writer has rightly said, “Much of modern Christianity is but a spurious form of ancient Druidism.”

There are, so to speak, three waves of religious thought prominent in the earth. The wave of Buddhism, whose ultimate is annihilation; the wave of Brahminism, whose ultimate is the continued conscious existence of man at death; and the wave of Christian doctrine, whose ultimate is the conscious existence of the saved from the time of resurrection from the dead.

And the whole destiny of the human race hangs on the truth contained in this last position. “If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith also vain. But, now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.”

“For since by man—death; by man also—the resurrection from the dead.”

MERCY IN JUDGMENT.

EZEKIEL XX.

This chapter is, in my opinion, one of the most extraordinary and most valuable in the whole Bible. It gives a short epitome, as it were, of the dealings of the Almighty with his own especial people; and, so to speak, recapitulates for our instruction and profit the past history of the Jews. It at the same time lays down principles and modes of dealing with us which, read either in the light of history or of revelation, are seen to be true and just. I purpose, therefore, in this paper, to draw attention to the leading features of this highly interesting and instructive chapter.

We find, then, that certain of the elders of Israel had come “to inquire of the Lord” through the prophet Ezekiel. To these men—as representatives of the people at large—the Almighty at once and most justly replies,—if I may so far paraphrase the words used: “What is the use of your coming to know my will? you would not do it if you read it in the skies.” From this we may draw the very legitimate inference, that those who do not act up to the “light that is in them,” and strive at least to obey what they believe to be the truth, will never be able to attain to further truth or higher knowledge. Truth is not to be attained merely by the intellect,—not that I would for a moment disparage intellect, as it is the instrument whereby truth is conveyed to us,—but it is quite clear that moral sympathy with goodness and a holy life are absolutely requisite to clear away the clouds that darken the intellectual vision. The intellect, like the eye itself, can only see clearly when it is not obstructed by anything that produces darkness. So it was with these Jews who came “to inquire of the Lord.” The darkness caused by the unrighteousness of their lives, by their prejudices, and by their spiritual pride, would not have permitted them to see, as it were, even the sun in its splendor. To them the words of the prophet Amos would fully apply—“Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light.” How can it be otherwise? How is it possible for those who do not sympathize with God and strive at least to do his will to attain any comfort from him? The manifested presence of God among such would be, to say the least, disagreeable to them.

We may, if we please, quarrel with the method God uses in this matter, but we cannot deny the fact; namely, that indulgence in sin habitually has a terrible tendency to produce demoralization of the soul. It should be observed, however, that this applies chiefly, if not entirely, to those who know the truth but keep it back through the unrighteousness of their lives. The prophecy of Ezekiel, here referred to, was given to men who acknowledged Jehovah as their God, and who could not therefore plead ignorance or inability to understand what the will of God was.

Having, then, refused to grant any consolation to these wilful despisers of God's commands, the prophet goes on to remind them that as a nation they had from the very first refused instruction, and he begins by showing them the iniquities of their fathers. I myself strongly hold that nations, as nations, do bear from time to time most unmistakably the righteous visitation of the sins committed by former generations of those nations, and I think all history bears out this view. Wilful wrong-doing in the case of nations is visited ultimately with punishment on the nations as such; but as this visitation is often delayed, it must come upon other individuals than those who actually committed the offence. Take for example the French Revolution. Who can fail to see that it was the just judgment,—I may say, the natural and inevitable result,—of the conduct of the rulers, and to a great extent no doubt of the people also, during the two or three centuries preceding? What could possibly have resulted from the iniquities of France as a nation during that period except some such awful visitation? Other instances might be adduced, but I think it unnecessary to adduce them. The laws of God are fixed and unalterable. He visits the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation, whether in the case of individuals or of nations. Let it never be forgotten, however, that He rewards the good—not to three or four, but—to a thousand generations.

The prophet then goes on to tell them, that when God had made Himself known to the people in Egypt, He required of them, as a necessary preliminary to further action, that they should “cast away the abominations of their eyes, and no longer defile themselves with the idols of Egypt.” It then became necessary that they should be removed from their idols, and in the separation and silence of the desert they were brought, as it were, face to face with God. There, in the presence of fearful sights and wonders, the Israelites received the ten commandments, every one of which was in itself righteous, true, and necessary for their happiness. The institution of the Sabbath was then also made to be a sign between God and His people, and this in many ways, would have been of unspeakable advantage to them had they really obeyed the command to observe it. How full of comfort and hope, for instance, to the slave and the oppressed were the words: “that thy manservant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou.” It is, I think, probable that by means of such institutions as these that God was preparing them to recognize the truth which no other nation did, namely, that even slaves were their own flesh and blood. It even appears to have been in a great measure with a view to this that God caused the people to go down into Egypt, and there to feel the claims of the oppressed on their fellow men. “Ye know the heart of a stranger, for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.”

Again, however, did the Israelites refuse to obey: “they despised my judgments, . . . and my Sabbaths they greatly polluted.” Thus was the Lord again compelled to defer the time of their entrance into the land of Canaan; but even yet He would not destroy them, but suffered forty years to elapse in order that the whole of that generation might naturally die out. We have here, I think, a proof that when the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us to beware lest we “come short”—as the Israelites did—and so are unable to enter into the true Canaan; he does not mean that all who may thus “come short” are to be cast into hell. What the disobedient Israelites lost—and justly lost—was the promised land of Canaan; but they were not by any means cast off as God's people. Moreover, even this exclusion was not declared until these very people had shown themselves completely unworthy of it. They were pardoned for their rebellion, but they had themselves become quite unworthy of the honor to which God had called them. Compare, on this point, Numbers xiv. 20: “And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word; but as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles, which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice: surely they shall not see the land which I swore unto their fathers.” How could such a generation have become lights of the world? They were utterly unfit for it. Yet again does Jehovah give the people a chance. “I said unto their children in the wilderness, walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols. . . . and hallow my Sabbaths.” But again it was to no purpose, for the children were as bad as the fathers. Now, therefore, it became necessary to let them follow their own ways and see for themselves what horrors they would have to perpetrate if they followed the idols of Canaan. Righteously and justly, then, did the Lord allow them to be “polluted in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire” all their first-born, and sacrificed them to the idols of Canaan. But the object of all this was (verse 26) that God “might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that Jehovah was their God."

Having now vindicated God's dealings with the people, the prophet answers the elders who came to inquire of him in words of indignant and noble rebuke. "Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? . . . For when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, are ye not polluting yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day? . . . As I live, said the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you." As one reads one feels how righteousness, justice and truth go along with the burning words of the prophet, and that it would have been utterly useless, and worse than useless, for the prophet to have told them anything else from God.

Can we not see how righteous was the indignation of the prophet,—would not even a wise earthly father have used the same language with a view to bring to repentance a rebellious child? What else remained for the prophet but to say, "As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you." All this, let it be remembered, being spoken to men who "when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into God's sanctuary to pollute it." (Ezek. xxiii. 39.)

Thus, then, Israel was clearly warned, over and over again, of the consequences of their acts, but they would not hear, and so at last the wrath of God—long withheld in mercy—came upon them and took them away. But even this is done in mercy; for there are times and seasons when nothing but a wholesome severity will check disease; yet God promises that when they have been driven out of their own land and are scattered among the heathen, and so are brought, as it is here figuratively and expressively called, into "the wilderness of the people;" that then He will plead with them as He pleaded with their fathers. He will in fact give them another opportunity and bring them again under "the bond of the covenant." And thus, purified by suffering, they shall again become His people, for it was assuredly in love and mercy that he would not suffer them to become,—as they wished,— "as the heathen to serve wood and stone" (ver. 32.)

Israel, then, as a nation, purged of the wilful and obstinate rebels who shall not enter into the land of Israel (ver. 38), shall be at length restored and reinstated in the Divine favor. I have used the words "wilful and obstinate rebels," because it distinctly appears that they are those who after having gone into captivity still refuse to serve God and to do what they know to be right.

Let it be observed that in all this prophecy Ezekiel has been addressing only the disobedient,—to God's true servants and saints he says not a word. I conclude, therefore, that the saints are not here alluded to. They, like Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, and others, preserve their lives and their real liberty and are never actually captives at all. They are the heirs of the kingdom, and become kings and priests unto God: of them Caleb and Joshua are types; they did enter into the promised land, (though all that generation died in the wilderness,) and became princes and rulers in Israel. But there is no reason whatever to believe that those of the Israelites who died in the wilderness were therefore cursed and rejected for ever. On the contrary, the fact that God distinctly declares He pardoned them is proof positive that they were not. They lost the great reward, no doubt, but they were not even in this life without many blessings. The presence of God was still manifested to them, they still eat "angel's food," and were not without many a token of their Father's love and care.

Surely in all these marvellous ways of the Almighty towards his people it is impossible not to see that he was sowing among them the seeds of a better and more glorious life; in other words was educating them for the future. True it is that in this world the lesson was not learned, or at least only very imperfectly; but if the promises of God are ever to be fulfilled we have every reason to hope that the experiences of life will not be thrown away, but that with many,—may we not venture to hope with most,—they will bring forth better fruit in a new stage of existence. Why are we to be always told by theologians, that the passage in St. Peter about Christ preaching to the spirits in prison, has no reference to futurity? Why are we required to twist and pervert the plain straightforward words used by that Apostle to make them accord with the orthodox doctrines? Can we not thankfully and hopefully believe that the same God who dealt so marvellously with His rebellious people of old,—as the prophet Ezekiel here details to us,—has yet in store for them other dealings and other purposes of mercy in the next life? In this world, notwithstanding their numerous rebellions, He pardoned them for all that they had done, though he did not permit them to share the lot of Caleb and Joshua who had remained faithful; why then are we forbidden to hope that he will "do them good in their latter end?" Professing Christians too often look continually on the dark side of things. Surely it becomes them to trust in that God who in spite of their sins has been merciful to them; and not to repress the heaven-sent instincts of their hearts. Passages of Scripture are numerous enough in which a future restoration of mankind, as a race, is more than hinted at; and, to my mind at least, the very fact that God does not spare to punish when it is necessary, is in itself a proof that he destines mankind as a whole to a happier future existence.

One further lesson this chapter teaches us, and it is one of the greatest possible importance. We find that when Ezekiel had thus spoken to the elders of Israel, and through them to the whole people; though they listened to all that was said,—as we learn from Ezekiel xxxiii. 31: "They come unto thee, . . . and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them,"—yet they made light of the prophet's words and professed to think that he was not speaking what was literally true, but only the language of hyperbole or of parable. To guard against any such idea the prophet is instructed to tell them that it is a real literal fact (xxxiii. 33), and that they will one day be forced to acknowledge it.

I draw from this and other passages, the inference that God is terribly in earnest when he threatens, and that though he may in mercy restrain his righteous indignation, yet if rebellion is confirmed and obstinate, vengeance will at last inevitably follow. All the suffering in the world, and the misery that follows sin, are clear proofs that God does not and will not speak in vain. "Hath he said and shall he not do it?" God does indeed mean what he says in regard to the infliction of righteous punishment. Yet if this be true, how much more is it true in regard to that in which he delights, namely, forgiveness, mercy and love? Hath he promised these and shall he not perform? Surely his very punishments, so little pleasing to him, so reluctantly sent, are in themselves proofs that he will infinitely more abound in mercy when the hour of punishment is past. "His anger endureth but a moment," but "His mercy endureth for ever."

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BRO. STORRS: I bless God to-day that he has raised up and prepared just such instruments as it has pleased him, and through them has brought to light and life the BIBLE EXAMINER. And O, how cheering the thought that its writers and readers, in general, are Bible examiners. This was the feeling of my heart, while reading in the Herald of Life, letters on "the Ages to Come," by "J. C. D." Surely, "God is love;" and taking this exalted standpoint, the argument of "J. C. D." sinks into nothing before one "Thus saith the LORD." How powerfully the Word of God rushed into my mind after reading the articles. O that "D." could have taken that glorious standpoint, and looked at Rom. xi. With what compassion and love would he exclaim, "Poor broken off branches! broken off through unbelief! there is hope for you; though now sleeping in the dust of the earth. For the fulness of the Gentiles is almost come in; then there will be no more blindness; and so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written. There shall come out of Zion the DELIVERER, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." (O bless the Lord forever, that sins will be forgiven after the great Deliverer comes.) "As concerning the Gospel, they are enemies for your (Gentiles) sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the father's sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye (Gentiles) in times past have not believed God, yet now have obtained mercy through their unbelief: even so have these (broken off branches) also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may (future tense) obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, (why?) that he might have mercy upon all. "Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out." But I bless God for what he has shown us of his ways so far, and for the light that is growing brighter and brighter. O, to think of our narrow views! how short sighted! we even act and write as though God's great plan, concerning man and redemption, was about finished; a little more and things are wound up! Not so, to me; it seems but the early morning of God's plan of love and mercy to fallen man. Let us look at the beginning. Gen. i. 1. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Is this God the Father? Let us see: Heb. i. 1, "God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom he made the world." Verse 8. "But unto the Son he saith, (he, the Father), Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom," etc." "And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thy hands." Again, see Col. i. 15-20. The apostle, speaking by inspiration of the Son of God, says, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: for by him (the Son) were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." "And he is the head of the body, the Church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. And having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; (i. e., unto the Father), by him I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." Here we see that there is much to be done. The Father has done and will yet do great things by Jesus Christ; it seems that the body, i. e., the church, is not yet complete; that some heirs of glory are yet to come in; and when that is done, then comes the glorious resurrection of the body; for, it is evident that the Head will not reign without the body; for it is written of Christ, that he is to put down all rule, and all authority, and power; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death; and that is more than a thousand years after the first resurrection. And as Christ said to the church of Thyatira, "But that which ye have already hold fast till I come: and he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star."

It seems now but a little more than the dark genesis of the Church of Christ. She must be born from the dead and married. She is now espoused unto one husband, that she may be presented as a chaste virgin to Christ. But when married, she will be the Bride, the Lamb's Wife. John the revelator says, "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluiah: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he said unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. These are the true sayings of God."

Amen. Bless the Lord. Then, "the Spirit, and the Bride will say, COME. And let him that heareth say, Come; and whosoever will, may Come, and take of the waters of life freely." Bless the Lord forever, and let all holy things say, AMEN. The objector may say, To whom will they say. Come? We will let Jesus tell. (See John xvii. 20-23.) "Neither pray I for these (the disciples) alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in me; that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me."

Bless the Lord forever. It is the perfect oneness of God and Christ, and His church or Bride, that shall give the world the true knowledge that God sent Jesus into the world to save it. And that he so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life. "This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. We read that, "Of the increase of his (Christ's) government, and peace, there shall be no end." Mark, the increase. So we see that God's plan of love, is broad enough, and long enough, through Jesus Christ, to save every creature that it is possible to save, and fill the universe with holy inhabitants.

May God forgive all that through ignorance wrest the Scriptures to prove that there will be no "Ages to come," in which God will "shew the exceeding riches of His grace, in His kindness" toward his people "through Jesus Christ." That God may preserve us blameless unto his coming, is the prayer of your sister in the Lord.

FROM PROF. J. F. HUBER.

BRO. STORRS: Please find enclosed $5, for four copies of the next Volume (21st) of the BIBLE EXAMINER to be sent to me as hitherto, that I may have the delightful privilege of spreading the precious truth contained, advocated, and scripturally circulated, as it richly deserves.

Many a single article, editorial and from able correspondents, is abundantly worth more than the yearly subscription price, and subscribers would be amply compensated by the attainment of most interesting, important, cheering and God-honoring truths in relation to the eternal succession of ages to come, exhibiting the Divine character, as it really is, transcendently glorious, merciful and gracious, tender, compassionate, and loving beyond all human conception, and worthy of our highest admiration, and the profoundest gratitude, trust and love of all intelligent creatures.

May the Lord continue to give you much grace, wisdom, strength, support and success in the further prosecution of this, your special work of labor, and may the pages of the "EXAMINER" be enriched still more and more to the glory of God, to the conversion of sinners, and the edification of saints, and their increase in knowledge and grace, as well as in usefulness, happiness and joy.

August, 1876.

BRO. BLAIN wishes me to say, that his "health is not much changed; hopes that rest and cooler weather may renew" his "strength so as to do something more for our blessed cause." He sends the following letter from Ohio, to him, for insertion in the EXAMINER.

ED.

DEAR BRO. BLAIN: Having, years ago, read "Death not Life," and being interested therein at the time, and having gone, as I thought, alone far beyond that, so much so that my brethren could not bear with me, and I could not be induced to give up my search for the whole truth, they threw me in the back-ground and left me; but a short time ago, the Lord, in a singular way, put into my hands a work published by you, entitled "HOPE FOR OUR RACE," and, thank God, I found I was not alone; that God has some, reserved yet who have not bowed the knee to Baal. I do not know as this will reach you, but if it does, and you will send me your pamphlet "New Light," I will forward you the price when I know what that is. My motto is, "Buy the truth and sell it not." If this reaches you, you may hear from me again. I am like yourself in years, but once in two or three weeks I speak to a small congregation who have their eyes somewhat opened to the truth.

Truly, yours,
Ohio, August, 1876.

SILAS COOK.

ELD. BLAIN says, "correspondents must wait for replies" from him," or accept short ones."

ED.

ELD. WM. M. DARROW, Pennsylvania, writes: It is with pleasure I respond to your call in the EXAMINER for July, that "The time seems to have come when further help will be needed, or another suspension must take place" of the EXAMINER. To me, it seems as if it could not be that its visits to my home must cease; nor do I yet believe that the lovers of truth will decline to support it, and not pledge themselves till enough is raised to keep "the only true God" honoring cause alive. I will pay my subscription early. May the God of all grace bless you and yours; and we all have an abundant entrance into His everlasting kingdom.

AZRO AND ELIZA A. B. BENTON, of Vermont, write: We still read and prize the BIBLE EXAMINER the same as ever, and believe it unfolds such deep truth of God's word that but few, comparatively, among us are willing to give their attention, time, or money to "buy it;" but of those who have, we think they will "sell it not;" and hope their number will greatly increase. It is in our hearts to use our influence in spreading this light, as we have opportunity, by lending and giving our numbers of your Magazine, as we have done very earnestly. Hoping that God will sustain, bless, and continue your labors till Jesus comes to consummate our joy in the Hope of the Gospel.

MARGARET SMITH, Maryland, writes: I have been a reader of your Magazine for several years, and would greatly miss it. I think it excellent for unfolding Bible truth. I am daily being more confirmed in the doctrine advocated in the EXAMINER that "GOD IS LOVE."

ERRATA —Please correct the following errors found in this volume, viz:

Page 155, 13th line from bottom, 2d col., insert the word, not, after the words, "the penalty is."

Page 196, 1st col., 8th line from top, insert the words, another to, after the word "giving."

Page 272, 2d col., 27th line from bottom, for, "and that," read and not.

Page 319, 2d verse, first line of Poetry, for, "words," read, worlds. Same page, 2d col., in DIBBLE's letter, 12th line, for "a proof," read reproof. In the same letter, 3d paragraph from the end, 1st line, for "long," read, love.

Page 335, 1st col., 27th line from bottom, for "larger," read, longer.

Page 336, 1st col., 2d line from bottom, instead of "promises," read, premises; and on the next page, 3d line from top, for "poles," read, pales.

I do not pretend these are all the errors of this volume, but such as most affect the sense.

EDITOR.

HENRY A. TROEGER, Illinois, writes: In order to help you in spreading the truth we have concluded, in renewing our "Club," to pay full price for the EXAMINER, as we cannot see it go down: and it seems to me that all, who have received light and comfort through it, ought, if able, to be willing to pay $2 per year for it. Please continue our "club," as heretofore, and find our subscriptions enclosed for the next volume. I am still unable to work; but our blessed Master most gloriously keeps his precious promises. Yours, "looking for the blessed hope."

BIBLE EXAMINER BOUND.

VOLUME 20 of this Magazine will be bound immediately. Those who wish to avail themselves of it should inform me immediately, as I have not as many to bind as of previous volumes. The price will be $2 including postage.

I have still a supply of volumes 18 and 19; bound, which I will furnish at the same rate per volume.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

1. For one new subscriber, with $2, I will give an unbound volume, of either 16, 17, 18, or 19, as they may choose.

2. For three new subscribers, with $6, he shall receive, unbound, all four of the volumes 16, 17, 18, and 19; or, if he prefers it, he shall have either volume 18 or 19 bound.

3. For five new subscribers, with $10, he shall receive both volumes 18 and 19, bound.

4. For eight new subscribers, with $15, he shall receive all three of volumes 18, 19, and 20, bound.

In all the offers, the persons who claim the premiums must pay the mail or Express charges on the bound works sent them.

VOLUMES 18 or 19 of this Magazine will be furnished in plain morocco and gilt binding (to any who may desire it), at short notice. PRICE, $3.25 free of postage; or, $3 when called for or sent by Express.

BIBLE EXAMINER BOUND.

VOLUME 20 of this Magazine will be bound immediately. Those who wish to avail themselves of it should inform me immediately, as I have not as many to bind as of previous volumes. The price will be $2 including postage.

I have still a supply of volumes 18 and 19; bound, which I will furnish at the same rate per volume.

GEO STORRS.

POSTAGE.—The new law on printed matter is as follows: "On transient newspapers, magazines, and all kinds of printed matter, except circulars, ONE cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof." A new privilege is also granted: the sender may write his or her name and address on the inside or on the outside wrapper, preceded by the word "From."

By some misfortune, the 16 pages forming the middle portion of the BIBLE EXAMINER for August were printed so as to make it impossible to use them in the regular issue. I have had them put up separate at an expense to myself and printer of near $15. They are full of excellent matter. Any person who would like to scatter them, can have them by sending sufficient to prepay the postage, which will be about three cents for five copies. If any one feels able and is disposed to send something to help us in the loss, it will be thankfully received; but no claim will be made for them.

TO CLUBS FOR VOL. XXI.

FOUR copies will be sent to one address for $5.

TEN will be sent to one address for $10. Those who take ten copies, may have them sent in two parcels of 5 copies each to two different persons; but I cannot consent to let clubs be divided into less than five copies to one address. If clubs are obtained, and it is wished to send a part of the copies to single individuals, 25 cents, each, must be added to cover my additional expense in the work of mailing.

Please do not forget this.

To accommodate those who cannot obtain a club of 5, I will send two copies to one address for $3.

CORRESPONDENCE.

T. J. BARDWELL, Kentucky, writes: Please continue the EXAMINER to me. It is a work I highly appreciate and would not do without it for the price of it.

L. VON ESCHEN, Wisconsin, writes: I like the BIBLE EXAMINER, and must have it while I can. I endorse the most of its teachings, and feel thankful to God that he has permitted me to learn of the blessed doctrine of the "ages to come."

MRS. I. G. MALTBY, Conn., writes: I prize your valuable Magazine above all other periodicals. There is much in it that brings God very near, and makes one feel that He can be approached as an earthly Father. It seems like a firm foundation—a rest of faith—a pillar that will hold us up if we lean on it ever so hard; it makes the character of God lovable.

G. B. MARTIN, Iowa, writes: I fully believe the doctrine the EXAMINER teaches; especially on the future hope for our race, and the kingdom of Jesus and his glorified Bride. O glorious day! O blessed hope! My heart leaps forward at the thought. How I long for the time to meet the Saviour. It is 50 years since I embraced the hope of the gospel. I was then in my 19th year, and I have felt every inch of the ground that I have ever taken. My object has been to know and understand the truth and to obey the Lord from the love of the truth and obedience to it. I have had much persecution from those who did not love the truth. My motto has been to obey the Lord; do right and not wrong. I think the time has come for the saints to lift up their heads; for their redemption draweth nigh.

THE EDITOR OF THIS MAGAZINE.

As the twenty-first volume of the BIBLE EXAMINER is now being entered on, and as many may be readers who have had no knowledge of the past way in which the EDITOR has been led, it is thought best to give a brief statement of his past and present positions in theology. To most of the readers of the EXAMINER there will be nothing new in the statement, though it is presumed they will not be displeased to see the facts re-stated at the commencement of this new volume, and at the time when the EDITOR is within two months of "four score" years.

GEORGE STORRS was born in Lebanon, N. H., December 13, 1796.

The way in which the LORD has led his servant hitherto, has been to him mysterious; but it has been one, also, of very great mercy. His earliest desire from a child, was to be a Christian; and sixty-one years have now passed since he first experienced joy and peace in believing in Jesus. He then "saw men as trees walking," and knew but little of man's nature or of God's designs in relation to him. He "thought as a child;" he "spake as a child;" and he wonders now, surrounded as he was by the popular theology of those days, at the marvellous loving kindness of God, who caused the light to shine on his heart to deliver him from the iron views of that period when the blessed God was represented as "foreordaining whatsoever cometh to pass," and as having determined "the eternal torment of immortal souls before he ever gave them being." Gradually, the first part of these ideas was dispelled from His servant's mind; and as he constantly prayed that God his Saviour would unfold the glories of His truth to his mind, he found more and more that the perfections of God, as revealed in His word, must shine on that word to enable us to obtain a true knowledge of man and the destiny his Creator designed for him.

Relieved perfectly from the fatalism of those times, and beholding the truth that "God is LOVE," he commenced preaching, about fifty-two years since, at the age of twenty-seven. For fifteen years, nearly, he held and promulgated the views of immortal souls and endless torments, the then prevalent doctrine; still feeling that theology of that stamp was difficult to harmonize with the great central truth—"God is LOVE." It never occurred to him, however, that there could be any doubt of the correctness of it. He was sincere in his belief, but had learned it more from "standard authors" than from the Bible itself. He was led, by the providence of God, into such intercourse with all classes of professed Christians as tended to remove sectarian exclusiveness from his mind.

In this state of mind, thirty-eight years ago last May, for the first time in his life, he was led to entertain the idea that, possibly, "man's soul" was not inherently immortal, and that the annihilation of the wicked might be true. That subject became one of close and constant study, by the Bible alone, for something over three years, and resulted in the full and firm persuasion that inherent immortality and endless misery were both utterly irreconcilable with the Bible teaching—unharmonious with the great central fact—"God is LOVE," and hence to be rejected; and thirty-six years ago, or in 1840, GEORGE STORRS repudiated and renounced such doctrines, as of human invention and unworthy of belief. So much was then settled in his mind; and on those points he has never had a moment's doubt from that day to the present hour. Thus terminated about one-half of his Christian life. Two years later, or in the spring of 1842, he preached and published "SIX SERMONS" on the immortality question, which was his first public effort in that direction, though he had, one year previously, published "THREE LETTERS" on the subject, written to a prominent Methodist minister, while progressing in his investigations. The "SIX SERMONS" have since been revised, and would be now much further revised if he felt called to issue another edition with his present views.

He now just began to understand that the Bible was "The Book" from which he was to learn the perfections of God, man's nature and destiny, and the way to life eternal; also, that the literal and plain record was to govern, or rule, and the figurative and symbolical were to be made to harmonize with such testimony. Thus studying the Bible, he soon learned "the dead know not anything," and that a future life was dependent upon a resurrection from the dead; still supposing, however, that the wicked dead would live again, but die a second time.

From this view he was led to advance to the position that a future life was a matter of promise, a free gift, and bestowed only on such as were connected with the LIFE-GIVER, by being made "partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet. i. 4) by faith, or a belief in Jesus, the spiritual Adam.

This position he felt compelled to take from two considerations; first, his foundation principles seemed inevitably to lead to that conclusion, as man had no life principle in himself by which to be revived when once dead; second, as "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. vi. 23), it appeared wholly inconsistent, in the government of God, to suppose that He would, by an act of power, bring men into life from the dead, not as an act of mercy, but simply to deprive them of life a second time; which seemed to partake of the spirit of revenge rather than as an act of justice; certainly no mercy or love could be conceived of in such an administration. To this conclusion he was led by the idea, so nearly universal, that in no case would there be any hope of a change in any man's moral condition in a future life; and that, if one not in a spiritual union with Christ, was made alive from the dead he must unavoidably die again.

On this ground MR. STORRS stood for about fifteen years, or till the winter of 1870-1. During that winter he was confined to his bed several months, and his life despaired of. For three months he could neither read nor hear reading, and part of the time was unable to see company. His thoughts were now almost wholly turned inward and upward. The ways and word of God occupied his mind, freed from all foreign influences; and he dwelt much on the promises of God, especially those to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The result of his meditations had led him to a firm persuasion that those promises were to have a fulfilment in a fulness and a literalness that had never before entered his thoughts, and a flood of light broke upon his mind, on the great scheme of human redemption, which filled him with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." (1 Pet. i. 8.) Christ now appeared as the GREAT RESTORER; and His saints, made immortal by a resurrection from the dead, "as workers together with Him" in the great and glorious "Restitution of all things" lost by the first Adam; of which restitution "all the holy prophets" had "spoken since the world began," commencing with the Edenic promise of bruising the serpent's head by the "seed of the woman." In Eden was the RESTORER first spoken of and the foundation laid for the hope of the race: evil shall end. The work of the RESTORER will never cease till the race (the mass of it) will be delivered from sin and all its consequences; a work worthy of its Author; and which, though it may occupy "ages to come," will as certainly be accomplished as that God "cannot" make oath to a "lie."

The great error of all religious sects and parties lies in the assumption that every son and daughter of Adam's race will have had a final probation in the present and past ages, and that there is probation for none of them in "the ages to come;" whereas, a personal trial is secured to every one of them; and that trial does not commence till God's remedy for sin and death is proclaimed to them, and they are placed in circumstances to avail themselves of it; then, if they wilfully reject it, they die for their own sin and live no more. That there is no probation to any of the race in another age or life, is an unfounded assumption, having not a single testimony in the word of God for its support. It is one of those "traditions of men" which "make void the word of God," and the authors, however unintentionally, are corruptors of the testimony of God, which he has confirmed by an oath.

The marked epochs of Mr. Storrs' life have been as follows: (1.) His conversion, at the age of eighteen. (2.) His deliverance from the Christian fatalism of that period, and the commencement of his public ministry, at the age of twenty-seven. (3.) His emerging from the popular doctrine of inherent immortality and endless torments of the wicked, at the age of forty-four. (4.) At the age of about sixty he was led to embrace the idea, that apart from a spiritual union with Christ none would be revived from the dead; overlooking the fact that such could only be the case of those who had wilfully rejected Christ after having received the knowledge of him. Another fact was also overlooked, viz., There is a human as well as a divine union with Christ. As the Son of man, He is "the head of every man" (1 Cor. xi. 3), and that union is never dissolved except by a wilful rejection of Christ as the LIFE-GIVER. (5.) His advance into the full and unwavering belief of a perfect and literal fulfilment of the Edenic and Abrahamic promises of the end of evil, and a perfect probationary state to every man, woman, and child of the race, in some of the ages past or to come, in this life or a future one. This last advance occurred at the age of seventy-four.

These epochs live in his mind with unfeigned gratitude to God and his Christ for the light, liberty, and glory so richly bestowed on one who has nothing to boast, only, "that, by the grace of God, I am what I am;" and all these manifestations have come to the recipient through the boundless love and mercy of a covenant God: to His name, and the name of our LIFE-GIVER, be all the glory of all that is good and true in him who has been the happy partaker of this grace.

In advocating the view last named, GEORGE STORRS designs to spend the remainder of his days of pilgrimage. How soon those days may now end, he knoweth not; and whether it will be by "falling asleep in Jesus," or by a translation, at our Lord's return "from heaven," he cannot tell; but he certainly feels, more than ever, an earnest desire that the remainder of his present life may be so spent that he shall have the assurance, in himself, that he "seeketh not his own, but the things that are Jesus Christ's." Time is too short to seek any object less than the glory of our LIFE-GIVER, whose coming from heaven to glorify his redeemed people cannot be far off. Of that fact, no doubt has rested on his mind for the last twenty-eight years; yet no fixing of definite time, hour, day, or year, for that event, has had his approval since 1844; nor can it have, unless events hereafter shall indicate clearly, more than anything yet advanced has done, the truth of such time-fixing. He is willing, however, that others should express their convictions on that subject, provided they do so in a charitable manner, not making it a test question. He will try to do and teach whatever he is satisfied the Lord calls him to, till his work is done. To this end he commits himself into the hands of God our Saviour, feeling fully assured that He is too wise and kind not to do all things in the best possible manner for all who put their trust in him.

EDITOR.

THE MYSTERY OF THE AGES.

"According to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept a secret since the world (aionois, the ages) began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."
—Rom. xvi. 25, 26.

A mystery is something hinted at, or but imperfectly known, not clear; obscurely presented, yet may possibly be found out by careful study; or it may not be understood except by a further revelation from its author.

The mystery of which our text speaks is thus set forth in Eph. i. 9, 10: "Having made known unto us the mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself: "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth; even in him."

Thus, it is now revealed that God's purpose was, from the beginning of the ages, to make his Son the uniting power both in heaven and earth, to make one family of angels and men in some future age or "dispensation;" and that His purpose embraced "all in heaven and earth." But this purpose of "His good pleasure" was for several ages so imperfectly revealed as to be called a "mystery." True, it was implied in the declaration in Eden that the seed of the woman should crush the serpent's head; and more fully expressed in the promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that in them and their "seed all the families of the earth should be blessed;" yet, it would seem that the families of Israel became so removed in mind from the spirit of these "exceeding great and precious promises" that they appropriated them wholly to themselves, and supposed the Gentiles were no better than "dogs," and would have no part in the salvation of God.

Hence, the great offence to the Jews was that Jesus was proclaimed as "the Saviour of the world;" the Gentiles as well as of their own nation, who had in their sins and pride monopolized all the promises of God, to the exclusion of all other people. It was still a mystery to them that those whom they stigmatized as "Gentile dogs" should ever have part in God's love and plan of redemption. But the truth was made known to the Apostles, and primitive believers, that God's love was a love extended to "all men, everywhere," and of every class; and they acted on this belief wherever they went; and regarded the entire human family as "of one blood," and as the subjects of the redemption by that one "blood of Jesus, the Christ," the Son of God, "who gave Himself a ransom for all" men; to "be testified in due time;" that is, in God's time.

But at length came the "Apostacy;" and the professed Church became, like the Jews of old, persecutors of all men who did not conform to their customs and creeds; so again, all those outside of their organizations were counted as reprobates; another name for "dogs;" and the mystery of the Jewish times returned and overspread what was called "the church;" and she has wandered on in darkness as to God's love to "the world;" and by fire, temporal and eternal, and wrath, manifested towards those dissenting from her faith, have endeavored to make converts to their apostate theories and practices. Thus have they departed from and lost sight of the revelation of God's purpose to gather together all things in Christ in "the dispensation of the fulness of times;" a period yet future, and not to be realized till after Christ's return from heaven, and after various dispensations, or "ages to come."

They have "shut up the kingdom of heaven against" the vast multitude of "men;" and they "neither enter into" the spirit of that kingdom "themselves, and they that are" so doing, they "hinder" by their ignorance of or hostility to the truth that the mystery has had a revelation, in the person of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, that "God will have all men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth" that Jesus Christ shall "be made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." And until this is done to each and every son and daughter of the human family their final state cannot become unutterably fixed "according to the purpose of God's good pleasure, which he purposed in Himself," "before the ages began."

The ages past and present, are only the "Introduction" to "the ages to come,"—the time in which God has been preparing the materials for the grand work "To make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world" (aionon, the ages) "hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ:" or, if any one likes the expression better, "for Jesus Christ." And then we see a reason why "God purposed to gather all things together in one in Christ, both which are in heaven and in earth." (Eph. i. 9, 10, and iii. 9.) When Christ takes the kingdom and the marriage of the Lamb has taken place, God will "pour out His Spirit upon all flesh;" then the "SPIRIT and the BRIDE will say COME;" and the angel (the Bride of Christ, after the marriage) will be seen to "fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach . . . to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people;" (Rev. xiv. 6); a work that has never yet been done and never will be till the Bride is glorified with Christ, her Lord and Head. ED.

A QUESTION.

"Is the resurrection one of penalty and punishment for sins committed in this present life?"

P.

So far as I see, at present, there is no such resurrection as one of penalty, strictly speaking; that is, there is no revival from the dead for the sake of punishment, or as a punishment. All who ever rise from the dead arise in God's remedial plan of mercy. Punishment may follow it, as a necessity, to awaken in them a sense of the evil of being out of harmony with God; but it is dictated by love, and designed for their good to prepare their minds, by repentance, to accept God's provided Redeemer, who "tasted death for every man and gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time" (Heb. ii. 9, and 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6). To those embraced in the resurrection to which I here refer, that "due time" never did come in this "present life;" but God's plan and designs of mercy are not to be defeated by death, as it passed upon the race from Adam the first. He provided the Second Adam; and, "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men" (John i. 4); and, also, "The bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world" (John vi. 33). As broad as was the death that followed the one that sinned, so broad is the life to be restored; "for, as by one man's disobedience the many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall the many" (the same all men) be made righteous" (Rom. v. 19). By the sin of Adam, all men were treated as sinners, though not actual sinners, but death reigned over all: so by the obedience of the Second Adam, all men are to be treated as righteous, though not actually righteous, but the death by the first Adam is "abolished" by the Second Adam; for "According to God's own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished (annulled, abrogated) death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel" (2 Tim. i. 9, 10).

To me it is evident, death by Adam does not and can not hold one of the human race. If they come not up from that death, it is because they have had God's remedy for sin made known to them and have wilfully refused to use that healing power: they were not held because they were mortal, but because they refused the Son of God, in whom life and immortality was treasured up for them.

I repeat it, therefore, there is no revival from the dead but one of grace or favor. To those not kings and priests, it is that God shall cause His love to them to be made known, and the "ransom" Christ made should be "testified" to them; and with them, it is God's "due time" that this testimony should be made, and decides their final destiny; and is, hence, called "the judgment; the day of judgment." "He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts xvii. 31). All men—all "the world" that God "loved"—"all" men for whom Christ "gave himself a ransom," are to be judged by having these facts laid before them, and to know that God is both just and merciful; "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. iii. 9): hence, has made sure by promise and oath that all men, everywhere, should hear of His love, and have an opportunity to be benefitted by it, and thus be blessed with the means of life and bliss eternal, and which shall result in such a state, unless forfeited by "despising the riches of His goodness, forbearance and long suffering" (Rom i. 4).

PROMISES TO BE FULFILLED.

"Unto you, first, God having raised up his Son Jesus sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities" (Acts iii. 26).

These words of the apostle Peter were prefaced thus: "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (verse 25). The doctrine here developed is, First: God's purpose and promise was to bless all the race of Adam. Second: In order to this, He determined to do it through Abraham and his seed. Third: That seed must "first" be prepared. Fourth: To be prepared every one of them must be blessed by being "turned away from their iniquities." Fifth: Till this seed is thus prepared the work of "blessing all the kindreds of the earth will not begin in its perfection. Sixth: the present dispensation is, therefore, only PREPARATORY to the work of carrying out God's promise and oath to Abraham. Seventh: This fact accounts for the darkness that has prevailed hitherto over the mass of the human race. Eighth: Hence, it is certain that the coming ages will be probationary to those who in the previous ages have been left in a benighted state. Ninth: Also, that the blindness will be removed "first" from all Israel; and, "All Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the DELIVERER, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. xi. 26); "turning away EVERY ONE of you from his iniquities."

Has this work been done in the past? No. Will it ever be done? Yes, just as sure as the voice of inspiration has uttered the language above written. Objectors may fill the air with the cry of "impossible," and say, "the vast majority have died in their sins, and cannot be reached." God himself shall answer such: "Behold I am the Lord, the God of ALL FLESH: is there anything too hard for Me?" (Jer. xxxii. 27). Yea, God saith, "Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth: and I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first: and I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against Me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against Me; and it shall be to ME a name of joy, a praise and an honor before ALL NATIONS of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it. . . . Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days and at that time, will I cause the BRANCH of righteousness to grow up unto David; and He shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith he shall be called, The LORD our Righteousness" (Jer. xxxiii. 6-9, 14-16).

Such testimony cannot be set aside in any impartial mind, unwarpd by creeds and unbiased by prejudice. It plainly speaks of God's promises in such language as cannot be made to apply to any other period than "the kingdom of God," or the reign of Messiah on the "throne of his father David" (Luke i. 32).

The work then of blessing all the kindreds of the earth cannot be commenced in its fulness till the present dispensation ends, and Jesus returns from heaven, Abraham and all that are Christ's at his coming are made immortal, crowned kings and priests, and Judah and Israel are turned away from their iniquities. Then, and not till then, the work of blessing all the families of the earth, all nations, and all the kindreds of the earth, will begin in its perfection, and "the veil that is spread over all nations" (Isa. xxv. 7) will be destroyed or taken away. At that point of time the kingdom of God is set up, and supersedes all the previous kingdoms of the earth; for, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27).

What "blindness in part hath happened" to most professed Christians to suppose that the point where the materials are prepared for the work of subjecting "all things" to Christ, and that God "might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth, even in Him" (Eph. i. 10); that just at this point the work should cease! Everything is prepared to fulfil, in all its glory, the promise and oath to Abraham, the whole work is to cease! Truly, such a conclusion looks as if the CREATOR was like the man who was "intending to build a tower," but not having "counted the cost," was "not able to finish it" (Luke xiv. 29). Rest assured, the GOVERNOR of this world will meet with no such disaster. He knew the end from the beginning. He will perfect His work, and do all His pleasure.

THE MIGHTY DIFFERENCE.

The difference between a gospel which only relates to one's personal salvation, whether it is a salvation from endless torments, or from the second death, or a salvation from the grave, (meaning a resurrection), and the salvation which relates to the work of blessing our race, under the government of Christ, the Second Adam, in "the ages to come," is a difference which no tongue nor pen can describe. The first is made up of selfishness and fancy, mingled, it may be, with a degree of love to God; the other is Christ-like, which, while it looks to "the joy set before" us, is actuated by love to the race for whom Christ died, and willingly endures present crosses and trials that thereby they may be fitted to reign with Christ in blessing "all the families of the earth" when the kingdom is established on the earth and under the whole heaven. This latter view expands the heart, exalts God, fills its possessor with love to God and to those whom God so loved (viz., "the world") as to give his Son, that by faith in him they might have eternal life. It rises far above the narrow selfishness which cares but little for the rest of the race, for whom Christ died, if they can only be made happy themselves. Like the Jews, of old, such cannot bear the idea that the ignorant people and nations, who never have had their advantages, should have the means of knowing and being benefitted by the Gospel they have possessed, because, possibly, those people who have died without the knowledge God has, of his grace, favored themselves with. It is time this narrow spirit was banished from Christendom: a spirit which dishonors God reproaches His government, and ties up the hand of the immutable JEHOVAH, who has sworn, by himself, that he has no pleasure in the death of the sinner, and who has given his Son "a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." To multitudes, it will be declared in "the ages to come," and will be done by those who have so improved the present and past ages as to be prepared to be "kings and priests" in the future.

POVERTY'S MOAN, AND BLESSING.

A lover of Jesus, to whom I have sent the EXAMINER gratis the year past, sent me a letter which deeply affected my heart, and made me feel that the poor, who want the EXAMINER must and shall have it; whatever it costs the Publisher. She writes thus: "BRO. STORRS: With a sad heart I write you. For a long time I have felt it duty to write to you in regard to the non-payment for the EXAMINER. No doubt your ears are daily saluted with the cries of the poor: but let me tell you, my brother, your sister, who is now writing, is very poor; scarcely has the comforts of life; my husband's health is very poor, expecting every Spring and Autumn to see him go down with consumption. Nothing but poverty would have kept me from paying you for your most valuable Magazine; but I cannot ask you to send it to me any longer without pay. You have been very good in sending it so long free; but you will get your reward in 'the ages to come,' which we shall enter soon, as the signs of the times indicate. I hope you will accept the small remittance which I send you" (50 cts.) "remembering the 'widow's mite.' Your sister, whose prayer is, 'Thy Kingdom Come.'"

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—No, my sister, I cannot "accept" it, nor retain it; it must go back to you, and tell you, that Jesus has seen thy offering and "accepted" it; and I will take Him for your surety in the matter, and a hundred more in like circumstances, and not fear but what I should be an "hundred-fold" the better off for so doing. May the LORD be thy support and COMFORTER.

If any one speaks ill of thee, consider whether he has truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee.—Selected.

"FOLLOWING AFTER TRUTH:"

"Being Extracts from the Published Writing of HENRY DUNN, (of England), from 1856 to 1875. With Additional Papers and Editorial Notes."

[NOTICE BY THE EDITOR OF THE BIBLE EXAMINER.—I have called attention to this work in some late numbers of this Magazine and given short extracts; but in giving the whole work to my readers I have thought it important that the entire "INTRODUCTION" should precede the main body of the work; especially is this important that it may be seen from which of Mr. DUNN's works the various articles are taken, as that will give a better insight to the subject of which he treats. It is hardly possible to give a more interesting summary of the subjects to which this Magazine is devoted than will be found in these writings.]

INTRODUCTION.

Whether the thoughts embodied in the following pages are worth preserving in this or any other form may perhaps be questioned; but as several of the books which contain them are now out of print, and as some of these productions have found no inconsiderable number of appreciative readers, both in England and America, it can scarcely be deemed altogether impertinent to endeavor by selection and arrangement, to give to the whole a unity which, although actual, has not always been visible in detached portions.

The works referred to came out in the following order:—

- 1.—"THE COMFORTER, OR JOY IN THE HOLY GHOST" (1856, 2nd Edition, 1857).

The main object of this little book was to correct certain errors which, in the opinion of the author, had gathered round the doctrine of the indwelling Spirit. The point specially urged in it is that the action of the Spirit of God upon the soul of man is not on the intellect, but on the heart; or, at least, on the intellect only through the heart; that His work is not, as St. Basil puts it, "to give intellectual light by affording illumination to every rational faculty in the investigation of truth," but to cleanse the human spirit by removing pride, prejudice, and uncandid habits, and thus to purge the eye of the mind.

- II.—"THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH, A SUPPLEMENT TO THE COMFORTER," (1857.)

This was intended to expound what is called in Scripture "the unction of the Holy One;" to show the connection which subsists between objective truth and inner life; and to set forth the reality of the distinction between the Church and the world.

- III.—"THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE," a series of Chapters intended to promote Truth and Unity (1862, 3rd edition, 1870).

This volume points out various hindrances to the profitable perusal of the Holy Scriptures; specially such as arise from wrong views regarding the illuminating Spirit, and from forgetfulness of the fact that the most important truths revealed in the Bible are by no means the most obvious.

It asserts that Scripture, like nature, only whispers its secrets to the trained ear and lowly heart; that the book in which the word of God is embodied must, in order to be understood, be studied as a whole; that if the New Testament throws its radiance backward upon the Jewish economy, the Old Testament no less projects a light upon the Christian dispensation that can be found only in the law and the prophets; that so far from the visible Church being the appointed expounder of Divine truth, it is altogether unrecognized in Scripture as an organization; that what we call Christendom, and sometimes rejoice in as the kingdom of God upon earth, forms no part of the Divine purpose, so far as that purpose was revealed to the seers of old.

- IV.—"THE DESTINY OF THE HUMAN RACE," a Scriptural Inquiry. (1863, 2 vols. cr. 8vo., later edition in one volume.)

This book, in six parts, deals with its great subject as one which must be referred entirely to Scripture. It embraces the consideration of a variety of questions which are, in turn, examined by the light of Divine revelation; and it leads to the conclusion that brighter prospects are presented to us in the Bible as to the ultimate condition of the masses of mankind than are usually recognized by orthodox divines.

- V.—"THE SONG OF SONGS, AN ALLEGORY AND ITS INTERPRETATION." (1864.)

The song is here supposed to consist of four eclogues, viz., I. The new-born soul going after Wisdom. II. The wooing of the soul by Wisdom. III. The espousals of Wisdom and the soul. IV. The blessedness of the union.

- VI.—"THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD," as taught by the apostle Paul in the Epistle to the Romans. (1865.)

The appendices to this volume, which consist of brief essays on "Human Ignorance of Divine Things;" on "Future Retribution;" on the doctrine of "Election;" and on a "Promised Restoration," bring out fully the author's views on eternal punishment and on Divine sovereignty;

—the immediate salvation of the few being regarded as intended to secure the ultimate restoration of the many.

VII.—“ORGANIZED CHRISTIANITY,—Is it of Man or of God?” (1865, seventh thousand, 1875.)

This little work treats generally of the Primitive Church and of modern ministry.

VIII.—“LIBER LIBRORUM: its Structure, Limitations, and Purposes,” a friendly communication to a reluctant sceptic. (1867.)

The inspiration and Divine authority of Scripture, its difficulties, and its interpretation here pass under review, and are accompanied by observations on “the Verifying Faculty,” on Tradition, and on Bibliolathy.

IX.—“THE KINGDOM OF GOD THE KINGDOM OF THE RESURRECTION,” or Humanity restored by Christ: an answer to the question, “What is the Gospel?” (1868.)

The title expresses the character of the volume. It is intended to show that the kingdom of Christ is an objective one, and not merely “a spiritual reign;” that so far as it has yet existed upon the earth, it has been only preparatory and subjective; that it involves the complete accomplishment of God’s original design in creation; and that it will include the reconstitution and gradual restoration of humanity in the fear and favor of God,—physical, mental, moral, and spiritual perfection.

X.—“WHAT I HAVE WRITTEN:” a Letter, explanatory, and defensive, regarding the Future of the Human Race. (1869.)

XI.—“THE CHURCHES: a History and an Argument.” (1872.)

In this work the idea of Protestantism as purely individual Christianity is carried out in its logical development. It maintains that the Christian societies we find in the New Testament, though divinely organized, were provisional, and lost their raison d’être when inspired men had disappeared; that since then all associations between Christians exist only jure humano, and are most useful when we recognize that they are optional.

Under the title of “CHRISTIANITY IRRESPECTIVE OF CHURCHES; Thirteen Letters to an Italian Nobleman,” the substance of the above volume has been translated into French, Spanish, and Italian, editions of which have been circulated in these countries.

XII.—“FACTS, NOT FAIRY TALES.” Brief notes on Mr. Matthew Arnold’s “Literature and Dogma.” (1873.)

A supplementary note contains remarks upon the Sermon on the Mount, with brief references to the writings of Mr. Greg, Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. Leslie Stephen, and others, so far as they bear on our Lord’s discourse.

XIII.—“HOUSEHOLD COMMUNION; its Restoration the only Effectual Protest against Romanizing Error and Sectarian Exclusiveness: with an apology for the Isolated.” (1874.)

XIV.—“THE LIMITATIONS OF CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITY: Thoughts on Aggressive Christianity.” (1875.)

The object of this book is twofold. It is intended to set forth the limitations of our responsibility in relation to the ungodly, and to promote the reconsideration by qualified persons of much that is embodied in evangelical theology.

XV.—“THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN; simply analyzed and briefly expounded.” (1850.)

This little book embodies the “Book of the Unveiling, an exposition with notes.” (1833.)

XVI.—“THE INTERPRETER:” a monthly periodical, published during the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, and written exclusively by the author of the preceding works.

XVII.—“SUNDAY MORNING,” published during the years 1870, 1871, and 1872.

The above, with sundry reviews, magazine articles, and tracts, comprise those writings of the author, from which extracts are taken.

That the present as well as other states of being will eventually be found to have been to every man more or less probationary can scarcely be doubted. As a man sows, so must he reap. But it by no means necessarily follows, as most persons seem to suppose it does, that therefore probation is the one supreme object of life; that eternal issues hang on the few and short years of every one of us; that this sad and brief period is considered by God of sufficient importance to decide man’s character and destiny for ever. Still less does it follow that this is the case whether the human being lives but a few hours, or whether he painfully drags out in ignorance and misery his allotted threescore years and ten; whether he is born a savage, or introduced at birth into a highly civilized community; whether he is taught letters, or abandoned to ignorance; whether he is trained in virtue, or schooled only in vice; whatever, in short, may be the character of his youth or riper years, whatever may have been his advantages or disadvantages—moral, intellectual, or spiritual.

Such, however, is, without doubt, the common belief among Christians; grounded, as it is supposed to be, on the direct teachings of Scripture, and therefore held to be in perfect harmony with the character of that God who is there revealed to us in Christ, as absolutely wise and good, loving and pitiful, His tender mercies being over all His works, and His kindness enduring for ever.

It may indeed be said that, of late years, this form of thought has been greatly modified; that comparatively few now hold that the heathen, or indeed any who have not enjoyed the advantages of Christian teaching, are necessarily lost for ever. And the remark is doubtless a true one if taken with the requisite limitations.

That persons in the forlorn condition supposed may be saved is frequently admitted as a possibility by Evangelical Christians, and sometimes cherished as a hope; but it is by such rarely believed in as a revealed fact; the very admission of a possibility in the case is commonly regarded as dangerous,—the hope a very questionable one.

It is considered to be so because all such expectations are thought likely to lessen the anxiety we ought to feel on the behalf of lost ones, and to deaden the zeal we desire to quicken, in support of missionary undertakings. Why, it is said, should we think it needful to have any decided opinion on a question the solution of which is concealed? Surely it is better to content ourselves with the assurance that the Judge of all the earth will do right, and under that conviction endeavor to fulfil the obligations imposed upon us to carry the glad tidings of salvation to every child of Adam, than to speculate on the future lot of any man, or to perplex ourselves with mysteries that are insoluble.

This mode of disposing of the question is certainly a very plausible one, and would be worthy of universal acceptance, did it not generally assume everything that a thoughtful man finds reason to doubt.

I. It assumes that Scripture distinctly teaches—which is by no means the fact—that, allowing possibly for special circumstances of an unfavorable kind, every man's eternal destiny is decided by his conduct and character here; and wherever the gospel of Christ is preached, by his belief or unbelief of the message.

II. It assumes that Divine revelation, as embodied in Scripture, is not sunlight, but twilight; that it discourages instead of approving minute investigation into what it hints rather than asserts; that it makes no appeal to the reason or understanding of a man;* that it does not ask or expect his approbation, as a moral and reasonable creature, of what God does;* that it is intended to leave on our minds the impression that the condition of the world is an unsolved mystery,—that human life is to a great extent an enigma; that faith is opposed to perception; that it is a greater thing therefore to believe in the Divine wisdom and goodness, than it is to see the absolute accordance of all His doings with that which He has taught us is right.

It assumes that Scripture, instead of being given to stimulate and to guide inquiry into the ways and character of God, is simply intended to calm and pacify us by assurances of His wisdom and love; that, in short, Christ was not given to remove the clouds and darkness which, under the old dispensation, hung over the Divine procedure, but to reconcile us to continued obscurity; that it is therefore better to say, in the power of faith, "Righteousness and judgment are the pillars of His throne"—whether we are able to perceive it or not,—than it is to be joyful because God hath "made known unto us the mysteries of His will, according to the good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself," and thus enabled us to perceive the righteousness we are called upon to approve and adore.

III. It assumes that as this world of ours, in its present state, was the scene of the Saviour's humiliation, so, without any second advent of the Redeemer, will it, by the universal spread of the Gospel, one day become the theatre of His triumph; that His glorification therefore will be spiritual, and not personal or visible; that He will have "the heathen for His inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession," whenever that portion of mankind which may, at the given period, be living upon the earth shall universally acknowledge His sway.

IV. It assumes, therefore, that, for the accomplishment of this Divine promise, the resurrection of the innumerable dead who have lived and departed hence since the creation is not necessary; that when any one generation of Jews, for example, shall cordially own Christ as the Messiah, the declaration of Paul will be fulfilled, and "all Israel shall be saved;" that the arrival of such a period of universal belief will be "the dispensation of the fulness of time,"—the age in which God by His Spirit will thus gather together in one all things in Christ,"—i. e., all things then living on the earth,—the innumerable myriads of the lost having nothing to do with the question.

V. Finally, and as a consequence of the foregoing, it assumes that the Church, with the Bible in its hands and the Holy Spirit as its sustainer and guide, is the appointed agent for the salvation of the world; that the advent of the Comforter, as the fruit of Christ's work and His special gift, was intended to meet, and will eventually meet, all the wants of humanity; that therefore the personal and visible reign of Christ is needless, and the expectation of it unwarranted; that, although this theory seems to involve the eternal ruin of the vast majority of mankind, it becomes us to bow before the inscrutable, and again to say, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

* The following texts should be considered:—Matt. xv. 16, xvi. 3; Mark vii. 18; Ephes. i. 18.

* Ezek. xviii. 29; Luke xii. 57.

Such are the assumptions which quiet, and in the main satisfy, not only those who have good reason to believe that their own eternal happiness is secure, but—strange to say—are perfectly satisfactory also to an innumerable multitude who seem glad to rest in a vague belief that—come what may—God will be found too kind to inflict any serious punishment on them or theirs, for the offences they may have committed in a world like this.

The leading object of the writer has been to show that these suppositions—however time-honored—are unwarrantable; that they are not fairly deducible from Holy Writ; that they are, in fact, inconsistent with what God has therein revealed.

The design of the present volume is to concentrate what has thus appeared, and to exhibit its bearing on that great cardinal truth which is the key to all mysteries, viz., that human life is educational: that reaping as we sow is the universal and inexorable law of God's creation; that development in goodness is capable of being hindered and thrown back by human perversity; that God's law is imperative,—retribution being an essential characteristic of the Divine government; that such retribution is, as a rule, disciplinary, and may, for aught we can tell, stretch through untold ages; that the love of God, manifested in the gift of Christ, does not interfere with its operation; that the end of that manifestation is to save the race from utter destruction, and to exalt an elect people to the higher dignities of the eternal world.

The present salvation of the few thus becomes a means, and not a hindrance (as the doctrine of reprobation supposes), to the ultimate salvation of the many.—EDITOR.

INSPIRATION.

PRELIMINARY.

THE Bible, properly speaking, is a record of the various Divine revelations God has made of Himself to men, rather than a revelation itself.

It simply makes known to us what "holy men of old spake" when they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and what Christ and His apostles taught when they were upon the earth. And it does this because such God-breathed communications are in the highest sense "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction, and for correction in righteousness."

Knowing that theories of inspiration are the real difficulty with many in admitting the claims of the Bible, the writer has felt it needful to be definite on this subject. That some may be unwilling to allow all that he has advanced is probable enough, but this is no reason for withholding a careful consideration of what he says.

It will be observed that the author distinctly denies that inspiration, properly speaking, is a thing of degree. That which is really inspired of God he insists must be infallible.

Nor does he think that any real difficulty is disposed of by maintaining, as many do, that the Word Incarnate typically represents the written word, both alike being, in the same sense, human and divine. This could only be true if everything in Scripture was as perfect and God-like as Christ was when veiled in humanity, which no one pretends is the case.

To open our Bibles and to read them as if the book in its present form had dropped from the skies, however apparently reverential, is mere superstition, and alike stupid, ignorant, and mischievous. On the other hand, to submit the volume to what is called "modern historical criticism" without regard to its peculiar character, is to commit a folly almost sure to end in blind unbelief.

That interpretations may occasionally deform, and mistranslations sometimes pervert what is written, must be allowed, but the character of the book is not thereby affected. It must stand or fall by the truthfulness or otherwise of the claim it makes to be received as the only authoritative record we have of God's dealings with man in the past, and the only guide in reference to what may be expected in the future.

It becomes needful therefore to ascertain, and to define, as distinctly as possible, what is meant by Inspiration when the word is used in reference to Holy Scripture; to notice the Limitations under which it is placed; to mark the extent of the claim made for the Inspiration of the Bible in the Book itself; to inquire whether or no God has given to man a verifying faculty, and a principle by means of which he can separate the inspired from the uninspired; to insist upon the necessity, under all the circumstances, of a Divine teacher, since without spiritual insight it is impossible that the spiritual should be discerned; and to show that the apparent paradox which seems to be involved in such a statement is not essentially different from that which meets us in other departments of life. Such is the order of thought here followed.—EDITOR.

DEFINITION.

Inspiration is that process by which God, for an end, not only communicates to certain men facts or truths, the knowledge of which could not be attained in any other way; but also the ability to teach others, without error or defect, the truths thus revealed. Inspiration, therefore, properly so called, implies both reception and utterance, the capacity to receive, and the power to communicate Divine truth authoritatively and infallibly. That which is not infallibly true cannot be a revelation from God. That which is not communicated to man without any admixture of error cannot, properly speaking, be the word of the heavenly Father.

By an inspired MAN, then, I understand one who has received, by a direct inbreathing of light and truth from God, a message to others; a commission involving an obligation sometimes to speak, sometimes to write, sometimes, under providential guidance, to record faithfully a fact or conversation or discourse; sometimes, under like conditions, to narrate a history; sometimes to compile and edit existing documents; sometimes to write letters; and sometimes to predict future events.

In the execution of such tasks, infallibility will doubtless belong to all that has been directly revealed from above; to all prediction founded thereupon; and to all that is communicated by special command; but not, by any means, of necessity to everything that has thus providentially been preserved from oblivion.

The person so commissioned may thoroughly comprehend his own words, or he may have the depth of meaning involved in his utterance concealed from him. He may, like Luke, write only because "many having taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of things surely believed," it "seemed good" to him to write also; or, like Daniel, he may record words respecting which he is obliged to say, "I heard, but I understood not." He may, like Paul on one occasion, feel that he speaks "by permission," and not by commandment; or, like the same apostle at another time, he may claim to express himself "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." He may speak with authority, and demand audience as a messenger of God; or he may beseech and entreat, as a fellow-sufferer, that his words may be received with a loving heart, since love alone moves him to utter them. He may be altogether unconscious that he is writing for all time, foreseeing the wants of all generations, and supplying the Church with spiritual nourishment for two thousand years; or he may have some slight and dim intimation that this is the case.

Let these things, however, be as they may, it is indisputable that, if inspired in this high sense, the man is gifted with all that is requisite to enable him to execute the Divine commission faithfully; which he can of course only do by receiving from Him who gave it such light as may be needful to enlighten others—such supernatural guidance as may be required to preserve him from important error.

The way in which this may be accomplished is no concern of ours. To what extent such men unite with the Divine Revealer; how far they themselves accurately understand that which they communicate to others; or how far they are merely passive instruments in the hands of God, it is impossible for us to know, nor is it of any moment that we should have an opinion on the subject. What we want to ascertain is, not how apostles or prophets received that which they have recorded, but whether that which they say is their own or God's; whether it is merely a human judgment, or a Divine and therefore authoritative message. For if the teachings be only the words of men so purified and morally elevated that their instructions are weightier, more God-like, more profitable than those of other men if they who speak or write have not received that which they tell us is from God, as a message to be delivered, they have not been inspired at all, in the only sense which ought to be attached to that word when we connect it with Holy Scripture.

It has already been said that we have nothing whatever to do with the mode in which inspired men may be supposed to have received the Divine gift. Perhaps we have as little concern with the precise form in which they embody the thought that has been given them, whether it be in prose or poetry, in narrative or in epistle, in parable or in lengthened discourse. All that we want to be assured of is, that certain teaching may reasonably be confided in as Divine and therefore infallible,—that it is, in short, pure truth without error or alloy. If this assurance cannot be had, it is but folly to attach the importance to the Bible we do, or to seek guidance of men who lived and died eighteen hundred years ago, rather than in the highest spiritual intuitions of our own souls.—Liber Librorum.

LIMITATIONS.

The doubts and difficulties which so many feel in the present day regarding Scripture have, I think, been greatly aggravated by the loose way in which some good men have allowed themselves to make use of the term Inspiration.

An instance is before me. I find an eminent Nonconformist minister thus delivering himself in an address which has been widely circulated, and, so far as I know, without calling forth a single remark or remonstrance. He is speaking of preachers, and his thoughts find expression in the following words:—"There are times," he says, "when we (the ministers of the Gospel) are conscious of a strangely vivid and intense apprehension of the eternal and Divine. A power which is not our own takes possession of us. We cease to originate our own thoughts. We listen in silence to supernatural teaching. The people know when these visions have come to us. The words which we speak under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost move the very depths of their spiritual life." Again, "What we need to know must be revealed; it cannot be discovered. Without the immediate teaching of the Spirit we may be lecturers on Christian doctrine and ethics, but we are not ambassadors of Christ."

The assertion here is that preachers, either in speaking or in their studies—for it is not quite clear which—are sometimes inspired; and to such an extent that they cease to originate their own thoughts, and listen in silence to supernatural teaching. A power which is not their own takes possession of them. The people know when these visions have come to them, and are assured that they are spoken under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, by feeling that the words uttered move the very depths of their spiritual life.

Of the delusions that may come upon any of us in the study, little can be said, for one man cannot enter into the consciousness of another; but everybody knows how common these delusions are. They have been revealed again and again in the biographies of saints, both papal and protestant.

The experiences of hearers under sermons are, however, not so difficult to arrive at. They vary, of course, and that to an extent which is sometimes ludicrous. But who ever heard a sane and sensible man say that he knew, by the power of words that had moved the depths of his spiritual life, that his minister had experienced Divine visions, and that he had been speaking under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost? Such fancies, whether in the minds of minister or people, are simply the fruits of excitement, and nothing more.

Equally objectionable is it to hear pious men say, as they too often do when differing from others, "The Holy Spirit has taught me this or that; God fulfils His promise in my experience, and guides me into all truth." This is arrogance, not humility, and as in the case of the preacher, proceeds on forgetfulness of the fact that the Holy Spirit never acts directly on the intellect, except under conditions which are miraculous, and peculiar to prophets and apostles. A contrary view necessarily destroys all tangible distinctions between inspired and uninspired communications.

That holy angels may sometimes suggest good and true thoughts, just as bad spirits constantly suggest falsehood and evil, is very probable; but in all such cases these suggestions are to us what we are to them. Nor is it possible to determine with any degree of positiveness the particular thoughts which come to us through this agency. It may be a very humbling and painful truth, but I believe it is a truth, that modern ministers of the Gospel have no right to suppose that they enjoy the immediate teaching of the Spirit; they are by no means "ambassadors of Christ" in the proper sense of that phrase; they are, in short, whether they admit it or not, neither more nor less than "lecturers on Christian doctrines and ethics," who found thereupon exhortations to faith and obedience.

In the Bible God has revealed all truth needful for man's deliverance from evil, and just as any one comes to that book in a right spirit free from pride and prejudice, from selfishness and sectarianism, not governed by inferior motives, not moved by the desire that such or such an opinion may be confirmed by Scripture, but only anxious to know what the Book says; in other words, just so far as he is purified by the Spirit of God, and his will is brought into harmony with the Divine will, is it possible for him to attain wisdom.

On the other hand, just in proportion as he comes to the written Word under the influence of self-will, of conceit, of bigotry, or of uncharitableness, and just so far as he is biased by a given theological system, will he be liable to delusion and darkness. That which was promised to the apostles was not in the same sense promised to others. The Lord led them into all truth by direct revelation, that they might be the instructors of the Church in all ages. The Lord leads men now into truth only in connection with the subjection of the will,—by giving them a loving candid, and fearless spirit; by purifying and elevating their moral natures, and by bringing them, in this state of mind, into heartfelt contact with the revelations of Scripture.

Inspiration, then, is something very different from either genius or piety, whether single or combined. It is not at all akin to what we sometimes call the inspiration of the poet, of the painter, of the sculptor, or of the musician. I am far, indeed, from disputing that the Giver of every good and perfect gift may justly be regarded as endowing men of genius with all that distinguishes them from their fellows; but when I speak of Holy Scripture as inspired, I use the word in a much higher sense than this. I regard that book—so far as it is God-breathed at all—as inspired in such an exceptional way as to remove its revelations altogether out of the rank, even of the highest of merely human compositions.—Sunday Morning.

EXTENT OF THE CLAIM.

We have now to inquire what—in relation to its inspiration—the Bible says of itself. Does it, or does it not affirm that everything contained in the volume as it stands is inspired, and therefore infallible?

The first passage that will probably suggest itself in this connection to most persons, is found in St. Paul's second epistle to Timothy: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be made perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." So the words stand in our Authorized Version, and the text, as is well known, is often claimed as positively asserting that everything contained, whether in the Old Testament or in the New, is inspired of God.

But does the writer affirm this? Clearly not at all; for at the time Paul wrote, no such book as the New Testament was in existence. He could therefore only refer to the Old. Further, the words of the apostle as given in our version do not express his meaning. Paul does not say that all Scripture (whatever may be included under that designation) is given by inspiration or "God-breathed," but that all Divinely inspired Scripture—all Scripture, that is, from God—is profitable.

The apostle had, in the preceding verse, been telling his "son Timothy" that the Holy Scriptures, with which he had been acquainted from his childhood, were able to make him wise unto salvation through faith in Christ; and he now adds, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for the perfection of character." To suppose that he here means to affirm that the catalogue of the Dukes of Edom given us in the first book of Chronicles, are to be placed side by side with the prophecies of Isaiah or the utterances of the Psalms, that both are "God-breathed," and alike given "that the man of God may be perfect," surely savors far more of superstition than of piety.

Nor is this all. For the supposition that the apostle intended to say that all Scripture (meaning thereby all that was then embodied in the Septuagint, from which he habitually quotes) was given by inspiration of God, is to make him assert the inspiration of the Apocrypha, for there is every reason to suppose that some at least of the books now known as apocryphal were, although not in the acknowledged Hebrew text, recognized by the Hellenistic Jews, and therefore by the men with whom Paul came more immediately into contact. It is generally supposed that these books obtained a place in the Greek Scriptures about 130 years before Christ.

The only copies of the Scriptures in existence for the first 300 years after Christ either among the Jews or Christians of Greece, Italy, or Africa, contained these books without any mark of distinction that we know of. Origen at great length vindicates these parts of the Greek Version, asserting that they were true and genuine, and made use of in Greek among all the churches of the Gentiles, and that we should not attend to the fraudulent comments of the Jews, but take that only for true in the Holy Scriptures which the Seventy had translated, for that this only was confirmed by apostolic authority. The absence of any list of inspired books in the writings of the apostle, and the fact that he commonly quotes from the Greek Septuagint without remark, certainly favors the opinion that St. Paul did not intend to say that every writing then regarded as Scripture was inspired.*

That Holy Scripture is not unfrequently limited by Christ himself seems clear. He sometimes speaks of it as if it were confined to "Moses and the prophets"—that is, to the revealed law of God, whether given by Moses or by later inspired teachers. After the resurrection we find Him expounding as Divine "all things written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning Himself;" but in no part of the Lord's teaching can there be found a word to justify the assertion that everything contained in the Old Testament from Genesis to Malachi ought to be regarded as equally authoritative and infallible.

* "The absolute infallibility of the sacred books throughout was set up by Protestantism as a counterpoise to the infallible authority asserted and claimed by the Romish Church. Protestantism sought to recover, by means of the outwardly authoritatively and entire infallibility of books, what it had lost by rejecting inspired councils and Popish infallibility." (Tholuck, quoted in Davidson's Introduction, p. 372.)

It is also singular that while inspiration is affirmed generally of prophets and apostles, and specially of some it is nowhere claimed either generally or specially for historians, or for the entire volume of Scripture. Everything, indeed, indicates that the claim of inspiration, and therefore of infallibility, is limited to those portions of the Bible which are revelations from heaven, or essential to their comprehension.

Under the head, then, of inspired Scripture may be classed all that we are told of God beyond what may be gathered from His works and providential government of the world; all the information we have as to our future destiny; every prophetic intimation; every elevating and purifying truth which man could not otherwise reach. From it may be excluded, without irreverence, the merely historical, however true and useful; genealogies, however important in their place; poems or proverbs, however wise, which are but expressions of human experience; references to physical phenomena ordinarily expressed in colloquial language; and all acts or utterances which are not in accordance with the spirit and temper of the Lord Jesus.

There are unquestionably in the Old Testament things which, however needful to a true delineation of men and times, are not in themselves intended for our imitation, and have no tendency "to make the man of God perfect." It is not presumptuous to say of such portions that, whatever may be their value, they are not, properly speaking, inspired. Nor is it any answer to reply that from all these portions a devout mind can gain instruction, for "sermons" may be found "in stones;" but this does not make the stones inspired.

How important then is it that the first beginnings of doubt should be honestly dealt with! How foolish to think or speak of the acceptance or rejection of "the Book" as a light thing! It is impossible to hide the fact that the truth or falsehood of the Bible, its worth or its worthlessness, is the great question of the day. It is not too much to affirm that the life or death of modern society hangs upon the issue.—Liber Librorum.

VERIFYING FACULTY.

We now approach that portion of our task which demands of us a principle, by the help of which we may, without weakening faith in Scripture as a whole, separate its parts, and distinguish between that which is Divine and that which is human.

Such a principle will assuredly not be sought for in vain if it is recollected that all inspired Scripture is congruous; not only in the sense of being in itself suitable and pertinent to the purpose for which it was given, but also as being in harmony with all that is revealed of the character of God: further—and for this statement we have inspired authority,—that the congruity thus existing is capable of being discerned by every spiritual man who is faithful to the light bestowed upon him.

If this be granted—and it is difficult to see how the admission can be refused—we have at once a test by which everything assumed to be inspired of God may be tried without presumption and with little probability of mistake.

Before attempting to apply any such test, however, it may be necessary to show that God intended that His children should thus discriminate; that He has given them all that is needful for the accomplishment of the work; and further, that with regard to Scripture He has made the fulfilment of this duty no unimportant part of their moral probation.

If, therefore, it be said, as it probably will, that any attempt to draw a distinction between different parts of the Bible—to separate the inspired from the uninspired, the Divine from the human—renders the Book as a whole useless to simple Christians, inasmuch as they can perceive no such differences, it is enough to reply that this is not the fact, since that which was true of the oral is equally true of the written revelation.

The exhortation of the apostle John to his converts, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God," supposes an ability in every spiritually enlightened man, whether hearer or reader, to discern between that which is of God and that which is not. "Ye have an unction from the Holy One," says the aged saint, and in the power of this unction, "ye [the poorest of the flock] know all things." I myself, he says—and if he, other inspired men also,—"have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it. The anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you." (1 John ii. 20, 27.)

We call this "the verifying faculty," and regard it as being neither more nor less than reason enlightened and sanctified by the Holy Spirit. To vilify reason, as so many good but ill-instructed Christians do, is a folly which would be unpardonable if it did not commonly arise from sheer ignorance or weakness of mind. As Butler truly says, "reason is the only faculty we have wherewith to judge concerning anything, even revelation itself." Its duty in relation to Scripture is to judge, "not whether it contains things different from what we should have expected from a wise, just, and good Being, but whether it contains things plainly contradictory to wisdom, justice, or goodness,"—in other words, to what elsewhere God teaches us of Himself.

Of course all this goes on the assumption that Divine teaching is addressed to men who have at least some moral sympathy with its utterances; that the words of God are spiritual words; that the sheep know the voice of the Good Shepherd. In a limited sense, much of this is true of every book the tendency of which is elevating. All moral teaching worthy of the name addresses itself to the consciousness of those to whom it speaks. Only as it comes in contact with a prepared mind; only as it proves an interpreter of floating and half-formed thought, or is the expression of feelings before but partially recognized or understood, does any book of this kind produce permanent impressions or prove of much real value.

But this is true of the Bible in an altogether pre-eminent degree; for this book, whether it reveals new truth or whether it explains a man to himself, is like the sun in heaven, seen in its own light. Not that all truth is in this way made plain to all persons; but that everything essential to the growth in goodness of the man who reads is by a mysterious affinity, recognized and laid hold of for the soul's salvation from evil. The softened heart responds to words which awake no echo in other breasts. It is always so. The words of Him who spake "as never man spake" only elicited scorn from the great mass of those who heard them uttered. The seed and the soil must be adapted to each other, or there can be no living product. The spiritual faculty may be dormant, the "God-consciousness" all but dead, being completely overridden by "self-consciousness," yet the possession of it is always recognized.—Liber Librorum.

THE DIVINE TEACHER.

That there is a Divine Teacher of man's spirit, and that it is possible for a man's spirit to have converse with that teacher, is a truth which would remain true if the Bible and all its revelations were to be annihilated; but the recognition of this truth would still be of no practical use to any man who was unwilling to listen and obey. It matters not whether we call the special faculty by which man attains to a knowledge of the Divine, a spiritual gift or a verifying power: the fact is the same; without it all is dark alike in the Bible and in the highest intuitions of the soul. Tenets may be drawn from Scripture by any man, but living truths only by prepared hearts. It is the forgetfulness or the denial of this fact which renders so much that has been written on "the verifying faculty" in man unsatisfactory; since, according to the moral state of each individual, does the application of the phrase in question embody a great truth or involve a pernicious error.

"The conditions," says Mr. Maurice, "which are required for arriving at the knowledge of Divine truth are surely stern conditions! It is a strait and narrow way which leadeth to life. There must be a continual waiting for light; a distrust of our own assumptions; a readiness to be detected in error, certain that God's meaning is infinitely larger than ours, and that other men may perceive an aspect of it which we do not perceive; a belief that He is fulfilling His promise that all shall be taught of Him in ways which we cannot imagine; a dread of shutting out any truth by our impatient notion that it must contradict some other: a determination to maintain what little has been given us in the hope of its expansion, and never to contradict, if we understand ever so little, what may have been given to another; a resolution to hold the ground on which we stand, without judging him if he cannot yet see what this ground is. Hard it is to form these habits of mind. . . . I cannot help perceiving that this mind, the mind of the little child, the mind which our Lord demands of us, has been exhibited by many scientific men who have been censured and scorned by the religious world of their day, and has been sadly deficient in their accusers."

Without spiritual insight nothing is discerned which takes hold of the spirit or influences the character. Until this is received truth itself is but an opinion to the man who comes in contact with it. It does not vitalize because it is not itself vital. It is only a human judgment, and, whether true or false, has little if any moral power in it. It is dead, being alone. Not until opinion is transfigured—not until it quickens into life, does it become a truth, and grow, and bring forth fruit.

But another consequence follows. Looked at in this way it is of no moment that either the instructed or the uninstructed man should be able to say regarding each separate passage of Scripture, This is inspired, that is not. How can he indeed? The revelation itself is not a thing apart from daily life, but through its various relations: how then can any man undertake to separate in each particular the supernatural element from the natural which it irradiates and explains? To regard anything of the kind as necessary either to confidence or to edification is absurd; as absurd, in fact, as it is to maintain that "we require an exercise of judgment upon the written document before we can allow men to trust in their King and Saviour." Every one knows that this is not the fact; that in all time the multitude never have, nor ever can enter upon any such inquiries; that the masses must either believe in Christ directly as an actual person related to them, and recognized by them in their inmost souls, or they will not believe at all. They listen to the announcement that Christ is their Redeemer, and they believe the good news just in so far as it finds a response in their own spiritual necessities and consciousness. Into evidence about documents they cannot enter.

And why should they? The analytical chemist, when called upon to do so, separates the constituent parts of the very atmosphere he breathes; but for all the practical purposes of life he well knows that such a process is altogether needless. Forgetful of his science, he rejoices in the free air of heaven just as the peasant does, and thanks God for its vitality. So is it with Scripture. The critic may doubt or may be satisfied as to the precise place which such or such a passage ought or ought not to occupy in relation to other portions of Holy Writ, and there are times and seasons when such considerations are both proper and profitable. But he can scarcely be regarded as a wise man who, coming to the Bible for strength or consolation, for instruction in righteousness, or for help in the perfecting of his character, does anything else than open his heart to its Divine teachings, and rejoice like a little child in the sunshine it can shed around his path. Ibid.

A PARADOX.

But here a paradox appears. It is this—The light of which we speak—the quickening and elevating power in the strength of which we are to recognize the Divine—is never attained except by spiritual culture effected through the instrumentality of the revelation itself. The Book to be recognized and obeyed must itself have more or less educated the consciousness which is to accept it. The word is "the sword of the Spirit;" and the same Lord who says, "He that is of the truth heareth My voice," says also, "I am the truth." It follows, therefore, that before any man can judge of truth, he must receive "the truth," believe in it, and be more or less educated by it.

Yet, after all, this is not more paradoxical than the kindred fact that before a man can judge as to the merits of a great artist, he must, to some extent, be educated by the artist; or, to take a wider illustration, that a man must himself become civilized before he can perceive how great a blessing civilization is.

That this way of looking at the matter makes the evidence for the truth of the Bible mainly subjective cannot be disputed; but nothing else in the present day appears to have much hold on men. It may indeed seriously be doubted whether it is now possible to bring forward any evidence, in favor of miracles for instance, which could reasonably be expected to satisfy an unconcerned spectator, and still less an opponent.

In the days of our Lord and His apostles the miracle was evidence that the teacher was from God. Now the doctrine must give probability to the miracle. The mere fact that "wonders were wrought" by the apostles, could this be demonstrated, would of itself avail little to convince any man of the truth of what they taught. Nor perhaps ought it to be otherwise. It is only when coupled with other considerations, such as the character of the Christian miracles, their simplicity, benevolence, and unselfish ends, that the force of the argument founded on them comes to be felt. Well and wisely has it been remarked that "the entire series of miracles recorded by the evangelists, consummated as they were by the miracle of Christ's resurrection, occupy a place of perpetual efficacy in relation separately to each of the great purposes for which the Lord of life came amongst us, viz., as Saviour of the world, as Redeemer of His people, and as Conqueror in the world of spirits." In each of these particulars the miracles attest His mission, and are in all respects congruous with His teaching. The observation of these characteristics is the result of the application of "the verifying faculty" to the miracles of the New Testament generally.

As for the pretence—for it is really nothing better—that to give up anything in the Bible is in effect to give up all; that if a line is to be drawn anywhere, its place must be fixed by the caprice of the reader; it is enough to observe that the real question is not how much or how little may be regarded as human in Scripture, but on what ground the distinction in question is proposed to be made. Reason, it is granted, is not in itself adequate to judge as to what is or is not worthy of God. Taste, caprice, preconceptions of any kind, have nothing whatever to do with the matter. If the rebuke to Baalam or the deliverance of Jonah is to be rejected, because it seems incredible or grotesque that an ass should speak, or a whale disgorge its living burden, we adopt a principle which certainly leads to the construction rather than to the reception of a Divine revelation. But, if on the contrary, we confine ourselves to the test of congruity; if we accept or reject only on the ground of the harmony or want of harmony which a statement has with other revelations,—with all that God has taught us, whether by the servant or by the Son, regarding His own character and will: if we do this in dependence on the teaching of that Spirit which, as an unction from the Holy One, is given to “the lowly heart and pure;” if we but follow the example of those early Christians who tried the spirits whether they were of God or not, we may be quite sure that the danger supposed is altogether imaginary, and that “the honest mind, calmly seeking after God’s truth in the spirit, He approves, will not be at a loss to make sufficient distinction between religious or ethical truth, and departments belonging to the natural and human.”—Liber Librorum.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

I was very forcibly struck on reading the following language uttered by Dr. Livingstone, Missionary and explorer in Africa. He gives an account of the death of the great African chief, Sebitnane. He says of him, “He was decidedly the best specimen of a native chief I ever met.” He adds, “The deep dark question of what is to become of such as he must, however, be left where we find it, believing that, assuredly, ‘the Judge of all the earth will do right.’”

Why did this question seem so deep and dark to the good doctor? I answer, for two reasons.

1. Dr. Livingstone had been educated to believe, and he doubtless did fully believe, that there is no probation for any of our race beyond the present life. 2. No one is promised salvation except he believe in the Christ of God. In the wilds of Africa, where no Christ had ever been preached, he finds a fine specimen of noble, generous humanity: he sees this noble chieftain close his eyes in death, with no knowledge of the way of salvation, and, therefore, without faith in Christ, the one and only condition of salvation in the plan that God has made. He reflects that Sebitnane, and all like him, have never rejected Christ, for they never heard that there is a Christ. How then can it be anything other than “a deep, dark question,” as to what is to become of such as he, with all men who, like Dr. Livingstone, are accustomed to deep thinking? It troubles them as the doctrine of endless suffering has troubled many great minds that have been touched by the love of God. They cannot harmonize the act of inflicting such punishment with the revealed character of God. It does not harmonize with the little, even, of the love of God shed abroad in their own hearts by the Holy Spirit. Every tender feeling nourished into emotions of deep love, under the powerful working of the Divine Spirit, rises in rebellion against the idea that our great All-Father, the very fountain of that love which softens our hearts towards our fellow-mortals, will doom to perpetual torture the great mass of the intelligences he has made. This system is made vastly more distasteful to them when they contemplate the fact, as the great Doctor doubtless did, that all, save a little few of those who are, as they believe, doomed to endless woe, pass out of this life destitute of all knowledge of either God, or Christ, or the Gospel; and that because it is impossible for them ever to obtain such knowledge in this life. Such men cannot help being troubled. They may bid such thoughts begone from their minds, but they will only depart to return again with renewed force. The same ardent love for the lost in heathen lands, that moved Mr. Livingstone to leave the pleasures and endearments of his Christian home in England, and dwell among the savages in the wilds of Africa; to give his all, yea, his life at last, in the hope of benefitting those savage men; this, coupled with a mind addicted to deep thinking, did compel him, and will compel every man like him, to turn this dark, deep question over in their minds continually.

When such thoughts take possession of such minds, they can never be wholly driven out. We read such sentences as those we have quoted from Dr. Livingstone, and we are apt to look upon them as the mere flashing out of a casual thought; but this is not the true state of the case. Such men do not utter careless remarks on important subjects; neither do they think superficially.

When deep questions weigh so heavily on their minds that they can endure silence no longer, they speak; and, often, there is contained a vastness of meaning in a few words uttered. It was thus with the great and good Dr. Barnes, on the doctrine of future punishment. He had, evidently, turned the matter over and over in his mind, until his sympathies, and all his great heart of love utterly revolted at the picture of future endless woe, drawn in the creed of his own church; and his soul was so chafed under the burden of its own doubts and fears, and so agitated under its own unsatisfactory attempt to harmonize the character of God with the popular standard of "orthodoxy" on that subject, that he seemed impelled to speak. He did speak, and that too in words that were almost painful to read.

In the midst of such great perplexity, there is, thank God, a bright ray of light shining through the darkness with which we are surrounded. Yes, there is a path that leads out of the mist and fog that has for centuries hung like a pall of gloom over all christendom. There is indeed hope for the race. Satan will not wholly despoil and gather to the eternal prison-house of death nearly all the human intelligences a God of infinite love has created. Dr. Livingstone accomplished but very little indeed in Africa towards saving the benighted men, yea, hardly anything towards their Christianization, as all will see by reading his works. Surely Ethiopia has not yet stretched forth her hands. Small indeed is the work that has been done in saving men in heathen lands, by mission labor, in comparison to the vast multitude that have gone down into death unblessed by gospel light, and unsaved by its divine power. If all efforts to Christianize—to save the world—were to end with this life, how vast the failure. How could Christ "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied?" It would be no more than one grain of wheat gathered to the garner of life, to a million left to rot in the plains of eternal death. Satan gets the million, and God, with all that he has done, with the great expenditure, the vast outlay he has made; the infinite fountain of love that has been unsealed; the tears of the Son of God; his special love shed in his mission of mercy to our earth; his groans uttered while here, "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief;" his agony in Gethsemane; the darkness and gloom of his death upon the cross; the power manifested in raising him from the dead; for all, He gets only the one, while Satan carries off the million into the yawning maw of endless death. The above view of the final consummation of God's great plan of love, cannot be the true one. No; surely God has spoken, and it will come to pass. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else." "I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear." (Isa. xlv. 22, 23)

So certain as the oath of God is sure, the multitude will at last be gathered to the other side; and when Christ shall fully manifest his great love, that love "whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself," a "great multitude that no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues," will praise God and the Lamb for salvation to an endless life. When that great multitude shall cry "as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings," saying, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb;" then all the angels round the throne, in unison with the elect Bride, will respond an immortal AMEN; and they will sing, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."

And will not every heart, even in this imperfect state, touched with that principle of divine love, that will, over there, be consummated in immortalized perfection, love to contemplate the wondrous victory that will at last be achieved over sin and death; yea, over all the works of the de-evil? Will any, on the altar of whose hearts burns the love of God, feel disturbed because they fear that the number of the saved will be too great? Will those whose hearts are wholly sanctified, and "filled" with the holy unction, manifest anger, and grow fearful, lest he who "came down from heaven," led a life of suffering; bore the frowns and scoffs of the very men he came to save; who he though rich, "for our sakes became poor," and finally in darkness, and in agony inexpressible,—agony such as drew from his sacred lips that awfully impressive sentence, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani?" as he gave his life for the world on the cross of Calvary—fearful, I say, lest at the consummation he shall reap too great a harvest of souls?

Will any of the loving children of our loving Father, scold because that in the great day of the final completion of the work of saving the race, when "the fatted calf" is killed; will they fear there will be too many at the feast?

Ought not all to rejoice rather that God has arranged a plan so broad, and will conduct its maturing with so much wisdom, that finally it shall cause "all the ends of the earth to remember and turn unto the Lord; and "all the kindreds of the nations to worship joyfully before him?" (Psa. xxii. 27.) Will it not bring joy and gladness to every child in whom dwells "the mind of Christ," to know that when "the Lord of hosts," shall make a feast "unto all people" in mount Zion, there will be no meager attendance of guests; but "all nations he has made will come and worship before him, glorify his name." (Psa. lxxxvi. 9.) "When he shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously?" (Isa. xxi. 23.)

It would be strange if all truly Christian hearts did not beat in unison with that of Christ. They surely would if no human clogs hampered their impulses of love to their fellows, and held them under restraint. We now "see though a glass darkly." Tradition and a false religious education has dimmed our spiritual vision; but, thank God, the scales are falling from our eyes, and it is only a little in the future and "we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known." The veil is now on the hearts of of many of the good; but the holy seer speaks of a time which will surely come, when the Lord of hosts will "destroy the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations;" and then all the immortalized ones will rejoice for endless years that the plan of God is so vastly more comprehensive than many believed it could be; that it saves such a great multitude. We feel assured that we are rapidly nearing the day when it will indeed be true that—

"Our home shall be where love's star set not,
But shines through the long sweet years,
Where the pangs of parting are all forgot,
All vanished life's bitterest tears.
The night of weeping will soon be past,
Sins' story ere long be told,
And the worn and earth-weary find rest at last,
With the King in the city of gold."

And when we catch a view by faith of that city of foundations, our hearts cry out,—

"Roll back on your hinges, ye jewell'd doors,
Till our souls shall your beauty know,
Till heaven bursts thro' her starry floors,
And strews all her lights below;

Till the glow of a thousand suns comes down,
And the sheen of a silver flood
Shall deck our sad earth with a golden crown,
Till it flames like the hill of God."

THE PURPOSE OF GOD IN CREATION AND REDEMPTION.

During the present month of May, 1876, I have had the pleasure of an intercourse with an evangelist of the church designating itself the "Catholic Apostolic Church." After some conversation with him, he commended to my notice a work, which, he said, he valued next to the Bible, above all works: and, with which he cordially agreed as to its contents. I procured it. After reading much that had to do with the organization of this church, and also many valuable remarks on prophetic subjects, I came to the paragraphs which I now send for others to enjoy with myself. I own I was equally delighted as surprised with the statements that were made. Thank God! that comfort is given to us every now and again from unexpected quarters.

After writing of the period prior to the termination of the thousand years, the writer thus continues:

"It is when the thousand years have expired and when Satan's career has ended and the great white throne is set, that the resurrection of 'the rest of the dead' takes place; that is, of all the human race who were not counted worthy to be raised from the dead when Christ came. These all now 'live again.' The sea gives up the dead that have slept beneath its waves; the earth gives up those it has covered; death and Hades give up their dead, i. e., both body and soul, and death and Hades are cast into the lake of fire. Perhaps there may be evil angels who have the power of death and Hades; who are cast into the lake; but, be that as it may, death and the place where the spirits of the dead were confined, have no more power over Adam and his sons. And if any are condemned to die, it is to another and a second death; for from the first death Christ had rescued them all.

"Who are they who are condemned to the second death? All who are raised from death at this general resurrection? All who were not counted worthy to be raised at the first resurrection? By no means. We are told that then all those raised at the last shall be judged by the things written in the Books, and that then also the Book of life is opened, and only those whose names are not found therein are adjudged to the second death. What a wide door for God's mercies is opened here! No man is condemned to the second death for Adam's sin. All men were indeed sentenced to the first death in Adam for Adam's sin; and, if Christ had not redeemed them from it, that death would have been eternal. But He redeemed mankind. Men talk idly who argue that He only redeemed the elect. 'As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.' And none are condemned to the second death but those who have brought that dreadful sentence on their heads by wilful sin and crime against God and man, and their own conscience. We are told the following certainly are adjudged to it: 'The fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderer, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars;' these are not found in the book of life; their names have been erased. But myriads of the sons of Adam will be found written in that book, who, not being counted worthy to take their places among the rulers of the kingdom, were not raised at the First Resurrection, but now find their place among the subjects of it, among the nations of the saved. Among these will be the countless number of the children of all nations, who have died before committing sin. The Church, in its ignorance of the kingdom, its forgetfulness of it, and of the gradations of position in which men, 'every man in his own order,' are to be placed in it, did not know what to do with the children of the unbaptized, or what place to assign them. They saw they were not of Christ's body, and so could not reign with him; so they invented for them a limbo of their own; something neither heaven, nor earth, nor hell; neither darkness nor light; neither happiness nor pain. Many of them even included in this the children of Christian parents who might die before they could be baptized, thus putting the children of baptized parents, unbaptized by accident only, in a level with those of unbaptized parents. But Christ hath ransomed all, 'to be testified in due time;' and that time will be at the resurrection of all; when it will be made manifest that if any are not suffered to abide on the ransomed earth, and among ransomed men, it is because they have brought upon themselves a sentence to a worse and second death, from which there is no redemption. Thus all who are then raised from the dead, and who have not by their sins forfeited that life restored, shall dwell on the new earth for ever; not as the rulers of it, but as the ruled; not the kings of it, but the subjects; not the priests of it, but the worshipping congregations. And in that new heaven and in that new earth there shall be no more death, (the last enemy that shall be destroyed from off the earth is death); neither sorrow nor crying out; nor shall there be any more pain. Those things that Satan brought into God's world shall, by God, be put out: 'and there shall be no more curse.' The promise to the seed of Abraham shall be fulfilled; 'All the families of the earth shall be blessed in him;' 'the leaves of the tree of life shall be for the healing of the nations.' God shall be all in all. 'His tabernacle, His dwelling, shall be with men.'

"There is, however, some change as to the heavenly Jerusalem in the new earth, making its situation different from what it had been during the millennium. The heavenly Jerusalem shall then be on the earth; the nations of the saved shall walk in the light of it; and they and their kings shall bring their glory and their honor into it. God's kingdom is then indeed established on the earth, and his will done on the earth as in heaven. God's Zion and Jerusalem, His habitation, His desired rest, is at last attained to; and shall be settled firm and immovable; all nations shall be blest in Him, and 'all nations shall call Him blessed,' and 'His servants shall reign for ever and ever.'"

THE RIVER OF LIFE, AND THE TREE OF LIFE.

REV. XXII. 1, 2.

The Holy City being intended to represent the glorified Church, and not its dwelling place, no inhabitants are mentioned: just as in the parable of the ten virgins no bride is mentioned, because the wise virgins are included in that body which will constitute the Bride of Christ. But the water of life, and still more the tree of life, — especially the distinction between its fruit and its leaves, the latter alone being available for "the nations,"—compel us to assume that the city had inhabitants, although in the application no distinction can be made between it and them. Those who drank of that water, and ate of that tree, would be preserved in "life." What life? Let us take the tree first; because as to that we have solid ground to stand upon.

"The tree of life" in the garden of Eden is universally admitted to have been the means—whether the story be understood literally or symbolically—of preserving man in immortal vigor. It was not, as some imagine, that eating once of would have secured him against death for ever, else Adam might have been cursed with an immortality of wretchedness by first eating of the tree of life, and then of the forbidden tree; its virtue lasted only while he continued to eat of it. When, therefore, God drove him out of the garden "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever," he was beginning to execute upon him the threatened sentence, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." In this first fundamental use of the expression, "live for ever," no one supposes it to mean—be holy and happy for ever: the tree of life answered no such purpose, nor was it any such "spiritual life" that the flaming sword barred Adam's approach. Cut off from the tree of life, he must necessarily die; that was all.

In Rev. ii. 7, this tree re-appears: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Has it changed its meaning or purpose? Is "spiritual life" the reward bestowed upon those who overcome? Surely it is only by possessing such life that they can overcome. "Ye have your fruit unto holiness"—that is overcoming,—"and the end everlasting life" by having perpetual access to the tree of life. In this message to the church of Ephesus is promised—not the restoration on repentance and faith of what Adam actually lost when he fell, but the restoration hereafter to the Christian victor of what Adam, and consequently his descendants, lost by being debarred from the tree of life—immortality, or eternal life.

In the New Jerusalem we see that promise fulfilled. There is the tree of life, growing in rich abundance, and bearing fruit all the year round, in the very midst of the city,—the symbolic pledge that its inhabitants can never "die any more," that "they shall never perish, but have everlasting life."

Then is this all? Certainly not. Immortality, being promised as a blessing, must necessarily be one of holiness and happiness,—as is constantly affirmed. Nor can there possibly be any other; inasmuch as the whole creation is to be reconciled to God by Christ (Col. i. 16–20), so that any creature who is to live for ever must share in that reconciliation. To give eternal life, therefore, to a fallen creature like man includes his being brought into moral harmony with God; and, although the two things can never be separated, "life" is spoken of in Scripture with special reference, sometimes, to the fact of our living for ever, and sometimes to its essential condition. Both are, no doubt, represented by the water of life, and the tree of life, in the Holy City. We may take them together, and say, that as our present bodily life is sustained by what we eat and drink, the water of the river and the fruit of the tree afford a symbolic pledge that all our wants to all eternity will be abundantly supplied; that we "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more." (Rev. vii. 16.) Or, perhaps, the water, being mentioned first, may be intended specially to denote the preservation of our moral character from injury or decline,* and the tree of life, by its manifest reference to that in the garden of Eden, may point more emphatically to the assurance that they who believe in Christ shall never perish, but have everlasting life. We shall be better able to judge of this when we have considered the particular description here given of them.

First, we are told that the purity of the stream rendered it "clear as crystal." In one sense the water of life offered to us now is as clear as God can make it. "Ye are complete in him, who is the head of all principality and power,"—in him "who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." But it is very difficult for us to see it "clear as crystal;" our own imperfect vision, our own defilement, our manifold infirmities, the tears which dim our eyes, the world, the flesh, and the devil that we have to struggle against, if they do not discolor the water, are very apt practically to interfere with its perfect transparency, and hinder us from obtaining a clear view of its marvelous depths. There we shall be able to gaze upon it, look down into it, drink of it, without let or hindrance. The salvation realized now is enough to quench our thirst, to make us lift up our head and go on our way rejoicing; but "the salvation to be revealed" will be something vastly better still,—“clear as crystal,” full as a “river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God.”

* This is somewhat confirmed by its apparent meaning in Rev. xxi. 6; xxii. 17. If we are right in understanding the "thirst" to be an earnest longing for reconciliation with God, the water which quenches it must be "the word of reconciliation" bringing to those who believe it a sense of present forgiveness.

Then we observe that this river was not a natural one, having its source in some earthly spring, but “proceeded out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.” The throne, not the thrones. The life then enjoyed will flow directly from union with God in Christ fully manifested; not suffering, but reigning; not subduing his enemies, but sitting on his throne. The topstone will have been already put to the triumph of grace; but Divine power, exercised by him who is still the “Lamb as it had been slain,” will forever be needed to sustain our whole being in the highest condition of life. The Lamb will still be our Shepherd, and lead us to the inexhaustible fountains of living water. Let us drink now of the life-giving stream which flows from the cross, that we may hereafter have access to that which will proceed out of the throne. The water will be the same, the Giver of it the same, those who drink of it the same,—yet all, how changed! Unbroken continuity with infinite development.

And now as to the Tree of Life. It is said to be growing “in the midst of the street thereof, and of the river, on this side and on that side.”

Our translation is misleading; as it suggests the idea of the tree standing both in the middle of the street, and in the middle of the river—the former of which is highly improbable and the latter absurd. Its position was in a middle place between the street and the river. The river itself ran down the middle of a broad street, and on each bank, throughout its whole length, was seen in rich luxuriance the tree of life. The singular number is used merely to show that they were all the same kind of tree: as we might say of a certain place, that nothing but the oak will grow there. “The street of the city,” in chap. xxi. 21, probably means the entire roadway. Here, however, one street only is spoken of, no doubt the principal street of the city, and probably the only one that St. John saw. The other streets which, from there being twelve gates, must have existed, are not mentioned; and therefore, on the principle that is required in the interpretation of parables and other illustrative teaching, we must exclude them from view, and so far as concerns the river and tree of life, regard this as the only street in the city. The points to be noticed then about the latter are its close connection with the river, its abundance, and its accessible position to the inhabitant.

Its position by the river side marks the intimate connection between the moral and the physical aspects of eternal life. In Christ we have “life and immortality,” salvation from sin, and salvation from death, “our fruit unto holiness, and end everlasting life.” The two cannot be separated. There is no eating of the tree without drinking of the river, or drinking of the river without eating of the tree. And therefore in their application the two figures are not always sharply divided, but as already observed, the one often includes the other. In the New Jerusalem the advantages represented by them both will be secured for ever: neither sin nor death can ever enter.

In Eden there was but one tree of life, and that in the midst of the garden. In the New Jerusalem there is an abundance of them; their boughs hang richly laden with fruit, directly in front of every house. As the crystal clearness of the water represents the surpassing excellence of the life enjoyed there, so does the multiplication of the tree indicate the superabounding of that life through out the whole body. There is no need to penetrate into the depths of the garden; it stands before every one's door. Endless differences there will doubtless be amongst that multitude which no man can number; but the water and the tree of life will be equally accessible to all.

And the supply will be unbroken. The river will never be dried up, or the tree be without fruit. The former possibility does not so readily occur to the mind as to require any direct assurance. But the latter does; for naturally a tree yields its fruit at only one season of the year. And therefore we are told that this tree “yielded her fruit every month,” which would practically come to there being always fruit on its branches. How carefully we have now to store up the fruit we gather from this tree, as provided for us in God's word! And how often, when we want to use it, do we find it very far from as fresh, or as refreshing, as when first plucked. It is our own infirmity no doubt; but it is only a too real and disappointing fact. Some text, or truth, seemed at one time so full of juice, that we fondly imagined it would be an infallible specific for the rest of our lives. But we put it to our lips again, perhaps when we most sorely need it, and alas it yields scarce a particle of moisture. That, the exact spiritual diagnostist will say, is because we do not get it to our lips, or at least not fairly between our teeth. Well, be it so; but it comes very much to the same thing. Thank God, a time it coming, when the fruit will not require all this laborious and sometimes very partially successful watching and tending, but will drop fresh into our mouths day by day; when we shall not need such constant efforts to "keep ourselves in the love of God," such wrestling in prayer, such strainings of faith, such patient searching of the Scripture, such care to lay it up in our weak hearts and treacherous memories. Now we eat of the tree of life growing on the field of battle, then we shall eat of it "in the midst of the Paradise of God;"—that Paradise which will be at once a garden and a city, combining all the repose and loveliness of the one with all the life and splendor of the other.

"The home to which I am hasting
Is not in some silent glen;
The place where my hopes are resting
Is a city of living men."

Yes; but that city will be as peaceful and fresh as the sweetest glen, and we shall be able to enjoy the society of its living men, without any of that weariness or excitement that so often makes silence a relief to us.

The "twelve fruits" are understood by some to mean twelve different kinds of fruit, one appearing each month. But this is very unlikely. In marked contrast to the "all trees for meat" of Ezek. xlvii. 12, care is taken here to specify that the trees were all of one kind; "the tree of life;" and it would be exceedingly incongruous to imagine the same tree bearing a different kind of fruit each month of the year. Besides, although it would naturally enough suggest the idea of variety,—a most tempting thought in connection with the future life of the glorified church,—we should feel somewhat embarrassed and dissatisfied at that variety being represented by a regular succession, year after year, of the same fruit, always appearing in the same month, and then disappearing for eleven months. The twelve fruits are explained in the following words to be the twelve separate growths of fruit, which appeared every year—"bearing its fruit each month." It is not "twelve manner of fruits," as in our version; nor is the second clause a separate statement, as we give it, but an explanatory one attached to the first.

We must not, however, omit to notice that the fruit of this tree is the only food which is mentioned as being provided for the inhabitants of the city. And there are some peculiarities about fruit as an article of food which may be worth observing in this connection. It is the most delicate and delicious of all food; to appreciate it indicates a refined taste. It is also obtained with the least amount of labor; and its production is the most free from any disagreeable associations. Bread, and edible grain of every kind, is obtained by a long succession of toilsome and tedious processes. Roots have to be dug out of the earth, and rendered fit for human food by cleansing and cooking. Animal food necessitates death, and a good deal more of what we like to think about as little as possible. While fruit, under favorable circumstances, is easily grown, easily gathered, and requires no artificial preparation. On the other hand, it is the least able to sustain life. Men can live on any other kind of food for a considerable time, and on some permanently: but confine a man to fruit, and he will sink directly; there is not substance enough in it to repair the waste that is consequently taking place in the human body. Now the resurrection body being incorruptible, we can scarcely think that it will need any material food whatever, notwithstanding the fact of our Lord having eaten and drunk with his disciples.* But whatever may be thought of that, it is worth notice, that when the maintaining hereafter of our whole being in immortal vigor is represented under the emblem—it is of course nothing more—of a constant supply of food, it is of a kind the least suggestive of waste or decay. Whether we shall eat and drink or not, we are here represented as doing so; but only fruit and pure water.

Our life, of every kind, will be sustained then, as it is now, by union with Christ; a union to which our concurrence will still be necessary. We shall have to keep on for ever appropriating Christ to ourselves. To live by Christ, we shall have to live on Christ. But we shall not have to "eat his flesh, and drink his blood:" we shall not have to "labor for the meat which endureth unto everlasting life." It will not be a work of toil, and effort, and conflict; there will be no doubts, or fears, or unbelief; no dangers to guard against, or temptations to overcome; all that will be at an end forever. We shall just eat of the tree of life, and drink of the river of life. Fresh fruit, and fresh water. No images more pure or simple, more refined or refreshing, could be drawn from anything which even conduces to our bodily sustenance.

But the value of this tree is not limited to its fruit: there is "healing" in its "leaves." The inhabitants of the city require no healing; but there are "nations" still in the flesh who do; and to them the leaves will bring it. This rebukes the narrow view of "the manifold wisdom of God" displayed in Christ's redeeming work, which would confine it to one method of application, and divide the human race simply into the saved and unsaved. There is such a division undoubtedly; but there are many others. — far more perhaps than as yet we have the least conception of. Fruit and leaves each proceed from the life of a tree: but the former is a higher result of it than the latter. The glorified church and the saved nations will both live by means of the tree of life; but its fruit is for the one, its leaves for the other. All who have any kind of access to it, and none else, will share its immortality; for if the healing power of its leaves be absolute, they must infallibly preserve from decay and death; but all will not draw the same kind or degree of virtue from it: some will eat of its fruit, others only be healed by its leaves.* If it be asked, whether the saved "nations" will always require "healing," we must fall back upon the far-reaching scope of these last visions. As in Old Testament prophecies, events connected with the Messiah's two advents are often grouped together, without any reference to the long interval between them, and in a way that sometimes gives them a very inconsistent appearance (e. g., "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God, to comfort all that mourn," etc. Isa. lxi. 2), so here we find set forth in perhaps a single word processes that will begin at the Lord's second coming, and extend indefinitely to an eternity of which we at least can see no end. At first the nations will need healing in the fullest sense of the word; as time advances the leaves will be less and less required; until at last, if required at all,—as judging by analogy from the fruit we may suppose them to be— they will act

* In Ezek. xlviii. 12, there is the same distinction, but with a different meaning. "The fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." There we have the various applications of Christ's work to the same persons; here we have its various applications to different persons. Scripture frequently uses the same figure to denote several things. In Ezekiel's tree the fruit and the leaves are both required to produce a combined result: in St. John's, the fruit produces a certain result in one class of persons, the leaves another result in another class of persons.

only as a safeguard against any possible recurrence of moral or physical evil. Every disease will have been cured, every organ made to fulfil its proper function, and the world will only have to be kept as it is, until— what? We can not say. Some have speculated on the multiplication of the race ceasing, and others on distant worlds being peopled from its teeming population. We knowing nothing about it; and it is useless to guess. There is time enough for that. What we can see is sufficient for any present purpose. As far as the eye can penetrate, all is bright and clear in the distant future. We know that "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." And on that our minds may rest with entire contentment. Nothing less ought to satisfy us; nothing more need be demanded. As to the glory of the elect Church indeed, much more is revealed; but as to the future of the human race, we know little or nothing beyond the fact, that it will share in the universal harmony of all creation. "And every creature, which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." (Rev. v. 13.)

WAITING.

O Jesus! thou knowest I'm waiting,
And longing and watching for thee,
And moments I reckon as hours,
Until I thy coming shall see.

I ask for the time of thy coming,
And when will this watching be o'er;
I'm listening, Lord, for thy knocking,
And ready to open the door.

I thought yesterday night thou wert coming,
On hearing a knock at the gate;
'Twas only a message to tell me
A little while longer to wait.

To wait in the spirit of patience,
And watch in the spirit of prayer,
And gird up my loins and be ready,
To meet thee, my Lord, in the air.

O may I be found at thy coming
Prepared for the gracious reward,
To share with the saints in thy glory
And dwell evermore with the Lord.

GENTILE TIMES: WHEN DO THEY END?

BY CHAS. T. RUSSELL.

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled."
—Luke xxi. 24.

Doubtless our Lord intended to communicate to His disciples some knowledge, and possibly it was addressed more to the disciples in our day, than to the early church.

Let us then search what times the prophecy, which was in Christ, did signify. Of course, if it be one of the secret things of God, we cannot find out; but if a secret, why should Jesus mention it? If, on the contrary, it is revealed it belongs to us. Shall we guess and suppose? No: let us go to God's treasure-house; let us search the Scriptures for the key.

Jesus does not foretell its treading under foot of the Gentiles, as Rome had her foot upon them at that time. He does tell us, however, how long it will continue so, even the disciples thought "that it was he which should have DELIVERED Israel."

We believe that God has given the key. We believe He doeth nothing but he revealeth it unto His servants. Do we not find part of the key in Lev xxvi. 27, 33? "I, even I will chastise you seven times for your sins; . . . and I will bring your land into desolation . . . and will scatter you among the heathen." Israel did not hearken unto the Lord, but disobeyed him, and this prophecy is now being fulfilled, and has been since the days of Zedekiah, when God said, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, . . . I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, . . . until He comes whose right it is, and I will give it unto Him." Comparing these Scriptures, we learn, that God has scattered Israel for a period of seven times, or until "He comes whose right" the Government is, and puts an end to Gentile rule or government. This gives us a clue at least, as to how long until the Jews are delivered. Further, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the head of gold, is recognized by God as the representative of the beast, or Gentile Governments. "A king of kings and wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, hath God given into his hand." Dan. ii. 38. God has taken the crown off Zedekiah and declared the Image, of which Nebuchadnezzar is the head, ruler of the world until the kingdom of God takes its place (smiting it on its feet); and, as this is the same time at which Israel is to be delivered, (for "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled"), we here get our second clue. viz.: these two events, noted of the Scriptures of truth—"Times of Gentiles," and "Treading of Jerusalem," are parallel periods, commencing at the same time and ending at the same time; and, as in the case of Israel, their degradation was to be for seven times, so with the dominion of the Image; it lasts seven times; for, when in his pride the "Head of Gold" ignored "The God of heaven," the glory of that kingdom (which God gave him, as a representative of the Image,) departed, and it took on its beastly character, which lasts seven times. Dan. iv. 23,—and, (pre-figured by the personal degradation for seven years, of Nebuchadnezzar, the representative) until the time comes when they shall acknowledge, and "give honor to the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom." Dan. iv. 34; for all the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord when He is the Governor among the nations.

Our next question naturally, is, How long are seven times? Does God in his word, furnish us any clue from which to determine the length of that period? Yes, in Revelations we learn that three and one-half times, 42 months, and 1260 prophetic days, literal years, are the same (it has for years been so accepted by the church,) and it was so fulfilled: if three and one-half times are 1260 years, seven times would be twice as much, i. e., 2520 years. At the commencement of our Christian era, 606 years of this time had passed, (70 years captivity, and 536 from Cyrus to Christ) which deducted from 2520, would show that the seven times will end in A. D. 1914; when Jerusalem shall be delivered forever, and the Jew say of the Deliverer, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for Him and He will save us." When Gentile Governments shall have been dashed to pieces; when God shall have poured out of his fury upon the nation, and they acknowledge him King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Bat, some one will say, "If the Lord intended that we should know, He would have told us plainly and distinctly how long." But, no, brethren, He never does so. The Bible is to be a light to God's children;—to the world, foolishness. Many of its writings are solely for our edification upon whom the ends of the world are come. As well say that God should have put the gold on top instead of in the bowels of the earth; it would be too common; it would lose much of its value. So with truth; but, "to you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom."

We will ask, but not now answer, another question: If the Gentile Times end in 1914, (and there are many other and clearer evidences pointing to the same time) and we are told that it shall be with fury poured out; a time of trouble such as never was before, nor ever shall be; a day of wrath, etc., how long before does the church escape? as Jesus says, "watch, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape those things coming upon the world."

Brethren, the taking by Christ of His Bride, is evidently, one of the first acts in the Judgment; for judgment must begin at the house of God.

RAGGED TOM AND HIS SURETY.

One Sunday afternoon a big boy stood at the door of a Sabbath-school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sabbath before. His father and mother had brought him, and begged that he might be received again. The Superintendent said,

"We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school, sir," said the parents, "but he is ten times worse at home; he will be lost if you do not take him back."

"We would take him back if we could secure his good behavior. I will see," said the Superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again, but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behavior. Will any one be surety for him?"

A pause followed; the elder boys shook their heads. They said they knew him so well. The others did not care for him.

But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry that no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The Superintendent soon heard his little voice saying, "If you please, sir, I will, sir."

"You, Tom! a little boy like you! Do you know what it means to be surety, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, if you please; it means that when he is a bad boy again I'm to be punished for him."

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the Superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with downcast face, walked across the room. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that. I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—never!" I think God had put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was graciously helping Tom's work as the surety.

As the children were leaving the school, the Superintendent saw this big boy and little Tom walking and talking together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage where Tom lived, he said to the mother, "Where is your son Tom?"

"O, he is just gone up stairs with a great boy that he brought with him. I don't know what they are doing."

"May I go up?"

"O yes, sir."

The Superintendent went slowly and gently up the stairs, and as he reached the top he could see through the door that Tom and the big boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice saying, "O Lord, make this boy that has been the worst boy in the school, O Lord, make him the best boy."

The Superintendent kneeled by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them. The big bad boy became one of the best boys in the school. God raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and after that sent him to a missionary college. He is now a missionary, and is preaching to the Africans about Jesus, who became the surety for sinners.—Church Union.

THE LIGHTS IN THE TUNNEL.—I was travelling upon a road which I had never passed over before. There was a long train of cars crowded with passengers. In the afternoon, while there yet remained an hour of daylight, I noticed the lamps were being lighted. We journeyed on, and I watched their faint glimmering flames; scarcely could they be distinguished in the bright light of day. I wondered why they were lighted so early. Suddenly we passed into darkness. Then the lights shone with a strong, steady ray.

All through the tunnel they burned brilliantly. How dependent we were upon them! Could it be possible they were the same flames which a few minutes before burned so dimly? Yes, they were the same, only brought into view by the surrounding gloom.

How like God's promises, I thought. When the sun of prosperity shines upon us, we may greatly undervalue them. But when adversity and affliction enclose us with thick shades of night, our faith bursts into a strong and steady flame, and chases away the darkness and gloom of despair. We feel how weak and feeble we are. We cannot take one step without the light which comes from above to guide our wandering feet. Our souls rest upon God's promises as our only hope. Without them we should be in deepest night. Let us have true and living faith, and we may rest secure that when we need its cheering ray it will not desert us, but become a burning and shining light to guide us on our journey to the promised haven of rest.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BRO. STORRS: We are certainly living in wonderful times, and not the least wonderful part is, we see the word of God so visibly fulfilled with regard to the Jews. I have been reading a pamphlet lately, of their history during the last eighteen hundred years. Almost every nation in the world, has tried its utmost to exterminate them, but they have lived through it all, Jews as much as ever. The set time to favor them has truly come. God is doing it all, still He tells them, "I do it not for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy name's sake." How true! Israel's still uncompleted guidance is the grandest poem of all time!

I made a statement in my article published in the June No., which I wish to correct. For some reason I did not notice it. Speaking of God's promise that He will remember the people and remember the land, I say, "When will He remember them? When they turn to Him with the whole heart."

The word is plain on this point. God caused them to be led captive into all nations because of their sins, and there He remembers them and says, "I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols I will cleanse you. A new heart also I will give you. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people and I will be your God." "The days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. But the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from all lands where He had driven them. I will send for many fishers, and they shall fish them; and for many hunters, and they shall hunt them; and I will bring them again into their land that I gave to their fathers." There they are to look on Him whom they have pierced. Lord hasten it in thy own time.

Wisconsin.

MRS. JAMES A. BARNRY, Conn., writes: As I received to-day $2, for washing, I will send it to you right off, lest something else might come up that I might want, and you would not get it. Wearied with my week's work, I laid down to rest, and I thought of the BIBLE EXAMINER and said to myself, "Why not send the $2 to Bro. Storrs?" I rose and took my pencil, and here is the money. I do praise God for this new light that is now shining on the revealed word of God. I am continually searching the Word: it never seemed so clear as now; and though we are "reprobates" to some of the Adventists around here, yet the Word of God keeps us company. Twenty-one years ago I fell in love with the mercy of God. From my earliest childhood the blessed Jesus wrought so on my mind as to cause me, at six years of age, to long to be a Christian. But, Oh! the thought of the endless ages of woe to those who knew not God filled me with horror! When the bell tolled for the death of any one, I would ask my godly mother, "Were they Christians?" If she said, "No;" off I went alone; and while the tears would flow, my imagination would picture their agony, and almost hear their shrieks for help, and no help! I thought it was a solemn thing to live; and I had such exalted views too of a holy, and sinless life, and seeing so much in myself of the opposite character, I did wish I had never been born; why could I not have been a bird, beast, or insect, so that death would be the end of me? But, no; I was an accountable being and must meet God, the relentless being! I cannot begin to describe my anguish. When, in after years, I heard the Advent faith, I took my Bible, and began at Genesis; and one thing after another convinced me of its truth, and I fell in love with the mercy of God: and though years have come and gone, that Book has not grown old, like other things; but, better and better. Spiritualism tried to overthrow my faith, and once nearly cost me my life; persecution has cast its envenomed darts at me, and I, like David, cried night and day unto God; for, my feet well nigh slipped. Pray for me, that God may seal me His.

Since writing the foregoing, we have received the August EXAMINER, which tell us you have sent it hitherto, gratis; for which, after all the good and comfort that we have received, a "thank you," will not satisfy us, if it does you. No, as long as we can earn anything, and are well, consider us your life subscribers. But if sickness, poverty, and keen want, stare us in the face, and you feel that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," we will, with thankful hearts, receive. I would sooner cease to eat than that new found light should cease to beam on our pathway: and we are striving to emit light to others on this more than blessed way; and it is spreading, gladdening other homes besides our own. This year's EXAMINERS, though we would have been so glad to have kept them, are scattered miles apart; and it is uncertain as to our ever being able to collect them again. But as there is a power of good in every seed of Divine truth, so we pray that it may leaven the whole lump. May the Lord, out of his rich treasure house, bless all; both Editor and Printer, correspondents, and dear old Sister Pitts, is our prayer.

August 12, and 17, 1876.

CHARLES A. HASTINGS, Springfield, Mass., writes: I regard the BIBLE EXAMINER as the best periodical I take. It seems to strike me nearer the truth, as I understand it, than any of the others; as God's love extends to all the world, and He is no respecter of persons and it is necessary for all to know Him, "the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom He hath sent," to obtain eternal life. If they have not had that knowledge clearly in this life, I cannot oppose the thought of their living again to receive it: yea, more, God's love covers that result. We who have formerly believed that no one would live from the dead but those who had in this life received the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, I think were in error. There are only two BIRTHS brought to view in the Scriptures, the natural and the spiritual, and Christ is the first born from the dead,—the first-fruits of them that slept;—He was not the first one who lived again after having once fallen in death; this was not called a birth: hence, there may be, yea, it seems there must be many who will live again. They who are born from the dead receive a spiritual birth: this is immortal, incorruptible, eternal life; "and this life is in His Son:" and those who thus come in, connected with the first-fruits, (as the apostle James says, "We are a kind of first-fruits"), become the associate kings and priests with Christ; they are "the Bride, the Lamb's wife," to be sharers in His glory, in and of "the ages to come:" for which I am praying and patiently waiting.

S. S. CALL, Iowa, writes: Opposers find we have more Scripture to sustain us than they had supposed, and they are yielding to the evidence presented. Some are stubborn; but they dare not meet us to investigate fairly and honestly. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. I do not care to have any controversy for the sake of the mastery. No, no; but for the truth's sake, and to give light, and to help others I will do it cheerfully. O, it is comforting to know God is no respecter of persons. Bless His holy name for the assurance He has given. We can look up to him now without feeling that He is a tyrant and despot; but as to a benevolent benefactor. Praise His name forever and ever.

A man, in Minnesota, to whom the EXAMINER was sent the past volume, wonders who sent it, or where it came from. He says, it is a welcome visitor, and he thanks the donor for it, and sends $2 to pay for this volume and says, he will subscribe for it another year soon as possible.

ABEL ROBINSON, Kansas, writes: I feel thankful that you intend still to publish the BIBLE EXAMINER. I do love it. We do not see alike in some things; still, I believe we are one in spirit. I do rejoice in the light and consolation its teachings have brought to my mind. I rejoice that the Son of David is not only the Saviour of those who hear and obey now, but that "in due time" all shall hear the good news. I shall always remember the love to God, and the rejoicing that sprang up within me, some years ago, by these glad tidings brought to me by some old EXAMINERS sent to my wife's father, from Mrs. P. Pitts. How men can oppose these plain teachings of the Bible I cannot see. I find but few who feel the importance of knowing the truth: they cannot leave the traditions of men for God's truth. I hope nothing more may befall them than that they may be saved, "though as by fire." My thanks are due you as Editor, to the writers, and to all who assist you in sending forth the BIBLE EXAMINER. I hope G. R. LEDERER will still favor us: his expositions are joyfully received.

August, 1876.

DR. R. WILLARD, New Jersey, writes: It may be proper that the aged have a word of testimony, setting forth God's goodness through personal experience in former life. Your periodical is too precious to encumber with auto-biography; and yet God's leadings are always full of instruction if we heed them. In reviewing the past, I think I see His gentle guidings in all the way; and especially in these last days of religious scramble. My incentives have been great, mercenarily, (while in Mexico), to embrace Catholicism, and to avail myself of many vague speculations; but through mercy I am this day untrammelled (as I hope) of spurious and hurtful "isms;" and, having found favor of God, hope to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus: Amen. Through Divine favor, I have passed my 82d year; and life is still sweet. Oh the wonders of His grace, and the counsels of His will; as they develop, they magnify His wondrous love! How rich the doctrines set forth, from time to time, in the "EXAMINER." Let the fiery pillar guide, I pray.

August 20, 1876.

J. D. SHERIDAN, Iowa, writes: I hope you may have strength and material aid given that shall enable you to continue the BIBLE EXAMINER; for I feel it would be a great loss to me to be without its visits. I am still resting with entire and implicit confidence on the word and promises of Israel's God, that in and through the Seed of Abraham all the families of the earth will be blessed in the coming ages, and dispensations of God's love and mercy which He has made known to us by giving His Son to be "a propitiation for our sins, and not ours only, but for the sins of the whole world." Oh may the Father of mercies hasten the glad day when every member of the body of Christ—the promised Seed—shall be perfected by a resurrection out from among the dead; so that "the groaning creation itself," may be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Yours, in the hope of Israel, and in the patient waiting for God's Son from heaven.

WM. VALENTINE, late of Albany, N. Y., now in Conn., writes: Since I came here, on the 14th of Sept., my wife died at Fishkill Landing, at her sister's, and I was so feeble in health I could not attend her funeral. We had lived together 37 years. Her faculties by epileptic fits, had resulted in her becoming a monomaniac, and fled from me imagining me her enemy. No one without this experience can begin to conjecture my grief. Now, all in the world is nothing to me: all looks dark, lonely and dreary. Yet, God is with me, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth; for which, as well as all the good I have received from His hands, I still praise his holy name. Brethren, pray for me.

ELD. H. ROCKWELL, Conn., writes: I bless the Lord that through you as the agent and the EXAMINER as the instrument, and the entrance of the word, which is light, an oppressive cloud of theological doubt and difficulty has been removed from the dark horizon of my vision; so that, as formerly, I saw "men as trees walking," now I see clearly. If it should finally prove I am mistaken, I will ever praise God for the sweet peace already given, and count it one of my comfortable mistakes. May the Lord help us to search the Scriptures; for in them we think we have eternal life.

GEO. H. WATERHOUSE, Lynn, writes: I can say, without a doubt, the interest in the work of Christ and his saints, in "the ages to come," is on the increase. I think nearly all our subscribers (over 30) will renew. I wish I had the means to have all that you and Bro. Bishop have written on "Fatalism" put into a tract. I would scatter them widely. I do not think that we in Lynn, have done as much as we ought to support the EXAMINER. I know it is "hard times," but I will give $— for its support the year to come, and more if I can. If all the friends of the EXAMINER will do what they can, by the help of the Lord, it will be sustained.

W. H. BARNES, Missouri, writes: I am still alive. To God be thanks. My health is only sufficient to allow me to sit up a short time at once. God bless the efforts made in the EXAMINER for the honor of His name. I would try to contribute something to its columns, but poor health and crippled hands will hardly permit it. My prayer is, that God may bless and prosper it, and strengthen, nerve, and protect its Editor until He shall say, Thy mission is done, rest till the crown is given. Praise God for the light He has been and is shedding on our world. Your brother in hope of life when our LIFE-GIVER comes.

S. BATTEY, Kansas, writes: I do not see how I can do without the EXAMINER. Each number comes laden with precious thoughts on the reign of our blessed Saviour on David's throne. O blessed day when the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the earth, and all shall know Him from the least to the greatest, and peace and joy be the common lot of man; when sin shall be made to cease; and man live in harmony with his maker, co-operating with the blessed Saviour in carrying out the great plan of salvation in the ages to come; the earth restored to her Eden state, and new glories shall be unfolded to our enraptured vision. Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace and good will to men.

WM. H. SMITH, Ohio, writes: I have been a reader of the BIBLE EXAMINER for four years; and can truly say, it has been as a light shining in a dark place, with the different theories with which I have been surrounded, while seeking after truth. It has been a lamp to my feet and a light to my path; and I sincerely hope it may be continued, and that others may be led to see the goodness and mercy of God to a fallen race.

Our aged Bro. ROCKWELL writes me, that my old and tried friend GEO. STORER, of New Britain, Conn., has "fallen asleep in Jesus." So one after another of our tried ones are taken from us by the hand of death; but the hand of the REDEEMER will restore them in "due time." Then sorrow will be turned into joy.

THE DEIST AND THE QUAKER.—A GAY young man, travelling in a stage coach in London, forced his deistical sentiments on the company by attempting to ridicule the scriptures; and among other topics, made himself merry with the story of David and Goliath, strongly urging the impossibility of a youth like David being able to throw a stone with sufficient force to sink into the giant's forehead. On this he appealed to the company and particularly to a grave Quaker gentleman, who sat silent in the corner of the stage. "Indeed, friend," replied he, "I do not think it at all improbable, if the Philistine's head was as soft as thine." This grave rebuke reduced the young man to silence.—Selected.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

 The Editor of this Magazine intends, "if the Lord will," to spend Sunday the 12th of this month in Lynn, Mass.; Monday the 13th will visit Salem; Tuesday the 14th will visit Chelsea.

 Those who intend to have the Bound BIBLE EXAMINER, Vol. 20, must apply for them soon; for I cannot supply many more of that volume. I have no perfect sets unbound of Vol. 20, to part with, I have some odd Nos. of it. Bound volumes 18 and 19 I can supply to any who wish them for $2 per volume, or $1 unbound.

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

1. For one new subscriber, with $2, I will give an unbound volume, of either 16, 17, 18, or 19, as they may choose.
2. For three new subscribers, with $6, he shall receive, unbound, all four of the volumes 16, 17, 18, and 19; or, if he prefers it, he shall have either volume 18 or 19 bound.
3. For five new subscribers, with $10, he shall receive both volumes 18 and 19, bound.
4. For eight new subscribers, with $15, he shall receive all three of volumes 18, 19, and 20, bound.

In all the offers, the persons who claim the premiums must pay the mail or Express charges on the bound works sent them.

VOLUMES 18, 19, or 20 of this Magazine will be furnished in plain morocco and gilt binding (to any who may desire it), at short notice. PRICE, $3.25 per volume free of postage; or, $3 when called for or sent by Express.

BIBLE EXAMINER BOUND.

VOLUME 20 of this Magazine is now bound. Those who wish to avail themselves of it should inform me immediately, as I have not as many as of previous volumes. The price will be $2 including postage.

I have still a supply of volumes 18 and 19; bound, which I will furnish at the same rate per volume.

GEO. STORRS.

POSTAGE.—The new law on printed matter is as follows: "On transient newspapers, magazines, and all kinds of printed matter, except circulars, ONE cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof." A new privilege is also granted: the sender may write his or her name and address on the inside or on the outside wrapper, preceded by the word "From."

TO CLUBS FOR VOL. XXI.

FOUR copies will be sent to one address for $5.

TEN will be sent to one address for $10.

Those who take ten copies, may have them sent in two parcels of 5 copies each to two different persons; but I cannot consent to let clubs be divided into less than five copies to one address. If clubs are obtained, and it is wished to send a part of the copies to single individuals, 25 cents, each, must be added to cover my additional expense in the work of mailing.

Please do not forget this.

To accommodate those who cannot obtain a club of 5, I will send two copies to one address for $3.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SISTER, in Massachusetts, sends for several copies of the BIBLE EXAMINER, and asks: "Are you coming this way soon? if not, do you know if Bro. Bishop is, and when? If possible I would try and get a Hall for an evening or two, that the people might choose between the God of the Bible and the one preached in the churches here. Strange the representations! Now I have had so much light thrown upon the Scriptures, through the pages of the EXAMINER, I can hardly sit still while the preachers talk as they do."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—I would be glad to visit Massachusetts, but fear I shall not be able to do so at present; and it is doubtful if Bro. Bishop can. We must all have patience with those who see not as we do in regard to the Divine character and government; remembering the time ~~was~~ when we were as they are, and "were by nature ~~children~~ children of wrath even as others;" and if "God, who is rich in mercy," hath opened our eyes to see the glorious light that now shines on our pathway, He may, He will, "in due time," cause them also to see the great and glorious things He, of his grace, has given us to see a little in advance of them.

MRS. A. LOGAN, Illinois, writes: Our interest in the BIBLE EXAMINER is such we could not well do without it. It is the only medium we have to explain Bible truth to us. The letters and extracts, as well as the Editorials, are always interesting. Sister Pitts' are especially so, as she is a dear old pilgrim.

"THE EASTERN QUESTION."

THIS question is one that is receiving much attention, both in political and religious publications. I have refrained from writing or publishing much on the subject, because so much speculation has been indulged in by various writers which seems only designed to produce excitement without soberly contemplating Scripture facts and drawing conclusions from them so as to harmonize Scripture with Scripture. To carry out their theories large portions of Scripture are entirely overlooked, or set aside as "conditional prophecy;" and hence are said not to be regarded as utterances for which a fulfilment is to be looked for.

Such is the virtual course pursued by many religious writers on the subject before us: they are in a hurry for the "battle of Armageddon" and the consummation of all things. They evidently do not consider the importance of looking at other prophecies relating to the close of this age or dispensation, and the opening of the one to succeed it.

The most scriptural and rational article on the "Eastern Question" that I have seen is that by Dr. LEASK, which was copied into the BIBLE EXAMINER for August last, page 442-3. Let those who have seen that article look at it again. In addition I will suggest a few things more.

If the present complicated state of affairs in the East is to bring on the finale of this age, a much longer period will transpire before the consummation than these hurrying teachers seem to have any idea of. Israel and Judah are to be restored to Palestine and made "one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel." (Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22.) "Thus saith the Lord God." Let those who dare, take the responsibility of denying it. That the Turkish or Mohammedan power, or rule, will be overthrown before, or at the time, this occupancy of Palestine by Judah and Israel occurs, is a matter that cannot be doubted by any who accept the prophecy as a verity.

If, then, the present conflict in the East is to result in the downfall of the Turkish power, as possibly it may, it seems to my mind the programme will be, Russia will take and hold Constantinople, and that England, in self-defence, will be obliged to take and hold Palestine, either by force of arms or by compromise with Russia; and when she has possession of Palestine her first work will be to people it. By whom can this be accomplished so readily and effectually as by Judah, i. e., the Jews; and Israel, i. e., the Anglo-Saxons?

Palestine in possession of Judah and a portion of Israel, undisturbed in their work by any foreign power, would in a few years attain that condition described in prophecy by those who, seeing their prosperity, speak thus: "I will go up to the land of uncalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil, and to take a prey, to turn my hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land." (Ezekiel xxxviii.)

Such is to be the early prosperity of Judah and a portion of Israel on their return to the land "wherein their fathers have dwelt." This prosperity will excite the jealousy of "Gog," or Russia, then holding its seat of empire at Constantinople; and Palestine being "in the midst of the land" formerly under Turkish rule, Russia, or Gog, will seek to extend its empire over all the territory which had, in former years, been the Ottoman empire; and hence determines war on what, to his mind, was a helpless people, who though rich, are at ease.

The result of that war is recorded in Ezekiel 38 and 39. It may be that is really the Armageddon war, and would be in or near the literal place, from which that name is derived; which name comes from MEGEDDO, a city situated in a great plain at the foot of Mt. Carmel: here king Josiah was slain in battle (2 Chron. xxxv. 22-25); here Barak and Deborah overcame Sisera and his great army (Jud. v. 19). It was a noted place for scenes of carnage. And as Gog and his multitude of adherents are to invade Palestine and meet with a terrible defeat and slaughter, as described in Ezekiel 38 and 39, by the direct interposition of God; is it not likely, that is the time, and the great plain of Megeddo the place of the "battle of Armageddon?"

I do not affirm that my suggestion is the truth in this matter; but to me the idea seems more in harmony with the Scriptures than any other I have seen. Let my remarks be read in connection with Zechariah xii., and it will be seen Judah is first to be gathered, and that a great battle is to be fought concerning Jerusalem; and the suggestion is made that a multitude, like that spoken of Ezek. 38 and 39, is to be engaged in the war and meet with a similar fate; and that it is then that Christ is to be manifested to Judah, or the Jews, as it is hinted He will come Rev. xvi. 15, at the Armageddon battle. Please read Zech. xii. before laying down this article, and compare it with Ezek. 38 and 39; and, in concluding, do not fail to read carefully Ezek. 39, from verse 17 to the end, and see if there is not ground for the conclusion I have arrived at on the question concerning the Eastern troubles and the transactions concerning Judah and Israel, as connected with the Armageddon battle. That battle will surely come; but, perhaps, neither as soon nor in the place many expect. God does not do his work in such a hurry as many suppose; and "a thousand years" with him are "as one day" with us. So, let us watch and pray and wait.

"DEVILS, DEMONS," ETC.

A friend writes: "There are some texts I cannot seem to harmonize with your views on the above subject. We read, in 1 Tim. iv. 1, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Now I wish to know what these seducing spirits are. Are they not the same as those that work miracles? It looks to me so: and can it be that God sends holy angels to seduce and deceive people?"

My friend's difficulty is in relation to the agency employed in the work of seducing and deceiving people. Is there any more difficulty in supposing that the agents are holy angels than that they are wicked angels? If God permits wicked angels to live, and sustains them in life, and allows them liberty to go about secretly to seduce and deceive people, is he not as much a partaker in the deception as if He allowed good angels to do the same thing? Both classes live by his sustaining power, and neither can perform miracles without his permission. What difference then does it make whether the agent is good or bad, so far as the Divine Government is concerned?

The persons who "depart from the faith" are given up, because of their apostasy, to be deluded. The apostle says, "Because they received [or, retained] not the love of the truth that they might be saved: for this cause, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie," etc. (2 Thess. ii. 10, 11.) Here he shows that God himself sends the delusion because of their wickedness in preferring lies to the truth: they had the truth by which they might have been saved; but they "departed from the faith;" and God, in righteous judgment, sent them "strong delusion." His will was that they should have lies seeing they preferred them to the truth. Could not His will be carried out without employing a personal spirit devil? If not, then such a devil is a necessity in the Divine administration and does the will of God. Would not holy angels do it better? The theological devil would gladly and joyfully perform the work; but it may safely be doubted if God would intrust him to do it, seeing he is such a cheat as theology represents him to be; besides, it would imply harmony between God and the theological devil.

DR. ADAM CLARKE, on the phrase "seducing spirits," says, "Many MSS. and the chief of the Fathers have, spirits of deceit; which is much more emphatic than the common reading. Deception has her spirits, emissaries of every kind, which she employs to darken the hearts: pretenders to inspiration and false teachers of every kind belong to this class."

The apostle John cautions us to "try the spirits whether they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." (1 John iv. 1.) Here we see who the "seducing spirits" are. They are "false prophets" or teachers; and those who have had the truth but do not love it so as to cleave to it with all their hearts; and having "departed from the faith" become demons, devils, i. e., spirits of evil, or evil spirits; and being deceived themselves, they are left to deceive others who do not love the truth.

Thus we find a multitude of evil spirits or devils; but they are spirits of evil men in the flesh, and not the invisible, intangible, spiritual beings of the theologians. You can see them in the streets and lanes of our cities by the thousands every day; and they "go about like the roaring lion seeking whom they may devour." They are men who do not love the truth, and are given up to believe lies, for the present, and are condemned to "come short of the great salvation" which is to be "brought unto" the faithful believer "at the appearing and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ." They come not into the number of those of whom Jesus says, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne," etc. (Rev. iii. 21.)

I might enlarge on this subject to almost any extent, but I have no desire to do so, and must refer those who wish to look more at the subject to my pamphlet advertised on the last page of this Magazine. Ed.

LOVE AND JUSTICE IN HARMONY.

THE LORD says, "There is no God else beside me: a just God and a Saviour." (Isa. xlv. 21.) Here justice and love are combined: in fact, they are always inseparable in "the only true God." Love leads: justice follows: both are pledges that no insupportable burdens are laid on man. Love supplies all necessary means for man's highest welfare. Justice sees that man is perfectly informed as to the best manner of using those means and protects him in their use, and prevents any requirement of responsibility where the action of man is the result of unavoidable ignorance. Love requires obedience to the CREATOR. Justice provides that man shall know precisely what is required of him and his liabilities. Love appoints death for disobedience, because to live in disobedience is to live out of harmony with God; and, of course, in a state of unhappiness. Justice sees that death (extinction of life) only is inflicted on the transgressor. Justice never did and never can allow a punishment to be inflicted not clearly expressed in the law.

Love provided two heads of the human race: one of the animal, and the other of the spiritual development; thus carefully providing against a final failure. The first head failed of perfect obedience. Love and Justice united in carrying into execution the death sentence, and "death passed upon all men, in whom (Adam) all had sinned." (Rom. v. 12.) But the race, as such, had not personally sinned. They were "made subject to vanity (death), not willingly, [i. e., for personal sin] but by reason of him [God] who subjected the same in hope." (Rom. viii. 20.) From this death Justice and Love united in the deliverance; and in due time, the Second Head of the race ("the head of every man is Christ," 1 Cor. xi. 3) "appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself" (Heb. ix. 26); and, "therefore, as by the offence of one" (the first head—Adam) "judgment came upon all men unto condemnation (to death); even so, by the righteousness of one (the second head—Christ) the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. v. 18.) Here, again, Love and Justice unite; just as extensive as was the condemnation is the justification. Love consigned the race to death, not for any fault of the posterity of the first head; and justice united in it because it was to be removed by the Second Head, in due time, and prove a benefit to the race in the end; placing them all, in some of "the ages to come" (Eph. ii. 7), in a position to secure an endless life with an experience well calculated to enable men to see, as they never could otherwise have seen, the value and glory of life, and the exceeding riches of God's grace in Christ, the Second Head of the race. And no one of the race, "who lays hold on the hope set before" them—Christ Jesus—will ever complain but that Love and Justice are both glorious attributes of our CREATOR; and will see the perfect harmony that exists between them and eternally extol both, finding that the Lord is "a just God, and a Saviour." Justice will be seen, not as that horrible and merciless attribute which theologians have represented it to be, but a shining perfection, which really had as much to do with our final salvation as Love itself; for, "if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9.) Ed.

"ALL NATIONS."

THIS phrase is resorted to by some persons to avoid the conclusion that the promise and oath of God to Abraham covered all families and individuals of the race. They say, "It was nations only that were to be blessed in Abraham's Seed." Well, have all nations been thus blessed? It is plain they have not; many nations have become extinct without any knowledge of Abraham's "Seed." To such the oath and promise has never yet been fulfilled. Then it must be in the future. To avoid this conclusion, they say, "It is to be fulfilled to the nations who are living on the earth when Christ comes to reign: then the living nations will be blessed, but not those who died before that time." This, it seems to me, is "limiting the Holy One of Israel;" for He makes no such limitation, even in regard to nations; besides, it assumes that probation ends with all men with this life, without regard to the ignorance of men, however unavoidable it may be. The "Good News" of God's love "to the world," and His provision of a REDEEMER, is to be proclaimed "to every creature" before they can be saved by faith, or condemned for not believing. (Mark xvi. 15.) And this is to be proclaimed "in all the world." Who is authorized to say, that means a part of the world; and that in some obscure corner of its history?

While the phrase "all nations" is frequently used to signify those living in some particular period, it cannot be so applied in the promise and oath of God to Abraham; for, in that sense the promise and oath have failed, because not fulfilled in Abraham's day nor in that of his Seed; for many nations have gone out of this life since Abraham's day without the blessing. And though it is true that all the living nations will be blessed under Messiah's personal reign, that does not cover the promise and oath, for no such restriction is given in the pledge of God to Abraham; it is an unqualified pledge of blessing to all. That we may see the fulness of the promise, even to nations, let us present a few texts from prayers and prophecy. "God be merciful unto us, and bless us, . . . that Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations." (Psa. lxxvii. 1, 2.) "All nations shall serve Him; . . . all nations shall call him blessed." (Psa. lxxiii. 11, 17.) "Thou shalt inherit all nations." (lxxxii. 8.) "All nations whom Thou hast made shall come and worship before Thee, O Lord." (Psa. lxxxvi. 9.) "Praise the Lord, all ye nations; praise Him all ye people." (Psa. cxvii. 1.) "He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations: He will swallow up death in victory." (Isa. xxv. 7, 8.) "It shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues: and they shall come and see my glory." (Isa. lxvi. 18.) "That all people, nations and languages, should serve and obey him." (Dan. vii. 14.) "Who in time past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways." (Acts xiv. 16.) "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." (xvii. 26.) "By whom we have received grace and apostleship for obedience of faith among all nations for His name" (Rom. i. 5.) "The preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." (Rom. xvi. 25, 26.) "The Scripture foreseeing that God would JUSTIFY the heathen through FAITH, preached before the Gospel [the glad tidings] unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." (Gal. iii. 8.) "All nations shall come and worship before Thee; for Thy judgments are made manifest." (Rev. xv. 4.)

Thus does it appear that ALL NATIONS are embraced in God's promise and oath to Abraham. Then, if it can be shown that some of the nations which are now dead, or extinct from the earth, are embraced in this promised blessing, it follows that the promise extends to all.

Let us see what saith the Scriptures. What about

EGYPT, ASSYRIA, AND ISRAEL?

Please read Isa. xix. After great and terrible judgments on all three of these nations, the Lord speaks of their restoration, and concludes thus: "In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptian shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land: whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance."

Here are national restorations; and as to Israel it is plain from Ezek. xxxvii. it includes the dead as well as the living; for God says, explicitly, "I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord when I have opened your graves . . . and brought you out of your graves."

WHAT OF SODOM?

"O," says one, "she is set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." These words, so far as sound is concerned, may seem conclusive as to the final state of the Sodomites. But they are not to be considered alone, nor their sense to be determined by human traditions. "The full sense intended by the apostle," says Dr. Bloomfield, "seems to be this:

'They are publicly set forth for an everlasting example [in their fiery destruction] of the punishment God sometimes inflicts for sin in this world.' etc., "Prof. Stuart."

Is this their final state? First, What does Jesus say? If Sodom had had the advantages of Capernaum "it would have remained until this day: but I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee." (Matt. xi. 23, 24.) Is here not a clear intimation of mercy for Sodom? The same language is repeated by the Saviour to his disciples, when he sent them out to preach, concerning the cities that refused to hear them.

Second: What is the prophetic utterance about Sodom? The language cannot have any just application except to the dead of that city, for none of them escaped death. To the Jews of Ezekiel's time, God spake thus: "As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters. . . . Neither hath Samaria committed half thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations. . . . When I bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them. When thy sisters Sodom and Samaria return to your former estate, then thou shalt return to your former estate. . . . Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant: then shalt thou remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant." (Ezek. xvi. 48, 51, 55, 60, 61.)

WHAT OF MOAB?

"As I live, saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, surely Moab shall be as Sodom." (Zeph. ii. 9.) "Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the LORD: fear and the pit, and a snare shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the LORD. . . . Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the LORD." (Jer. xlviii. 42-47.) Here is a nation destroyed, etc.; yet it is not a final destruction, for God says, He will bring again their captivity in the latter days: so that nation, though first destroyed, is still to be blessed in "due time"—God's time.

God hath said in prophecy, "All nations whom" He has "made shall come and worship before" Him (Psa. lxxxvi. 9.) To confine this to one age or dispensation, or to a few out of all nations, is, clearly, to limit the plain testimony of the Bible, and to narrow down the great plan of human redemption, and give over to devil the great mass of the race of men; and thus the RESTORER fails to "bruise the serpent's head," and leaves the work not even half done; Christ never subdues all things" to himself (1 Cor. xv. 28); and God's "will . . . which he purposed in himself that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth" (Eph. i. 9, 10), also, fails of accomplishment. Against a theory which leads to such a result, let all men and women, who believe God "cannot lie," put in their protest. It breeds infidelity in all its forms; and already some of its advocates deny that Christ "tasted death for every man," and say that the command to "preach the Gospel to every creature" means no more than "the world" that was covered by "Cæsar's decree." (Luke ii. 1.) Yea, some of the opposers of the view advocated by me, have gone so far as to affirm, that "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many—NOT ALL—Heb. ix. 28;" thus falsifying the testimony not only of the text referred to, but others, plain and positive, that He did bear the sins of all; thus—"the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." (Isa. liii. 6.) How extensive was the work? "He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world" (1 John ii. 2.) Paul says, "For as by one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall the many be made righteous." (Rom. v. 19.) So of the text Heb. ix. 28: "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of the many," (so it is in the original); yet our opposers make Paul contradict his statement in Rom. v., and also in Heb. ii. 9, where he says, "that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man." On no other ground could the Gospel be preached "to every creature" without being a deception to all for whom Christ did not die or become the propitiation for their sins. Christ bore "the sins of the whole world:" and there is but one sin for which any one of the race will finally "be damned;" that is, "The sin of UNBELIEF;" or, a wilful rejection of Him who "bare our sins in His own body on the tree." (1 Pet. ii. 24) Let all men know there is life in Christ for "every man;" and the one sin for which there is never forgiveness is the sin against the Holy Spirit, which God gave to His Son without measure (John iii. 34); and wilfully rejecting Christ, when clearly made known to us by the word and Spirit, is the sin for which there is no forgiveness: it seals the person's doom.

THE TABERNACLE OF DAVID.

THE tabernacle of David to be set up, the apostle James tells us, (Acts xv. 16), is that which had previously "fallen down" and was in "ruins." The original words, in Hebrew, translated tabernacle, are defined by Prof. PICK, as follows: "1st. Mishkon, the Tabernacle which God commanded Moses to make, [Exod. xxv. 8, 9], as a pattern for the Temple. 2nd. Ouhel, a tent, Tabernacle of the Congregation. It is also a tent attached to the Tabernacle, where Moses and the Elders transacted all public matters. It is the tent which was covered with the pillar of the cloud (Num. xii. 5, 10.) 3rd. Sikkoth, the name of an idol, literally, a protector. 4th. Sokkoth, an awning, a shelter from the heat."—Bible Student's Concordance.

The most natural construction to put upon the phrase, "The Tabernacle of David," is, "The House of David;" and David in his expression of gratitude to God for His promises to him said, "Thou hast spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come" (1 Chron. xvii. 10, 17); that is, of David's royal house, including his throne and kingdom. This throne was originally in Jerusalem, on Mount Zion, and embraced the kingdom of Israel, east of the Mediterranean Sea. That kingdom was overturned, (Ezek. xxi. 25—27), and its throne cast down to the ground. Compare Ezek. xxi. 27, with Psa. lxxxix. 44, where, speaking of David's throne, prophetically, it is said, "Thou hast made his glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground."

Thus the throne was to "fall down" and be in "ruins," and the kingdom to be "overturned," and so remain "till He come whose right it is," then God said he would "give it to him;" of course, to "build again the ruins thereof and set it up," as James says; and to this agree the words of the prophet Isaiah; speaking of Messiah he says, "Of the increase of His government and peace . . . no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order [Heb., koon—"to set firm, to establish"—Prof. Pick:

"to re-establish it"—Septuagint) and to establish (Sept., support) it with judgment and justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." (Isa. ix. 7.)

Here, then, is a building again and a setting up of the Tabernacle of David that is fallen down: such a setting up and building as has never yet taken place, and is, evidently, the thing that the apostle James speaks of, Acts xv., which was future when he spake, though the time was unknown to the apostles; as Jesus told them (Acts i. 7), "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power" for restoring "the kingdom again to Israel;" which restoration includes the setting up again the royal house—throne and kingdom—of David. Such there seems to be no reason to doubt is the true meaning of the language of James, Acts xv. 16.

"THOUGHTS ON CHRISTIAN WORK, AND ON OUR CHRISTIAN CONDITION: IN THREE LETTERS."

Such is the title of a pamphlet sent me, a short time since, by HENRY DUNN, England. He will please accept my thanks for this contribution. I shall give the readers of this Magazine the benefit of the same as early as possible.

I hope to have more contributions from the same source. Mr. DUNN, it seems by his note to me, finds his physical strength impaired. He writes, "My health is very uncertain, and my energy not equal to that of some of you Americans."

He is, I believe about two years younger than myself, and six the junior of Bro. Blain. He is, however, much older than either of us in the great work in which we are all engaged. It is a remarkable fact, in this country, that a large number of aged people are the joyful receivers of the views we hold on "the ages to come:" they feel to praise the Lord for the wonderful deliverance they have been granted from the burden of old traditions about the Government of God. Bless His name.

STRUCTURE AND CONTENTS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

PRELIMINARY.

As Spirit Speaking only to Spirit.—Scripture stands alone. "Other writings," as Professor Jowett has well said, "merely ask for the comprehension of their statements, the exercise of a clear logical faculty; these 'mediating,' between two worlds, the visible and the invisible, often seem to indicate much that can be powerfully felt in the heart, although scarcely, if at all, capable of being translated into words, and demand sympathy, as an essential condition to the right understanding of passages, beyond the power of philosophy to analyze, yet full of meaning to him who catches the accent."

Explain it as we may, there is a sense in which the words of Scripture are frequently as Divine as the thoughts they embody. If faithfully translated, it matters not what may be the version, the words, like the wheels that Ezekiel saw in vision, rise with the Spirit that inspires them. "Whithersoever the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels."

And so it comes to pass that at the same time, and in all languages, "each in his own tongue wherein he was born," Christian men are to be found pondering words which, as they dwell upon them, glow with a new and warmer life, and at length become, as it were, transfigured before them in celestial radiance. Thus it is that Scripture, in the expression of a truth as much as in the revelation of it, vindicates its own divinity. It refuses to be confined within the limits of the human understanding, yet never transcends the consciousness of the renewed soul; for the Spirit in the Word, and the Spirit in the believer, are One; and all forms of communion between God and man harmonize. Hence it is that to the poor, the suffering, and the ignorant, Scripture commonly so speaks, that the heart is affected long before the mind is clearly informed, and men live on truths which they are yet utterly unable to express in words.

We are confirmed in this view of Scripture when, examining the structure of the book, we note, as the author from whose writings we are extracting does, the combination of unity with diversity in its contents, and the differences that exist between the Pentateuch, the History of the Jews, Sacred Prophecy and Poetry, and the leading features of the New Testament.—EDITOR.

THE PENTATEUCH.

Scripture, as we all know, is a collection of tracts, the work of above thirty authors, who utter what they have to say, not contemporaneously, but in succession, and along a vast line of time, say 1,600 years. Yet, in spite of this, we all feel it to be ONE BOOK. We do so because we cannot fail to see, as Mr. De Quincey says, that "all the writers combine to one end, and lock, like parts of a great machine, into one system." On this peculiarity the argument has been founded—and it is a weighty one—that, inasmuch as concert in the writers was impossible, the unity in question places the Bible in position altogether distinct from that of any other book; and seems at least to justify the assumption that its preparation under Divine direction, is in some sense or other, and in a very high sense too, a great fact. Internal evidence in support of this assertion is abundant.

The first sentence that meets the eye consists of ten pregnant words: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;" words that involve an utter denial of the pagan doctrine of the eternity of matter, and an equally positive denial of the Pantheistic theory that God is but the soul of the universe. For they affirm most positively, first, that in some far distant period—how distant we know not—the world in which we live had a beginning; and next, that He who created it is altogether distinct from it, a personal God, endowed with almighty power and infinite wisdom. On this assertion all subsequent revelation clearly proceeds.

Other records of the world's earliest history have we none. The question is therefore an important one, Can this be depended upon? The momentous point is, not whether everything recorded is to be taken in its most literal acceptance, for this is not essential to trustworthiness; but whether the narrative can be depended upon in that higher sense which implies the truest impression that, under the circumstances, could be produced on mankind as a whole. This is essential. If a writer intentionally leaves a false impression, his work is fraudulent and worthless. Further, if a narrative be in spirit untrue, nothing stable can be built upon it; for what is any erection worth that rests only on a quicksand? But—and to this attention should be specially directed—the Biblical narrative as given in the Book of Genesis, and throughout the Pentateuch, is either a foundation or it is nothing. All that follows evidently rests upon it. Its essential accuracy is taken for granted by every subsequent writer, and if the truthfulness of it be even doubtful, the entire volume of revelation is doubtful too.

Whether it is to be invariably regarded as a literal record of events or not, it is essentially historic. Its morality is of the highest; its general truthfulness self-evident; its simplicity and beauty unrivalled; and it everywhere involves the supernatural.

Short of an absolute denial of the supernatural in all its forms, which is simply to deny or to limit God, to refuse Him the character of a free agent, and to cut Him off altogether from direct communication with the creatures He has made, it is impossible to find any good or reasonable ground for denying the general credibility of the Pentateuch. But so long as we retain belief in a God at all—that is to say, in a personal God, having a character, and therefore capable of being known and loved—the possibility at least of the supernatural must be admitted. On the other hand, “if Christianity be true historically, its miracles included, and if indeed ‘Christ rose from the dead according to the scriptures,’ then the writings which bring such facts as these to our knowledge will take a place of authority in our mind and conscience which, practically, and as to their influence in determining our faith and our conduct, must be very nearly the same, whatever may be the theory or the opinion we adopt among the many that have been advanced concerning inspiration.”

It must, however, be borne in mind that no portion of Scripture was written for Englishmen only, nor yet for the men of the nineteenth century alone. It has no exclusive message to the practical, the scientific, the learned. It is addressed to men of all ages, of all temperaments, in all the various stages of civilization and culture, and the problem to be solved in producing a written account of the origin of the world was this: How can the information be best communicated, so as to be equally adapted to the condition and necessities of each and all? It may be that this could be effected only by divergence from the literal, by the occasional use of a form of speech more likely to convey a true impression than any plain prosaic matter-of-fact statement could possibly do. Be this, however, as it may the value of the Bible is by no means dependent on these things; and one scarcely knows which most to wonder at—the malice which re-joices to declare that the authority of Scripture is overthrown if a discrepancy can be discovered or the folly of those Christians who seem to stake Divine revelation itself on the verbal accuracy of either text or translation.—Liber Librorum.

JEWISH HISTORY.

Jewish history, although the history of a peculiarly governed people, and therefore of times in which God more obviously interfered with human affairs than He now does, is but history after all; and there is not a hint in Scripture which should lead us to imagine that it was composed under any other conditions than those which belong to the historian everywhere, who seeks and finds providential guidance in his work.

The Jews, indeed, lived under a theocracy,—but this phrase is often supposed to imply more than it really does. The theocratic form of government under which the Jews long lived by no means involved either a continual miraculous interference on their behalf, or preservation from any of the errors to which mankind are liable. Rather was it such a presence among them as admitted the possibility—whenever they were in a right state of mind—of the will of God being ascertained on any given question. When they neglected, or ceased to care for Divine direction it was obviously withheld. Scripture affords abundant proof that even before the monarchy the people were often left to their own devices.

Still we have a right to suppose that the men who were officially called to write or edit the transactions of the nation were truthful men, honorable and honored by their countrymen, and endowed with high talent if not with special gifts from above.

Further, Jewish history is in some important respects different from any other history. There the most secret thoughts of a man are oftentimes unveiled, the most plausible pretences are laid bare, and the most positive decisions are given as to the moral quality of the transaction recorded. In such cases we are left in no uncertainty as to the view God takes of an action, or as to the judgment He pronounces upon it.

All this, of course, implies that however human or fallible the narrative itself may be, inspiration is more or less diffused throughout every part of a history which is intended to show forth the living God moving and acting for definite ends among the children of men.

It is this diffused element in the Bible that gives to the book the importance it possesses. It is this breathing of the Divine—a peculiarity shared by none other—that justifies the regal demand it makes on the submission of men to its decisions.

There is not, however, within the whole compass of Scripture a word to show that Jewish history was inspired in the sense of the writers having what they wrote supernaturally revealed to them, and their being, as a consequence, infallible. The marvellous fidelity with which the faults and the crimes of the greatest and best of the kings are recorded, however humbling to the individual whose life is described, or to Israel as a nation, certainly indicates in the writers a subjection to truth and to God perhaps nowhere else to be met with; but this does not alter the fact that what they were called upon to record was frequently not the result of any special Divine communication, but related to matters within human cognizance, and therefore attainable by care and industry.—Ibid.

PROPHECY AND POETRY.

That there runs through Hebrew prophecy a long series of predictions, which can by no alchemy whatever be interpreted otherwise than as relating to a distant future, and to a coming King under whom the world should be happy, no one can doubt. Nor is it easy to sever this great monarch from "the seed of the woman" that was to bruise the head of the serpent, from that descendant of Abraham in whom "all the nations of the earth" were to be blessed, or from the Prophet whom the Lord said unto Moses He would "raise up of his brethren" like unto him.

It is this, and the good time connected therewith, which imparts to the Bible so peculiar a tone and color. It is this, as Dean Stanley truly says, that gives to it that hopeful, victorious, triumphant character which distinguishes it from the morose, querulous, narrow, and desponding spirit of so much false religion, ancient and modern. "To one far-off Divine event the whole creation moves." That event—the restoration and happiness of the race under the Messiah is the ever-recurring theme of the Jewish prophets. With a striking prediction of the glorious time when this "Sun of righteousness shall rise with healing in His wings" the last of the seers closes at once his own message and the Old Testament.

These prophecies may occasionally be very obscure or very coarse; they may at one time descend to a familiarity that startles us, and at another rise to a sublimity that is actually overpowering; it may often be exceedingly difficult to separate the voice which refers to its own day from that which points to a far distant future; but whether clear or dark, whether familiar or sublime, whether referring to the near or to the distant, they stand alone, as compositions unmatched; in beauty without a rival; in purity unapproachable; at once terrible and tender; often mystic and mournful, yet ever redolent of joy and triumph.

The Psalms occupy a position of their own. The Psalter is, as Tholuck says, the book from which "piety, whether Jewish or Christian, if genuine, has derived more nourishment than from any other source. In the greater portion of reformed churches the Psalms serve as spiritual songs; the Catholic priest daily prays them in his breviary; and, bound with many editions of the New Testament, they form the book of devotion of Protestants. When our Lord instituted the Holy Supper, He sang psalms with his apostles. He testified to His disciples that the traits of His fate were delineated in the Psalms. He referred His opponents to a prophetic psalm as inspired by the Holy Ghost. The extent to which His humiliation and exaltation were, mirror-like, beheld by Him in the Psalms may be illustrated by the fact that, even on the cross, when expressing the desertion of His soul, He used not His own words, but adopted the language of His typical ancestor."

In this, as in other poetic books, all historic references accord with previously recognized documents. The doctrine or ethics of the Psalms is in exact accordance with that which had preceded them. Herder says, "There is no attribute, no perfection of God left unexpressed in the simplest and most powerful manner in the Psalms and the prophets." Throughout indeed the Old Testament the typical or prefigurative continually appears, "every pious man who suffered for God's cause under the ancient economy, but triumphed at last, being regarded as a type of what should be fulfilled in Christ; just as the entire sacrificial institutions as well as other phenomena have a like reference."

But does it follow, if this typical character be admitted, that everything in Scripture must be from first to last inspired of God? I cannot see why this should be assumed. That the Bible, in consequence of the peculiarity of its structure, its mysterious unity, the perpetual murmur of the Infinite which is ever issuing from its pages; in its revelations and its reticence, in what it says and in what it withholds, is singularly unlike any other book, cannot be disputed. That the Divine breath animates it as a whole; that the Divine mind has controlled its formation, just as the same Divine mind controls and regulates all our affairs; that just as each separate human life, while perfectly free, is yet continually directed by an unseen hand (a thread of the supernatural running through it), so this written embodiment of the life of Humanity growing through the ages is moulded by One who has made it what it is, is certain. But how this fact should be supposed to carry with it the infallibility of every utterance in the sense of perfect accuracy as to dates and numbers, and absolute approval of every action recorded which is not distinctly disclaimed, it is assuredly difficult to see.

Paley justly observes, "This is to make Christianity answerable with its life for the circumstantial truth of each separate passage, for the genuineness of every book, and for the information, fidelity, and judgment of every writer in it."
—Ibid.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

That the New Testament opens upon us as a development of the Old can scarcely be denied by any honest man. When John the Baptist appears, his message is, "Repent: for the kingdom of God is at hand." But no one asks the question, "What kingdom?" because they fully understood him to be speaking of that which had so long formed the theme of prophetic anticipations. Their views regarding this kingdom might be, as they certainly were, in many respects very defective, for they looked forward to it apart altogether from any moral or spiritual change, and supposed that it would be "of the earth and earthy." Nevertheless it was this gospel of the kingdom, purified indeed from carnality, and connected with the resurrection, that the apostles were directed to preach, first to the Jew, and then to the Gentile; themselves ever living by faith in the happy expectation of the Redeemer's return, to "build again the tabernacle of David, and to set it up, that the residue [the rest or remainder] of men might seek after the Lord."

Like its predecessor, the New Testament advances step by step as a communication from God. Christ, who is its Alpha and Omega, not only claims to have received from the Father all He taught, He distinctly states that what He had thus received He communicated to His apostles. "I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest unto Me."

No statement can be more explicit or more authoritative; for it at one and the same time extends and limits the Divine communication.

It extends it to what the apostles should teach after their Lord's departure; and in so doing it assures us that we may rely not only on what He taught them while in the flesh, but on what He communicated to them after He was risen and glorified. It is an endorsement, so to speak, of that which was ultimately expanded and developed by them in their epistles to the churches; it is an authentication of that mysterious prediction which concludes the whole.

It limits Divine teaching to the men who received what they taught directly from the Lord. It does more; it limits them in the expansion of that teaching. Hence the substance of all they taught is involved in the words of Christ. "All the great doctrinal features of the epistles are found in germ in separate sayings of Christ. All the main outlines of the Apocalypse are given us in parables and sayings which trace the future history of His kingdom."

The New Testament thus becomes, like the Old, from first to last a progressive unity. But with this difference: "There progress is interrupted, often languid, and sometimes so dubious as to seem like retrogression. Here it is rapid and unbroken. From the manger of Bethlehem on earth, to the city of God coming down from heaven, the great scheme of things unrolls before us without a check, without a break."—Ibid.

THE CANON.

The question of the Canon—or what is "the schedule, so to speak, which contains the books of Scripture"—is a very different one from that of the inspiration of the Bible. "The object of the Canon," says Dr. Chalmers, "is simply to ascertain what are the actual books which should be received into this collection of sacred writings. We may allow a book to be canonical, and yet maintain opinions of all sorts and varieties in regard to its inspiration." It is important to keep this distinction in view.

The history of the formation of the canon of Scripture is, without doubt, embarrassed by many difficulties. That of the Old Testament we accept from the Jews. When or how it was formed is doubtful. Popular opinion assigned to Ezra and the great synagogue the task of collecting and promulgating the Scriptures, as part of their work in organizing the Jewish Church. Doubts, however, have been thrown upon this belief. The authority is merely traditional, and a tradition which also regards Ezra as having "re-written the whole of the Old Testament from memory, the copies of which had perished from neglect." Still it is but reasonable to suppose that the people on their return from exile would greatly desire an authoritative collection of their sacred books, and that such should then be formed is the more likely from the fact that the assistance of prophets could at this time be obtained, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi being contemporary with Ezra and Nehemiah.

"The history of the canon of the New Testament presents a remarkable analogy to that of the Old. The beginnings of both are obscure from the circumstances under which they arose. Both grew silently under the guidance of an inward instinct, rather than by the force of external authority; both were connected with other religious literature by a series of books which claimed a partial and questionable authority; both gained definiteness in times of persecution." In neither case is there any reason whatever to believe that the work was accomplished under special Divine impulse or guidance. But neither the value nor the trustworthiness of the documents is lessened by the absence of inspired authority in their collection.

For the first hundred and fifty years the apostolic writings, in separate circulation, do not seem to have been regarded in any sense as forming one authoritative book. The first catalogue of the books of Holy Scripture drawn up by any public body in the Christian Church which has come down to us is that of the Council of Laodicea (A. D. 365). The application of the term Bible to the collective volume of the sacred writings cannot be traced above the fourth century. Chrysostom adopts it in his second homily. He adds the word divine, or as we should now express it, "the Holy Bible." Yet it can scarcely be doubted that the genuineness of these narratives rests upon evidence better than that which establishes other ancient writings that are received without question. They were all composed during the first century; and it is highly probable that they were all accepted as genuine before the close of the second. Irenæus, who suffered martyrdom A. D. 202, affirms this to have been the case.

But it may be said, Is it not universally admitted that the councils of Laodicea and Carthage are our authorities for the New Testament canon? To a certain extent it undoubtedly is so; but only in so far as these assemblies may be regarded trustworthy witnesses to the fact that, at a very early period, given documents were commonly received as genuine. The all-important inquiry is, not what the councils decided, but what reasons Christians had, in that day, for accepting certain books and rejecting others. And the true answer will probably be found, partly in traditions which were then comparatively fresh, and partly in that "witness of the Spirit" to the truths embodied in the accepted books which has been in all ages, and still is, the highest evidence to their canonicity.

It is easy to say, How can I accept the Gospels we have, unless I know the grounds on which they were accepted, and other writings of a similar character rejected? But it is not sensible to do so. We do not speak thus regarding such pretended Gospels as are yet extant. Why do we not ourselves accept the so-called "Apocryphal New Testament," with its Gospel of the infancy, its various epistles, its shepherd of Hermas, and such like productions? Is any other reply more needful than this,—They condemn themselves? No reasonable person imagines for a moment that any one of these writings can compete with those that are canonical. There is scarcely room for a doubt or a question either as to their authority or their value. Why may we not then suppose that this was precisely the case with the early churches? These judges give no reasons for their decisions, simply because they never had a question regarding the claims of other documents which even admitted of serious discussion. The genuine Gospels carry their own evidence with them; they are seen to be Divine by their own light. But this, of course, implies that true Christians have, by virtue of their Christianity, a gift of spiritual insight, in the light of which they can separate the true from the false.

It is not surprising that many should be unprepared to admit this; that they should demand objective evidence; that they should be altogether unable to estimate the force of that which is purely subjective; that having themselves never received anything which the Gospels reveal into their hearts, they should refuse to do more than stand outside, and coolly weigh what is to be said of the authenticity and inspiration of Scripture in scales of their own making, and apart altogether from any considerations that are moral and spiritual. While this is the case such persons must remain unsatisfied. The Bible always supposes the existence in the man to whom it speaks of a spiritual faculty having affinity with its revelations; and this being the case, and ordained of God, it is vain to offer evidence in favor either of the miracles of the New Testament or of the authority of the Gospels to persons who are as yet quite unprepared to estimate that Divine love and condescension which underlies all. "My sheep," says Christ, "know My voice." Only in this way is it given to men, as Mr. Tennyson says,—

"To feel, although no tongue can prove That every cloud that spreads above
And veileth love, itself is love."

To the man who accepts the Bible because he recognizes in it the Divine voice, the human authorship becomes a matter of small importance. The Gospels would occupy precisely the same place in the estimation of such a man as they now do, whatever amount of doubt might be thrown on their literary composition. It is certainly pleasant to feel assured that the Epistle to the Romans, for instance, was written by Paul, but it would scarcely be less valued if, like the Epistle to the Hebrews, its authorship were uncertain. To say, therefore, that evidence of the authorship is essential to confidence in the books; to affirm that if the Bible is not infallibly accurate in every particular, it does not differ from other writings; to insist that it ought not to be received as a Divine revelation unless separate proof for the infallibility of each distinct portion can be presented; to pretend that if an erroneous statement can be discovered in any part of the volume the worthlessness of the whole is demonstrated—is simply to affirm that under no conditions whatever shall its authority be acknowledged; that any truth it may contain, if accepted at all, must be accepted only because it is capable of being proved true by other means; that nothing is to be received as true merely because it is contained in the Bible.

Yet the Book lives. And in spite of the admission that authority, tradition, and literary evidence, all go, more or less, to form or to build up our faith in, it remains true that, apart from all these things, learned and ignorant alike “have hung over this Book as with a strange fascination, ever since it was known to be put together as a whole;” some dreading it, as if it were an enemy, others loving it as the dearest and best of friends; both not unfrequently being compelled to exclaim, “It tells me all things that ever I did. Is it not from God?” This is, probably, what Coleridge means when he says, “The Bible finds me in a way no other book does. I do not so much find it, as I am found of it.”

How much more satisfactory, say some men, it is to rest our faith upon God than upon documents! Doubtless it is so; but before such dictum can be accepted, in the sense which these objectors put upon it, we must be informed where and how any true knowledge of God is to be obtained, if the documents in question are to be either rejected or ignored? Let us, therefore, instead of yielding to dissatisfaction with the mode in which God has been pleased to reveal Himself, now apply that which has been advanced to what are generally regarded as moral difficulties in Scripture.—Liber Librorum.

NOTE.—That moral difficulties do present themselves is certain. To deny their existence is sure to confirm unbelievers in their incredulity. To close one's eyes to them is mere stupidity. Whether removable or not, these things need not shake our faith, since in any case it remains true that, the spiritual element—that is, everything which concerns our relation to God and to eternity, though combined with other elements, is easily separated therefrom.—EDITOR.

III.

THE MORAL DIFFICULTIES OF THE BIBLE.

PRELIMINARY.

PROFESSOR JELLET, preaching before the University of Dublin, on “Some of the Moral Difficulties of the Old Testament,” notices how little silence avails in relation to such matters. We cannot, he says, keep these difficulties in the shade, for the enemies of religion will insist upon dragging them into the light of day.

Besides, of what avail is it to impose reserve on the tongue if you cannot also impose it on the heart? For who does not know that these difficulties, like spectres, haunt the meditations of many a Christian.

The following observations deal directly only with those that are most commonly brought forward by sceptics, but they apply indirectly to all similar instances. The possibility of interpolation, the case of the Canaanites, the Mosaic recognition of slavery, the conduct of Saul, and that of David with regard to the sons of the departed king, all involve principles which admit of a very wide application.—EDITOR.

INTERPOLATIONS.

In relation to these it is sometimes needful to exercise the verifying faculty. I am by no means prepared to assert that the account of certain miracles said to have been wrought by Elisha is an interpolation; but I think it possible. We are told that the waters of Jericho were healed, at the request of the men of the city, so that dearth or barrenness should not be there any more; that the consequence of his being mocked was the destruction of forty-two young men (not “little children”) by two she-bears; that he made iron to swim in order that one of the sons of the prophets might secure a borrowed axe; and that a man accidentally cast into the prophet's sepulchre came to life when the corpse touched Elisha's bones. These statements have all of them a very apocryphal appearance; inasmuch as in each instance a miracle is wrought for purposes which—reverently speaking, and in the light of Scripture alone—seem to us to be unworthy of Divine interference. In one case the miracle seems to be wrought merely to meet the wishes of men apparently seeking only their own advantage; in another to carry out what certainly looks like vindictive revenge for personal insult; in a third, to save the cost of a small purchase; and in the last apparently for no object whatever beyond mere wonder-working.

Now the question is, on what principle can these stories about Elisha be rejected, if the Second Book of Kings, in which they are found, is to be retained, and if other statements contained therein regarding the same prophet are to be believed? The answer seems to be, Either by accepting the Second Book of Kings in its true character—that of an historical record, but supposing it to have been composed by men who were liable to accept floating traditions without sufficient discrimination; or that the work has been somewhat tampered with at a later period. The latter seems to be far the more probable explanation. If any evidence can be produced to show that the Second Book of Kings was, as a matter of fact, written by men who were miraculously preserved from error, and further that no interpolation can by any possibility have taken place, then of course we are bound to accept all that is contained therein, and to believe that—account for it as we may—the great principles which dignify and sustain the miracles of our Lord and His apostles were not adhered to under the Old Testament dispensation.

But surely we ought not to come to such a conclusion either hastily or on insufficient grounds. The test, be it remembered, by which these stories are to be tried is the word of God itself, not mere human opinion; the ground of rejection is precisely the same as that on which the story of Tobit and the fish, and of Bel and the Dragon, were originally pronounced untrustworthy. Nothing, therefore, can be more unwarranted than the popular cry—too often encouraged by those who ought to know better—that any exercise of the verifying faculty in the present day must end in each man's accepting or rejecting just as much of Scripture as may suit him.

In the New Testament there is probably but one miracle that is fairly questionable—that of the supposed periodical descent of an angel into the pool of Bethesda. And this is rejected by believing critics on precisely the same grounds as those that have been stated—its want of congruity with other miracles, and its obvious improbability. It is incongruous, because a standing miracle of this sort, wrought, apart from any religious end, in a great city like Jerusalem, is altogether unlike anything else recorded. It is improbable, because Josephus, who would only have been too proud to boast of this mark of the Divine favor to the Jews, makes no mention of it. The view taken of the matter by many commentators is, that the angel referred to was a messenger from the temple who at stated seasons stirred up the blood received there from the sacrifices, and that this was popularly supposed to possess healing virtues.

The opinions of wise and good men, again, regarding demoniacs are various, and so long as they do not limit the power of God or explain away that which is written they are innocent. The darkness at the Crucifixion objected to by Gibbon as asserting an eclipse which did not then take place, Guizot, following Origen, shows to be in all probability a preternatural darkness occasioned in the atmosphere. But all these varieties of opinion entertained by men who in common hold to the essential verity of Scripture as a Divine revelation, only go to show how frank and fearless has been the criticism to which the Book has been subjected, and how willing many Christians are in the strength of their faith to deal with it without any unfair reserve.

The objection that doctrines are taught in the Bible which are inconsistent either with the justice or the love of God cannot be sustained. That such are frequently inferred from the sacred text is true enough; but these conclusions belong to the interpretation of the Book by man, not to what it reveals as from God. It has certainly yet to be proved that any doctrine of election bearing on the world to come is to be found in the Bible, that is different in principle from that which, as a fact of life, obtains in the providential government of God on earth, viz., the selection of some even before birth to rank and wealth, while others are introduced only to poverty and degradation; the end—however much it may be evaded or lost sight of on earth—being, in both worlds, that by this means all may be benefited, some by giving and some by receiving. The few are favored, only that by their loving self-sacrifice the many may be more favored. That it is often not so now is no evidence that it will not be so in “the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.”

The dogma of the eternal sensitive suffering of those who are unconverted here, which has descended to us from the apostasy has, I firmly believe, no place in the word of God; it is, at the best, but a human and very inaccurate theological inference.—Liber Librorum.

THE CANAANITES.

With regard to these nations, the assumption almost always made is, that God commanded their entire extirpation on account of their crimes. But this is not sustained by the narrative. The command is, "Thou shalt drive them out before thee." . . . "Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their Gods. They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against Me." "Ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves: lest thou take of their daughters to thy sons, and go a whoring after their gods." The promise, renewed from time to time, is, "I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee." Again, "I will send an angel before thee; and I will drive out the Canaanite." Further, as a fact, "multitudes of them did flee, some into Africa, and others into Greece. Procopius says they first retreated into Egypt, but gradually advanced into Africa, where they built many cities." They were never destroyed, except when their evil influence could not in any other way be got rid of.

When the Israelites fought, they naturally adopted the ordinary laws of war—the only laws which prevailed in their time,—and, in accordance therewith, they slew or made slaves of their enemies. Had the Canaanites been the conquerors, they would in like manner have slain or enslaved the Israelites.

"But," it may be said, "the Lord, according to the Bible, commanded the slaughter of women and children." This however, is not as clear as at first sight it seems to be. The first instance in which this practice occurs is in the case of the Midianites, who had brought such grievous calamities on Israel by seducing the people to idolatry and immorality, in order that they might offend God. Here they, in the first instance, slew only the kings of Midian and their warriors. Moses, however, is wroth at this forbearance, and commands the execution of all the male children and of all the women who were not virgins. That the great lawgiver was justified in so doing we have no right to assume. His motive was doubtless the preservation of the people, but he does not appear to have had any Divine sanction for this severity. A little later we have a recital of the general direction to "drive out" all the inhabitants, and to "destroy all their pictures and images," but nothing is said about killing the people. This direction had, however, been exceeded by the Israelites, for when Sihon, king of the Amorites, refused to let them pass, they destroyed all they overcame, even the women and the little ones. In thus acting they but too plainly imitated the habits of the nations by which they were surrounded.

Admitting—which we certainly must, if we hold to the Book—that God spake unto Moses,

Joshua, and Samuel, intelligently, whether revealing His character or commanding certain things to be done, we are nevertheless altogether in the dark as to the mode in which this was accomplished. We cannot get beyond the apostolic statement, that the same God who hath "in those latter days spoken unto us by His Son," did "at sundry times and in divers manners speak unto the fathers by the prophets."

But, accepting this statement, what follows? Why, clearly this; that as a true apprehension of the message of "the Son" is made dependent on the state of the heart of each individual to whom it comes, so must it be with every message God gives or sends to the children of men. Eminently is this the case when the communication relates to anything that has to be done by man. Paul had to withstand Peter as a man to be blamed in relation to the particular course he was pursuing in doing God's work. Moses, in fulfilling a Divine command, sinned grievously; nor is there the slightest reason to suppose that any servant of God is, or ever was, free from liability to error in executing the Divine will, if pride or ambition, or selfish passion in any form, mingles with the work. Before, therefore, we "charge God foolishly" with sanctioning wrong, let us be quite sure that He commanded the thing to be done in the way it was.

The ordinary impression seems to be that a constant and direct intercourse went on between the early rulers of the Jews and their heavenly King, under which error was impossible; that every act of the government was directed and regulated by intimations from above; that the judges or governors of Israel were but the passive recipients of Divine instructions; that the obedience rendered was therefore, to a great extent, mechanical, leaving little, if any, place for the judgment of the statesman. Something like this is commonly held by persons who, without much reflection, think and speak of the people of Israel as placed under a theocratic government. But such a view of things cannot be sustained from Scripture. On the contrary, there can be no question as to the fact that intimations of the Divine will, as to what the Jews should do under given circumstances, always left room for wisdom or folly in the execution, for judgment or want of judgment in the ruler, for partial or entire obedience in the people.

The question then arises, Did Samuel in issuing the command to slay the infants and sucklings of Amalek act by the immediate direction of God, or was the order given under an erroneous impression that in this act of destruction he was but carrying out a Divine threatening, and justifiably accomplishing a great work of retribution? Probably the latter. He believed, doubtless, that he was but uttering the Divine will when he said, "Hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord," and yet it is anything but certain that he was right in thus speaking. He was evidently not infallible or quite free from secondary motives in what he did as the representative of God, or he would not have appointed his sons judges—men "who turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment." He was now old, and if he erred in the one instance why should he not in the other? Besides, it is not a little remarkable that while he tells Saul that God had, on account of this act of disobedience, rejected him from being king, he had, before this occurrence, deposed the son of Kish for offering sacrifice without authority.

Without, therefore, asserting that Samuel was wrong in the act referred to, the possibility of this being the case should be borne in mind, since, if he erred, the difficulty in question in great measure vanishes.—Ibid.

SLAVERY.

And now let us look at the question of slavery. As to its permission at all, it must be remembered that neither under the old covenant nor under the new, does God ever appear to do more than establish principles which, at the proper time, and when men are somewhat prepared for change, are sure to overthrow existing wrongs. Slavery, polygamy, the gladiatorial shows, feudalism, and many other evils; have all in turn fallen by processes which were slow in operation, but sure as to their result. The Israelites, it must be recollected, although a chosen people, had been long slaves in Egypt, and when they came out they were at best but a sort of half savage mob, although wonderfully organized. The legislation both of the wilderness and of the promised land is, in all cases, adapted to the men as they then were, and to the world as it existed at that time. The slaughter or the slavery of conquered tribes was the rule everywhere. Tyranny and oppression of the grossest kind was practised by every neighboring people without restriction or rebuke.

The Israelite alone was under a law which required him to defend the weak, and to carry out with more or less stringency the great principle of love to all men. To what an extent he failed to do this we know too well; but we are in no position whatever fitting us to judge as to the merit or demerit of any enactment intended, not for all time, but for a peculiar people, and for these only at a particular period of their history.

All revelation is of necessity progressive. It grows with the growth of ages. Wisdom always adapts itself to different times and to different conditions of men. It is only so far as the eye of the mind is opened by experience and discipline that it can take in the truth which is presented to it.

It is easy to seize upon a single enactment, such as that recorded in Exodus, where, if, after a severe beating, the slave survived a day or two, the master was to escape punishment, and, assuming it to be a Divine law, to enlarge on the cruelty it seems to sanction; but in so doing some things are taken for granted, and other things are forgotten. First, it by no means follows that because God governed Judea theocratically He is, so to speak, to be made responsible for every enactment found in the laws of Moses. A greater lawgiver than Moses, indeed, never arose; a man more richly endowed with gifts and graces fitting him for the precise work he had to do never lived; but these very gifts prove that he was not a mere passive recipient of Divine instructions. He was left, without doubt, in many matters of detail to judge and act as he saw best for the people he had to govern.

A distinction is clearly drawn between the giving of the ten commandments and the Mosaic Law generally. Regarding the first it is said, "The Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire." He declared unto you His commandments; and He wrote them upon two tables of stone." Regarding the last, "The Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments."

Further, it should be borne in mind that, by the very same law that is pronounced so cruel, it was provided that if the slave died under his master's hand the blood of the man should surely be avenged. This was a provision which would tend powerfully to check any rigor which was accompanied by such a risk. As a fact, the Hebrew slave, whether reduced to this condition by criminality or bought with money of the stranger, was incalculably better cared for than he would have been among any other people. If a Hebrew, his servitude terminated at the end of six years. His master was admonished to treat him while in bondage "as an hired servant," and "not to rule over him with rigor." War captives, such as the Canaanites or others, as well as those purchased from foreign dealers, were protected by statutes unknown elsewhere. The loss of an eye or a tooth was to be recompensed by giving the slave his liberty, and his willful murder entailed the same punishment as in the case of a free man.

Again, at first sight, one is surprised and perplexed to find that such persons as Samson and Jephtha, Gideon and Barak, are commended in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Certainly these men are not such as we should have expected to find enrolled with faithful servants of God, as Abraham, Isaac, Moses, and Samuel. "It scarcely accords," says Dr. Vaughan, "with our theories of inspiration to read of the Spirit of the Lord descending upon such a one as Samson with his vices and his weaknesses, and prompting him to his wild acts of vengeance on his own false friends and his country's enemies; arming Gideon for the punishment of Succoth and Peniel, or Jephtha for the wholesale slaughter of the Ephraimites." Yet so speaks the sacred narrative, and the inspired commentator is not afraid to acknowledge these fierce patriots as lights of God's chosen people, as those who "by faith subdued kingdoms, obtained promises, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." It is for their faith they are commended; and it may be truly said of them that the imperfection of their characters, the disorder of their times, set forth the more clearly the one redeeming element of trust in God that lurked in each of them, and through them kept alive the national existence. These deeds must surely be viewed by the light of their own times and their own race; they must be judged according to their own code of morals, not by that which Christianity has rendered as it were elementary to us. Like other Orientals, they were profoundly indifferent as to the choice of means when they had succeeded in persuading themselves that the end to be attained was the will of God.—Ibid.

SAUL AND DAVID.

The question whether all that is attributed to God in the Old Testament can confidently be asserted to have been done by Him, is one that will be answered in the affirmative or otherwise, according as we admit or refuse to admit the possibility of interpolation; and according to the interpretation we put upon the words, "Thus saith the Lord." It is surely, to say the least of it, very improbable that when Saul in his pride and rashness had on one occasion adjured the people, saying, "Cursed be the man that eateth any food until the evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies," the Lord should not only withhold an answer from the priest because Jonathan had ignorantly and therefore innocently disobeyed, but first signify by the lot that Jonathan should die for the sin, and then suffer the people, in indignant defiance of the decision, to rescue him. Yet so it stands, and, so standing, all but proclaims aloud that in some part of the narrative there is error.

The sacrifice of Saul's seven sons, too, certainly appears to be so contrary to all that God has made known of Himself elsewhere, that it may well be questioned whether this portion of the narrative is not altogether an interpolation. The story asserts that a three years' famine having distressed the land, David inquired of the Lord in order to ascertain the reason of so terrible a punishment; that the Lord answered him by stating that it was a judicial infliction on account of Saul having, at some period or other of his history, for we know not when, in his zeal for Israel sought to slay the Gibeonites. In order to placate the Divine anger on account of this evil design, on the part of the dead monarch, the seven sons of Saul are said to have been hung up unto the Lord in Gibeah, after which God was entreated for the land.

The question is, not so much whether this act, whatever may be its character, actually took place, as whether God did actually command or approve of it. That it is utterly unlike everything else recorded of Jehovah is clear. Which course, then, is most reverent? To assume its truth, as divines generally do, and then confess our inability to judge of its rectitude—David having sworn to Saul that when he reached the kingdom he would not cut off his seed,—or to question whether it may not be an interpolation.

The Rev. David Jas. Vaughan, in a sermon on "The Moral Difficulties of the Bible," suggests, regarding this transaction, that David was probably deceived by the priest, who answered as from the Lord, "It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites." That suspicion, he says, "is increased when we remember that the priest to whom David must have applied, would be that Abiathar who alone had escaped from the bloody massacre of the priests at Nob, which Saul in a fit of brutal passion had commanded, and who would be sure to entertain feelings of the deepest hatred, and a truly Oriental thirst for revenge against Saul and his house."

It is perhaps impossible for us to know how far a liability to mistake or to evade a Divine Communication, whether given by voice or vision, was incurred by Him who received it. But it may safely be asserted that all the probabilities are, that not only to the ancient prophet, but to every one who received such intimations, a Divine message was always probationary; and this in the sense that all action, whether on the mind or heart of man by the Spirit of God, is still probationary—that is to say, capable of being misunderstood, resisted, or absolutely rejected by a proud or rebellious spirit. Faith and humility must surely have found as much room for exercise then as they now do; and if so, only by an unction from above was the Divine message or warning understood or regarded.

Further, it must be borne in mind, that among the Israelites phrases implying a direct appeal to heaven were commonly used when no such communications really took place. Seeking an ordinary decision at law is in this way called inquiring of God. Moses says (Exod. xviii. 15), “The people come unto me to inquire of God.” The following verse explains to us in what sense this phrase was used, for he adds, “I judge between one and another, and I do make them know the statutes of God and His laws.” Moses, as a wise legislator and administrator, was undoubtedly in these cases the representative of God; but to assume that because this was the case every separate decision of his was infallible, or that God, so to speak, was responsible for all His servant did, is surely but an extravagance. How much more may this be said of ordinary High Priests, such as Abiathar!—Liber Librorum.

CONCLUSION.

The foregoing exercises of the “Verifying faculty,” it need not be said, is a very different thing from sitting in judgment on Scripture; a very different thing, too, from the modern sceptical theory that the Bible is, as a whole, untrustworthy; that much in it, though false, is given by the writers in all purity of intention; that their words, therefore (notwithstanding their falsity), may be regarded as true words, inasmuch as they express “the conceptions of the times, and the measure of knowledge or of faith to which every one of the writers, in his degree, had attained.” For if this theory be worth anything, the authoritative character of the Book is effectually destroyed.

Nothing can be more unreasonable than to regard the Bible as being at once true, and yet full of falsehood; pure, and yet defiled by credulity and prejudice. As if a thing really of the heaven and heavenly could be tainted by the breath of delusion and deceit! Eject, for instance, the miraculous from the Bible, and the Book unquestionably falls into contempt. If it be not authoritative and Divine, it is clearly not worth the trouble of perusing,—except, indeed, as a literary miracle, a monster of good and evil, which, having first slain the falsehoods of Paganism, now waits, in turn, to be devoured by higher truth to which it has itself given birth and development.

Finally, it may not be amiss to think where the rejection of the Bible lands us. With the Book, the God revealed in the Book departs also. What then remains for us? Clearly, neither more nor less than self-worship. The grosser forms of Paganism—the cruel and revengeful demons of uncivilized idolaters—would, in such a case, of course, find no place amongst us. A more refined polytheism might; but this is only the embodiment in beautiful forms of idealized human power or passion, heroism or virtue. Pantheism, whenever it becomes objective, can take no other shape. For since man is greater than either sun or stars, storm or river, bird or beast, the highest manifestation of God, on this showing, must be MAN.

The moral results of such a conclusion are obvious. Every man, at his best, is, or aims to be, what he conceives his God to be. He may sink far below that conception, but he can never rise above it. Without a Divinity better than himself man is incapable of moral advancement.

Such are the necessary results of the rejection of Scripture when fully worked out. To be a sceptic in the midst of Christian influences, and with the results of a Christian education continually acting on the character and conduct of a man, is one thing; to be a sceptic in the midst of universal scepticism, with all traces of Christianity withdrawn, and nothing left but the results of unbelief, is quite another thing. The first, notwithstanding its blind ingratitude, may consist with much that is amiable and honorable; the last must terminate in moral debasement, and in unmitigated selfishness.

Errors do, unquestionably, exist in the Bible. Sometimes figures are erroneous, and sometimes words. Sometimes a translation is not quite accurate, and what are called “readings” of the text frequently vary. Interpolations are rare, but they may be found nevertheless.

The great question, then, is—What doctrine or important truth do these errors effect? Of what importance are they? Safely may it be replied, Of none at all. As the late Bishop of London has well remarked, “when laborious ingenuity has exerted itself to collect a whole store of such difficulties, suppose them to be real, what on earth does it signify? They may quietly float away without our being able to solve them, if we bear in mind the acknowledged fact that there is a human element in the Bible.”—Study of the Bible.

THE GREAT FAITH OF THE THIEF ON THE CROSS:

CONSIDERED WITH REFERENCE TO GOD'S PURPOSE OF BLESSING THE RACE IN THE FUTURE.

BY JOHN FONDEY, M. D.

The salvation of the dying thief, in the hour of Christ's crucifixion, constitutes a theme on which divines have spent much thought; and which, while admitted to be an instance of mercy, exhibited even at the last moments of existence, has, also, from its solitary character, been adduced as proof that we are not to look forward to such a time as one in which that mercy will be found—that the case was altogether exceptional. We believe, however, that we are justified in drawing an entirely opposite conclusion as to its object—that God designed, by it, to show his willingness to save man, no matter how vile, or long continued his rebellion, or how near the hour of his dissolution he sought it—salvation to the uttermost, whether relating to the degree of guilt, or its being attained during the last moments of life, being taught by this incident in the history of Jesus.

Some have sought to discredit the authenticity of this narrative, in order to evade the force of the argument that salvation was possible when neglected until the dying hour, fearing that men would not be moved to seek it, if such a hope of final salvation was held out to them; just as, in regard to the final doom of the wicked also, they have been anxious to drive man to seek God, by giving him no hope of receiving from a loving Father that forgiveness, which, we believe, he accords to all who are truly penitent, no matter how vile, or long continued their hostility, or how short the period yet remaining in which to show the reality of their change, or how brief the opportunity to save and glorify Him.

Fixing their minds simply upon this present age, they have not realized that it is in the future ages that man's powers and capacities are to be exercised and developed; that it is then and there he is to serve and glorify his God for ever. A few brief moments of time, even if reaching to the three-score and ten, or more, of man's allotted period of existence, are nothing when compared with the cycles of his eternal duration.

Conversing with a brother in Christ, a few months ago, on the subject of the nature of Christ, some thoughts in regard to the dying thief arose in my mind, differing from those before entertained by me. He had been conversing the day before with some of his old Advent brethren, men of much thought and considerable intelligence, (but there are many, we fear, who, like the class of men spoken of by the apostle, by wisdom know not Christ), but who have adopted, and are propagating the antichristian dogma that Christ did not exist prior to the incarnation, but was begotten, according to the natural order, by Joseph of Mary. He seemed to have been a good deal impressed by their sophistries; and, in reply to my argument against the truth of such a view, in which I showed that the Evangelist Matthew plainly declares that Joseph, as a husband, had no knowledge of Mary, until after the birth of Jesus; who could not, consequently, have been begotten by him, but was, as stated, by the Holy Ghost, he maintained (expressing the views of the before mentioned brethren) that the passage I quoted was an interpolation—that, if it had been true, the other Evangelists would also have mentioned the circumstance.

In reply I referred him to the scene of the transfiguration, of which Matthew, Mark, and Luke speak, but of which John gives no account; and the resurrection of Lazarus, of which John only makes mention; thus showing the error of my brother in considering the authenticity of a statement in one of the evangelists to be dependent on the narration of the same by all the rest. I also brought to his notice the prayer of the dying thief, of which Luke only makes mention. He could not answer these arguments, but maintained that the prayer of the thief, as well as the account of Jesus' Divine origin, was an interpretation—that God does not save a man at the last hour—and he contended that, in order to prove his salvation a genuine one, man must first give evidence of it by doing something; and as the thief had no time to prove the sincerity of his conversion by any act suitable to such a change, the account could not be authentic. The conversation lasted sometime, and, during the course of it, I was led into a train of thought, and to form opinions, differing from those I had previously entertained on the subject of the thief and his late salvation.

As to the question of this prayer of the thief and the answer of Jesus, being an interpolation by the monks, as my brother contended, this is not very probable when we consider that the true idea of the kingdom of God is not apprehended by the hierarchy of Rome. They know something of a temporal kingdom, of earthly power, of pride, and pomp, and display and wealth, for these they have possessed—these they ardently covet,—but of the kingdom, that which is yet to come, and to share in which he asks Jesus to remember him, when he came to enter upon its possession—of this they know nothing. And is it likely that these saintly persecutors, these exactors of tithes to the uttermost farthing, would have assigned the poor thief a place in Paradise? No, Purgatory would have been the spot to which they would summarily have consigned him.

But is it so very strange that, even in the last hours of life, the mercy of God should have been extended to this dying malefactor? Do we read our Bibles so carelessly, that we fail to discover therein evidence that our God is ever willing to pardon the vilest and most hoary headed sinner against his grace, who will turn, and from the heart say, I repent, I believe? He says: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be—as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." (Psa. i. 18.) "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins." (Isa. xlv. 22.) "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." (Rev. xxii. 17.) "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. xi. 28.) Does not Jesus here invite all to come that labor and are heavy laden? is the just dying sinner excluded from the "all" who are invited to come that labor, and from the "whosoever will" that are encouraged to partake "of the water of life freely?"

But if we look at the type of the serpent, referred to by Jesus in his conversation with Nicodemus, do we not find in this an assurance that Divine grace is not limited in its operation to the circumstance of the greatness of the guilt, or the period when the sinner exercises repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ? The Israelite bitten by the fiery serpent, and in different stages of the disorder which was assuredly hurrying him down to death, could, at any moment, if he obeyed God, and looked upon the serpent, be healed. The heart might be just ready to cease its beating, the brain to think, the eye almost fail to recognize objects, or even to discern the uplifted serpent, but if, even in that dying moment, the Israelite exercised faith, manifesting it by looking toward the serpent, he was healed. And Jesus clearly assures us that, as Moses lifted up that brazen serpent in the wilderness, so was the Son of Man to be in like manner lifted up, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life"—that, like the serpent-poisoned dying Israelite, the sinner, sinking to eternal death through the plague of sin, might, through the Lamb of God, obtain everlasting life.

In the work of grace wrought on the day of Pentecost, we see, too, that God's mercy is not limited, but that he saves man, even where the sinner has no opportunity to show that he is saved by doing outward works manifesting his repentance. The thousands who were then converted were, on that very day in which they believed, added to the church—in a very few hours after their exercise of faith, and most probably without leaving the place, they were numbered among the believing, the saved by grace through Jesus. The difference in time between their exercise of faith, and reception into the church, was not much greater than that which intervened between the utterance of the dying thief's prayer and his dissolution.

Besides, what is the sinner required to do if he would fulfill the conditions of the gospel as a pre-requisite to his salvation? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" is the gospel condition. The Pentecostal thousands complied with this and they were saved; and the dying thief in his prayer indicates the exercise of such a faith in Jesus. The cry uttered by John the Baptist was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus takes up the same cry, and the dying thief heeded, believed, and acted accordingly, for he had repented. "Dost thou not fear God," said he, "seeing that thou art in the same condemnation? and we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss." And he showed his faith in Christ in the prayer he uttered, for he had his eye directed towards the Kingdom, and believed in Christ as the coming King and Deliverer.

There are several points on which we would like to dwell in connection with this subject. And the first is, The clear intelligent perception of the truth, exhibited in this prayer of the thief with regard to the kingdom of Christ,—that it was one yet to come. When we consider the confused erroneous views entertained by the mass of professing Christians, even in this day of light and knowledge, on the subject of Christ's future position, that of his saints and of the world; and, looking back, see the great error of the Jewish nation in regard to the time when Christ should reign, and the nature of the work he was then accomplishing, we look with surprise at the clearness of the views entertained by the thief on the subject of the coming and kingdom of the Redeemer. Whether he had, along with others, heard Jesus as he ministered to the multitudes, or had received through others the doctrines he taught; or whether, while stretched upon the cross, the dying Saviour had revealed to the mind and heart of the poor malefactor the glorious truths concerning his mediatorial and kingly work, and the kingdom yet to be set up in the distant future, we know not: however this may be, his views in relation to this subject were singularly clear; in his prayer he confessed that Christ was a king, although not then to take the kingdom, but at some future time when that kingdom should be manifested.

The second point we would notice, is, the greatness of the faith exhibited by the thief in this confession of Christ as his Lord and Coming King. Look at the circumstances then existing, which were such, as we would conceive, least likely to inspire faith in the claims and pretensions of Jesus as a king and deliverer. He was seated upon no throne; before him no bands of loyal followers and soldiers stood to bow the knee in homage, or wait to fulfil his royal will; around him were no insignia of power, but, on the contrary, his surroundings were those expressive only of weakness, desertion, perfect helplessness and suffering. How could he save? Already had the insulting cry arisen to his ears, as well as of the thief, from the lips of mocking chief priests and scribes, "He saved others, himself he cannot save. Let Christ, the king of Israel, descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe." And the soldiers also mocked him, saying; "If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself." The dying thief had heard these taunts, these derisive rejections of Christ as one able to save, as a king, for he also had cast the same in his teeth, —and yet he believed. He looked away from the cross, beyond it—away from the circumstance of the apparent helplessness of Christ—from his seeming inability to save even himself, to deliver himself from the hands of the enemies who surrounded him—away from the dying Son of God—he looked beyond these things—he believed. We exercise faith in the Coming and Kingdom of Christ, but what is our faith in comparison with his? We know that Jesus died, but we know also that he has arisen, that he is seated at the right hand of the Father, that he has burst the bonds of death, that he has redeemed multitudes from the power of sin—we have the resurrection, ascension, the descent of the Spirit, the light which that Spirit gives us to open up the prophetic word,—we have the fulfilled prophecies of the past to make clear our way, and indicate our present position, as well as reveal to us clearly the character of the events about to be fulfilled in the near future. We exercise faith, but a faith falling how immeasurably below that of the dying malefactor.

His faith was a grand, a wondrous faith. He understood the way of salvation; he must have known that Jesus was dying to make atonement for sin, that he would rise from the dead, go to his Father, and return again to take his kingdom, and, poor, humble, believing sinner, he prayed, "Lord remember me, when thou comest into thy kingdom." It was a wondrous hour. The saints of the past, prior to this, had exercised faith in a Redeemer who was to pour "out his soul unto death;" we exercise faith in one who did die, and rose again,—but the dying thief trusted in a Saviour who was then himself dying—faith in a Redeemer who, in all those surroundings, presented nothing save the majesty and purity of his nature, and the sinlessness of his life, to indicate that he was else than the deceiver, by which title the chief priests and pharisees had designated him. We look, with wonder at the faith of Abraham when called to slay Isaac—it was indeed a grand display of confidence in God—but when we look at that exhibited by the thief, we cannot regard it as inferior to that of the patriarch; for, in both cases, the circumstances were such as apparently to forbid utterly all ideas of their faith's realization.

The third point on which we would briefly touch is, that God intended, by this salvation of the dying thief, to show his power and willingness to save man, and glorify Jesus.

Behold the Redeemer! In agony and torture—seemingly helpless and without power to save—in the hands of his enemies from whose vengeance he is apparently unable to extricate himself; and yet, in dying, he shows his mighty power to save. He carries with him to the grave a trophy of his grace—he gives, if I may so express myself, a specimen of his work. He shows how light may be imparted to a sin-darkened understanding; how a once reviling rebel may, through the Divine Spirit, become changed into a humble, penitent, believing child; how a heart, once gross and groveling, and bound in chains of sin, may become heaven-inspired, led to look beyond these earthly things, and seek after, and exercise faith in, a kingdom yet to be revealed; and shows us what men, in the hour of, and after their salvation, should think of, and live for—the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. He showed that, even in dying, he bruised the serpent's head, while delivering one of his victims from the hand and power of the destroying enemy,

Again: We draw from this subject the consoling lesson that God "delighteth in mercy," and that he has given us this incident to show how great is that mercy; that no one need despair, but that all who will may come, and find pardon and salvation. He introduces the gospel dispensation by placing on its very threshold such an instance of His love, and power to bless and save, that none may doubt his willingness to do so, but on the contrary, like the dying thief, turn to Jesus, exercise faith in him, and look for his appearing and kingdom. By such an incident he would seek to show the largeness of His loving heart, and inspire us with confidence to trust him.

And, finally; If God is so willing to save men, as this history of the dying thief teaches, have we not reason to believe that he will, in the future ages, reveal his goodness, and love, and mercy on a more extended scale—one more grand and glorious—by bringing the mass of the race to the knowledge and love of Himself and the Redeemer? We may speculate as much as we choose; form theories as numerous and conflicting as we please; talk of man's sinfulness and unfitness to enter upon another state, where the wrongs of the present will be righted, and man have an opportunity to accept or reject Christ as his Saviour; but the word of the living God stands, in all its majesty and truth,—unrecalled, unrepealed;—"I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and SHALL NOT RETURN, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." (Isa. xlv. 23.) "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every other name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. ii. 9-11.) If God is Truth, he has declared that his word shall not return, but be accomplished; and if so, we are justified in expecting that the mass of the race will bow the knee to Christ, and confess him as their Lord.

And is not such an expectation in harmony with the character which God has given of himself as a being whose dealings with men are disciplinary; by which he seeks to correct, purify, make them happy, show forth his glory, and exalt the name of Jesus? To accomplish this result will be the work of the future ages, in which the seeming wrongs of the present will be righted, God's dealings with men, though often apparently inexplicable, severe, and cruel, be fully vindicated: and the greatest amount of happiness to the race be eternally secured.

DANIEL, THE APOCALYPSE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

BY G. R. LEDERER.

The book of Daniel stands singular among the books of the Old Testament Scriptures; singular in its character, in its language and construction, and singular in the mode of imparting the revealed objects to the coming generations.

We do not find in Daniel, as in the writings of other prophets, one single "Thus saith the Lord;" all predictions are presented to him either in dreams or visions, and the explanation of their import is communicated to him through a third personage, as a kind of interpreter between Jehovah and himself.

Other prophets have almost exclusively to do with Israel, their own people. Admonishing, warning, threatening and comforting were the burden of their activity. Here and there the fate of some neighboring nations who frequently came in contact with the Jews, as Syria, Assyria, Egypt, Moab, Ammon and Edom are briefly foretold; but Daniel contains an outline of the world's history from his own days to the end of Gentile supremacy, the introduction of Messiah's kingdom and the resurrection of the righteous dead.

The language of this book is, as I said, most singular. In the first place, five of the twelve chapters it contains, are written in pure Syro-Caldaic, the language of the court, and, consequently, of most people subjected to the then ruling people, while seven chapters are written in Hebrew. But, what a Hebrew! It is mixed up with foreign words and the construction of its sentences is at variance with all grammatical rules and usages.

No other book of the Old Testament has suffered so much misconstructions, misapplications, perversions and miscalculation than that of Daniel; these things, however, did not originate in the peculiarity of its language, but in mixing up those parts which contain predictions concerning the world at large and those which pertain to the Jews exclusively; by putting another meaning into the plain words of the prophet without the least authority to do so. For instance, By what authority do Gentile interpreters—even those who pretend to take the Word of God in its literal sense—say "years" where the angelic interpreter says "days?" Or even there where the angel uses the expression of "evening morning"—not even days—to make it to be understood years? Would the Spirit of God, the real author of all prophecies, have been at a greater expense in saying plainly years instead of saying days, or evening morning? Or to make of the word Tanrid—the daily sacrifice—to mean heathen worship, or some other monstrosity? But the mania to apply all possible prophecy to the Gentiles or the church, or to make out the exact time of the Lord's coming, so blinded them that they fell headlong in all the great errors they promulgate to the world.

Another strange thing, is, that the question never occurred to any of these interpreters,—What is the reason that nearly half of the book of Daniel was written in a foreign tongue? Would they reflect on this question and study for an answer they would receive light on the whole object of Daniel's prophecy, and, perhaps, give up their pre-conceived notions and misapplications. To my mind the answer is clear.

The first chapter, in Hebrew, is an introduction to the book, telling how God has prepared Daniel and his three friends for the great and important object to protect their people who were to be the captives in Caldeia; they had to become auspicious to the monarch and to be placed at the head of the government where they were enabled to prevent persecution or ill treatment of the captives.

And, indeed, the purpose of God was accomplished: neither sacred nor profane history makes any mention of oppressing or persecuting the Jews during the 70 years of their exile, except that of Haman, which, however, resulted in his own destruction. From the second to the seventh, both included, the miniature history of the Gentile dispensation is given, and given in the language of the Gentiles, that they might know and understand that the destinies of nations is not in their own hand, by their own strength, but in the hand of the God of the Jews, and that, though the throne of David is broken down, the crown and the sceptre removed from his posterity and given to the Gentiles, the time is appointed when all will be restored to the Son of David, and that his dominion will be universal, over all nations. The particulars of the way in which this revelation was made to Nebuchadnezzar and the Gentiles, I will explain—the Lord willing—when I come to the second chapter.

I have, in my leisure hours, and when not prevented by illness, written a brief commentary on the book of Daniel, mostly the fruit of my own study and researches, and partly collected from some celebrated Hebrew writers, whose names are well known to learned Gentiles. Before, however, I think it necessary to make some remarks on the subject of prophecy in general with which I think to close the first article.

The prophecies are predictions of events which shall come to pass at some future time; future from that in which the prophet uttered the prediction. This future may be near or afar off; the events may even take place during the life time of the prophet who foretold them, as in the case of Jeremiah concerning the conquest and destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, or after a long indefinite period, which may not have been fulfilled yet even in our days, after thousands of years have passed since they were predicted. When we turn to the history of Israel we must admit that many of the predictions of their prophets have been so clearly and minutely fulfilled that none can mistake them except those whose notions are stronger than conviction itself; and there are, indeed, Bible students and interpreters who wilfully shut their eyes to historical facts, were they ever so clearly the fulfilment of prophecy; and this is particularly the case with the prophecies of Daniel.

The student of prophecy must bear in mind that the prophets spoke primarily to their people and concerning their affairs, he, the student, must therefore make himself thoroughly acquainted with the history of the prophet's people during the ages that have passed between the utterance of the prediction and our own day. If history relates the occurrence of events which are clearly recognizable in the predictions of any of the prophets, we must not look for their fulfilment in the future; they have been fulfilled. If, on the other hand, the events that have occurred are not plainly and distinctly recognizable in the prediction of one or another of the prophets, the prophecy is still unfulfilled; and we must conclude that the time of the fulfilment has not yet come according to the plan and purpose of God. Very few of our modern interpreters adhere to this indispensable rule, and the consequences are, of course, errors which lead to false doctrines, false hopes, and strife and divisions among those who are otherwise faithful disciples of our glorious and divine Messiah.

No wonder, then, that we so often meet with the ridiculous idea that the restoration of Israel of which all the prophets spoke in glowing terms, has been fulfilled in the return of the Jews—or rather a portion of them—from Babylonian captivity, though not one feature of that event is recognizable in the predictions of the prophets concerning the final restoration of Israel.

But to return to the book of Daniel. I maintain that all the prophecies in that book have been fulfilled except that concerning the introduction of the stone kingdom, or the inauguration of the Son of man as the King and Ruler of all kingdoms, nations and tongues under the whole heaven, and which, I trust, I shall prove in the course of comments, each chapter and verse separately.

I do not claim perfection either for myself or for those of my Hebrew forefathers, from whose writings I shall make some quotations; but both may serve as a kind of guide for those who desire to search for truth, and as a key to a comparison of prophecy with history. Principally, however, it is my design to save some brothers and sisters from the delusion that the calculators of time will, by increased efforts and researches, find out the day and the hour when the Son of man, the Lord, will appear and the present dispensation come to a close, or rather the whole fabric of heaven and earth, and all the rest will be burnt up.

To study prophecies with profit it will be well to inquire into the general idea which called them forth, and which, therefore, pervades the principal part of them. In the book of Daniel the attentive reader will find out without particular difficulty, that the Spirit of God reveals the constant conflict of the people of God with the empires of the world and the final victory of the former. But some one may say: "We find here that the prophet mostly speaks of his own people, the Jews; are the Jews, as a nation, the true people of God? I say, no; neither the Jews as a nation, nor any other nation, are the saints of the Most High who shall reign with the Christ in his kingdom; but the Jews are, and have ever been, the representatives of the children of God, especially so at and after the days of Daniel. For notwithstanding all their shortcomings they adhered to the One True and Living God, and it is not too much to say that millions of them gave up their lives for that faithfulness to Jehovah.

The kingdom of God was also represented in the kingdom of Judah as long as a descendant of David sat upon its throne. With the breaking down of that throne Gentile supremacy began, and will last until the tabernacle of David shall be re-built, and David's great Son occupies the throne in Jerusalem.

The prophet Daniel was well trained for the reception of the revelation of this uninterrupted conflict by his own experience. He, a captive, educated at the court of the greatest monarch to wait as page upon his foreign master, received wisdom from Jehovah to tell the king his dream and the interpretation thereof. In consequence of this miraculous gift Daniel and his intimate friends became officers of the highest rank, and Nebuchadnezzar was compelled to acknowledge the supremacy of the God of Daniel. But, how soon was that forgotten! The king renewed the conflict by erecting the great image in the Plain of Durah, commanding all his subjects to fall down and worship. Even the deep impression which the wonderful deliverance of the three faithful ones from the fiery furnace made upon him, so that he commanded his people to worship the God of the Jews, was but momentary; he soon forgot that he himself had professed that the God of the Jews had the power over all gods and kings. And, alas, thus it remains unto this day with all Gentile rulers under whatever name or title; be it Emperor or Czar, King or Duke, or even President or Governor of Republics. Though many or most of them profess to be Christians, in their acts they are in constant conflict with the government and the people of God.

And now, dear reader, by the rules as here stated I have been guided in commenting on Daniel, and by this all misapplications, misconstructions, all speculations and calculations concerning the time of the appearance of the Son of man, to take possession of his kingdom must fall to the ground, and all searching for it can only bring evil.

The secret which the Father has not even revealed to the Son is not for any mortal to know, however great his desire may be to see the Lord coming in power and glory.

◆◆◆ "SOBER SECOND THOUGHTS."

The son who said to his father, "I will not," when bid to "go work in my vineyard," and "afterwards repented and went" is a good example of sober second thought. Some years ago the EXAMINER was sent to a man in the State of Connecticut. It went to his family for several months, but last July the head of the family, in a somewhat censorious and petulant manner, wrote to have it discontinued. Of course, he was promptly obeyed, though no charge had been made for it. A short time since he wrote wishing it sent him again. He writes as follows:

"I have/wished since I stopped the EXAMINER, last July, that I had continued it. I was rather hasty in making some remarks which I did. I have been compelled to believe there is a future probation for all who have not sinned unto death; and that mercy continues beyond this brief existence. I have now embraced the glorious truth: not with the contentious spirit I had before, which I felt condemned for cherishing; but with love for all. O, what a burden it has lifted from my mind; I am freed from all bigotry and unkind feelings towards any one. I look upon a world yet to be saved, when Christ will see 'the travail of his soul and be satisfied.' God loves poor mortal man, and will save all who will submit to His righteous will, whether here or hereafter. I am determined to be free from every yoke of bondage that sectarians would impose on us; and yet I will have charity for all. I want the meek and quiet spirit of Jesus abiding in me. Will you please send me the EXAMINERS that have been published since July last, and then continue it to my address, and I will pay as soon as possible."

I doubt not this man feels better than when he said, "I will not believe;" and far happier than the Advent preacher in California who says, the views held by the EDITOR of this Magazine "are a damnable heresy." Such a heresy is "denying the Lord that bought them. Who, most likely is doing such work,—those who believe and teach that Christ gave himself a ransom for all "men, to be testified in due time;" or such as teach that the vast majority of men will never hear that testimony, nor have an opportunity to accept "the Lord that bought them?" "Sober second thoughts" may lead many opposers, yet, to change their minds and course, and learn and proclaim the grand and soul-cheering declaration that, "Christ is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world," and that God will, "in due time," cause the whole world to hear the glad tidings, and give every son and daughter of the human race all necessary means to accept the Redeemer unto life everlasting; yea, He "will have all men come unto the knowledge of the truth," and "pour out of His Spirit upon all flesh;" so that none will ultimately perish except such as wilfully and knowingly sin against the Holy Spirit and "deny the Lord who bought them."

ALTERNATIVES.

THE brief paper of "A Student" headed "Life in Christ," which appeared in the RAINBOW, deserves, I think, more consideration than it will probably receive.

It has suggested to me the following thoughts on the tendency of men to adopt extreme alternatives, and to draw broad if not coarse lines of distinction in matters which do not admit of being thus treated.

For example: Our fathers held, and seem to have been incapable of holding anything else, that at death every man—whatever may have been his character on earth—became at once, in consequence of that change, either supremely good or supremely bad; an angel or a devil. What else, said they, can possibly have been meant by such terms as "saved" or "lost?"

Modern thought, while taking quite a different direction, seems inclined still to run in a somewhat similar groove. Hence, while one holds that if man does not in the future live for ever in happiness or misery, he must die as the brutes die; another affirms that the alternative for every one is either immortality or annihilation; and a third declares that the denial of eternal punishment necessarily involves Universalism.

Each of these schemes, if so they may be called, is supposed to rest on certain texts of Scripture, but all alike proceed on the utter disregard or forgetfulness of the revealed character of God, and the lengthened training of man. The charm of each and all of them being that they may be held dogmatically, may be expressed in a few words, and can be comprehended by everybody without trouble.

But truth, in such matters, is not thus summarily to be either arrived at or disposed of. It is not given us in hard and fast lines, but it is intended to hover around us somewhat dimly, exciting interest and hope, although frequently incapable of clear definition.

All truth, it has been well said, lies in nice shadings; but men in general have no eye for shadings, and hence they continually fall into errors which might easily be avoided if they would but remember that almost every form of thought which is of any value becomes, when received by mortals, true and useful to them only in so far as it admits of modification, and is bounded on all sides by that which seems antagonistic, yet is not contradictory.

The paper of the "Student," to which I have referred, appears to meet this tendency, when it bids us to consider whether there may not be salvation without "glory, honor, and immortality;" whether there may not be life in the world to come, through Christ, which yet does not involve a partaking of the immortality of God; whether such life may not be granted to multitudes on sufferance,—that is, for a more or less lengthened period as God sees best; whether destruction may not be the termination of those who determinately reject "the counsel of God against themselves" without involving any such consequence to others; whether, in short, the second death may not—like the second life—be a variable thing, and whether this is not the true meaning of many passages of Scripture which, as usually interpreted, appear contradictory.

These texts are prominently brought forward in Mr. Dunn's Destiny of the Human Race. They there support an argument which seems to me unanswerable. They illustrate a theory which if not proven,—and such subjects do not admit of proof,—carries with it the highest probability; a theory which, as I think, has never yet been fairly considered, perhaps chiefly because it sets at nought the broad and coarse lines of distinction to which I have alluded, and which are so popular.

For the information of some readers it may be well to mention that a new edition of Mr. Dunn's book has recently been published by Messrs. Simpkin & Marshall, [London, Eng.], the price being reduced to six shillings. * H. L.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM S. C. LOCKWOOD.

BRO. STORRS: The BIBLE EXAMINER has been a great emancipator to me; while the reading of its pages has given me much pleasure. I have read in the Sept. number the article, "The order of the resurrection," and was much interested in it. With reference to the reign of Christ and his saints over the living inhabitants of the earth I have thought much, and yet perhaps to very little purpose. I imagine it will be very much as it was with the Saviour after his resurrection. He was entirely beyond their control; could make himself visible or invisible, at pleasure.

Now, in this state, we have but five senses with which we can discern any thing. Have we any, by which we could discern an immortal being? Supposing the saints who come out of their graves after the resurrection of Christ, were here; could we see them without another sense? And if not, how can we know that Christ is not here and the first resurrection already taken place? Will you please write your thoughts on the subject?

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.—I suppose immortal beings can make themselves "visible or invisible" to mortal ones at pleasure, if God wills it so. It has been so in the past to Abraham and others.

The record which speaks of those said to come out of their graves "after" the resurrection of Jesus, are said, also, to have "appeared unto many;" and there appears no evidence that the "many" had "another sense" to see them.

That Christ is not here, visibly, all must admit: but has always been with his saints in some sense; but no evidence appears that He is here now in any different sense than heretofore; and if not, I see no sound reason for accepting the idea that "the first resurrection" has "taken place." My opinion is, that the first resurrection and the change of the living saints will be simultaneous, when "the Lord shall descend from heaven:" and the "voice of the archangel" is heard.

In 1844 it was asserted, by some, that the "dead saints had arisen;" and I was asked if I should see some of them, if I would not believe it? I replied, No, not unless I could at the same time see "Christ in the clouds of heaven."

But I have no disposition to enter into a controversy with brethren who take a different view: time will soon settle the matter. Let us live always ready to meet the Lord when He is revealed from heaven; thus "loving his appearing," and rejoicing in hope of it; for, "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Every indication is that the event is near; and we may well "lift up our heads; for, our redemption draweth nigh."

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BRO. STORRS: I have received the last number of the xx. vol. of the BIBLE EXAMINER; and to say that I am exceeding glad and thankful, will not express my feelings, and only my God and Saviour knows the unspeakable joy of my heart, while meditating on what God has done for me through it. O, blessed Bible. Blessed God, for raising up so many Bible Examiners, giving them strength, wisdom, light, knowledge, and the love of His word, so that the truth as it is in Jesus has come to many, the light of life; and is spreading and growing brighter and brighter. O! what shall I render to God for all His benefits? I will take the cup of life, and ever call on the Name of the Lord. Yes, ever praying that He may sanctify every instrument He has been using for my everlasting good, as well as for others, and at last glorify them with His own self. O, what can we want more than to be like Him, and see him as he is? Blessed be God for the training for service in the "Ages to Come." O, how much my God has taught me! He has learned me not to call all the dead who have died without the knowledge of God or Christ, "The wicked dead." I have learned that many are called, but few chosen. I have learned that "GOD IS LOVE." And He has learned me to take that exalted stand-point, when viewing His ways to the children of men; and, O, how many dark things have become light, and many crooked things made straight. When I take the stand-point, "God is love," then I feel that the BIBLE EXAMINER must live. It is of His own raising up, and I am not afraid of His laying it down until it has accomplished ALL he designed it shall do. While I live, I shall trust in Him to enable me to do all I can for its support; and to comfort you, my brother, and hold up your hands by my prayers and Christian effort, and encourage others to do the same.

I cannot put a money value on any one number of the volume, if I would; the worth of any number would far outweigh the subscription price of the volume. May the blessings of God rest upon you and yours, and all the dear writers and readers of the EXAMINER, and all His children, and the world. Your Sister in the Lord.

Iowa, Sept., 1876.

FROM SILAS COOK.

BRO. STORRS; I wrote you sometime ago desiring your Magazine, entitled BIBLE EXAMINER, and think it did not reach you as I directed to your former box in New York. But an EXAMINER has been received, and I now send a Post Office Order for three dollars for two copies, according to your offer in the one received, for the forth coming volume. I took it a number of years ago, and also other papers of the Advent doctrines; but I found the most of them so sectarian, and so opposed to any advance in the truth that I forsook them all, and went to work for myself in the advancement of the truth, according to my own understanding of its teachings in regard to the future of mankind; and the result was an expulsion from the church and set down as one causing divisions in the said church, and from that time till the present I have been studying the Bible and have been well paid in the satisfaction I have felt in being freed from the fear of God taught by the precepts of men, and have learned that the goodness of God should lead men to repentance.

The doctrine of Election troubled me for sometime; and as the Bible was to be my guide, to that I went for instruction and I found it to be, to me, one of the most glorious doctrines, so to speak, in the book; also, the salvation of all Israel, according to Paul in his Roman letter. I thought I found the Saviour's other sheep, which are not of this fold (the gospel) which were also to be brought in and finally made one fold, having one shepheed. Also, as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, (giveth them life) even so the Son quickeneth whom he will, (giveth them life); from which I found an answer to Paul's desire to know him and the power of his resurrection, and that he might attain to a resurrection out from among the dead ones, whom the Father would raise up and quicken.

Jacob was surnamed Israel, and does not appear to me to go farther back than the commencement of Israel; and if we proceed correctly, it does not affect the doctrine of the hope for our race; for back of Israel we find a promise to Abraham that in him all families of the earth should be blessed; which it appears to me would not be such a blessing as I should desire if it was to raise them up and torment them forever in the Orthodox hell, or even burn them up literally, as we once believed. The reason why God will bless all the families of the earth I think we find in Gen. xxii. 16. The angel said, "By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son," etc. It is not because they have repented, but because Abraham has done this thing, that he will thus bless him and the families of the earth: but that God will give them repentance, is, I think, more than implied by much Scripture testimony. I may, if my life is spared, write you again, if I can bring myself to the task. I am getting old, and my mind fails me and my voice is so gone that I do but little public teaching; but I do like the truth, and also to contemplate the glorious time that is coming when Jesus shall return from heaven and begin the glorious restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the prophets, and every knee made to bow and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father.

Yours in love for the truth.

Ohio, Sept., 1876.

FROM CORA M. CLEMENCE.

BRO. STORRS: I have been perusing the BIBLE EXAMINER for September last. In the reply to "Questions of Interest," I can say, you could not have expressed my views more fully. They are defined as the word of God teaches. I do praise the Lord for the truth; and though heaven and earth be removed the word of the Lord standeth sure. I desire to hear the Master's voice alone. None will deviate from the narrow path that follow the blessed Jesus. There are so many saying, "Lo here," and "Lo there," that unless our trust is in the Mighty One we shall make shipwreck in these perilous times.

The article in the Sept. EXR., on "The Order of the Resurrection," I have read with the greatest satisfaction. Every article in that number of the Magazine seems to be food for the inquiring mind; and, after conversing with so many diverse opinions upon the word of God, it is a relief and comfort to peruse the real substantial truth, searched out from among the thousands of precious and long hidden Gospel truths of God. O, for more of a willingness on the part of those professing to be children of light and truth to search, and understand more of God's holy will and Divine plan concerning the glorious era that is about to dawn. It seems to me it is time that men throw off the one idea system and search the Word of God more.

There seems to be a great willingness to listen to and believe the traditions of men. There would not be so much spurious preaching and teaching as there is in these days if all sought to be led by the Spirit of our Divine Master. He alone can guide our thoughts, inspire our pens, and direct our feet in the narrow way and give us victory amidst temptations. Only Jesus: let thy grace be my shield and hiding place. It is truly blessed to turn from the confusion and contention existing, at this time, to the Word of Life. There we can find all our desires and anticipations realized. I am striving so to live that, if I fall, I may sleep in Jesus and be among those who have part in the first resurrection and enter upon the full fruition in the "eternal ages;" for this I am striving in hope.

New Brittain, 1876.

BRO. BLAIN desires all persons to whom he has entrusted his work, "HOPE FOR OUR RACE," to sell or loan, to write and let him know whether they have received anything for the work, and can send him something to help him to live while he is laying by to recover his health. He says:

"I find lately that rest of body and mind is slowly restoring my strength. Having learned by further study of the Bible, that in my work, "Death not Life," I had misunderstood, and so misinterpreted some 200 pages of Scripture, which I then thought taught the literal destruction of the wicked, I feel it to be my duty to review, and undo the wrong I have done in that matter. This labor from the age of 78 to 84 proved too much for my strength, and last May, quite suddenly, I found myself greatly prostrated in body and mind. Of course, I had not a desire to undo anything I had written against endless torment. I am not without hope that I may recover so as to do more for the cause of truth, especially by writing. In the meantime, I need help to live and keep out of debt, as travelling and selling books is about over with me.

"I also exhort the friends of truth to sustain and scatter the BIBLE EXAMINER, as it is the only periodical which will, as yet, lend a helping hand to our work. It is doing a great work; but the number who take it is too small to sustain it, and so donations are needed. Gratitude for the joyful light it has given us should stimulate to liberality in its support. There is yet much more light to be brought out. Read the article in the August EXAMINER on 'The World Burning Theory;' and all can see the need of more light on the symbolic and figurative language of the Bible.

"To wake our friends to the greatness of the cause in which we are engaged, I ask all, who wish to 'grow in grace and in knowledge,' to read the Bible, keeping carefully in mind the following three questions. 1st. Had God a purpose in creating our world and race? 2d. Was that purpose a good and wise one? 3d. Is He able to accomplish His purpose?

"A discerning mind can see that both Scripture and reason can and should be used in answering these important questions. I refer to reason as a help by the authority of Jesus Christ, who said, 'Why, even of yourselves, judge ye not what is right?' Luke xii. 47."

"JACOB BLAIN."

"Buffalo, N. Y., October."

ELD. J. S. HATCH, Indiana, writes: The EXAMINER for October has visited us; for which receive my hearty thanks. I did not expect it, for I knew I had not paid for it; but I hardly knew how to get along without it. I am poor, as to this world's goods, and have had much sickness in my family the summer past; four of them down with typhoid fever at one time confining me at home four months and a half, and I could not earn a dollar. Myself and wife prize the EXAMINER highly; but we cannot expect you to send it longer free. I do love the doctrine of "the ages to come;" and feel like saying, Glory to God." I see how broad the plan of salvation is; that in the ages to come "Our Father in heaven" is determined to "show the exceeding riches of His grace" and "all the families of the earth" are to be blessed. "Thank the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

I spend most of my time preaching the word. My wife has been afflicted with rheumatism for more than four years.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR. — Take courage, brother. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the LORD delivereth him out of them all." Psa. xxxiv. 19. The EXAMINER will continue to visit you, if the Lord grants me the means to issue it. Let us submit in all things to His will. Love orders all; for, "GOD IS LOVE."

MRS. LIDE WHITE, Illinois, writes; I cannot do without the BIBLE EXAMINER. It is all the Gospel preaching I get. May you be spared to proclaim the glorious doctrine of "the ages to come" until our King shall claim His kingdom. Yours, in the blessed hope of life in those ages.

FROM WM. S. DIBBLE.

BRO. STORRS: I hope and expect to get quite a number of new subscribers for Vol. 21 of the EXAMINER, but I shall not claim any "club" privileges this year, and shall remit full price for each copy, as I consider it very cheap at $2. I often find in it single articles that are worth far more to me than all the Magazine will cost me if I should take it as long as you publish it; which I mean to do if my life is spared so long. Oh how the glorious doctrines advocated by it cause my heart to rejoice; and especially the doctrine that all men will have one chance, either in this life or the next one, to come to the knowledge of "the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent," and thereby have the opportunity given them of securing eternal life, which can only be obtained by the knowledge of Christ and the acceptance, voluntarily, of the salvation which he has freely provided for all. It seems to me it is absurd to suppose that God should give the invitation, "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17), and then provide no means for all to know that such an invitation has been given. But, bless God, he has assured us that all shall have such knowledge "in due time." (1 Tim. ii. 6.) This doctrine looks good to me, and is certainly common sense, and accords with, as I fully believe, the teachings of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. Truly, God is love; and I mean to set forth to my fellowmen, on all proper occasions, this great and glorious doctrine of God's love to all.

I have been led lately to think much upon the Bible doctrine of man's mortality, and of the security of those who believe in the unconscious state of the dead, and trust Jesus for a resurrection to eternal life. What solid ground this is on which to stand, and how it preserves us from this "strong delusion" (Spiritualism), so fully described in 2 Thess. ii. 8-11: "And then will be revealed the Lawless one" (Emphatic Diaglott). Here let me ask, has any thing ever been revealed more lawless than Spiritualism? for, many of its devotees desire to abolish all law and order, even to the annulling of the marriage contract. Does not Spiritualism fill this picture completely? "Because they admitted not the love of the truth in order that they might be saved, and on this account God will send them an energy of delusion to their believing the falsehood." (Em. Dia.) Yes, the doctrine of man's inherent immortality is truly what the Bible calls it, "The Falsehood." Oh how it makes my heart ache to think that so many of our Christian friends stand on this same platform with the advocates and devotees of this strong delusion. Many times have I heard those who claim to love Jesus, and believe in the Bible, and take it as the rule and guide of their faith and practice, advocate the idea that something good would yet be made known through Spiritualism. Bless God for the truth that "the dead know not anything."

I have taken upon myself a solemn vow to fight the doctrine of the immortality of the soul until Jesus comes or I fall asleep; and I expect the aid of God's Holy Spirit, so that I may be able to do it lovingly and kindly, and thereby help to bring some to the knowledge of the truth on this great point. How it honors God and his Son Jesus Christ to believe that when a man is dead and we put him in the grave he will never live again unless by the resurrection of the dead through the power of Christ. Blessed doctrine: good enough for me. I accept it and shall communicate it to others whenever it seems right for me to do so. Bless the Lord that I am free from all that hampers or chains me down, and am no longer bound by church organizations. I can now scatter tracts and papers, and advocate any doctrine I think the Bible teaches, and no one has any authority to say, why do ye thus!

I have also been examining and studying the doctrine of a literal personal devil, and have been obliged to give that up too. It seemed rather hard to relinquish my hold on this doctrine; for, I had used it for a long time to help fight Spiritualism with; but I am convinced that it is an error. and so I cheerfully and gladly let it go. With God's help I mean to be faithful and help spread the truth of the Bible as I understand it, and try and win men to Christ that I may be an heir, a joint-heir, and co-worker with him in "the ages to come."

May God bless you and spare your life and give you strength to work for the Master until He comes, is the wish and prayer of your brother in Christ.

California.

WM. B. PUTNAM, Wisconsin, writes: Our Society have built a comfortable house of worship this summer. It was dedicated, the second Sunday in October, to God and his cause by our able and faithful Bro. Stephenson, from Chicago. It was filled with attentive hearers, who listened to the discourse of near two hours. In the evening he gave another discourse, on the "Eastern Question." The audience listened with almost breathless silence. Bro. S. is to visit us again, in a few weeks and make a longer stay. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. He is a firm believer and fearless advocate of the impartial love of God to the race He has made. Oh that we had more of the same. We have had additions to our numbers this summer, and others are searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. It rejoiced my heart to hear again from Bro. Foore, of Kansas. I see his faith is unwavering in these new, yet old truths which have been slumbering under the traditions of Ages past, but now are coming up again to comfort and bless God's waiting people. It pleases the Father to hide these things from the wise and prudent and reveal them unto babes.

A FRIEND, in this city, wrote me as follows: DEAR SIR: In No. 1, Vol. 21 of the EXAMINER I find an article under the head of 'POVERTY'S MOAN AND BLESSING,'—stating the reason a poor Sister could not pay for the EXAMINER, and still did not wish to be without it. Please return her the 50 cents she sent you, and in the place of that you will find $2 to pay you one years subscription for that Sister; and please continue the Magazine to her and oblige. Yours, etc.

REMARK BY THE EDITOR.—I suppose the author of the above would not care to have me give his name. The "50 cents" went back, or was "returned," soon after it was received, accompanied with some interest, saying, I would "take Jesus for your surety in the matter," and lo, it comes double before the month is out. Thank the Lord, and blessing on the friend who thus volunteered "to take the risk;" may blessings return to the donor. Truly, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

R. R. GAITHER, Illinois, who has just subscribed for the BIBLE EXAMINER, writes: I have received the bound volume 20. I would not part with it for $20, if I could not replace it. My joy is what my tongue cannot express. What light and truth I have is like fire shut up in my bones: may God open the way that it may burst forth to His glory and the good of His creatures. I will vindicate my Master's character. My way is, at present, hedged up: may God in his love open it. I talk this truth on all opportunities I have, and love to do it. I hope brethren and sisters, and all of like precious faith will throw their help, or funds, into the treasury of the Lord, and gird on the whole armor of God, and go forward in spreading the truth of the coming kingdom. I hope,—and it gives me great joy,—that I may be permitted to take a humble part in the kingdom that shall not pass away, and in proclaiming the everlasting Gospel in the coming Ages.

WM. LINDSAY, Michigan, writes: I shall ever consider I am indebted to the EXAMINER for the abiding consolation and well grounded hope it has helped me to receive and daily enjoy in this world of trouble and trial. I praise God for the hope it has pointed me to; a hope that reaches right through this age (which is bearing the curse) to those coming ages when I shall be made like my Redeemer. Daily do I thank my God for the great consolation the EXAMINER has brought to me, that the deceived, the mistaken, and the neglected of our race will yet have an opportunity of embracing the precious truth of God. I pray the Lord to cause this glorious truth to be spread abroad. And may we who have tasted this blessed truth live up to it. Your waiting brother.

J. M. YOUNG, Michigan, writes: It is my full intention to stand with you to the end of our journey here. I have lost much of my property in the last four years, and am near 64 years old; so, not able to earn money as formerly. I often think of Brn. Storrs, Blain, and many more of God's dear old servants, walking on the verge of the tomb, battling for the truth, in poverty and in need of help, and my aching heart wonders, why? But this we do know, the loving Master is choosing our portion for us. We do not wish it otherwise. Jesus has said, "I will never leave nor forsake you." Be of good cheer; it is Jesus that leads: be not afraid. "We know not what we shall be." I prize highly the EXAMINER. May our Master bless its Editor and supporters, together with the suffering Zion of God.

A BROTHER, in Georgia, writes: "My relation to the BIBLE EXAMINER has proved to be one of absolute dependence. I love it,—find it profitable,—would cheerfully pay, if in my power, double its price,—but it is utterly out of my power now, and so far as I see in future. My little crop is very short from both flood and drought."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The EXAMINER will visit you still, and all others with like expressions of love to it, while the Lord enables me to publish it.

A. W. BOGART, California, writes: "The true light is shining out here. We are holding our meetings in a private house every Sunday at half past four o'clock. All bars are dropped, and we have a large pasture and plenty of food. Bless the Lord for this freedom. Remember us on this coast in your prayers."

THOMAS J. HARRIS, Pennsylvania, writes: I like the EXAMINER very much. It is the only periodical that gives us light on the future. The Bible clearly teaches probation in the ages to come, and the return of Judah and Israel to their "own land, wherein their father's have dwelt." God says, He will do this, not for their sakes, but for His own name's sake. I hope you will continue the EXAMINER as long as you are able. I know of none to take its place if it should be discontinued.

CAPT. CHRISTIAN HANSON, Virginia, sends for two copies of this Magazine, and writes: "The BIBLE EXAMINER is a storehouse of living truth to me. It has given me more knowledge of God's love to us than I have ever had before. It is a welcome visitor to me. May God bless and keep you with us for many years to come."

N. D. WIGHT, Massachusetts, writes: I find no other publication that I prize as I do the BIBLE EXAMINER. It is deeply interesting, and is very instructive. The blessed truth it advocates ravishes my heart as no other work does.

JESSE BENSON, Illinois, writes: I am much pleased with the doctrine and truth advocated and set forth in the EXAMINER; and my prayer is, that you may be full sustained in the effort to spread the glorious truth of the Gospel of the Holy Scriptures.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

THE EDITOR of this Magazine visited, the past month, Lynn, Chelsea, and Salem, Mass. He received a hearty welcome in all three of those places, and had precious seasons with families, besides a good hearing in the public assemblies. He feels assured that his visit was profitable to himself and to others. He was absent from home eight days, and enjoyed perfect health, except being somewhat affected with hoarseness from much talking in private and public. This, however, was probably owing mainly to the climate in that region.

He feels thankful to "Our Father in heaven" for the health, peace, and joy he experienced, and for the assurance that his visit was made a blessing to not a few. Should his health continue as it is, he will visit other places if satisfied it is the Lord's will. He longs to see the character and Government of our gracious God vindicated; and is sure that no view thereof does this like that he now presents to the consideration of his fellow-creatures. The success of the work he leaves with our gracious God; assured, that only will prosper, ultimately, which He approves.

Those who intend to have the Bound BIBLE EXAMINER, Vol. 20, must apply for them soon; for I cannot supply many more of that volume. I have no perfect sets unbound of Vol. 20, to part with. I have some odd Nos. of it. Bound volumes 18 and 19 I can supply to any who wish them for $2 per volume, or $1 unbound.

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

1. For one new subscriber, with $2, I will give an unbound volume, of either 16, 17, 18, or 19, as they may choose.

2. For three new subscribers, with $6, he shall receive, unbound, all four of the volumes 16, 17, 18, and 19; or, if he prefers it, he shall have either volume 18 or 19 bound.

3. For five new subscribers, with $10, he shall receive both volumes 18 and 19, bound.

4. For eight new subscribers, with $15, he shall receive all three of volumes 18, 19, and 20, bound.

In all the offers, the persons who claim the premiums must pay the mail or Express charges on the bound works sent them.

VOLUMES 18, 19, or 20 of this Magazine will be furnished in plain morocco and gilt binding (to any who may desire it), at short notice. PRICE, $3.25 per volume free of postage; or, $3 when called for or sent by Express.

BIBLE EXAMINER BOUND.

VOLUME 20 of this Magazine is now bound. Those who wish to avail themselves of it should inform me immediately, as I have not as many as of previous volumes. The price will be $2 including postage.

I have still a supply of volumes 18 and 19; bound, which I will furnish at the same rate per volume. GEO STORRS.

POSTAGE.—The new law on printed matter is as follows: "On transient newspapers, magazines, and all kinds of printed matter, except circulars, ONE cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof." A new privilege is also granted: the sender may write his or her name and address on the inside or on the outside wrapper, preceded by the word "From."

TO CLUBS FOR VOL. XXI.

FOUR copies will be sent to one address for $5.

TEN will be sent to one address for $10. Those who take ten copies, may have them sent in two parcels of 5 copies each to two different persons; but I cannot consent to let clubs be divided into less than five copies to one address. If clubs are obtained, and it is wished to send a part of the copies to single individuals, 25 cents, each, must be added to cover my additional expense in the work of mailing.

Please do not forget this.

To accommodate those who cannot obtain a club of 5, I will send two copies to one address for $3.

MARTHA A. HAUSE, Minnesota, writes: The BIBLE EXAMINER is indispensable. I feel that I could not do without it. I read it eagerly and with increased interest, and can hardly wait from one month to another to get it. Yours in Christ.

JAMES McCORD, Ohio, writes: The BIBLE EXAMINER is the most welcome monthly visitor we have. As many have expressed their interest and love for it in strong language, I will say, they cannot possibly think more of it than we do. If I had the means I would give much to help to spread it through the world. As it is, I can do but little more than to use my tongue to advance the glorious truth and give away and lend my Magazine.

THE EXAMINER TO THE LORD'S POOR.

"The poor always ye have with you," said Jesus. Paul cautions us "to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" The BIBLE EXAMINER has never been refused to the poor who have made known their desire to receive it; nor does the Editor intend it shall be, while he can obtain means to publish it; and those who, heretofore, have paid for it, but have become unable to pay longer, asking to have it discontinued, with sorrow to part with it; to such the Editor asks, as a privilege, to continue it; and he will feel a great pleasure to take Jesus' words for complete compensation. The article on "Poverty's Moan and Blessing," in the October EXAMINER, has already been responded to by several brethren and sisters, so as to enable the Editor to supply all the poor who have made known to him their desire to receive the Magazine; and also to such as through unfortunate circumstances are unable to pay as heretofore, but who regret to discontinue it.

A good brother, in Kansas, writes: "I waited just as long as I could, thinking I should get money to send for the EXAMINER; but the grasshoppers have again made their appearance and destroyed all our fall sowing of wheat and cabbage and turnips, and I have not sold a bushel of any kind of grain inside of two years; so I cannot possibly raise any means to pay for the EXAMINER and I do not know how I can do without it."

Well, brother, you shall not "do without it;" it will visit you just the same as if you could pay; and so to all others, in like circumstances, who communicate with the Editor on the matter. It is a pleasure to continue the BIBLE EXAMINER to such: do not deny me that privilege; and many who are more fortunate in means will help to meet the expense, and realize that "it is more blessed to give than to receive;" and will thank the Lord, in this way, to be enabled to help "bear one another's burdens."

THE WORLD BURNING THEORY.

THE theory of the literal burning of the world, or globe on which we live, reminds one of the spirit once manifested by the disciples and the rebuke they received from their Master, and also the lesson He taught them on the occasion. The circumstance and lesson were as follows: The Samaritans were not Israelites, but descendants of the nations introduced into Palestine by the King of Assyria after he had carried the ten tribes away captives. Jesus was on his way to Jerusalem and sent persons before him who entered into a village of the Samaritans to make ready for him. But they did not receive him. "And when his disciples, James and John, saw it, they said, 'Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?'" But He turned and rebuked them, and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; for the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." (Luke ix. 51, 56.)

The idea of burning the world, when Jesus personally comes from heaven again, looks very much like that of these disciples. If men have not received Jesus, though perhaps they never heard of him, or have only heard of him by misrepresentation, they are to be immediately destroyed by fire, according to this world burning theory. Do the advocates of that idea "know what manner of spirit they are of?" Is such a view of Jesus' designs towards men in accordance with the object of his coming again? May not the spirit which advocates the immediate destruction, by fire, of all men except those who have ranked themselves as saints, be some other spirit than that of Jesus? It certainly seems not to be His spirit. He says, He came "not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Will his spirit be changed when he comes the second time, when he is not liable to suffer again from men?

Will he have less love to men and less desire to save them then, than in the days of his humiliation? Will his increase of power, and his perfect glory, so affect his spirit that he will be ready to do that on a large scale—on the whole world—which his erring disciples wished to do on a small village? Is not the spirit which desires such a result to all, except themselves, of the same character as that of the mistaken disciples, who knew not what manner of spirit they were of?

Is not the world burning theory the offspring of ignorance of the words of God, and the fruit of forming a theory from an isolated text, which compels its advocates to overlook the general testimony of Scripture, and the clearly revealed fact that the great work of Christ is "to save men's lives," and to destroy sin and evil? Does not the theory virtually say, Christ is unable to accomplish the work He undertook, and so gives it up in despair, burns the world, and lets the millions on millions of untaught souls, for whom "He gave himself a ransom," perish hopelessly without further effort to save them? What would a fire from heaven to destroy a village of Samaritans have been compared with this? If the disciples did not know what manner of spirit they were of, when they asked and desired to be commissioned to the work of destroying a few villagers, what must we think of the spirit which desires and asks the destruction of the face of the earth, and all men upon it, except themselves, every time they pray, "Thy kingdom come?" Does not such a spirit oppose itself to the spirit of Christ, who came, "not to destroy men's lives, but to save them?"

When He comes again, will He have changed, so that the same "compassion on the ignorant and them who are out of the way," through their ignorance, will have no place in his bosom? True, those who have had the means of knowing God and the remedy he has provided, and who have refused that mercy and "know not God and obey not the Gospel," will be visited by Christ "in flaming fire," and "be punished with eternal destruction." (2 Thess. i. 9.) But what has this to do with those who never had the means to know God, and never heard the Gospel? It surely cannot apply to such, and therefore does not relate to "the ignorant and them who are out of the way" by means of unavoidable circumstances.

To my mind, the world-burning theory has only a most doubtful support, and is opposed to the general teaching of the Bible; irreconcilable with the prophecies; contrary to the revealed plan of redemption, and directly opposed to the testimony of God himself, after the flood, when He said, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake, . . . neither will I again smite any more every thing, living, as I have done." (Gen. viii. 21.) To suppose, after such a declaration, that God will smite the earth with a greater curse, even with a fire which shall destroy the face of the whole earth and every living creature upon it, is, apparently, to suppose that He regards not his word, or that He talks most deceptively. No interpretation of language that may seem to support the world burning theory can be true; and it is, at least, an indirect impeachment of Jehovah's veracity, in relation to his utterance Gen. viii. 21. So it seems to me. To the advocates of such theory, the language of Jesus to his erring disciples seems applicable; and the lesson He taught them on that occasion is worthy of deep meditation by all who wish to honor God more than to sustain a theory with only a solitary text, and that of doubtful authority.

CHILDREN DYING IN INFANCY.

THE condition of these cannot fail to interest every thoughtful mind. Are none of Adam's race to have a revival from the dead except those who form a spiritual union with Christ in this life? That is an inquiry that must be met. Evasion in relation to it can give no satisfaction to the inquirer, nor the person inquired of. All who accept the idea that none will ever have a revival from the dead except those who have formed a spiritual union with Christ, evade this inquiry, or avow a disbelief in the revival of those who have died in infancy. On that subject, silence is the resort. To avow the belief that all infants, dying in infancy, are lost, or perish hopelessly, is so shocking to a pious heart that few dare openly to maintain such a theory. But to this result men are driven, in fact, who insist there will not be a resurrection of any dead ones unless a spiritual union with Christ has been formed before death; they cannot come to any other rational result. In the first number of the revived BIBLE EXAMINER, I spoke as follows:

"To say that no man can have a resurrection from the dead unless he has, in this present life, had a union with Christ's divine nature, or a spiritual union, or union by the Holy Spirit, is to leave all infants, dying in infancy, in eternal death; for a spiritual union can only be formed by faith, and faith cannot be exercised in one of whom we have never heard. Hence, all who take ground that a future life can only be had by a spiritual union with Christ, must of necessity, —when pressed on the subject,—take the position that none can have salvation who die in infancy; and any position or argument that can bring such to life is equally good to give a life in the future to all others who have never committed the sin of rejecting the LIFE-GIVER.

"We shall enlarge upon this topic hereafter; and 'Non-resurrectionists,' as they are called, must meet this question. We have been burdened with it in time past; but truth has delivered us from that load; for which we are thankful to our heavenly Father, and go on our way rejoicing that 'God is Love.'"

To say that Adam brought all his posterity down into death, and that by no fault of their own, and that the second Adam fails to bring up from that death all except a "few," to me, with present light, is a blasphemy; for God said, The seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head; which can have no meaning short of saying, The Seed of the woman shall fully remove the evil introduced by the serpent's subtlety. But if the vast majority of the human race, including all dead infants, are to be held in death eternally, the Seed of the woman fails,—His head is bruised instead of the serpent's, and the serpent evil triumphs over the race, i. e., the mass of it, and only a "few" are rescued; and these only by a desperate outlay of blood and sufferings, accompanied by Almighty grace; and yet not "almighty," because it either lacked in power or disposition to do what the Lord said to the serpent should be done.

These men seem to think, because God has not accomplished all that He promised, in the six thousand years past, that He never will accomplish it. Abraham was tempted to a like unbelief when he took Hagar to wife, because the promised son was so long delayed. The result was he begat an Ishmaelite, whose hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him. Too much like this is the result of attempting to restrict God's work of restitution to this present age; it is a destroying spirit.

The blessed God is not so poor in resources, nor so straitened for time, that He must accomplish all that He has promised in six thousand years. These years in the past, He has but laid out the work to be done, and been building the scaffolding and training workmen to rear up the glorious temple of the future ages, "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are in earth; even in him." (Eph. i. 10.) And this is to be done "according to His good please which He hath purposed in Himself." (verse 9); and "according as He hath chosen us" (who are to be workers together with Him) "in Christ before the foundation of the world," (verse 4), "that in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus." (Eph. ii. 7.)

God's work and purposes concerning this world and those who were to inhabit it, were not commenced "hap-hazard," with no definite knowledge as to its course and result; as finite creatures often begin their projects. He who knew "the end from the beginning," (Isa. xli. 10), has not been disappointed in the working of His purposes; nor will he fail "to subdue all things unto himself," (Phil. iii. 21), because we, poor finite mortals cannot see how it is to be done. Faith does not stagger at apparent impossibilities, but saith, "It shall be done because God hath said it." Unbelief and sloth say, "There is a lion" in the way; some insurmountable obstacle not to be overcome; just like the ten spies sent out to search the land of Canaan, who came back with the cry, "We be not able to go up against the people; . . . all the people that we saw are men of great stature: and we saw the giants, . . . and were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so were we in their sight." (Num. xiii. 31, 33.) They lost sight of the promise of God, just as multitudes do now, and lost their share in the inheritance, as did many others who credited their discouraging words. Men had best be careful how they overlook, set aside, or undervalue the promises and oath of God.

Sure as eternal truth can make it, little children will come into life from the dead; yes, all of them; for, "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life; for, as by one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall the many be made righteous." (Rom. v. 18, 19.) If the judgment by the first Adam was death to all the race, "even so"—to the same "many"—life comes by the Second Adam. Christ hath "abolished death," (annulled, made it void, powerless to hold any one). No soul of man can now be holden in death unless it be as a punishment of their own sins in rejecting the LIFE-GIVER. This sin little children have not and cannot commit. Hence their revival into life is certain; and pious mothers and fathers, too, may find blessed employment in some of "the ages to come" in teaching those little ones of Jesus and his love, who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. xix. 14. And again he said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. xviii. 3.)

Those who affirm there will be no revival from the dead except of those who have formed a spiritual union with Christ in this life are obliged by their theory to exclude all these little children from salvation and doom them to eternal death.

Shall any of us, who have in time past been led to adopt that theory, refuse to modify it? Is it not enough to say, that such as wilfully reject the LIFE-GIVER, after He has been presented to them in that character, "shall remain in the congregation of the dead?" (Prov. xxi. 16.) Must we, to sustain a theory, shut our eyes to all further light? Must we, by that theory, doom all the little children to a hopeless death? Did our Saviour manifest so much regard and love for little children, and at the same time know that they were all hopelessly to be lost, or utterly perish in death? Shall we allow the "infant damnation" theory to pollute our clearer knowledge of God's character and government, which we profess to have obtained?

I beseech all candid men and women to review the ground on which they stand in relation to this matter. Is not the character and government of God deeply implicated in the theory of no revival from the dead of any but such as have been favored with a spiritual union with Christ; when He has made such wonderful professions of "love for the world"; and when it is so emphatically declared that "GOD IS LOVE," and that "His tender mercies are over all His works?"

I know that many, and myself amongst others were driven into what is called the "Non-resurrection" theory, by the shocking theory that all the unholy dead were to have a hopeless resurrection, only to suffer and die again. But both theories are baseless, as I am satisfied all earnest inquirers after truth will yet discover. Let a candid investigation go on, resolved to follow truth regardless of all theories. Ed.

THE END OF PROBATION.

NEARLY all sects and parties in religion, claiming to be evangelical, maintain that probation, or the time of trial which is to fix a man's final destiny, ends with all at death, irrespective of their means or opportunities of knowing the truth whereby they might be saved. If such is the truth it should have a "Thus saith the LORD" to sustain it, and there should be no ground to doubt it; for, if every individual of the human family is exposed to such a fate, whether his end is eternal misery, or to be revived from the dead to die again without further trial, or to remain eternally dead for the sins of this life without regard to his unavoidable ignorance and lack of means for improvement, a fearful responsibility rests on somebody.

No man can be justly condemned without a chance to avoid the fate supposed to await the finally lost. How can he avoid it if in entire and unavoidable ignorance of the way or means to escape it? Somebody is responsible for that ignorance. It cannot be the man himself in the case supposed. Then it must rest on those who had the knowledge and refused or neglected to communicate it; and none will dare to throw the responsibility on God for the ignorance spoken of. Where then does it rest? There can be but one answer, viz., it rests on professed Christians; and if the mass of the race are to perish eternally (whatever perish means) then professed Christians will be answerable for that awful result; and those who have lived in pride, building extravagant places for their public assemblies; and spent their substance on ministers for their own improvement; for useless or extravagant dress, furniture, etc., while the masses were perishing through ignorance, to them unavoidable;—such professors of religion must bear the responsibility of the loss of the mass of their race. A fearful responsibility truly; and if justice overtakes them, they will be convicted and condemned as wholesale murderers; and "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him" (1 John iii. 15); and the question might well be asked, which the disciples put to Jesus, "Who then be saved?" Who among professing Christians is likely to be saved, if their own theory be true that there is no probation or chance for salvation to any soul of man except in the life that now is? The assumption that none of the human family will have any opportunity for salvation except in the present life, is one that ought to make the ears of the religious world tingle; as they themselves are as much or more in danger of final condemnation than the ignorant heathen whom they so unfeelingly shut out from all means of salvation by their theological systems. They, in fact, charge the blame of the perishing of the mass of men on the CREATOR by their theory of this life being the only probationary state for any man, and their CREATOR not taking care to see that all have the means to secure a final salvation.

These theologians and their supporters are bound to produce a "Thus saith the Lord," for their assumed position that there is no probation to any soul of man after the present life is ended. Can they do it? Let them try; and if they fail, let them confess they have been guilty of a dishonor to the government of the CREATOR, and do Him homage by a hearty confession of the wrong.

All that I have said, has been said with the hope of arousing attention to the fact that theological assumptions have too long passed for truth, to the dishonor of the government of God, and having no foundation in his word, but were born of the Apostasy, to the amazing injury of Christianity, and is likely, if not met and rejected, to end in making atheists, instead of "converting" men to the love and worship of the true and living God and his Son, "who gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time;" which time will as surely come, here or hereafter, as that "God is LOVE," and cannot lie.

ASHAMED OF CHRIST.

JESUS says, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." (Luke ix. 26.) Yet, it is a notorious fact, that some who see and believe the truth are ashamed to confess it; they try to avoid committing themselves to it; they strive to persuade themselves they can do more good by not openly defending it, or they fear they may be mistaken and have to retract. Thus they study to get their "light under a bushel" and preserve their reputation. They are among the class thus described, "Among the chief rulers many believed on him (Jesus); but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." (John xii. 42, 43.) Such are the men who, though convinced of truth, yet refuse or neglect to confess it, because their associates or leaders have determined to put them out of their societies or associations if they do. Thus, though they believe, they are ashamed of "the truth;" which is to be ashamed of Christ, who is "The Truth." Yet these persons call themselves "Christians." If so, they are fearful ones; and they may find Christ will "be ashamed of them" when they will most need His confession of them.

This class of men are a great hindrance to the rapid spread of truth; they do not openly enter into the truth, and those who are seeking to enter, they hinder. They "love the praise of men more than the praise of God." Unhappy men! It is not said, they do not love the praise of God at all; but they love the praise of men "more." Alas for them! Will not Christ be ashamed of them when he comes in his Father's glory? They may be saved; but, will they be of the kings and priests unto God and the Lamb? Jesus must and will decide that.

Let us search for the truth, without any other desire but that of honoring God and his dear Son, and to promote the love of Them among our fellow men. Having satisfied ourselves that we have found the truth, proclaim it to all who come under our influence, "whether they will hear or forbear." God does not give us his truth to keep to ourselves, but to communicate to others; and only by so doing can we retain what we have received or have more communicated to us. "Give and it shall be given unto you," is God's rule. Let us work by that rule and see if He does not pour us out a blessing so that there will not be room to contain it, and so our hearts will be enlarged to make room for more and more. Happy is the Christian who is thus enlarged by the grace of God, our bountiful Father. Oh that our faithfulness to Him may be increased proportionate to the magnitude of the mercies He has bestowed, is bestowing, and will bestow on all those who give Him love in return. Ed.

"I AM GOD AND NOT MAN."

If God is as good as man, then the doctrine of raising men to life to kill again, or that of endless torture, must both be false and a libel on our MAKER. Where can a man of any sensibility, to say nothing of special goodness, be found, who, if he had the power to make and people a world, would deliberately so constitute his arrangement as to make it certain that a large portion of that people would be eternally miserable, or that they should be made alive by him, after being dead, to torture and kill them again? Where could an intelligent being be found, who had a spark of kindness left in him, or any sense of justice, that would not pronounce such a proceeding or administration, an outrage, fit only for such tyrants as Nero, or the imaginary devil? How then can any be guilty of charging God with such an unnatural and diabolical administration? Especially, when He challenges all such, saying, "As I live, saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Yet there are men, professing to be Christians, who virtually charge the blessed God with an administration over the work of his own hand that involves falsehood and the most outrageous cruelty: and they think to stop our mouths by crying out, "Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God?" Let such know, it is not against God we reply, but against their blasphemous assumptions of what God will do. We vindicate God's government. They blaspheme it; ignorantly I wish I could say.

Prove that God is as good and wise as a respectable man, and their theories of torment, in a life to come, whether temporary or eternal, not designed for any good to the tormented, are shown to have originated somewhere else than with the God who made heaven and earth. Woe to theories which cannot stand without proving the God of Love and wisdom to be worse than one of his frail, erring creatures.

Ask one of the advocates of a future, hopeless torture either temporal or eternal: Is God as good as a desent man? Is he as kind as a respectable human being? And when they have answered these questions the dispute is ended. If they answer affirmatively, they overthrow their theory of hopeless torment. If they answer negatively, it is folly to spend breath to dispute with them. "Let them alone." "They are joined to their idol." Let them continue to bow down to it, if they will. "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges; . . . their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps." (Deut. xxxii. 31-33.)

CHURCH ORGANIZATION: A QUESTION.

"If it is not too much trouble, I would like to know how you harmonize Matt. xviii. 15-18, with no church organization?" D.

I believe in church organization. My opposition has been to human organizations called churches. Christ has organized his own church. "The Lord added to the church," is the divine testimony. Christ is the "rock" on which, saith He, "I will build my church." All believers in Him are, by virtue of their faith, "by one Spirit baptized into one body,"—"the body of Christ." (1 Cor. xii. 13, 27.) Love cements them together, and, if let alone, would continue a perfect organization; but men, who, too often, "seek their own, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's," set themselves to the work of disorganization of the true church to make a sectarian, or partisan church, and set themselves up to dictate what these divided sheep shall believe, and what they shall not believe, and thus bring in heresies (that is, divisions,) and then claim, "ours is the church," thus deceiving and enslaving the Lord's free men, and forbidding them to grow in knowledge, unless they grow as these "lords over God's heritage" bid them, i. e., in harmony with their creeds of human invention.

Let it be distinctly understood, then, I believe in church organization; but I do not believe that any of the denominational organizations are churches of Christ, as such. They are just what they call themselves. They have taken the name that suits them, and thereby show their preference for it before the name of Christ. I believe in all these organizations there are those who truly belong to the Church of Christ, but they are in bondage so far that they are not allowed the exercise of freedom to believe and communicate to others any new truth that may be brought to their attention. They are, therefore, in captivity in Babylon. I look for the great decree of Him who is greater than Cyrus to bring them out of their bondage ere long. Some few have a foretaste of that freedom, even now; but "they are men wondered at," (Zech. iii. 8); but must bear the burden of beholding the church's desolations, till the Head thereof shall come and restore all things; then shall every "lively stone" find its place in the glorious organization, and have its proper work and office, and the building shall be glorious. The party names, and self-constituted churches, will go "to the moles and to the bats," and be heard of no more forever. Let us take heed that we are, of Christ, "added to the church,"—the true body of Christ.

THE INTERPETATION OF SCRIPTURE.

PRELIMINARY.

Let no one say in his haste that he has nothing to do with principles of Biblical interpretation; that the poor and the ignorant, to whom the Gospel was primarily sent, can never be benefited by such inquiries; that simple-minded Christians are happily unaffected by discussions which relate to difficulties they have never felt, and into the merits of which they are in a great measure incapacitated from entering.

This is not true; for, as Prof. Jowett has well said, "the healthy tone of religion among the poor and uneducated depends, to a very great extent, on the truthfulness of the doctrines they are taught by their superiors. Truth is to the world what holiness of life is to the individual, the source of justice, peace and good." The Reformation would never have been achieved but for controversies which must have been to many a pious heart of that day the source of unmixed pain and regret.

The discussions that distress us now will be blest indeed if they lead, as we trust they will, to the conviction that "Biblical criticism has hitherto hung to the past, and been truer to the traditions of the Church than to the word of Christ;" that he who wants to know, not what Scripture may be made to mean, but what it really does mean, may, by "confining himself to the plain meaning of words, and the study of their context, obtain a deeper insight into the original spirit and intention of the New Testament than was ever possessed by the controversial writers of former ages;" that the one great qualification for understanding Scripture is, that moral sympathy with God which overcomes prejudices as well as passions, and makes familiarity with His word essential to happiness.—EDITOR, from "The Study of the Bible."

BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION.

Whether it be possible to separate the defence of the Bible as a document from all considerations relative to the mode in which the book should be interpreted, may be regarded as an open question. It is, however, not easy to see how such a separation can be absolute, so long as the view we take of the contents of Scripture more or less biases our decision as to the Divine character of the record, or so long as our method of interpreting that record depends, to some extent at least, on the opinion we form regarding its inspiration.

If the whole book be inspired in that plenary sense which excludes the possibility of error, interpretation, as Dr. Chalmers somewhere says, clearly resolves itself into mere questions of grammar. On the contrary, if the supernatural character of the revelation be denied, and the Book comes to be regarded simply as the expression of the combined genius and piety of the writers, then its meaning will naturally be sought rather in the light of its supposed correspondence with the highest intuitions of the reader, than in any study of its grammatical construction. Further, if it is viewed only or chiefly as a revelation of general principles, which are to be logically developed and arranged by divines according to the order of their importance, then systematic theology, or the interpretation of the Church springs into existence, and with it, in one form or other, the assumption of authority.

The sense of uncertainty which, in the present day, has come over so many devout and believing minds as to the teaching of the Bible, is to be attributed partly, no doubt, to the different conclusions of systematic theologians, each system claiming to be sustained by Scripture, and therefore, to be positively true; partly to fanciful expositions founded on the notion that Scripture is given us to be developed, and that hidden meanings are in this way to be brought out of it; and partly to a particular kind of textual preaching, originating, no doubt, in a somewhat superstitious view of verbal inspiration, which demands that we should dwell on every word of the text, as if the very syllables possessed something like a magic power of their own. Any book thus treated must necessarily soon be disencumbered of all definite meaning, and its teaching be placed at the mercy of its expositors. Such has in fact been the experience of the past.

But while Divine revelation can have but one true meaning, nothing can be more certain than that, being a message from the Heavenly Father to his erring and sinful creatures, it must have a power of adaptation to each and all of them in particular, which, from the very nature of the case, forbids any exhaustive or authoritative interpretation of its contents. It has been truly said of Shakspeare that he was a "myriad-minded" man. How much more may it be said of the Bible, that it is a myriad-minded book. Perhaps it is not too much to affirm that, being intended to find affinity with every possibly variety of thought and feeling; to adapt itself to every man's separate idiosyncrasy; to reveal to each just that particular phase or form of truth which is needful for him or her; which can alone be made practical and powerful for good to him or her; it is as impossible that it should have any one given and stereotyped expression, as that it should teach to every man one given and stereotyped lesson.

Yet, let it never be forgotten that this peculiarity by no means interferes with the definiteness of the message, or in any way tends either to impair its explicitness, or to necessitate an authorized interpretation. For only as Scripture is allowed to adapt itself to the peculiar mental and moral condition of each individual, do its words become "spirit and life" to him, ruling his conduct and reigning in his affections. Instead of finding, therefore, an occasion of stumbling in the fact that diversities of view on many points always have, and probably always will, characterize Christians, we might rather discover in the wonderful adaptation of Divine teaching to each evidence of the source from which it comes. For it is at once one, and yet diverse; unchanging, and yet endowed with a capacity of all but infinite fitness to every variety of character.

Just as material light, although the same to all, is yet different to persons of imperfect vision, suffering under diverse forms of disease; so is spiritual illumination a different thing to men in different stages of the Divine life, with varying intellectual powers, and above all, with conflicting wills, passions, and interests; and just as it would be impossible so to temper the light of the sun, that it should leave precisely the same impression on every optic nerve, whether sound or otherwise, so is it neither possible nor desirable that Divine truth should come home to the man who is jaundiced by his prejudices, or drugged by his sins, precisely as it does to the simple and righteous soul who desires to know, only that he may love and obey.

The late Mr. Isaac Taylor, than whom no one has a better right to speak on this subject, has distinctly avowed his conviction that the only effectual remedy for modern scepticism is to be found "in AN INTELLIGIBLE AND DEFENSIBLE PRINCIPLE OF BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION."—Liber Librorum.

HINDRANCES.

"Why is it that Christian people read the Bible so differently?" that conflicting Sects alike appeal to it as the sole authority for their respective views? that doctrines the most diverse are supposed to be equally well sustained by its statements? that as age after age rolls on, each coming generation repeats to a great extent, the opinions of its predecessors,—follows as a rule, the same lines of thought,—lives nearly the same life,—nourishes the same prejudices, and stereotypes at once old formulas and old divisions?

In searching for an answer I have been led to conclude that the true explanation will be found in that prevailing neglect of the Bible, as a whole, which arises from its being almost always read in mere fragments; in forgetfulness of the particular purpose for which the Book was given; in confusions regarding its Inspiration; in errors relating to the Holy Spirit; in the confounding of revealed facts with human inferences; in Bias of one kind or another; in reading, either for "edification," or for the kindling of devout feeling, without first ascertaining the meaning of that which is read; in the habit of accommodating Scripture, or of perverting it, by the exaggeration, projection, or other misapplication of texts; in allegorizing, under the influence of an unbridled fancy; in the abuse of Parallel passages and references; in that darkening of the sense which is frequently occasioned by injudicious division into Chapters and Verses; in the acceptance of interpretations drawn only from Hymns; in the neglect and consequent abuse of unfulfilled Prophecy; in inattention to the character of the particular Dispensation under which we are living; in errors as to Church Authority, and the value of Tradition; in undue reliance on the professional labors of the Clergy; in turning Helps into Hindrances; and above all, in habitual indifference to the demand Scripture makes on every man for prolonged study, as an essential pre-requisite to the elevation by its means of moral character.

That the slightest bias may, without any conscious volition, influence practical conclusions, even in physical science, is curiously illustrated by the fact that analytical chemists, at moments when experiment is appealed to, for the confirmation or otherwise of a supposition all but demonstrated, will not trust themselves to hold their scales, lest desire for a particular result should in the slightest degree affect the truthfulness of the balance; they place the scales in the hands of an uninterested assistant.

The temptations to bias are innumerable. For instance, few are probably aware of the extent to which in the exposition of Scripture, in consequence of bias, facts and inferences are blended; or how frequently by this process, that which is merely human is, by theologians, placed on a level with that which is Divine. Few remember that while theology is "the science of inferences," the Bible is merely a revelation of facts.

But it is necessary, before proceeding further, to explain what we mean by a Scripture fact. And perhaps we cannot do this better than by calling attention to the following passage which occurs in Robert Hall's well-known sermon on "The glory of God in concealing a matter."

These are his words: "The revelation contained in the Scriptures extends only to FACTS; not to the theory of these facts, or their original causes. The most important truths are communicated in a dogmatic, not a theoretic manner. We are taught on the testimony of Him who cannot lie, insulated facts, which we cannot connect with those reasons with which they are undoubtedly connected in the Divine mind. They rest solely on the basis of Divine authority; and we are left as much in the dark with respect to the mode of their existence as if they were not revealed."

A SCRIPTURE FACT, then, is to us a revealed truth, dogmatically communicated; resting solely on the basis of the Divine authority; and viewed apart from any reasons for its proclamation, or any deductions which may be drawn from it. And this, be it observed, whether that which is revealed be an event, or whether it be what is usually termed a doctrine.

By AN INFERENCE we simply understand a deduction from some revealed truth. Such deduction may be right or may be wrong; for it is, at best, but the result of a process carried on by a finite mind, dealing with that which has relation to the infinite. It is owing to neglect of this distinction that men fall into errors without number.—Study of the Bible.

EXAGGERATIONS AND FANCIES.

By the exaggeration of Scripture we understand the use of passages in a sense stronger than they were originally intended to bear; whether such "adding to" the Divine Testimony—for it is nothing less—arise from mistranslation, from the erroneous interpretation of imagery, or from general misconception as to the limits under which any given statement is to be received.

The misfortune is, that these exaggerations prevail most on subjects in relation to which it is of all others important that the exact line of truth should not be overstepped; that they are often winked at, if not encouraged, from an undue anxiety to produce immediate and salutary impression; and that commonly all discussion in relation to them is deprecated, on the ground that as men are already far too little affected by the evil of sin, and far too careless respecting its consequences, anything which seems to lessen the terribleness of disobedience, even though it should be by the removal of error, must be practically injurious.

The result, in accordance with that great law of retribution which operates as surely in religion as in everything else, is, that at the present time Infidelity plants its foot on these very exaggerations as the first step to confirmed unbelief; insinuates that, as a rule, the assertions of the pulpit and the calm conclusions of the scholar do not harmonize; that Truth, both in books and sermons, is commonly sacrificed to effect; that things are not exactly as they are represented; and that the most alarming appeals may be divested of much of their power by a careful examination of the words in which they are embodied, and the texts by which they are enforced. So true is it that exaggeration—whatever may be its immediate effect—invariably weakens the cause it is intended to support.

Fanciful interpretations may, as a rule, be said to arise from the misuse of what is supposed to be Typical or Allegorical.

In answering the question, "What rule should be adopted in deciding whether a passage or a person is or is not typical?" we believe that none safer or better can be laid down than that which is advocated by Bp. Marsh. It is this: "There no other rule by which we can distinguish a real from a pretended type than that of Scripture itself. There are no other possible means by which we can know that a previous design and a pre-ordained connection existed. Whatever persons or things, therefore, recorded in the Old Testament were expressly declared by Christ and His Apostles to have been designed as prefigurations of persons or things relating to the New Testament, such persons or things, so recorded in the former, are types of the persons or things with which they are compared in the latter.

"But if we assert that a person or thing was designed to prefigure another person or thing, where no such prefiguration has been declared by Divine authority, we make an assertion for which we neither have nor can have the slightest foundation." In short, to borrow the words of Professor Moses Stuart, "just so much of the Old Testament is to be accounted typical as the New Testament affirms to be so, and no more." This takes the whole question out of the hands of fanciful expositors, and enables the most unlettered reader to decide what is typical and what is not.

What is a man to make of his Bible who is told by one, that Moses, in "forty particulars," typifies Christ; by another, that "every passage in the Old Testament looks backward, and forward, and every way, like light from the sun, not only to the state before and under the Law, but under the Gospel too;" by a third, that "there are forty-nine typical resemblances between Joseph and Christ, and seventeen between Jacob and Christ,—his worst actions being regarded equally symbolical with his best."

Nor should it be forgotten (for it is a solemn warning), that on this use of the supposed types and figures of the Old Testament the Roman Catholic Church builds most of her tenets.

All this folly, for it cannot properly be designated by any other name, rests on the notion that Truth, instead of being simply revealed in the Bible, is to be developed out of it by human ingenuity; that underneath its direct teachings lie intimations which may justly be made the basis of new discoveries; and that depths of meaning are to be found in the plainest statements, if only the investigator be spiritual enough to discern them.

Let this doctrine once be allowed, and nothing can be clearer than that, under its operation, the Word of God is turned into an enigma, and Truth lies prostrate at the mercy of the fanciful, the ingenious, and the weak. "Under such methods," it has been well said, "we may shut our lexicons, and draw lots for the sense."

We conclude by laying down the following rule:

He who would understand his Bible must be content to regard as typical or allegorical such portions of Scripture only as are declared to be such on Inspired authority; he must be satisfied with the one plain and paramount meaning which manifests itself to the simple minded in connection with the context; and disregarding all human fancies, however spiritual the teacher of such imaginations may be supposed to be, he must determine, at all hazards, to take the book just as it stands; to accept it in the spirit of a little child; to confess that he has before him but fragments of a truth that is, in its entirety, infinite; and be content to wait for the day when that which now often seems to us to be "torn into a thousand pieces, and scattered to the four winds of heaven," shall be gathered limb to limb, and "moulded with every joint and member into an immortal feature of loveliness and perfection."—Study of the Bible.

HYMNS AND PARALLEL PASSAGES.

To say that the Bible is as often interpreted by the hymn-book of the dissenter as it is by the prayer-book of the churchman, is but to state a simple truth. The impressions which are received from the one not unfrequently bias the interpretation given to the other. Embodying, as hymns do, almost every shade of theological sentiment; forming, in their use, no unimportant part of public worship; committed to memory in early youth; meditated upon in the closet; recited in seasons of joy or sorrow; and whispered in the ears of the dying, it is almost impossible to exaggerate the influence they exercise in the formation and support of particular religious views.

Far be it from us to depreciate sacred song, or even to speak lightly of an agency which has been so greatly blessed of God, both to the conversion and edification of multitudes. But it may surely be permitted us to suggest that both hymns and psalms (so-called) are purely human compositions; that they sometimes pervert, and that they commonly exaggerate, Scripture truth; that a guard should be kept against their becoming authoritative; and that, however touching or beautiful they may be, care should be taken lest, as they steal into the soul, they should carry with them some seed of error which, mingling with the purest and best affections, may become in time a master-thought, which it is next to impossible to eradicate.

Wesley's hymns come to hundreds of thousands of simple minds with a weight fully equal to that of any inspired composition; and Watts's are regarded by multitudes more as second only to Holy Writ.

Let it not then, be thought needness to lift up on this subject the voice of warning. For so long as thousands are much better acquainted with David's Psalms in metrical versions than they are with the Inspired Text; and thousands more build on Hymns, hopes and consolations which only ought to be built on the Bible; it can never be improper to draw attention to the danger that is involved in such a course; or to show how that which, if rightly used, is one of the highest sources of delight and spiritual profit, may, by abuse, easily become one of the most serious impediments to the understanding of Holy Scripture.

That great advantage frequently arises from the careful study of what are considered to be parallel texts, will certainly not be disputed by any intelligent reader of Scripture. Sincere and deep is the gratitude every student of Scripture ought to feel to the many excellent men who, at great cost, both of time and labor, have bequeathed to us a mass of references so various and so valuable as those are, which now enrich the columns of our Bibles.

Yet it cannot be denied that some of these references are misleading; that others seem to be intended rather to guide the reader to a particular view of Truth, than to help him to discover the meaning of the Word of God; that others relate to the words rather than to the spirit of the passage to which they are affixed; and that all, even when judiciously selected, do great harm if they lead the reader away from the context, and cause him to rely for light rather on a variety of fragmentary passages scattered up and down over the pages of Holy Writ, than on the connected reasoning of the Apostle or Evangelist who may be writing. Where caution, in this respect, is neglected or despised, the result must be disastrous; for parallel passages then merely take the form of a very imperfect and disjointed commentary; are, if simply verbal, quite as likely to delude as to enlighten; and, if otherwise, can furnish but a very partial insight into the meaning of any particular text.

What we have to guard against is, allowing parallel references to mislead us by false associations,—by merely verbal resemblances,—by guiding us however unwittingly, into a given line of thought,—by forming a sort of commentary for us; and under pretence of enabling us to interpret according to the analogy of faith, by keeping us in harmony, not so much with Truth itself as with what Christians generally suppose to be the spirit of Revelation, as it may happen to be embodied in the particular system of theology which is at any given time popular in religious circles.—Study of the Bible.

SCRIPTURE HELPS.

Of books specially intended to facilitate Scriptural investigation, it may be asserted, without paradox, that they are sometimes at once both helps and hindrances; helps in one direction, hindrances in another.

Such we believe to be the case, notwithstanding their acknowledged excellences, with many “critical introductions” to the Bible. They help us, by the information they impart; they hinder, by the impression they leave that Holy Scripture can scarcely be understood without a prolonged course of preparatory acquisition.

How, it may well be said, can it be expected that ordinary readers should ever be qualified to form any independent judgment respecting the teachings of a Book, for the interpretation of which upwards of three hundred rules, occupying in their statement and illustration nearly two hundred closely printed octavo pages, are found in a work so able and yet so popular as that of Mr. Hartwell Horne?

People have come to believe that without a formidable critical apparatus it is not possible to arrive at the meaning of God’s word: whereas the reverse is nearer the truth. The plain unsophisticated reader is far more likely to get at the true interpretation than the learned student. For the true use of interpretation is to get rid of interpretation, and to leave us alone in company with the Author.

“When the meaning of Greek words,” says Dr. Jowett, “is once known, the young student has almost all the real materials which are possessed by the greatest Biblical scholars, in the Book itself. The great thing, after all, is to perceive the meaning of words in reference to their context. Less weight should be given to Lexicons,—that is, to the authority of other Greek writers,—and more to the context. It is no exaggeration to say that he who, in the present state of knowledge, will confine himself to the plain meaning of words, and the study of their context may know more of the original spirit and intention of the authors of the New Testament, than all the controversial writers of former ages put together.

In reading Scripture, we are bound, and that most emphatically,—no less by reverence for its Author than by integrity of heart, to ask but one question, “What does it say?” And if, to get this question answered, it is necessary to ascertain not only what the precise words are, but when and to whom they were spoken,—to observe the connection in which they stand, and to note the circumstances under which they were uttered, we must neither grudge the labor that may be involved, nor imagine that we can evade its necessity by indulging in our own fancies, however ingenious they may be, or by prolonging mere meditation, however spiritual or devout. When the true meaning of a passage is made out, and not till then, shall we be able to apply it with simplicity of purpose, or receive and realize as living words that which has been written or spoken.

In doing this, a thoughtful and intelligent reader will gladly avail himself of such helps as he can obtain. For the meaning of words, he will pay attention to the marginal readings given in the Authorized Version; he will consult intelligent commentators; he may, perhaps, think it worth while to learn enough Greek to enable him to study such “Notes” as those of Dean Alford.

For the rest, ordinary sagacity will generally suffice. The Bible always takes for granted that readers are possessed of common sense; that they will give the same kind and amount of attention to inspired statements which they are in the habit of bestowing on ordinary writings; and that they will read its communications continuously, and as a whole.

The fact is, little real help can be given to an intelligent reader of the Bible, beyond that which is afforded by pointing out the most obvious hindrances to its comprehension; and by directing his attention generally to rocks and quicksands which, whether seen or unseen, form the main obstacle to the safe arrival of the heavenward traveler into the haven of Truth.

Three or four great leading principles may however be gathered.

The first is, that in the study of Scripture, and in connection with humble and prayerful dependence on the "Giver of every good and perfect gift,"—it should be read connectedly and as a whole; with faculties alert and awakened; with minute observation of the often partially concealed links of thought which connect portion with portion; and with a constant reference to the object of the speaker or writer—the character or circumstances of the parties addressed,—and the age or dispensation to which the truth in question may be supposed especially to belong.

The second is, to acquire clear and distinct perceptions as to the precise meaning of what are sometimes termed the "technicalities" of Scripture.

The third,—implied rather than expressed,—is, to seek after the true import of Scripture silences, often more expressive than speech; and to weigh well the indirect hints which are scattered over the Bible, relative to events predicted, but not yet fulfilled; such as the restoration of Israel,—the "times of the restitution of all things,"—the bringing again of Sodom, Moab, and Edom,—the second coming of the Lord, and the universal subjection of mankind to His government.

Above all would we urge the conscientious devotion of an adequate portion of time to the general study of the Book, both alone and with others. And this with a view, not only to personal edification, but to the improvement of all with whom we come in contact. No man will ever learn who is determined before hand not to teach. No man can know how little or how much he knows of any subject until he has attempted to teach it.

Diligence in this work will be sure of an abundant reward. The Bible can never get behind the age. It has treasures in it, many and great, yet undiscovered. Advance in acquaintance with it can only be made, as Bishop Butler says, "in the way in which all improvements are made; by thoughtful men's tracing on obscure hints—as it were, dropped us by nature accidentally, or which seem to come into our minds by chance."—Study of the Bible.

SPIRIT AND LETTER.

St. Saul, in his second epistle to the Corinthians (iii. 6), says of himself and of Timothy, that they were made of God "able ministers of the new covenant, not of the letter, but of the spirit;" and although it is highly probable from the context, that in speaking of the "letter" that "killeth" as opposed to "the spirit" that "giveth life," he is but keeping up the contrast he had before drawn between the law on "tables of stone," and that "written by the Spirit on fleshly tables of the heart;" it is nevertheless certain that the force of the contrast lies between that adherence to the literal precept which was characteristic of the old economy, and that obedience in the spirit which is the claim of the new and better and covenant. It supports, therefore, the conclusion already adverted to,—that under the Gospel the spirit of the truth revealed is regarded as alone essential, the letter, however important in its place, being but a secondary consideration: worthy indeed of the most careful and critical examination, but only in order that by its study the true spirit of the teaching may be faithfully ascertained.

Our Lord himself enforces the same lesson when, rebuking the dullness that had led many of his disciples to misinterpret His teaching, to stumble and to be offended at it, He says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." (John vi. 63.)

It is difficult indeed, to conceive how, on any other principle, a revelation could have been constructed, capable of adaptation to men in all ages, of all countries, and in every possible state of civilization; capable also of translation into every tongue, and of being made intelligible to the child, the peasant, and the savage.

Nothing can be more certain than that the inspired writers sometimes add to a citation, sometimes abridge one, and sometimes comprehend the spirit of several passages in one, without much regard to exactness. Everywhere they show themselves to be solicitous not about the form, but about the substance of Scripture; and so long as they secure the latter they evidently regard the former as comparatively of little moment.—Sunday Morning.

DARK PASSAGES.

Some things in Divine revelation are written as with a sunbeam; other things are only hinted at. Yet who shall dare to say that the one is not as certain as the other? As it is in Nature, so is it in Scripture: some things are proclaimed from the mountain top; other things are only whispered to the listening ear. The one arrests attention; the other rewards it. Some things are needful to be known for present guidance; other things are opened up as a recompence to those who desire to gain a full understanding of all the ways of God, so far as He may please to let us become acquainted with them. Yet all alike demand the scrutiny of the wise, and all alike reward the diligence of the industrious.

That the Bible has a two-fold purpose to accomplish in the world is evident from its character. If in one aspect it addresses itself to man as man everywhere, in another it speaks only to a particular class of men, viz., to those who, knowing the voice of the Redeemer, have received him into their hearts, and believed on Him to the saving of their souls. To the one it announces, "Glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all (the) people." Its note is, "On earth peace, good will toward men." To the other it says, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace but a sword."

To the many it speaks not only of that silent abode where the slave shall be free from his master, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest; it points also to a world where "there shall be neither sorrow nor any more pain." To the few it says, "All things are yours," whether "life or death," whether "things present or things to come," all are yours, for ye are Christ's, and Christ's is God's. To both it reveals a day when reconciliation between God and man being perfected, there shall be "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness,"

To all it proclaims a Father, little recognized, but not the less loving, who asks of every man the obedience and affection which is so sinfully withheld; but to some it speaks of an "earnest of the spirit" already possessed, and of a present heaven, enjoyed even on earth, although accompanied by many sorrows, and oftentimes by great tribulation.

These, always said to be "a little flock," and "a peculiar people," are spoken of as having received "power or privilege to become the sons of God" in a special sense; they are "born from above," born "not of blood nor of the will of the flesh, but of God." Penitent and pardoned, they are declared to be even now "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ;" they are styled "elect and chosen;" they are said to be "predestinated from the foundation of the world, that they might be holy and without blame before God in love; they are to "reign in life;" they are to be "kings and priests to God and to Christ for ever and ever." Nor should it be forgotten that it is to these that the fearful warnings which are by preachers generally applied to the ungodly are in the text really addressed. In all these cases the message is emphatically to a class.

Broader distinctions than those referred to it is scarcely possible to lay down. Confusions more disastrous than those which arise when these distinctions are disregarded can scarcely be imagined. Yet these confusions pervade Christian society, and are propagated with untiring zeal both from the pulpit and the press. The consequence is, that while some regard the offers of the Gospel as addressed only to the elect, and others look upon the glad tidings as finding adequate fulfilment in the general improvement of society, in advancing civilization, and in material progress, most persons, blending the two, reduce the high demands made upon the Christian, as a man not of this world, to the level of humanity in general, and regard them as imperative only so far as they are workable in ordinary Christianized society.—Liber Librorum.

CHURCH AUTHORITY.

The position and the claim of the Church as a great teacher, and as a guide to truth, cannot be separated from any fair inquiry into the place which Scripture ought to occupy in the formation of our beliefs. The existence or non-existence of an institution claiming the right of deciding what is truth, and sometimes of supplementing that truth by tradition, cannot but be an important element in all investigations bearing upon the Bible.

Nor is the point at issue, as is generally supposed, merely one of degree. The thing needing to be established is, not to what extent any existing ecclesiastical body may or may not have authority in controversies of faith; nor yet, whether or no, any actual Church holds in its own bosom a deposit of apostolic tradition; but whether any such body, having Divine authority for its institution, exists in the world. For if it does, nothing can be more obvious than that to its decisions, so far as it is empowered to give them, it becomes all of us to bow.

Hitherto this great question has been treated rather with reference to the extent of power claimed by any given Church, than to the reality or non-reality of the existence of such an organization by Divine appointment. That authority of some kind or other over opinions, as well as over conduct, is vested in all Churches, however small or sectarian they may be, seems everywhere to be taken for granted.

Of course, so long as it is understood that this claim merely implies that, like secular associations, religious bodies may justly fix the conditions on which any person shall be received into, or retained in, their fellowship, no one has a right to dispute its propriety. But more than this is commonly meant; since all alike imagine they have the Divine sanction for what they do, and act accordingly. Leaders of sects may not indeed ask to be regarded as successors of the apostles; they may, on the contrary, energetically disclaim all such assumptions; and yet they both may and do not unfrequently exercise the power such a succession is supposed to confer, with far more stringency than those who put forward higher pretensions.

The question needing to be settled is, whether or no Christ and his apostles ever appointed successors, or ever gifted any man or body of men with power or ability to decide for others what ought or ought not to be believed.

Put in this way, the inquiry primarily, if not exclusively, bears upon such ecclesiastical bodies as have formally demanded the recognition of their right to settle controversies by virtue of a commission received from Christ.

The reasoning by which this claim has hitherto been sustained cannot but be regarded as in many respects very unsatisfactory. It is argued, that inasmuch as probably a quarter of a century must have passed away before any Gospel or Epistle was produced; that as those who at length did write and tell us for the most part that they were moved to do so by passing circumstances; that as they had evidently no thought of leaving behind them any full confession of faith; that since they did not affirm in detail the doctrine of the Trinity, or expound other mysteries; and since there is no trace of a collection of apostolic writings, or of the formation of a New Testament canon by John or any other influential Christian of the apostolic age, it could never be intended that men should take the Scriptures alone as their rule of faith, or that they should seek in them exclusively for a knowledge of God's revelation.

This view is supposed to find confirmation in the fact that Paul bids Timothy commit to faithful men what he had "heard" from apostolic lips, that they might teach others also, and that he commands both the Corinthians and the Thessalonians to hold fast "the traditions" they had been taught. These unwritten teachings therefore, as handed down by the Church, are, it is asserted, essential to the securing of Christian doctrine in all its fulness, pure and certain through all generations.

Further, it is argued, that as Christianity was but an outgrowth of Judaism, the ancient priesthood had to be replaced by the spiritual succession of duly-appointed instructors, and that as the first Christians had received apostolic teaching not as the word of man, but as the Word of God, a provision was needed for securing to after-times a like repose in authority by the appointment of a living, ever-speaking tribunal open and accessible to all.

Whether such authority is supposed to centre in an individual, as the Pope, or in a body like the Church, matters little. The Romanist of course holds to the former: and so doing maintains that the first deposit of doctrine was intended to have an organic growth, and to expand from its roots by a law of inward necessity, and in a manner corresponding to the intellectual needs of believers in different ages. There was to be, he says, a constant building up of doctrine as a progressive development, a mapping out of its details, and an exhibition of its full contents, secured and fixed by ecclesiastical decision, and all was to be accomplished under the guidance of the Paraclete, the teacher given to the Church.

It is not needful to inquire how much of this is held only Romanists, how much belongs to Anglicanism, or how much is involved in the action of every Nonconforming community. What we want to know is, whether the root-idea has or has not, any good foundation; whether there is really any reason to believe that the provision spoken of was ever made. The words of St. Paul, whether to Timothy or to the Gentile churches, prove nothing, unless it can be shown that the traditions he refers to were distinct from, or additional to, what is now embodied in the Gospels and the Epistles. The entire question is one of fact, one therefore respecting which we can know nothing beyond what is left on record in Scripture.

Now, there we find no trace of any teaching similar in character to that which is supposed to be so essential. The apostles do not merely tell people what they ought to believe, as if that were enough; they do not even ask that anything should be received, simply on their responsibility or authority. St. Paul utterly disclaims any wish to have dominion over the faith of his converts. "By faith," he says, "ye stand." "We are but helpers of your joy." To the Corinthians he writes, "I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say." The Galatians he warns not only against men who might preach another Gospel, but against himself if he should ever be led to do so. St. Peter exhorts elders "as also an elder." St. John directly appeals to his hearers as able to distinguish between truth and falsehood. All the apostles, in short, seem to have regarded themselves chiefly as witnesses of facts. When a new one had to be chosen in place of Judas, the reason given is, that he might be a witness with the rest of the resurrection. Everything they teach is presented in the simplest form possible. Nothing can be found at all corresponding to the scholastic definitions of later times; nothing tending to indicate that such definitions would ever be desirable.

The evangelical narrative, as we have it, leaves quite a contrary impression to that which assumes the formal appointment of a body of men as in any way inheritors of apostolic powers or apostolic wisdom. The few believers are gathered together in fellowships of the simplest character, that as "sheep among wolves," they may exhort and strengthen one another. Elders chosen from their midst are appointed over them, and endowed with gifts fitting them, in the absence of written documents, rightly to teach and govern these infant communities. They "break bread" together in memory of their Lord, apparently without the intervention of any officer of the Church. They possess, but have no power of communicating gifts, either of speech or healing. Even Philip, the signally-honored evangelist, cannot confer any of these endowments on his converts. Everything indicates that with the last man on whom the last of the apostles laid hands all miraculous power in the Church ceased and determined, and with that power all apostolic authority. Henceforward, true Christians appear to be essentially on a level, alike members of that royal Priesthood of which Christ was the great Head and High Priest, although differing in talent and in work. Not from Scripture, certainly, can it be shown that Christ or his apostles ever framed an organization in any respect corresponding to what we call THE CHURCH.

How, then, came such an institution into existence? For nothing can be plainer than that about a hundred years after the death of John it appears, although in anything but an apostolic garb. All is altered. "No other change," says Dean Stanley, "equally momentous has ever since affected the fortunes of Christianity; yet none has ever been so silent and secret. The Church has now become history, the history not of an isolated community or of isolated individuals, but of an organized society incorporated with the political systems of the world."

Was this change, then, healthy development—the fore-intended growth of the acorn into the oak? or was it corruption—the first signal indication of that new order of things which then so mysteriously manifested itself, at once as an evil and a good: good in so far as it reared saints and subdued Paganism in the Roman Empire; evil in its later developments culminating in the Papacy? A satisfactory answer to this question would solve many difficulties.

Hard it is to believe that a Church which produced so many Christian heroes, so many great and good men, should in any sense whatever, be worthily called a "Mystery of Iniquity." Harder still, however, is it to imagine on a review of the superstitions encouraged and the persecutions carried on for ages by its ecclesiastical tribunals—literally drunk with the blood of the saints—its Christianity so dead and morally degraded that nothing but the inroads of an impostor like Mohamet could cleanse the plains of Asia of the impurities it had nurtured there; its only religion, a religion of sacraments, under the guise of which the pastors of the Church had, as Coleridge puts it, "gradually changed the life and light of the Gospel into the very superstitions they were commissioned to disperse, and thus paganized Christianity in order to christen paganism." Hard is it to see in such a Church anything but a profound mystery of God, a mystery of spiritual evil, a mystery of iniquity. Be this, however, as it may, nothing can certainly be deduced either from its past or its present existence, or from the past or present history of any of the Reformed Churches, which can for a moment sustain the assertion that God has committed the development of doctrine or the power of decision in cases of doubt to any body of men, however earnest or good they may be, or however much they may have accomplished in the spread of the Gospel, in the civilization of nations, or in the regions of benevolent activity.

Let us finally inquire whether there are indications in any part of Scripture that it ever was the design of God that divine teaching should be subjected to professional interpretation; or that it ever was the duty of a simple-minded follower of the truth,—Jew or Gentile,—to rely on the expositions of either Priest or Levite, Rabbi, or Scribe?

That, under the Jewish economy, the Priests were commanded to "teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord had spoken unto them by the hand of Moses," is clear (Lev. x. 11); that these ministers held a Divine Commission, and were descended in unbroken succession from the first High Priest, appointed by God himself, is certain: that they had, through Moses, a promise almost identical in terms with that given to the Apostles by the Saviour, cannot be disputed,—“The Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee nor forsake thee” (Deut. xxxi. 6):—a promise repeated by the Prophets as stretching onwards through all their history (Isa. xli. 10, 11,) and appropriated in each succeeding generation by the men who sat in “Moses’ seat.”

The question is, Did all these advantages combined, viz., a Divinely appointed priesthood,—a command to teach,—an unbroken succession,—and an ever-living promise,—justify on the part of the Jewish hierarchy a claim to interpret Old Testament Scripture, or warrant a simple-minded Israelite in casting the responsibility of deciding betwixt truth and error upon his religious guides?

Let the history of that people answer. So far as they did follow these professional instructions, they were, as a rule, misled and deceived. So far as they abandoned their guidance, and listened to the voice of the irregular teachers raised up by God from amidst the laity, they prospered.

What precise lesson is intended to be taught by the fact, that “under the ancient Theocracy, and again throughout the whole period of the Hebrew Monarchy, the most noted of those “holy men of old, by whom God spake unto the Fathers,”—Isaiah, Jonah, Amos, Joel, Hosea, Nahum, Micah, Zephaniah, Habakkuk, Obadiah, Haggai, Zechariah, Daniel, and Nehemiah, were neither Priests nor of priestly families, we do not profess to know; but the fact that the men chosen of God to be the inspired teachers of the people were, for the most part, altogether independent of the Hierarchy, is surely proof positive that the interpretation of Scripture was not entrusted to the Priesthood.

It may be said, that the Levites were specially appointed to “teach Jacob the Judgments, and Israel the Law” of God (Deut. xxxiii. 10): that for this purpose, lest their minds should be distracted with worldly cares, no portion of the land of Canaan was allotted to them; and that they sometimes took up their residences in the houses of the rich, and acted both as Priests and instructors of the children (Judg. xvii. 9.)

This is quite true. But then it must be borne in mind that this teaching referred chiefly, if not entirely, to ceremonial observances, in relation to which the Levite was an absolute authority: “Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the Priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do.” (Deut. xxiv. 8.)

The rise, at a later period, of Rabbis or Doctors, and the worship of the Synagogue, does not at all interfere with this conclusion. On the contrary, the “vain-traditions” of the former,—so strongly denounced by our Lord,—and the freedom of exposition which prevailed in the latter (Matt. iv. 23; Luke iv. 16–20; Acts xiii. 14–16,) indicate that it was the duty, as it was also the privilege, of the Israelite to judge for himself as to the meaning of the written Word.

That there was among the Jews a strong party who clung to the Church Authority and Traditional teaching, is unquestionable. Paul, before his conversion, was one of this class. He was a devout man, and an earnest believer in the Old Testament Scriptures; but he read them only by the light of the Church of his fathers, and he acted only in harmony with the instructions of its ministers (Acts xxii. 3–5). The result we know. Under the delusion that he was doing right in being thus guided by the priests, he was led to engage in a work, the thought of which filled him, to the day of death, with remorse and shame.

Wherein was his error? It lay undoubtedly in transferring to others a responsibility which could in reality belong only to himself. His mind was prejudiced. He was, in relation to Christianity, uncandid and unfair. There were some things about the religion of Jesus which he disliked, and so he would listen to no argument in its favor. He thought that, instead of maintaining the perpetuity of the Law, Christianity dishonored it. Had he examined more closely, he would have seen that his prejudices were unfounded, and that Christ, instead of degrading Judaism, was its perfection and its end “witnessed to both by the Law and the Prophets.” (Rom. iii. 21.)

But why should he trust himself in any such investigation when he had the anointed Priests of God—the true interpreters of Scripture—on his side?

So he argued; and so he erred.

Before his conversion he leaned implicitly on his spiritual advisers; after that great change he recognized the higher duty of comparing their injunctions with the revealed will of God.

And what he did we are taught to do.

“These” (the Bereans) “were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so.” (Acts xvii. 11.)

“Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.” (1 Thess. v. 21.)

Again and again has the question been put by inquiring minds,—and it will continue to be put with an increasing determination to arrive at the truth,—Has God really given to any ecclesiastical body now on earth, Papal or Protestant, established or non-established,—or to any voluntary association, endowed or unendowed, any authority different from that which is claimed and exercised by secular associations, when, uniting for temporal purposes, they lay down rules for their own government, and separate those from their fellowships who refuse to submit to them? If so, where is such Church to be found? and what is the extent, what the limits of its power?

Nor can such a question be answered either by mere assertion, or by reference to the undoubted fact, that all Church rules being drawn from the Word of God, are supposed to be of Divine authority. It is too important to be thus lightly disposed of. Nothing short of distinct proof can or ought to satisfy the inquirer; for the answer involves considerations affecting both his duty and his happiness.

If a claim to rule on behalf of Christ can be authenticated by any church in the world, duty demands instant submission to that Church; and happiness, which always follows submission to lawful authority, is sure to be the result. But in proportion to the importance of the claim is the necessity for jealous scrutiny as to its legitimacy. For if I am led astray by mere assumption, I unwittingly advance that which is human into the place of that which is Divine; I allow something or other, whatever it may be, to come more or less between me and Christ,—more or less to interfere with the work of that indwelling Spirit by which, in proportion as I am made lowly and obedient, and freed from prejudice and selfishness, truth is unveiled to my mind, and the revealed will of God made at once luminous and guiding,—clear to my intellect, light to my path.

It is, I think, too generally taken for granted, that men make light of Church authority from mere lawlessness,—that self-will, the love of self-assertion, conceit and pride, lie at the root of that contempt for ecclesiastical pretension which certainly marks the present age. It is forgotten that in religious matters men love repose; that the sense of responsibility, in relation to the acquisition of truth and the fulfilment of duty, is, to an earnest and conscientious mind, singularly painful and wearisome; that nothing, humanly speaking, contributes more to the contentment of men than confidence in a spiritual guide. We see this illustrated by unbelievers, in the fact that, in the absence of truth, almost any form of superstition is welcomed; and by believers, in the readiness with which they yield to the influence of the sect or party to which they may belong.

The truth is, that in religion men will believe anything, or trust in anybody, rather than allow that the true Church is, to the human eye, all but invisible, that, lost amid a wilderness of schisms, it is known only to Him who discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart; that there is, therefore, now no ecclesiastical body upon earth having, as such, authority to teach, to decree rites and ceremonies, or properly speaking, to disciple men; that only to its risen Lord, and to the purifying presence of the Comforter, can each individual Christian really look for guidance, for comfort, or for strength.

Nor need we wonder at this unwillingness to give up the idea of Church authority. For it is assuredly a fearful thing to stand in a world like this, in the presence of evil, and to feel, to so great an extent, one's isolation and helpless. It would be overwhelming, were it not for the thought that, in all that relates to God, "strength is made perfect in weakness;"—that faith places the omnipotence of heaven in the hand of the believer;—that the Spirit of the living God dwells in the heart of the man who is Christ's loving and obedient disciple; and that the fellowship of true Christians, their sympathies, their oneness, their worship, their communion at the table of the Lord, is altogether independent of any authority beyond that which issues from Christ himself, or is reflected in His image, as seen in men eminent for their humility, disinterestedness, and love, and, therefore, for their faith, piety, and practical wisdom.

True indeed is it, that still, as in past ages, "the Spirit and the Bride say, Come." But the voice of "the Bride" is not the voice of the priest, or the voice of a party, or the voice of the schoolmen, or the voice of the fathers,—Greek or Latin, or the voice of England or Scotland,—evangelical or Arminian, high or low, broad or exclusive, but that great silent testimony which issues through all time, from apostles and prophets, from martyrs and confessors, from poor and rich, from the ignorant and the learned, from the living and the dead, witnessing evermore to the truth of Christ's Holy Gospel,—to its influence over mankind,—to its triumphs over the world,—to its sole and exclusive power to enlighten, to solace, to sustain, and to save.—Spirit of Truth.

What ground have we for believing that we are ready to make the greatest sacrifices, when we daily fail in offering the least?

"HE COMES."

The following lines were handed to us by Mr. Frederick E. Partington, a student at Brown University. They were given to him at a book-stall in the little sooty town of Llanelly, Wales, four years since. The writer, a strange looking, shy, retiring girl of eighteen or nineteen years, was pointed out to him by the book seller, as "a dreamer;" and the village folks called her crazy. The verses were written in 1868, when she could not have been more than sixteen years of age. Considering the place, the time, and the author, we think the lines remarkable. We believe they have never before been published in this country.—Golden Rule.

They cry: "He comes!

The signs are sure—all lands are armed for war---
The mystic number is fulfilled---He comes!"

We answer: O, that He would come! We want
The Christ! We want a God to burn the truth
Afresh upon the forehead of the world!
We want a Man to walk once more among
The wrangling Pharisees, to drive the beasts
And moneymongers from the temple courts;
To bring the Gospel back again, and prove
How all unlike the Churches are to Christ!
We want that Christ again to tell the "saints"
Their sins; that they were sent to bless the poor,
And they have sold themselves unto the rich;
That they were sent to preach the words of peace,
And they have filled the world with war of words;
That they were sent the messengers of love,
And they have driven love out of their creeds;
That they were sent to teach men not to lie,
Nor tremble when their duty led to death---
O, for the Christ again! He---He would dare
To tell the Churches how they lie and cant,
And talk of serving God---and serve themselves;
And talk of saving souls---to save their "cause";
And pare and narrow God's Divinest truth
Until a man can hardly be a man
And member of a Church.

Already Christ is coming. Hear ye not
The footfalls of the Lord? He tramples down
The cruel hedges men have built about
The gate that leads to heaven. He rends the creeds,
And gives their tatters to the merry winds.
He does not come as bigots prophecy,
To choose a handful and to damn the rest,
To found a Jewish-Gentile kingdom here
And roll the world into the past again.
He comes the Spirit of a riper Age,
When all that is not good or true shall die---
When all that's bad in custom, false in creed,
And all that makes the boor and mars the man, Shall pass away for ever. Yes, He comes
To give the world a passion for the truth,
To inspire us with a holy human love,
To make us sure that, ere a man can be
A saint, he first must be a man.

TWISTING SCRIPTURE.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

No one ever attempts to "wrest" the Scriptures unless it be to answer some selfish end; and then it does not necessarily follow that it is done intentionally. We get it settled in our minds that our position is unmistakably correct, that we have the truth, and it is human nature that we should endeavor to make all Scripture read in harmony with what we believe.

Whoever settles down in the belief of error, will always be troubled with texts of Scripture that are directly opposed to his position. The managing editor of a certain Advent paper, lately met with a difficulty of this character; and he made a very lame effort in attempting to extricate himself. He believes that only one class—the righteous—will have a resurrection. One of his correspondents lately put Acts xxiv. 14, 15, in his way. The substance of his defence was, that Paul's hope did not embrace a resurrection of the unjust. That is no new idea. It dates back years beyond the time when this assistant editor embraced the idea of no resurrection for any save the righteous. Is this statement in harmony with Scripture? No matter who has made the same assertion in the past, and no matter who makes it now, if it be untrue, it amounts to nothing else but twisting Scripture. It may be done honestly; but honesty in wrong doing does not change the character of the act.

I wish to give this text a careful examination. I shall first consider the text as it reads in the received version. "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets: and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust."

The text affirms that the same hope that Paul had is allowed by the Jews, and that that hope is a resurrection of both the just and the unjust. Whatever is affirmed of the one class is also affirmed of the other class, the unjust; therefore, if Paul's hope contemplates a resurrection of the just, it most certainly takes hold also on the unjust. Every unbiased man in the universe competent to judge, would, I think, decide that this is the grammatical sense of the text. Indeed, there is no possible way of making anything else out of it, unless we in some way change the wording of Paul's statement. To do so is to wrest the Scriptures.

I shall not, however, depend wholly upon King James's translation. A word for word literal translation of the Greek reads,—“A hope having in the God, which even they themselves are looking for, a resurrection of the just ones and also of unjust.” The text is a simple, plain, and positive statement that Paul hoped for precisely the same things for which the Jews were looking, viz., the raising to life of both just and unjust ones. Nothing could be more plain, and no one would ever attempt to twist any other meaning out of the text unless he held a theory that could not outlive the acknowledgement of the plain, literal reading of the text. Every individual who believes that text as it reads, must abandon the idea that only one class will be raised from the dead; and every one who persists in holding fast to that position, will be compelled to give it a hard twist. There is no alternative. I prefer to let God's word stand unperverted, lead where it may.

It is urged as an objection, that Paul could not reasonably desire a revival into life of those who are out of Christ; and as desire is one of the two principles that constitute hope, therefore Paul's hope did not embrace the resurrection of the unjust. That depends entirely upon the question as to the purpose for which they are to be raised. If their resurrection was penal only,—that is, if they were raised to unavoidable suffering, a state of suffering that is beyond the reach of mercy, one that must end in eternal death,—Paul could not reasonably desire such a resurrection for any. No such object, however, is contemplated in raising this class from the dead. The Jews believed in, looked for, the resurrection of the whole house of Israel. Paul's hope was the hope of Israel (See Acts xxviii. 20); he hoped for that same thing that they were looking for. That the Jews looked for a resurrection of all Israelites who had not wilfully apostatized, is known to all who are acquainted with the facts in the case. They are raised for the purposes of mercy, and not, as some suppose, that God may visit his wrath upon them. For such a resurrection of unjust Israelites, a resurrection to an opportunity to secure an endless life, the apostle, in common with all his Israelitish brethren, entertained hope; and that hope he will most surely realize.

Another objection is as follows: Paul declares that concerning this matter he believes all things written in the law, and in the prophets; and the prophets, say they, do not teach the resurrection of unjust ones.

That the resurrection of Israel is taught by the prophets, is as sure as that Christ taught his second coming. These prophecies are very numerous, but I will make but few selections. The thirty-seventh of Ezekiel contains the record of a vision seen by that prophet. The different features of that prophecy are the following: 1. The prophet sees a valley full of dry bones. 2. There was a noise, and a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone, sinews and flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them. 3. The breath came into them, and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army. This is the vision, and who shall tell the interpretation thereof? Shall we submit it to anti-age to come editors? Surely not if we have a more reliable interpreter. We are not left to depend upon any poor, fallible, imperfect mortal to tell us what the vision means. One who is infinite in all his attributes has told us its meaning. Yes, the God of heaven has given the interpretation; and shall we dare lay unholy hands on it, and alter Jehovah's explanation of this vision? Woe to the man that shall attempt to change the word of the Holy One of Israel. This editor professes to adopt the following rule, viz., “When God, or Christ, or angels explain a vision, dream, or parable, figure, or symbol, their explanation must be taken in its most literal sense, just as it reads.” This rule is as old as American Adventists, and universally adopted by them. I shall adhere most firmly to this principle, at all times, though others may depart from it to suit their theological convenience. I shall decide the meaning of this vision according to this rule. The vision is explained item by item, just in the order the prophet saw it. 1. “Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel.” 2. “I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.” 3. “And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land.” This is just as plain as a certain explanation found in Dan. vii. 23, which Adventists often quote as their rule of interpretation. It reads, “The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth.” This, they say, must be taken just as it reads, because it is the angel's explanation. Ezek. xxxvii. 11–14, is God's explanation; why not take that just as it reads? That would spoil their anti-age to come speculations; and therefore they twist the words the Lord hath spoken. So sure as Ezek. xxxvii. 11-14, is an inspired statement, the prophet of God teaches a raising from the dead of the whole house of Israel; and that is just what Paul hoped for, and what the Jews were looking for.

I am told that Israel, in this prophecy, means Christians. Who says so? Not the God of heaven. He says Israel; and Israel at that time "meant" the descendants of Jacob, and them only; and that is what it "means" always with those who are not disposed to twist it. All who wish for more evidence on this point, will please read the remainder of this chapter. It is positively declared that Judah and Israel shall be gathered from every place whither he has scattered them; shall be brought into their own land; and God shall multiply them, and set his sanctuary in the midst of them FOR EVER MORE. At that time, "David shall be king over them;" "and they shall dwell in the land wherein their fathers have dwelt, even they and their children, and their children's children for ever, and my servant David shall be their prince for ever." Nothing save a love for man-made theories, will ever influence any individual to attempt, by any course of theological twisting, to either nullify, or fritter away, these declarations of the prophet of God.

There is one other prophecy to which I wish to refer. It is Ezek. xxxvi. In that chapter God declares that he will gather the house of Israel, yea, all of it; (the very Israel that had been scattered among the heathen), that he will take them from among the heathen, and gather them out of all countries, and bring them into their own land. After they are thus gathered God declares that then they shall remember their own evil ways, and their doings that were not good, and shall loathe themselves in their own sight for their iniquities and for their abominations. It is also distinctly stated that after they are gathered to their own land, God will sprinkle clean water upon them, and they shall be clean; from all their filthiness, and from all their idols he will cleanse them. He also declares that he will give that people, (all the house of Israel), a new heart, and put a new spirit within them, that he will put His Spirit within them, and cause them to walk in his statutes, and keep his judgments and do them. Near the close of the chapter we read, "I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it." The language is all very emphatic. It is, I shall, and I will in every instance. O, say these anti-age to come Adventists, "that prophecy is conditional." It is strange that God forgot to put the conditions in! is it not? But, say they, "He did put them in the thirty-seventh verse." Let us see. That verse is reads: "Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock." There is not an intimation in this verse of any conditions. It is simply a positive declaration of the Lord God, that he will be enquired of by the house of Israel; and that he will increase them with men like a flock. It is a part of the prophecy of what shall be, and not an added condition to the prophecy. It looks to me that the man who cannot see this, is blinded by false notions. I have already shown that God has declared that after their restoration, they shall repent of all their iniquities. Please read verses 22 and 23. "Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went." "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you."

Here is a declaration twice made, that God does not restore them for their sakes; therefore, there are no conditions to be complied with on their part. The conditions, if any, all lie beyond their restoration to the land of Israel. I have given abundant proof from this chapter that their repentance, and purification, is after their restoration. I have also shown by the plain word of Jehovah that an exceeding great army of Israelites is coming out of their graves before the gathering to their own land, and after they are gathered David, Christ, is to be king over them for ever.

This talk about "conditional prophecy" is among the most God-dishonoring systems of twisting Scripture that has ever been invented; and it is far from being a safe business. Peter writes concerning a class of people who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. See 2 Pet. iii. 16. The literal reading from the Greek is distort, instead of wrest; and if it is not distorting the Scriptures to claim that seven-eighths of the prophecies are conditional, and will never be fulfilled, I fail to understand the signification of that word.

With all the twisting and distortion that can be invented, no man, be he who or what he may, will ever be able to nullify those declarations, made by Jehovah through his holy prophet. These prophecies "came not by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" and, thank God, the will of even Advent men cannot do them away.

I know they are a plague to all anti-age to come people, and, seemingly, it would afford them great relief if they could be lawfully expunged from the book. There they stand, however, and all that any one can do is to vent his ill feelings toward them, and try twist them out of their legitimate meaning.

In conclusion permit me to say, I have proved by the prophecies that the house of Israel will, as Paul believed and hoped, be raised to life from the dead. Not necessarily every individual of that house, but that nation, the great mass of that peoples will be raised that they may be blest with an endless life.

It would bring a blessing to professedly believing Gentiles if they would leave the wisdom of "their own conceits" (Rom. xi. 25), and believe these scriptural conclusions, and no longer attempt to explain away the plain declarations of the Word of God, merely because they are in the way of their sectarian views, and of the propagation of sentiments which are designed to build up their sectarian interests. "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

DANIEL, THE APOCALYPSE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. No. 2.

BY G. R. LEDERER.

CHAPTERS I. AND II.

"The Lord in His mercy ever prepares the healing balm before He inflicts the wound," is the saying of Israel's ancient Rabbins. A Jewish maiden had to become the queen of the, then, mightiest king of Persia and Media; her uncle must overhear the plot of two courtiers to assassinate the king, and thus saved the life of the monarch, in order to frustrate the wicked plans of Haman to destroy the people of God's choice. Thus it was in the case of Daniel and his companions; they were brought down to Babylon long before the total destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple and the carrying of the greater part of the nation into captivity. They became instrumental in the hands of Jehovah in alleviating the pain and sufferings of the captivity.

The book begins with a date which seems to be at variance with the record in 2 Chron. xxxvi.

5. Here it is said, "In the third year of the reign of Jehoyakim king of Judah," while in Chronicles we are informed that Jehoyakim reigned eleven years. Saadya Gaon, who lived in the 9th century of our era and was called the prince of the captivity, explains and reconciles the two records as follows: "In the fourth year fo Jehoyakim Nebuchadnezzar ascended the throne of Babylon, (See Jeremiah xxv. 1,) went to war against Nineveh and conquered it. In the fifth year of Jehoyakim, he, Nebuchadnezzar, came against Jerusalem and made its king tributary. Jehoyakim thus remained a vassal to the king of Babylon for three years (see 2 Kings xxiv. 1), and then rebelled against his master, and made himself independent. Nebuchadnezzar may have been engaged in some other wars, and therefore Jehoyakim enjoyed his independence for three years. Then, however, Nebuchadnezzar came up to Jerusalem to punish the faithless vassal. This is the date with which the book of Daniel begins; namely, in the third year of the independent reign of Jehoyakim."

The first verse of the second chapter needs another chronological explanation. It begins with the statement that, "In the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar," while we have seen that that monarch ascended the throne of Babylon in the fourth year of Jehoyakim, and reigned during the remaining seven years of that king of Judah when he took the noble sons of Judah, and Daniel among them, down to Babylon, and gave them an education for three years. The celebrated Aben Ezra comes to the rescue and explains that the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar here stated means the second year after the destruction of Jerusalem and the total abolition of the common wealth of Judah; for then first made Nebuchadnezzar the universal king, as then first God's kingdom passed into the hands of the Gentiles.

Verse 13.—There is some doubt whether all the wise men in the wide realm, or only those of the city of Babylon proper fell under the sentence to be slain. The latter view, however, is the most probable. The decree went forth, the executions began; this does not necessarily imply that all had already been slaughtered before the interference of Daniel. On the contrary, it is most probable that the executioner commenced his bloody work at the school of those wise men, killed the professors and then made search for the advanced pupils, among whom Daniel and his friends were reckoned.

Verses 30, 31.—Daniel told the king even more than he had demanded his wise men to tell him. The king wished to know the dream and the interpretation thereof; but Daniel reminded him of what his thoughts were before he fell asleep on that night, and that in consequence of those thoughts the dream came, to let him know what the end of his mighty kingdom and those that should follow would be.

Had the king not forgotten the dream the Chaldeans would have easily found an interpretation to suit him; but God caused him to forget what he dreamed, for he must be made to know that his dream was rather a vision from the God of the Jews, to let him know the destiny of his own and the other kingdoms under the rule of the Gentiles until the government should be given again to Israel, to Him "whose right it is to reign." None, therefore could tell the king what his dream was until Daniel, the captive Jew, came to tell him that the dream was a revelation from the God of heaven; and that, in telling him the dream and its interpretation was not by his own wisdom, but that it was revealed to him by the same God who sent the vision.

The image which the king saw in his dream was terrible to behold; first, on account of its dimension, and secondly, on account of its strange composition. The glittering of the different polished metals and the very strange fact, that, contrary to all principles of art, the foundation of the colossal image was the weakest part, liable to be broken to pieces by anything that may happen to be thrown on it. The construction of the image showed also the development of the kingdom under Gentile supremacy. It was neither growing in character or durability, but was rather deteriorating in both. The head was of fine gold, and so was the kingdom represented by it, high in character, the king an autocrat in the fullest sense, not bound by any law or council, and, at the same time, of a noble mind notwithstanding his pride and self-glorification. The breast and arms of silver represented the second universal empire,—the two arms representing the two powers of Media and Persia, unitedly represented by the breast. Silver also is a noble metal, but a great deal less in value and durability than gold, and so was the second empire; its rulers were bound by certain laws,—the laws of Media and Persia could not be broken even by the king,—neither was the character of its kings so firm as that of Nebuchadnezzar. This is sufficiently proven by Darius the Mede who foolishly acceded to a plot of his magnates against his faithful prime minister Daniel, and by the still more foolish actions of Ahasuerus in the case of Haman.

The third empire, represented by brass, was exactly like that metal in every respect. As brass, finely polished, deceives the beholder at a distance who would believe it to be gold, so were (and still are to this day) the Greeks. Having always the appearance of honesty and nobility, with an ever smiling face, they are, nevertheless false and cruel to the utmost. And as brass is more liable than gold and silver to be destroyed by rust, so the third empire could not stand as a whole after the death of the founder, but was divided into four parts, and these divisions kept up a war among themselves and destroyed each other.

The rest of the image, the thighs, the legs, the feet and toes, representing the fourth, the Roman empire, consisted first of solid iron, and then of iron mixed with clay. The thigh representing that empire as a strong unit, further down, the legs, showed it as divided into two; the Orient, with Constantinople as the capital, and Occident with Rome as the head. But a still further division was to take place; the ten toes, represented ten kingdoms, in which, at last, the universal monarchy shall be split before Gentile supremacy shall come to an end.

The Roman empire was strong as iron, breaking and grinding every other power to pieces; but as iron is exposed to corrupting elements even more than brass, so that empire bore the elements of its corruption within itself. Haughtiness, extravagance in every kind of luxury, cruelty, and, most of all, religious corruption, contributed to its divisions, until the iron became mixed with clay. The glory of the monarchs sank gradually until they had to give up the greater part of their power to the populace. So as the image stood on a very feeble foundation, consisting of materials which cannot be firmly united, the kingdom under Gentile rule will at last be in such a feeble condition that the little stone, rolling down upon it, will break the whole image to pieces and grind it to powder.

This fourth, or Roman empire, has never ceased to exist in some form or name. When the emperor Francis of Austria resigned the title of Roman emperor, Napoleon the First established a Roman kingdom; and, besides, the popes have ruled with royal power over Rome, and claimed also supremacy over all the European territory which formed the Roman empire. The divisions represented by the ten toes are not yet distinctly developed, and it is a vain effort of some writers on the subject of prophecy to make out names of ten kingdoms representing the ten toes of the image. Moreover, I observed that all these writers try to locate the ten kingdoms in Europe, while, in fact, five of them must be sought in other parts of the globe, since the two legs represented the grand divisions of the empire in the Orient and Occident, and the ten toes not being on one leg, they must be located in the way they were shown on the image. These ten kingdoms will take a distinct and unmistakable form before the stone will appear that shall smite them and make an end to Gentile rule and supremacy. Yes, the distinction of these divisions will be so clear that no one with open eyes will fail to see the exact fulfilment of the vision shown to Nebuchadnezzar,—and later to Daniel in another form,—and look with renewed hope of the speedy coming of the universal King and the establishment of the fifth, or stone kingdom, that shall comprise all the kingdoms “under the whole heaven.”

This view, I know, will not please such people who never cease to make calculations to solve the mystery, or to unveil the secret which God keeps in his own power. They say that this view of the vision of Nebuchadnezzar would put off the coming of Christ for a long indefinite time, and thus put a damper upon the desire and hope of the children of God. But they should understand that God's plans and decrees are independent of our wishes and speculations. This is what Daniel's instructor said: “Vehamaskilim Yabina;” “The wise shall understand,” when the children of faith shall see the unmistakable signs, such as the precise division of the Roman territory as it was when Rome was in the height of its power, into ten distinct kingdoms without admitting any guesswork concerning their names and extent; the gathering of the bulk of the Jewish people to the land of their fathers, and other similar signs, then they will understand that the most glorious event is nigh.

The very important question now arises, why God revealed these outlines of the world's history to a heathen king? Why was the revelation not given directly to the prophet Daniel as had been the case with all other revelations of God? The answer may be found in comparing the case of Nebuchadnezzar with that of Pharaoh, the king of Egypt. In that case, as well as that which is under consideration, it was the purpose of God to raise captives of Jacob's tribe to such a high position, that they might be able to protect their brethren and serve to their good, or to be instrumental in the fulfilment of certain plans and purposes of God. Joseph was inspired to interpret the dream of Pharaoh which caused his exaltation to a rank next to the king. He became instrumental to save not only Egypt but other surrounding countries, his father and family from starvation; and, at the same time, he caused his father and family to move down into Egypt, thus fulfilling the purpose of God as revealed to Abraham, that his children were to be slaves in a strange land, but then be delivered by the strong arm of God, thus preparing them for the receiving of the law, and become the representatives of the people of God, destined to rule with the Messiah.

There is no doubt whatever that the mild treatment the exiled Jews enjoyed during their sojourn in Babylon, under the Caldeans, as well as under the Medo-Persians,—for we read nowhere of any particular complaint of persecution,—was owing to the influence of Daniel and his friends. Daniel maintained the highest position all his life time, with but a few interruptions, in both empires. He may also have been instrumental in preparing the Medo-Persian rulers for the final decree of release from captivity and the permission for the re-building of Jerusalem and the sanctuary.

Again, if Daniel had come before the king and had told him of the speedy end of his mighty kingdom and of the other kingdoms which should follow, Nebuchadnezzar would not have paid the least attention to it, and would, probably, have put to death the daring Jewish captive.

To the king himself, therefore, the vision was shown; he himself must see that there is a higher Lord in whose hands are the destinies of the mighty of the earth, and thus compelling him to acknowledge the supremacy of the God of heaven, the God of Daniel and his people, the captive Jews.

The following remarks are from Aben Ezra. “On the fourth universal kingdom under Gentile rule, all agree that it is the Roman, which was afterwards divided; one half of which coming under the power of the Saracens. Both parts were sometimes strong, sometimes weak, represented by the iron and the clay of the image, which never cleave together. So the two divisions of the Roman territory, following two different creeds preventing their re-union. But the stone, separated from the mountain without hands, means the King Messiah, the seed of Abraham, who is called the GREAT MOUNTAIN, as it is written: ‘And from the top of the ancient mountain.’ (Deut. 33: 15.) And the King Messiah is called a stone, as it is written: ‘From thence the shepherd, the stone of Israel.’ (Gen. xlix. 24.)

BEAUTY is no longer amiable than while virtue adorns it, and virtue itself is true beauty.

THOSE that reject divine revelation, have not so much as human understanding.

SHALL WE "GROW IN KNOWLEDGE?"

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

THE idea of probation for the dead who have passed from life in unavoidable ignorance of the "Way, the Truth, and the Life," seems to greatly disturb some good souls. They are afraid to discuss it, or have it discussed, lest it neutralize our usefulness in pointing out to sinners the way of life. Now it seems to me these apprehensions are wholly groundless. In fact they entirely ignore the very essential feature of the so-called "fair chance" theory, that its whole influence is to point out to "living sinners the way of life," by convincing them that God is love, and loves them, because He loves all men; that Christ died for them, because he gave "himself a ransom for all men;" that they are not saved because they were so fortunate as to live in an age of light where they have the opportunity of accepting Him as their Mediator, but that He shall be "testified" to all men "in due time," and they too have an opportunity of accepting him to their salvation; and thus is the LOVE and IMPARTIALITY of God made manifest.

I regret to see among professedly progressive Christians a spirit of antagonism to the investigation of such a glorious God-honoring doctrine. If we should cultivate this spirit to any extent we should soon become as completely entrenched in vain philosophy and traditions as ever was "Mystery Babylon," or any of her daughters. Shall we take such a position, and put a stake down and protest against any advance beyond it, and by our position say, we have learned all the truth,—we are doctrinally infallible? No! no! brethren. Let us rather occupy apostolic ground, and "grow in knowledge," and thus advance in the grace, or favor, of God. Moses commanded the children of Israel to "go forward," and the apostolic command is for us to advance.

We cannot "grow in knowledge without occupying the same position of the Bereans of old, who "were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." They were noble examples for all professed Christians to follow. They were growing Christians, and were not afraid to investigate those new and strange things which were brought to their ears, and for this cause they are called "more noble" than the Thessalonians. I doubt if the Bereans halted to determine the precise importance to them of every truth presented for their acceptance. They search the Scriptures to ascertain if what they heard was well founded.

And this is the duty of all Christians. Any truth which comes from God is important; and it is not in the province of man to determine the importance of one truth above another, or to lay any divinely revealed truth aside as non-essential. Let us beware of such a course, lest we combine in our building "hay, wood, and stubble,"—perishable materials which will not stand the day of trial. God's truths are all important, and are precious materials which the wise master builder gives a proper position, that every part of the divine structure may be fitly joined together, to the honor and praise of God,

"HE SHALL SEE OF THE TRAVAIL OF OF HIS SOUL AND BE SATISFIED."

BY G. B. STACY.

THE apostle designates the sacrifice of the Christ as the "unspeakable gift." Hence, he says again, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all; how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" From these testimonies I gather that all that was essential to work or accomplish the salvation of our race was wrought by our blessed Lord, and therefore the apostle says, that "He through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot unto God." Again he says, that "by that one offering He perfected forever them that are sanctified." His submissive language near the cross, "If it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done," indicates that he was disposed to perform and suffer every essential, but desired that to be the limit of the measure meted out to Him; and therefore, when the prophet says, "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," we may look for the legitimate outcome of all that He did and suffered to be developed and manifested.

If, then, our Father considerably laid no more on Him than was essential to fit Him to be our help and support, while we enter into and partake of "the fellowship of his sufferings," for the fact that "He was tempted in all points like as we are," indeed the apostle affirms that it "behoved Him to be made like unto His brethren" in all that pertains to their temptations, shows that the oneness and identity of relation of himself, his Father and his brethren permeates and includes between himself and his brethren their capacity for temptation and their actual temptation, their capacity for suffering and their actual suffering. We think these are fairly drawn conclusions from which we are led to the more advanced one, that what ever was formulated in the temptations our blessed Lord endured in their rigid, intense and concrete form, in the wilderness, becomes the portion of our fellowship therein, though through the tender consideration of our Father, they are presented to us in dilute retail or abstract through the entire period of our probation for the kingdom and glory of our Father, with the assurance that He will at no time "lay more on us than we are able to bear, and with every temptation He will make a way for our escape." We must then during our probation, like our Lord, overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil.

We must then pass through the test of waiting patiently upon our Father for our daily bread, constantly resisting the temptation as presented concretely to our Lord, "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." Ah, it is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every appointment of our Father." Which of us, brothers, have not been tempted to pursue illegitimate means to obtain bread for ourselves and households? and how we have faltered under the trial our Father and Redeemer only knows.

Again, the vanity of our own importance, and the foolish notion that our Father would permit us to test His care, solicitude and patience unnecessarily, has stealthily wormed itself into our habits and called forth the extreme solicitude of our Mediator and Saviour; but He remembereth our weakness, "for he was in all points tempted as we are." Hence He has preserved us from the pride of presumptive sins. We remember that it is written, "thou shalt not put the Lord thy God for proof." But now we come to the final test of our fealty and love. "The vine of the earth," or the spirit of human rebellion, has at last assumed tangible form, shape and substance, and presented itself for the worship of the sons of God in the grand Centennial, or very high mountain to which it would allure them, and then spreading the glory of all the kingdoms and nations of the earth, whispers blandly into the ear to the heart, I have leveled every obstacle, removed every hindrance, and laid the way open to you, each of you, any of you, to possess yourselves of all this, or any of this glory you may choose, only fall down and worship me, I will surely give it to you. See, "This is great Babylon which I have built by the might of my power and for the glory of my majesty." Brethren, it is written, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." This is undoubtedly the culminating test of our fidelity; let us remember our elder brother has trod the path before us; He has passed through the ordeal and overcome; and to Him that overcometh. He says, "I will give to sit with me on my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father on his throne." Courage, brethren. He is our strength and support and hath assured us that as our day is so shall our strength be. "He is able to keep that which we have committed to Him:" and of all that the Father hath given him, he will lose nothing. But still we must all pass through the fiery ordeal of meeting the tempter in every phase that he confronted our Lord and Saviour; in this consist our fellowship in His sufferings, and the passing of which ordeal qualifies to conjointly reign with Him.

One more thought and I have done for the present, namely, The assumption of form, shape, and substance of these international organization premonishes us, that the personal head and representative of human wisdom, philosophy, and rebellion, is nigh at hand to appear and claim the allegiance of the world at large.

The popular characteristics of his subjects are every where manifest, namely, "Unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, dis-piteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful."

Brethren, "be sober and watch unto prayer," resting assured that our blessed Lord shall "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied."

THEN DO WE PATIENTLY WAIT FOR IT.

While love is a principle, patience is a virtue. God's dealings with us are prompted by love. He so loved the world that he gave his Son to die for it while they were not yet sinners. He loves sinners to-day. He has not changed. His years fail not. This principle of love was manifested in his Son. Traditional men are hardly willing to admit that his love does, and will, extend to certain classes, either in this age or in the age to come. The "tradition of the elders" was the great source of trouble with the Jews. He eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners. Let us not forget that Jesus came to seek and save those who were lost. This glad tidings of great joy shall be made known to all people.

Could men but know that God is doing a great work in the earth: that so little is to be done by man—so much by the the Master: and that the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, is to be testified in due time to every living soul of the ages past and the ages to come, there would be more gratitude, more love, and more patience. Instead of looking upon mankind as doomed to endless punishment, and saying in our hearts, "stand thou there," we should indeed have "hope for our race," and with patience wait for it.

Let us not take the work out of the hands of the Almighty, but commit the same as into the hands of a faithful Creator. Are we willing to do this? Or shall we compass land and sea to make a proselyte when that proselyte shall be two-fold more a child of hell than before? If men are dying without God and without hope in the world, from a want of a knowledge of the Saviour, cannot we commit them safely to Him who has said He wills not the death of any but that all should come to a knowledge of the truth? I think here is much cause for calm deliberation, confident trust and patient waiting for the coming of the Lord. In patience possess ye your souls.

Our present surroundings and associations require patience. I think it was Lord Bacon who said that "men oppose what they do not understand." If the fact that Jesus is to be testified to every creature, meets with opposition, let us patiently work on while it is day; the wise shall understand; light is spreading and many are running to and fro. Therefore, as we have the hopeful side of the question, we can the better afford to be patient, forgiving, and ready to bear one another's burdens.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

POVERTY'S MOAN, AND BLESSING.

The following is an extract from a letter received from the Sister who was the occasion of the article under the above heading in the October EXAMINER. She writes:

BRO. STORRS: According to the faith and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness in hope of eternal life.

This day calls forth the acknowledgement of two letters from you, dated Sept. 23, and Oct. 19, which came laden with Christian love and sympathy; which caused this, your sister, to give glory and praise aloud to Him who is mindful of our wants; and for the gift of dear friends whose hearts are drawn out with love toward us in the day of adversity.

My brother, the tears that have fallen from eyes in sympathy for me, have a lodgement in the bosom of our Father, and will be placed in thy crown to sparkle in the ages to come. O, what a blessing!

Give my many thanks to Bro. G. for his kind and benevolent act in paying for my EXAMINER.

May he be blessed in basket and store;

And in the ages to come, life evermore.

The brother in Illinois [A brother, himself in affliction, in Ill., sent her a dollar through me.—ED.] who is so good and feels our woes, has our heartfelt gratitude for his kindness to us, and has my sympathy and prayers for him and his, resting on the promise, with him, "All things shall work together for good to them that love God;" for "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," feeling the assurance that the blessing of God will rest upon him. Glad to know he subscribes for your most valuable Magazine; yes, valuable for the truth it promulgates.

I would like to give a brief history of my temporal and spiritual life. I was born in Mansfield, Conn., May, 1817. At the age of 18, I experienced the love of Jesus. At the age of 20, I united with the Methodists. In 1850 I read your "SIX SERMONS," and became a believer in their truths; and by a constant search, I soon became a firm believer in "the ages to come," and advocated the same; and from that day to this, never for a moment have I doubted its truthfulness; and to-day, through faith, I feel saved; not of myself, but it is the gift of God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, "that in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus."

"In 1865 we came to Western New York. My husband's health being poor, and most of his life confined to manufacturing, thought the open air might be beneficial to his lungs. On the 8th of February, 1867, at midnight, we awoke, the house being on fire in a full blaze, seemingly, we only had time to escape out of a window, without clothes to dress us. A lady, school teacher, was boarding with us; she escaped with us out of the same window. All of our earthly effects were burned up except about 60 dollars.

I need not repeat it to you, that to-day we are poor; but rich in faith to that home which is beyond the reach of burning flames or swelling flood.

May our heavenly Father keep us in the way of truth and righteousness unto the coming of our Lord, is the prayer of your Sister and friend.

JULIA —.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BRO. STORRS: You have made me glad again by sending the EXAMINER Vol. xxi., No. 1. I say "again," and if I should say again and again, it would come far short of beginning to be a tithe of the times you have made me glad; and by your means very many others make me glad, and so I reckon them as the mercies of God, and His mercies to me can never be numbered. O, how full of instruction is that number of the EXAMINER! We often think what greater light or what more can be said on God's great and merciful plan to save the race, and give every creature an opportunity to know Him and his Christ. The answer comes with force, "The light on that great plan of love and mercy can never be exhausted while our God and Saviour exists."

While reading the article "A Dark Question," by Eld. S. W. Bishop, I was so glad that God in mercy had given me light on what to Livingstone was a deep dark question, as to what is to become of such, as the noble chieftain, who die without the knowledge of God or Christ. Now the foundation for my gladness and light was God's word. "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that the Son may also glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." O, I am so glad that God has given our blessed Lord power over all flesh; and power to give eternal life to as many as He gave him, and he hath said, "This is eternal life to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Yes, my gladness increases when I see how he is going to give this knowledge to every creature, and has made it so plain to my understanding. Jesus says, "I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou hast given me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word. I pray for them: I pray not for the world; but for them that thou hast given me; for they are thine; all mine are thine," etc. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them, also, which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me."

Had Livingstone known this glorious truth, he might have rejoiced that God's great plan through Jesus, the sent, would yet reach that noble prince, and he (the prince) would know that God loved him, as He loved Jesus. O, bless the Lord for such a hope, and for the living faith. I used to think, why not pray for the world? I now see, by the living word, that God had not brought the evidence before the world, as a mass, of the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ, whom He sent; and we are not required to believe without evidence; but God, according to his oath and promise to Abraham, will give the evidence by making the apostles and all that believe on Christ through their (the apostles') word, one, as God and Christ are one: i. e., Christ in them, and God in Christ, and they made "perfect" in one. Then we see that evidence can never be given till after the resurrection of the elect of God; and that proves the resurrection of every creature that sleeps in the dust of the earth, that have not committed the sin unto death; and that proves probation after the resurrection; for the world great and small to get the evidence of the true God and Jesus Christ whom God sent, and the love of God to the world as he loved Jesus, proves not only an age, but ages to come. For how can the world be ready for judgment till they have that knowledge? and the evidence must come first; or how shall God judge the world? What shall we say when we contemplate this great and glorious plan of God to save the world! We can say, "Great and marvelous are thy works Lord God Almighty, who shall not fear thee?"

O, what an eternal evidence of the love of God to the world, will the perfected, glorious, immortal body of Christ be! How true that in the ages to come He will shew the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus. May we all be enabled to say, "Unto Him be glory in the church, by Jesus Christ, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

Your sister, waiting.

F. BRUNS, M. D., East Boston, writes: I shall try, if possible, to send pay for five of the poor, who wish to read the BIBLE EXAMINER. O, please let every one have the Gospel truth who wants it. Those among us who have means ought to do more to promulgate the good tidings. I sometimes wish you could be in my place and see and hear that most of our thinking men and women have embraced the truth. Bro. ———, who told me, three years ago, that he would rather I would be one of the biggest blackguards than to have your views, as he called them. He does not speak thus now; but is investigating the subject. I do what I can to spread the glorious Gospel; and if some professed Christians cannot bear it, I cannot refrain.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—Hard and unchristian language has been used by some preachers against the views held by myself and others, which has begotten a like spirit in those they act upon. But we can afford to bear it, because we are certain they “speak evil of the things which they understand not.” They have only looked at the subject to see if they could not find something to sustain their prejudices; and they do not like to have their stereotyped theories disturbed; their minds are “blinded;” but I trust the vail will yet be taken away that they may be partakers of the love and joy others experience who have come to the knowledge of the truth promulgated in this Magazine concerning the Divine Character and Government. In that hope our labors will be continued, the Lord helping.

MY EXPERIENCE.

[The experience of a young man born and brought up in British America.—EDITOR.]

I am the third son of orthodox parents. When about six years old I was sent to school, and a bound copy of the Bible placed in my hands, which volume I cared little for at that time and onwards till about eighteen months past, when God, in His great mercy and love towards mankind, saw fit to open my eyes and bring me to the knowledge of the truth. But of this I shall speak hereafter.

I shall return to my younger days and inform the reader of the different ways which my Creator and God used as a means to bring about this event. As I have said before, when about six years old I was sent to school; my parents taking particular interest in my education; especially in my knowledge of the Scriptures and in the orthodox belief, of which they were strong adherents. They taught me the best they knew, although blinded by the immortal soul doctrine for, as Moses was fully learned in all the wisdom of Egypt, in like manner I was in the faith of orthodoxy. When my term of education was completed, I was sent as a Clerk, with my brother, into a dry goods store.

My parents being well to do in the good things of this world, and I being a favorite child, named after their parish minister, there was nothing this world could produce too good for me. Thus I became a ruined child, both to myself and to them.

Being of a roving disposition, I concluded to run away and leave my native home. This I did. Some few days after, I secretly shipped on board a vessel bound to Boston; where I was landed August 3d, 1872.

From that time I wandered about from one place to another. Yet God's merciful hand protected me. As the Psalmist of old said, “I was young, and now am old. I have never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.”

In the summer of 1874, I came to the town of P., Mass., and went to work in a Rolling Mill, where I became acquainted with a Mr. H. L., who afterwards became my nearest and dearest friend. During our leisure hours, our conversation was upon the teachings of the Holy Scriptures; he being of the Advent faith, I of the orthodox. He being a non-immortal soulist, shook my immortal soul to its very foundation. Finding my batteries growing weaker each day, he played on with his “battering ram,” whose missiles were the Holy Scriptures, until finally my flag was shot over the wall, and down came my house, and great was the fall thereof.

First of all, he gave me a book called “Bible vs. Tradition;” then a “Vindication of God's Government; or the Promise and oath of God to Abraham; by George Storrs;” also, the BIBLE EXAMINER, the teaching of which clearly shows there is no inherent immortality in man, and that man's only chance for immortality, is through faith in Christ.

By the power of God's Holy Spirit, blessed be His name, and the means He made use of, my change of heart was brought about. For several days, all the evil deeds I ever committed, stood staring me in the face, as if in a Panorama, and forcing me to bend my knees to my blessed CREATOR. I tell you, my friends, there was a fearful struggle. But, blessed be God, He came out victorious, and I had to surrender. On that night I kneeled by my bedside and poured out my heart to God, who lovingly heard me, broken as my prayer was. Bless God, after that I felt happy: those troublesome sights soon vanished, and a calm, loving feeling towards mankind passed over my mind. Through this influence I became a hater of those things I formerly did love, and a lover of those I before did hate. I became a constant reader of the Bible and the BIBLE EXAMINER with its glorious truth bringing to light, in these dark days of evil and tradition, the love of the blessed CREATOR towards the creatures and work of His hands; for as the Psalmist says, "His mercy endureth forever." Those truths taking such firm hold of me, it became an impossibility to keep my tongue silent. I commenced attending meetings in the second advent church, and to advocate those glorious truths which God had revealed to me; but, very soon, I found bitter opposition and hatred in the professed advent ranks. One night I was attacked by three of the leaders of the church, simply for quoting the language of the Saviour, wherein he saith, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Immediately I was told I should be put out of the Church. I asked, "Am I not in the house of God?" To which they answered, "No, this our house, and you shall go out of it, you wicked ungodly sinner: you coming here to teach us?" I replied, "I know I am a sinner, and for such Jesus came; for, said He, 'I came not to call the righteous, but sinners;' but if a sinner is able to teach you, why reject it?" They said, "You are not able to teach us, therefore get out of here?"

Some few days after, a deputation of the brethren called on me, requesting me from henceforth to keep out of their meetings, as they concluded I was a pestilent fellow, a skeptical upstart; worse than an infidel, spoiling their meetings and making divisions in the Church. Why, said I, "Your church cannot be built upon the Rock, for, if so, the Gates of Hell could not prevail against it." Said they, "we want you no more in our Church from henceforth." Which command I complied with, and ceased my mingling with those professed Christian friends, whom I had thought to be sincere believers in Christ; but whom experience proved to be creed believers, instead of faith in Christ.

My dear friends, let us earnestly pray that God may grant us of His mercy and love, to prepare a people for His name, who will be patiently waiting the return of the Nobleman from the far country.

NORMAN McRAE.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—Did not similar complaints come to me of the intolerant spirit of professed advent believers, towards those who receive the view of God's impartial love for the human race, I would forbear to give publicity to such a Pharisaic spirit as that manifested towards this young brother, who has but a few months since turned to serve the Lord. The cry is, "No sinners can ever be converted by the views held by 'the ages to come' believers." No sooner does one manifest that love for all men that God manifested when He "so loved the world" as to give His Son for their redemption, than he is at once thrust "out of the Synagogue" of Adventists, with the spirit of the ancient Pharisees, "Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us?" John ix. 34.

Well, we will strive to bear it patiently; knowing, if we are thrust out of their synagogues, we shall meet Jesus whose love surpasses that of any mortals!

The Brother, whose experience is given above, spent a week at the house of the Editor of this Magazine, the past month, and seems to be one of "a meek and quiet spirit; which, in the sight of God, is of great price." He has gone to a Southern State, hoping to do something there for the cause of God, and vindicate His character from the aspersions cast upon it by mistaken good men, as well as by bad ones. May God, who "is LOVE," direct his way to usefulness among those who have been bewildered by the "traditions of men," which have "made void the words of God."

WM. S. DIBBLE, California, writes: I thank the Lord with all my heart for the interest I have in the truths I have gained in the last four years. Oh how good it is to have the truth, and have it shine into our hearts. But how sad it makes me to see how little my Christian brethren and friends care to know about the great truths we love so well and hold so dear. But let us be patient and faithful and we can still win some. Some of our opponents are very bitter; others are inclined to examine for themselves. I find, as a rule, I can do less among my Advent brethren than among other denominations. So far as my experience goes, I find the Congregationalists the most liberal, and the most willing to examine into the subject of probation, after the coming of Christ, for those who have never heard of the name of Jesus. The more I examine and study the subject, the more beauty I see in it, and the more I love to explain it to others. O, how good it looks and how it honors God and magnifies His goodness to the children of men. I feel sure He will give all men at least one opportunity for salvation; and any doctrine that comes short of this cannot accord with the Bible testimony that "GOD IS LOVE." I am glad to know the truth is spreading in all directions; and that able men are advocating it, both in Europe and America. Bless God for the truth. May it spread more and more until Jesus shall come, and then will be ushered in the glorious time when it shall be carried to every creature, and they shall have an opportunity to know the Lord.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—To your question, which I have not inserted, please look at Acts xvii. 26, and connection.

S. BATTEY, Kansas, writes: I do not see how I could do without the EXAMINER; it is a feast to me each month. Bro. Hatch cannot pay, and I will cheerfully do it for him, as it is a great comfort to him to read its blessed truths. If I had the means, you should not want for the needful to carry on this great work of giving light, till the Saviour comes to set up His kingdom."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The address of the person about whom you inquire is "Galesburg, Neosho Co."

LEVI BOUGHTON, Western New York, writes: Never was I more confirmed in the faith of a glorious future work to be accomplished, in the future ages, for the benefit of the so called heathen nations who have died and shall die before the time for death to cease by the establishment of the Kingdom of God to fill the whole earth. Every eye shall see Him; and "every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him hath eternal life, and will be raised up at the last day." Unbelief is the one sin, after a full presentation of Jesus Christ to the individual, that will prove destructive and end in the second death. I am striving to so run that I may obtain, with all those who gain eternal life, that kingdom that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

I am very much blessed in reading the EXAMINER and hearing from so many of like precious faith, far beyond the narrow selfish views of the so called Christian world that see no further than this present age for God's mercy to be shown to poor frail and erring man. May light shine more and more, and thousands upon thousands be blessed in this age, and also in the ages to come. May we be permitted to reign with Christ, as kings and priests unto God on the earth, in blessing the nations; and to God shall be all the glory forever. Yours, looking for the kingdom.

Please do not forget this.

To accommodate those who cannot obtain a club of 5, I will send two copies to one address for $3.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A. PENNEL, Western New York, writes: When a man gets a publication worth three or four times the subscription price, he ought to pay for it or report to the Editor. I cannot afford to do without the BIBLE EXAMINER in these days of apostacy and declension, when a great part of the religious teaching is only the commandments and doctrines of men. I want to know what God says, and what he is going to do with the creatures he has made and for whom Christ has died. If the boundless love and grace of God extends no further than the elect of this dispensation, then indeed much of the teaching of the Bible must be an enigma which requires more intellect to solve than I possess; and yet, I believe our heavenly Father means to have us understand what he has said. How much trouble I once had with that portion of the Bible that was not in the range of my traditionary teaching. Often have I asked myself, what such and such texts mean? I could see nothing in the past or present to which they could apply. It was too much, too good! I could not believe it all; so I made a kind of semi-infidel of myself. But, thanks be to God, this load—this trouble—has passed away, and where it once was dark, now it is all light: now I believe all that the prophets have spoken; all that Christ and his apostles have spoken. I hope you will be able to continue the EXAMINER; and to assist you in so doing, I send — dollars.

"A FRIEND," in Wisconsin, writes: I like the EXAMINER very much, and would not know how to do without it; it is my only preacher. I often find explanations on some subjects, which I have been studying, which to me are invaluable. I was much interested and instructed by your articles on the "Eastern Question." I am glad Bro. Lederer has promised us more articles.

THE EDITOR'S BIRTHDAY.

DECEMBER, 13, 1876.

THIS day the EDITOR of this Magazine has attained to the age of "four score" years. He asks all his friends to unite with him in giving thanks to "OUR FATHER, which is in heaven," for the great mercy that has attended his long life, from childhood to this hour. He cannot look back to any period of his life but what is marked with the love and patience of God and Jesus Christ toward him. From his heart he desires to give glory to GOD and the LAMB. Especially does he desire to do it for the exceeding great mercy granted him in the past five or six years. The glorious experience in the knowledge of "the only true God, and Jesus Christ" which has been opened up to his mind in relation to the Divine character and government, and the hope inspired thereby for the human race, has filled his heart with gratitude and love such as had never before been realized, and his prayer to God has been most earnest, "O that I may love 'the Lord my God with all my heart, with all my soul, with all my mind, and with all my strength."

Such a state he believes will fit him to enter on the glorious work of "the ages to come," with Christ the blessed Head, in "the restitution of all things."

At this anniversary of his birthday he has thought, "What can I present the readers of the BIBLE EXAMINER for their profit, and as a remembrancer of him who has so long been blessed with their support and prayers?" His conclusion is that he cannot do a better service than to present them with a somewhat revised sermon, which he first preached seven or eight years since, which laid the foundation of his present views of the Government of God over the human race, and of the work to be accomplished in "ages to come." When he first published that Sermon he had no idea where it was to lead him. But he blesses his God and Saviour for thus leading "him in a way he knew not."

With these remarks he makes the presentation intended. May God bless it to all readers.

"GOD IS LOVE."

A SERMON BY GEO. STORRS.

In all our investigations of religious truth, or inquiries after it, it is essential that we have some central and undoubted truth to be our polar star, or a light that shall control all our movements in our investigations. Without this, our course will be clouded, and we can arrive at no certain conclusions on which to rest with an undoubting faith, feeling we are on that foundation which is immovable. Happy for us, revelation has given the needed solar light, which lights up the whole system of revealed religion, and is the polar star by which we may always determine with certainty our course. That light, that guiding star, is the grand truth,—

"GOD IS LOVE." 1 John iv. 8, 16.

Here is certainty: here there is no ground for doubt; and here there must be no doubt: to doubt is to peril all. If this grand truth is questioned, or held as if it were possible to be untrue, we are liable to wreck at every step in our investigations in relation to the government of God over the creatures he has made; nor can we be certain that any of our conclusions in these matters are correct.

The first great business, then, of all teachers of religion, is to fix this truth in the minds of men so that it shall be undoubted and unquestioned. Till this is done, little or nothing can be accomplished in leading them "to serve the living and true God, and to wait for His Son from heaven." 1 Thess. i. 9, 10.

The grand chart, then, by which we are to make our voyage in search of truth, and by which every other view claiming to be truth is to be tested, and its real character decided, is this solar truth, "God is Love." Any system or theory that will not harmonize with this, and does not revolve around this as its controlling power, we may rest assured is not of God. However plausible it may appear, even though it may resemble an angel of light; however much it claims to be a revelation from God, if it has not on it, in blazing brightness, "God is Love," it is a deceitful light, an ignis fatuus,—a false and bewildering phantom which has originated in some diseased human brain, which has yet to learn the true guide into all truth.

The beloved disciple who leaned his head on his Master's bosom at the last supper, and who, of all others, drank deeply into his Master's spirit, understood this grand theme and manifested its true spirit in all he said and wrote. Love was with him the all-absorbing thought. It was his sun, his guiding star to determine his own relation to God and that of all others. How clearly does he set forth the subject in the chapter before us: "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God [flows from him as its fountain]; and every one that loveth is born [begotten] of God [hath received of his spirit of love, verse 13], and knoweth God; [is a partaker of the divine nature]. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love. . . . Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his spirit [his spirit of love. Like as God is love, so we, in our measure, are love: and by this we know that we are of God]. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him," etc.

In these statements of John, the great chart is spread out before us which is to guide us in all things doctrinal, experimental, and practical. Anything which fails of conformity with this grand theme, whether in doctrine, experience, or practice, is not of God, and is to be rejected from our religious system.

But can this view be reconciled with God's government of the world? Not by the schemes generally held, and which are misnamed "orthodox," and to which we are called upon to do homage; but by the Bible, interpreted strictly in view of this solar truth, all in harmony, and God's whole administration is seen to be but the outgiving of love to all the subjects of his government. To make this statement plain to every unbiassed mind, let us contemplate the dealings of God with men from the beginning of the world.

When God created man, he fitted up for him a garden of delights—everything that was good for food and pleasant to the eye; nothing was lacking to constitute his state one of pleasure and joy. This was love's installation of man in life's joys. But man was only an animal being at present, though superior to all other animals, appointed as their lord, and designed by love for a higher sphere, or to have developed a spiritual nature, capable of more intimate union and communion with his CREATOR.

That this advancement into an endowment of a spiritual nature, which should constitute him undying, and thus God-like, should not become an evil, love was careful so to order that it could not possibly become a curse instead of a blessing; or, in other words, love guards against the possibility of endless suffering.

To settle this point love tests the man as to whether he will develop a mind in harmony with the Divine mind, or a mind in perfect subjection to the will of his CREATOR. Such a development was essential to man's safety and happiness, if he is to pass into a spiritual and immortal, or undying state. For to let him pass into such a state without a voluntary subjection to, or harmony with, the Divine will, would be to make him an immortal sinner, and consequently eternally miserable, because eternally out of harmony with a superior power.

Hence, before endowing man with a spiritual and immortal nature, the love of God appointed a trial for him; and love decided that if the development should prove unharmonious with his CREATOR, the man should return to the dust from whence he was taken. Thus, not only the trial itself was an act of love, but the appointment of death in the case of a failure was also an act of love—it was the best thing that could be done for one whose will developed itself in opposition to the will of God, his Maker.

Death itself, then, is seen to be an administrative act prompted by love as a preventive of continued sin and misery. Love could never allow a being to come into existence, or remain in existence, when his sorrows and sufferings, on the whole, would outweigh his joys and pleasures. Love made such an event impossible. It could not be otherwise and God be love; but "God is Love," and that made it certain that whatever should be the final result of man's trial, his existence, while it continued, should have joys and pleasures far outweighing all his pains and woes. That such is the fact in this life, no sane mind will dispute: hence, all men love life, and wish to protract it as long as possible, notwithstanding its infelicities.

If such are the facts in the present state, it is not possible for love to appoint for sensitive beings a state of unmitigated or hopeless sufferings; and the idea is an impeachment of the Divine character and administration. Love, then, we see, at the outset, provided against a life, whether long or short, made up of hopeless sufferings; no attribute of the Divine Being, who is LOVE, could allow such a result; even justice, of which some religionists talk so much, could never override love to produce such a result. Nay, justice goes hand in hand with love to prevent such a result. Hopeless torture in a future life, then, is an impossibility; it can no more take place than God can cease to be God.

I have said that death itself is the appointment of love. This is true in regard to all the finally incorrigibly wicked. After love has exhausted all the means consistent to be used with reasonable creatures and their freedom of will, if they continue to resist the efforts of love, and persist in hostility to the Divine will, a continued life must be plunging them deeper and deeper in unhappiness till life itself would become a source of living torment, not unlike the fancied theological hell. Hence love appoints death to end their wretched existence before they reach that awful condition. How boundless the love that thus ends their mad career in sin and self-torment!

These remarks apply to all men to whom God has made known His love in providing a remedy for sin and death. If that remedy has been proclaimed to them, and they wilfully reject it, their wickedness obtains a maturity and their state a hopelessness which causes love itself to cut them off as the best possible disposal of them.

Love appoints death, also, for the righteous for a season, that they may rest awhile till the time appointed of the Father for their glorification. This life, while it has its joys for the righteous, the chief of which is the blessed hope of the future and eternal weight of glory, has continued trials also for them. Their own personal conflicts with evil in themselves, and the sufferings often experienced in this quarter, is one source of their affliction. The trial by the wickedness of others, either from persecutions in some form, or from the general disregard of God and his authority, and the oppression of the poor and needy, whose sighs come up into the ears of God like the sighs of the Israelites in Egypt, is another cause of sorrow and trial to the good, and often their righteous souls are vexed—distressed—by the unlawful deeds of those by whom they are surrounded, and among whom they are obliged to dwell. After enduring these things till they are fitted to reign on the earth with Christ in his glory, love appoints them to rest, or sleep in the dust of the earth till the fulness of time shall come for their glorification. It would not have been love to continue them in life's trials to the time appointed of the Father for the earth, their inheritance, to be renewed. Think of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and other ancient worthies, being continued in this trial state for thousands of years; then ask yourself if it was not an appointment of love that they rest in the sleep of death till the time for the consummation of their hopes should arrive, and thus the intervening space be, to them, annihilated; and the moment of their closing their eyes in death be to them the moment of their glorification, together with the whole family of the redeemed? A right conception of these things makes the great fact "God is LOVE, stand out in amazing glory, and should cause us to magnify his wisdom, power and love altogether.

But the most amazing development or manifestation of the grand truth that "God is love" is found in the wonderful fact that he sent his Son into the world to rescue us from the death state to which we all were hastening, and from which we were powerless to deliver ourselves. The statement of this great fact is thus announced by the Son of God himself: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Here, in one verse, is summed up the state of man without Divine intervention, viz., going out of life, perishing, returning to the dust, without power to survive in death, or revive from it; hopelessly lost to life, of himself. In this state God's love made its most wonderful manifestation. It put forward the highest loved One of the Infinite, and subjected him to humiliation such as earth never saw; to reproach such as no mere human being could think of voluntarily submitting to; to sufferings such as no man can fully estimate; and to death in the most dreadful and revolting form; all in love to dying men, and to open a way for their deliverance from sin, and "death, the wages of sin." Why this great and marvellous undertaking? Because "God is LOVE," and he "so loved the world,"—the whole race of men; not a soul of the human family was left outside of this range of the love of God. But this love, in order to avail in rescuing men from death, from perishing, must be met by love in return; or, faith in God's love, and a reliance upon the Son of God's love for the needed deliverance from death, wherever Christ is proclaimed. Without this return of love and confidence, or faith, on man's part, man fails of a final redemption, or comes short of an endless life. He rejects the deliverance love provided, and wilfully rejects the REDEEMER.

Love has provided for the redemption of the whole human race from sin and death. "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. Love and truth are pledged to see this testimony is made to all men in some period of their existence, here or hereafter. But "the times and seasons" for it to be done, "the Father hath put in His own power." Acts i. 7. Suffice us to know that God hath promised, and confirmed it with an oath, that it shall be done; that "in Abraham and his Seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed." That blessing includes the fact that "God will have all men come unto the knowledge of the truth." 1 Tim. ii. 4. That truth embraces the fact that "God so loved the world (all the human race) that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. That Son "gave himself a ransom for all;" and that fact is "to be testified" to all "in due time."

Did Love give that Son, and that Son give himself a ransom for all, and yet let any one of the race perish without ever having heard of Love's work in his behalf, and without having the opportunity and means to secure the everlasting life, by believing on the Son of God? To believe such an administration belongs to the government of God, is to believe that the apostle John was an impostor when he said "God is LOVE." No soul of man will perish without first having had the true knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ, and an opportunity to accept the great salvation. Any other view strikes down and gives the lie to the grand leading truth of God's governmental administration, that He is love. Any other view shocks the reason God has endowed man with, and is a libel on God's government; and its natural tendency is to lead men to reject a revelation which they are taught receives dead men to hopeless sufferings, and another extinction of life, (thus forced on them,) or endless torture.

From such thoughts we turn to the fact, that God has provided for the perishing children of men an inheritance where no sorrow, no pain, no want, no death, can ever disturb their peace or interrupt their joy, or in the slightest degree invade or mar their pleasure. All this because "God is Love;" and all this is a free gift of his love to those who have sinned against him, but who, by the manifestation of His love, have been won from the ways of sin to give love for love; for "we love him because he first loved us;" and "herein is love, not that we [first] loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him." See 1 John iv. 9, 10 and 19.

This love gives eternal life; a life to run parallel, in the future, with the life of God himself; endlessly increasing in new joys and glories, as shoreless as eternity itself. Then will the redeemed ones be ever exploring the depth and breadth of the grand truth, "God is Love," and still be shouting, "O, the depth of the wisdom and love of God." And as eternity rolls on, and they take new soundings on the shoreless sea of God's love, still they cry, "O, the depths!" And as wave after wave of love rolls over them and bathes their whole being with its comforting power, how will they exultingly cry out, "Unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us; unto Him be glory by Christ Jesus throughout the endless succession of ages."—Macknight's translation of Eph. iii. 21.

When the bliss of that immortal state shall exceed all that thought can reach, the grand chorus will still, everywhere in God's vast universe, be echoing and re-echoing, "GOD IS LOVE." Yes, "every creature in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them," will join in the harmonious and triumphant song, "GOD IS LOVE." See Rev. v. 11-14.

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat; for the LAMB which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them to living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes:" and all this because "GOD IS LOVE."

What can I say more? This love, O man, O woman, young or old, calls after thee from reason's dawn, saying, "Why will you die?" Will you not hear this voice of love? I know you have been born and educated under a human theology that has sought to arouse you by horrible representations of God's designs toward you, till your heart has become so hardened that, insensibly, you have come to regard God's service as only an awful necessity, and to be entered upon only to escape a horrible state of endless torture, which you have been taught God has prepared for his enemies. Such representations have so blinded your minds that when approached with the grand message of this discourse, we seem to you "as one that mocketh!"—Such a message begins to take hold of your heart, but the prejudice of your education makes you fear we are but deceiving you: and your old teachers cry out, "Infidelity;" so that though you are almost disposed to yield to love's power, you start back with fear lest you should believe too much, and thus be wrecked.

Well, if love cannot win you, what will? The dread of a theological hell may sometimes alarm, but you know never kindled love in thy heart. It has made many hypocrites, professing to love God so that they may escape the hell of torments, but it never did and never can produce the genuine principle of love. I do not say that none love God who believe the doctrine of future hopeless torture, or eternal torments; but I do say, those views never produced love in the heart of man, and never can. It is only when the mind turns away from such views to contemplate the love of God in Christ, that love arises in the sinner's heart.

I ask you, as a perishing creature, to turn your eyes at once to the grand truth of the text, "God is Love." Let no other thoughts intrude till this is so established in thy heart that sin will be hateful in thy sight and you find yourself cleaving to the fountain of love, and all thy sins will vanish away before the rising stream of that love which shall flow through thy entire being, and you will find yourself a new creature in Christ Jesus, whom God in his love gave unto thee, O sinner, to bear away thy sins, and to anoint you with the Holy Spirit of promise, which shall shed abroad the love of God in thy heart in such heavenly measure as shall make the yoke of Christ easy and his burden light. All this because "GOD IS LOVE."

THE LOVE OF GOD TO MAN.

Were the whole earth a parchment made,
And every man a scribe by trade;
Were the vast oceans turned to ink,
And every stick into a quill;
To write the love of God to man
Would drain the oceans dry;
Nor would the scroll contain it all
Though spread from sky to sky.

APPENDIX.—It may be thought that I have left justice out of sight in my exaltation of love. But this is a mistake. Justice and love are in harmony. Justice and equity are nearly the same. It is opposed to wrong or injury. Said the Saviour,—"Why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" Luke xii. 57. "A just God and a Saviour," is the testimony the Lord God gives of himself, Isa. xlv. 21. Justice harmonizes with love in giving every one of the human family the knowledge of and the means, with an opportunity, to secure an endless life; and condemns no one to a remediless death till all the means are used that Love has provided, for the recovery of the sinner from sin, and to reconcile that soul to God. If all this proves unavailing and the sinner wilfully persists in his wickedness, Love and Justice unite in his final doom of death. Love and Justice are in harmony in their object. Both seek to do the best that can be done for moral and accountable creatures.

To love, is to regard with good will. It comprises affection, attachment, tenderness, benevolence to the object loved.

Love without justice is but a selfish passion, which seeks gratification regardless of the good or rights of others. It is needless to say, that such is not the love of God; for his justice prevents such an administration with any of his creatures.

PROBATION IN THE COMING AGES.

IN relation to our Lord's words, Luke xx., "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world,"—aionos, that age, [i. e., of Messiah's reign, or the age next to follow this,] "and the resurrection from the dead," etc., I say, The next age of Messiah's personal reign of one thousand years, will open with a resurrection of all the sleeping saints who have suffered with or for Christ in this or the previous ages: such "shall reign with him." See Rom. viii. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 12; and Rev. iii. 21. These having suffered with Christ, and overcome the seductions to abandon His cause, will "together be made perfect" in body and mind. Compare Rom. viii. 23; Phil. iii. 20, 21; 1 Cor. xv. 23, 51-53; 1 Thess. iv. 13-17, with Heb. xi. 8-10, 13-16, 39, 40, and Heb. xii. 22-24, reading the 22d verse, Ye are to come; or, ye are coming; for that is clearly the sense of the original word here; and it removes all obscurity from the text and makes it harmonize with the inspired testimony in the previous texts to which I have called attention.

That there will be more than two classes of men on the earth at the opening of the next age, or at the second advent of Christ, to me is clear. Those who have suffered tribulation for Christ, and those who have contributed to produce that tribulation, form two classes. These two classes have lived together: both have heard the preaching concerning Christ;—one class has accepted Him as their Redeemer and Lord: the other class did not so accept Him, and have been more or less troublers of those who did. This class, again, may be divided into two parties; one of which has persecuted believers from hatred, and the other by, or through ignorance, more or less excusable. Yet, all of them “knew not God,” nor have they “obeyed the Gospel.” Such have caused trouble to the sincere followers of Christ, and will, during the time of Christ’s personal administration, “be punished with (aionon) age-lasting destruction,” etc. Not necessarily an endless destruction; but for an age, or ages,—a time not definitely known.

Passing these, there is yet another class of men at the second advent of Christ, who “have not heard God’s fame, neither have seen his glory,” etc.” See Isa. lxvi. 18, 19. This class constitute by far the largest part of the inhabitants of the earth. If any object to this, that the gospel has been preached in all nations, I demand the proof. Even if it had, it has been done in so corrupted a form as to make it “another gospel” than “the gospel of Jesus Christ;” and it is those who have not obeyed “the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ;” not the gospel of Plato, of Moloch, of Papacy, even under the improved name of Protestantism.

Who they are, and how many of the human family will be the subjects of trial under Messiah’s personal reign, in some of “the ages to come, I do not pretend to determine; but one thing, to me, is clear, that all who have not had the gospel in its purity will be of the number; and it is equally clear that there will be “left of the nations,” in the next age, (Zech. xiv. 16), and that such will be in a state of trial, or probation. That violence is done to a large portion of the Old and New Testaments, by an opposite view, is to my mind apparent; and yet far be it from me to accuse any of intending to pervert the words of God; still I know from past experience that strong attachment to the theory of an entire new creation at the second advent of Christ, imperceptibly biases the mind and prevents it feeling the force of texts that would otherwise be conclusive and irresistible.

SYNOPSIS OF OUR FAITH.

God will give to each and every one of Adam’s race an opportunity to embrace Christ by faith in this life or in a future one; and consequently there will be probation in a future life to all the race who have by unavoidable circumstances been deprived of the knowledge of “the only true God and Jesus Christ” in this life; because, “Christ gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time;” and as that “due time” never came to innumerable millions in this life, God’s promise and oath to “Abraham and his Seed” secures the fulfilment of the promised blessing to all such in another life, the same as the promise to Abraham that he should have the land which God showed him for an “everlasting inheritance” secured Abraham’s resurrection, although not a word was said to him directly of his resurrection from the dead; but the promise could not be fulfilled to Abraham without such resurrection. So, neither the promise and oath of God to bless all the families of the earth in Abraham and his Seed can ever be fulfilled, and the “due time” never can come to a vast majority of the race, if there is no opportunity in a future state for them to know “the only true God and Jesus Christ” as having “given himself a ransom for all,” and the privilege granted to them of receiving Jesus as their DELIVERER from sin and death. Ed.

“TIMES OF RESTITUTION.”—“Times,” Acts iii. 21, is chronon, marking a succession of events, and not kairos, a point of time, a fixed, definite period, as in verse 19. See Acts xvii. 30. Chronon includes, necessarily, protracted time, and often a long time. See Matt. xxv. 19; Luke viii. 27; xx. 9; and John v. 6. Sometimes chronos has the qualifying term mikron, little, connected with it. See John vii. 33; xii. 35. This last expression shows that there is a long chronos; and when expressed, as in Acts iii. 21, signifies a protracted period, without defining its length, but implying a long time; besides, the term achri, translated “until” in the text, gives the plural form to chronos, making it chronon, and hence utterly forbidding a short period. “The times of restitution,” therefore, is a protracted period. It commences with the heavens unveiling Christ on his return from heaven to the earth, and terminates with making all things new (Rev. xxi. 5, 6); and “it is done.” “The ages to come” will continue to succeed each other, as the ages past have done, until, “in the fulness of times” He shall “gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and in earth, in Him.” Eph. i. 10.

THE EVERLASTING GOSPEL.

PRELIMINARY.

THE Gospel, according to the author of the following remarks, is essentially the good news that Christ will, at the resurrection, establish His everlasting kingdom, and by processes adapted to the necessities of the case, gradually elevate the myriads who have passed from this world in ignorance and sin, to a condition, which, if not equal to that of the elect, will be one of constantly increasing blessedness. The Gospel in his view, therefore, is the glad tidings of the coming salvation of the race by Christ; a blessing which will follow the complete ingathering of the elect, by whose agency as kings and priests in the kingdom of God it is finally to be accomplished.

When our Lord was upon earth, the stress of the controversy betwixt Himself and the Jews turned, as we all know, on the nature of that kingdom which Moses and the prophets had declared should come, and which He and His forerunner had alike announced to be "at hand."

The same question is still agitated among ourselves, but in another form. That which Christian men now differ about is, not whether "the kingdom of God" is carnal or spiritual, but whether it is objective or merely subjective, present or future.

To say, as many do, that it is both, is simply to evade the point at issue, which is this: whether or no, by the phrase "the kingdom of God," or of "heaven," Jesus intended to denote His own visible triumph on the new earth over all that Satan has done from the beginning; or whether He only meant thereby to indicate that invisible rule in the hearts of believers which He always has exercised and always will.

The Church in this, as in too many other matters, is divided against itself. "The germs of Gnostic idealism," which, as Olshausen says, "sprang up as early as the apostolic times," denying in the doctrine of the kingdom of God any real outward manifestation of the Divine dominion on earth in the future," continually reappear, and now so extensively prevail that multitudes have ceased to attach any definite idea to what is said in Scripture regarding the kingdom of heaven, and content themselves with a vague hope that, in some yet unrevealed way, the reign of God over men will one day become universal.

—EDITOR.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?

The Gospel of Jesus Christ, — What is it? The good news proclaimed to mankind by the Lord and his apostles. In what does it consist?

A strange question, some will say, to ask in the nineteenth century. Yet perhaps not more strange than needful.

Nothing can be clearer than that the only Gospel taught by our Lord himself when on earth was the good news of "the kingdom." The sole object of His public ministry among the Jews was to enlighten the minds of the chosen people regarding that Divine kingdom for which they were so eagerly looking; and to point out to them its true nature; to exhibit and illustrate the moral and spiritual characteristics of those who were to share its glory. This was the beginning and end of Christ's teaching to the Jews. Nor was the case otherwise when He was privately instructing His disciples.

The conversation of our Lord with Nicodemus confirms this view of things. He tells him that except a man be born again, he cannot see (i. e., be a sharer in the glory of) the kingdom of God; and when the ruler stumbles at the doctrine, He adds, "Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?" implying that He spoke of things which were already revealed.

What our Lord taught, and what Nicodemus ought to have understood, was neither more nor less than what had been previously made known by Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Micah, viz., that when Jehovah should gather Israel in the day of restoration, God would "take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and would give them a heart of flesh" (Ezekiel xxxvi. 25; Jer. xxxi. 33); that then all their children should be taught of God; and that with this should be associated the removal of the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations; that then shall "death be swallowed up in victory." (Isa. xxv. 8.) It is needless to say that Paul connects this text with the resurrection.

The message to those whom Christ, by the apostles, subsequently called out of the Gentile world, was not essentially different from that delivered to the Jews. The Gentiles were to be told they were no longer outcasts and aliens — "strangers to the covenants of promise;" that God now bade them come to Him as children; that He placed them spiritually on the same level as the Jews; that He invited them to share "the kingdom" without passing through Judaism, or burdened in any way by the rites of the Mosaic economy. This is evident from what Paul says to the Ephesians. He tells them that the mystery of Christ made known to him "by revelation"—a mystery till then "hid in God from the beginning of the world," was not merely that the Gentiles might be saved, or brought within the Christian dispensation, but that they "should be fellow-heirs [with the Jews], and of the same body, and partakers of God's promise in Christ by the gospel." (Eph. iii. 6.) This was to the Gentile "the unsearchable riches of Christ"—the kingdom was thrown open to him.

That this announcement further involved the good tidings of redemption for the heathen world, a redemption actually effected and completed by the Lord himself, and therefore not dependent for its efficacy on its reception or rejection by mortals, is certain. It was a declaration of deliverance for all men from the sway of Satan; a deliverance actually effected for the whole world; it was a deliverance openly proclaimed, and altogether irrevocable: it carried with it life after death, but a life the character of which, like that of the present, would necessarily be dependent on conduct; a life that could only be a blessed one if spent in conformity with the will of God, in penitence on account of past sin, and in faith on the Redeemer.

Such was the general message to the Gentile nations. Beyond and behind this was a "high calling" to "glory and honor;" a call to present salvation from evil, and to immediate fellowship with God through Christ; a blessing to be enjoyed only by those who, being here renewed in the spirit of their minds, are "born again, not of the will of man, but of God."

The "good news," then, is that the work of redemption will be accomplished in spite of man's perversity; that the same grace which in all ages has gently constrained some, will one day, by processes adapted to their condition, constrain myriads who, in man's esteem, have perished in ignorance and unbelief; that neither human depravity nor satanic power, neither the world, the flesh, nor the devil, shall hinder the ultimate triumph of redeeming love, or prevent the coming of that day when every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess the love, the power, the holiness, and the dignity of Him whom God hath appointed Lord of all. Thus, through present mercy to the elect, the non-elect obtain mercy; and favor already granted to the few, "the many" eventually receive favor. For "God hath included all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" (Rom. xi. 33.)

The narrowing of the message, however good may be the intention, can only tend to lessen the glory of Christ. For as the bride of the Lamb is "the Church," and not the solitary nun, however holy she may be; so the crown of Christ is not the saintly jewels that adorn the diadem, but redeemed humanity. "He shall have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession."

To avoid the possibility of misconception, although at the risk of being supposed needlessly to repeat, let us once more state what has been maintained. It may be thus expressed:

"The Gospel of the grace of God," made known to mankind by Jesus Christ, is not so much an individual as a world-wide blessing; it is the glad tidings not merely of my salvation, but of human salvation,—the salvation of the race; it is the declaration that redemption is not a mere possibility, but a fact; it is the announcement both of the certainty and nearness of the time when all shall own and adore the Redeemer.

The bringing in of the elect, glorious as that gathering will be, is not the Gospel, but a call to "glory, honor, and immortality," based upon the Gospel, upon the declaration that it is the Divine will through Christ to restore humanity.

The announcement that God has provided a means by which sinners the most abandoned may, if they will, find deliverance, however true, is not the Gospel; for since the creation, or rather, since the fall, God has always provided such means, and has ever been more than willing to receive and forgive the penitent.

The Cross, wondrous as is the exhibition there made of the Divine love, is not the Gospel; Calvary is but the culminating point of human wickedness. The crucifix is not the true symbol of man's deliverance, but the open grave. "The kingdom" is the Gospel of the grace of God and nothing else.—The Kingdom of God.

THE GOSPEL OF THE CHURCH.

The Gospel of the Church, as preached amongst us,—allowing, of course, for modifications of thought and expression which are inseparable from the individuality of the human mind,—may probably be summed up in these words:—"Christ came into the world to save sinners, and whosoever will may come unto Him and live." Those who preach it, however, constantly assert —and justly—that all men are by nature unwilling to come; that, in fact, no one does accept the offer save under a special influence of the Holy Spirit; and that of those who have heard the glad tidings in past ages, or who hear them now, comparatively few have obeyed the call and given evidence of spiritual renewal. They admit further that only a fraction of the human family has ever heard of the Redeemer, and they are, therefore, obliged to allow that the race, if saved at all, must be saved by methods not yet revealed. Many, of course, take much narrower views, and refuse to entertain the possibility of any door of hope being open either to the heathen or to the nominally Christian world.

The defect of this teaching, and that which renders it no gospel to the mass of mankind is, that it keeps back all that is written relative to human restoration, and that—apart from another and special influence bestowed only on some—it makes no provision for the salvation of the unwilling, the “dead in trespasses and sins;” that it leaves to the consequences of their ignorance such as have never had Christ preached to them; and that it abandons to their unwillingness all who have not experienced that renewing grace by which alone the human heart is ever changed and subdued.

May it not, then, be affirmed that as a revelation of mercy to mankind, the Gospel thus stated fails to answer its end? since, instead of fulfilling the simple declaration of Scripture that Christ actually is the Saviour of the world, it maintains only that He is willing to be such to all who consent to submit and be saved; wicked unwillingness on the part of man being in every case the very evil to be met. Thus presented—struggle as we may against the conclusion—the Gospel becomes a message of grace only to the few, while the great mass of mankind, unsaved in any sense, are left to the consequences of their sin and folly. The Gospel of the Church goes further on the supposition that earth is the only theatre of human salvation; that nothing in Scripture justifies us in asserting that the work of Christ can be beneficially brought to bear upon men after death; that the visible Church, therefore—whatever may be understood by that term—is the appointed agency by which it pleases God to rescue men from Satan; and that, limited as the number at present may apparently be of those that are saved, a time is coming when, in connection with a large outpouring of the Spirit of God, and a more abundant blessing upon the laborers in the vineyard, the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth.—Ibid.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

The contrast between our preaching and that of the first age of Christianity is a striking one: Christ and his apostles proclaimed “the Gospel of the Kingdom;” we preach the Gospel of the Church. The impression prevailing amongst us appears to be that the one has superseded the other; that the first was Jewish, that the last is Christian. And yet it cannot be disputed that “the kingdom” occupies a much wider space in the field of divine revelation than the Church; nor will it be maintained that we are at liberty to dilate any truth, because it may be specially dear to us, until it fills a much wider sphere in our minds than it does in Scripture.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, instead of narrowing, gives fearless utterance to all that is revealed. It proceeds on the verity of the declaration that God is, in deed and in truth, “the Saviour of all men,” although “specially of those that believe.” It accepts this word as—what it is said to be—“a faithful saying, and [worthy of all acceptance,” and it justifies the apostle Paul when, under Divine inspiration, he charges his son Timothy, “These things command and teach.” (1 Tim. iv. 9-11.) It is a gospel which removes all that is painfully dark in the doctrine of election—the higher salvation of the comparatively few on the earth being regarded as the appointed agency for the later and lower salvation of the many in ages to come. It furnishes a strong counteractive against those temptations to self-satisfaction, to indolence, and to the avoidance of the cross, which so constantly beset us. It kindles the holiest of ambitions, and, in its own glorious light, darkens the attractions of much that here dazzles while it leads astray.

It proceeds indeed on the assumption that the present dispensation is essentially one of selection. It does not allow that God has anywhere led us to expect, in relation to the world as now constituted, that the Gospel will ever be more than a rejected testimony. It regards all that is going on at present as merely preparatory. It refers triumphs and universality to an age that is yet to come—an age which will be introduced by the reappearing of Christ, by a partial resurrection from the dead, and by the allotment, according to works, of rewards to those who have here endured unto the end.

Those who insist that in this dispensation the Gospel was intended to be much more than a witness, commonly base their opinion on the command, “Preach the Gospel ~~to~~ every creature” (lit., to all creation), an instruction which they imagine implies at least the possibility of its being made of saving effect to every child of Adam. They say, as Dean Alford has put it, that this command must be taken in connection with the promise, "Lo, I am with you always, to the end of the world;" and that "inasmuch as the disciples living when the direction was given could not teach all nations, the Lord here founds the office of preacher in His Church with all that belongs to it—the duties of the minister, the school teacher, the Scripture reader.

But do not such advocates, it may be suggested, forget two things: first, that the Gospel thus commanded to be proclaimed was that of "the Kingdom," which, says our Lord, "shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations" (Matt. xxiv. 14): secondly, that whenever God gives a command he provides all that is necessary to its fulfilment?

Will anybody pretend that the means of fulfilling such a command as this,—supposing it to extend to the human race,—has ever been afforded? Will any reasonable person say that at this hour, or at any period since the command was first given, it is, or ever has been, possible for true Christians to convey the tidings of salvation to the whole human family? He who maintains the possibility of this being done, if every heart were but consecrated to the work, must surely forget how few, even among believers, are fit for such a task; how, if spiritually competent, they could only perform it by the help of a miraculous gift of tongues, and by the neglect of all social and family duties; how, in short, its accomplishment would involve the violation of every condition under which God has placed men. He who thinks that a work like this might well be effected by the power of money and the multiplication of machinery is not to be reasoned with.

Why, then, should we persist in attaching to the words of the Lord an interpretation of this extravagant character, when a true and reasonable one lies straight before us; when it is obvious that the meaning of the charge is, "Preach this Gospel of the Kingdom (which has hitherto been confined to Israel) among all nations: for the promise is not to the Jew only, but to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," (Acts ii. 39)?

The hatred manifested toward Christ by the Jews arose almost entirely out of His teaching with respect to "the kingdom." That teaching was odious to them, not only because it stained the pride of all their worldly ambition, by giving them no hope of superseding the Roman empire by a kingdom of their own, but because it proclaimed the earth to be the inheritance of the meek, the lowly, and the pure in heart, shutting out of its possession every form of character they had especially cherished and honored.

The hatred of the world to Christ, now torpid, will revive in all its ancient intensity whenever the Gospel of the Kingdom is again accepted to any considerable extent; whenever it fairly comes in contact with the specious notion,—now rapidly gaining ground,—that under this dispensation, and by means of the wealth, the science, the improved legislation, and the innumerable benefits which are sure to follow in the wake of an ever-advancing and Christianized civilization, the world will be subdued to Christ, and Christians be practically its rulers. This idea, which is but another form of the old Jewish error,—but a repetition of the mistake made by the early Christian Church,—is so plausible, so favorable to all the desires of the unrenewed heart, so destructive of all that is involved in the thought of a pilgrim and stranger life, and yet, superficially viewed, so honorable to the doctrine of the cross, that it is all but impossible to make men see its delusiveness or feel its danger. The extravagant folly of those who have deduced from their Gospel the extraordinary notion that good Christians must of necessity be bad citizens, by scorning patriotism, by abandoning secular duty to the ungodly, and by resigning the world to Satan, has, no doubt, excited much prejudice, even among the followers of Christ, against a doctrine which, rightly understood, lies at the basis of all true faith in the Redeemer and His mission.—The Kingdom of God.

§ ST. PAUL'S GOSPEL.

The Apostle Paul often uses the phrase "my Gospel," as if his message to mankind included matters directly and specially revealed to himself. In the epistle to the Galatian church (ii. 2) he says that seventeen years after his conversion he went up to Jerusalem "by revelation," in order that he might communicate to the church in that city, and to the other apostles, the Gospel which he preached among the Gentiles.

Judging by what is said in that epistle alone, we should naturally come to the conclusion that its sole peculiarity was that it asserted the liberty of Gentile converts to abstain from the observances of the Mosaic law. But it is by no means probable that this was all, for, as we have before seen, Gentile freedom had not only been directly taught to Peter soon after Pentecost, but, in consequence of his testimony, had been formally and officially recognized as the revealed will

made of saving effect to every child of Adam. They say, as Dean Alford has put it, that this command must be taken in connection with the promise, "Lo, I am with you always, to the end of the world;" and that "inasmuch as the disciples living when the direction was given could not teach all nations, the Lord here founds the office of preacher in His Church with all that belongs to it—the duties of the minister, the school teacher, the Scripture reader.

But do not such advocates, it may be suggested, forget two things: first, that the Gospel thus commanded to be proclaimed was that of "the Kingdom," which, says our Lord, "shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations" (Matt. xxiv. 14); secondly, that whenever God gives a command he provides all that is necessary to its fulfilment?

ST. PAUL'S GOSPEL.

The Apostle Paul often uses the phrase "my Gospel," as if his message to mankind included matters directly and specially revealed to himself. In the epistle to the Galatian church (ii. 2) he says that seventeen years after his conversion he went up to Jerusalem "by revelation," in order that he might communicate to the church in that city, and to the other apostles, the Gospel which he preached among the Gentiles.

Judging by what is said in that epistle alone, we should naturally come to the conclusion that its sole peculiarity was that it asserted the liberty of Gentile converts to abstain from the observances of the Mosaic law. But it is by no means probable that this was all, for, as we have before seen, Gentile freedom had not only been directly taught to Peter soon after Pentecost, but, in consequence of his testimony, had been formally and officially recognized as the revealed will of God by the apostles and brethren in Judea. (Acts x. and xi.)

In his Second Epistle to Timothy, after saying to him, "Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my gospel" (ii. 8), the apostle adds, "Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." (verse 10.) Here he would seem to say that he suffered for preaching a special salvation for the elect.

If we ask, What more did Paul's revelation or Gospel include? what else could it embrace that was in any way peculiar to him? we must look for an answer to the First Epistle to the Corinthians (chap. xv.), in which we find the doctrine of the resurrection of the body first clearly set forth as a necessary consequence of Christ's having raised his own body. This peculiar doctrine he declares to be "the Gospel" which he had preached unto them,—that wherein they "stood," and by which they were "saved" from the power of the present evil world. (verse 1, 2.)

But again it may be asked, What is there in the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, as taught by this apostle, which makes it so peculiarly his own?

We are certainly at a loss to see what it can be, unless, indeed, the resurrection be connected,—as we believe it always is by St. Paul,—with the fulfilment of all those glorious promises of a new moral world which abound in the writings of the Old Testament. Other apostles had taught this to the Jews (Acts iii. 21); but Paul seems to have been specially called to open up the doctrine, and to impress upon the Gentiles that the dispensation of the fulness of times must be a result of the resurrection.

Such we believe it to be; and we cannot but think that if Scripture be carefully searched, and its various announcements relative to the resurrection be thoughtfully examined, it will become evident that while glorious days may be expected after the return of Christ and the binding of Satan, it is not till mortality is merged into life that the restoration of the race will be effected.

When Paul says to the Romans, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," he seems to imply that in this great city it would be more than usually offensive to preach faith in One who was known there only as a crucified malefactor. Paul says that this circumstance shall not hinder him from proclaiming the Saviour, because everywhere the preaching of Christ—of faith in Him as a person—proved itself to be the power of God unto salvation. The doctrine, he maintains, carries its own evidence with it, and therefore need not be concealed, as if it involved an extravagance too great to render it capable of being accepted. (v. 16.)

To understand why the Gospel was so manifestly a response to the needs of humanity, it is necessary to bear in mind the peculiar state of the world at the time the apostle wrote.

The age in which he lived was an age of hopelessness. A deep sadness had then settled over the minds of thoughtful men, for which no relief was to be found in paganism. "The fixed persuasion of the heathen was that the world was bad, and that it could only become worse. Hints might be obscurely given, or fondly imagined, of a coming ruler, a divine conqueror, a mysterious revealer of God's will and nature; but of a sanctifier and redeemer, of a conqueror of sin, an assuager of pain, of an averter of the evil which is born within us or gathers around us, and clings to us always from the cradle to the grave, and poisons life, and blasts pleasure, and mortifies pride, and corrupts love, and makes everything desired and hoped for turn out other than what we had desired and hoped,—of an averter of this eternal immedicable evil, the heathen had no conception, no anticipation at all. They had lost faith in the old mythologies, and they knew not on whom they could call 'to relieve the sickness of the world around them.'"

The Gospel was "the power of God" unto their deliverance from this state of bondage and misery, because it met their wants. It revealed a Saviour from self and sin. It brought before them a God—the one God, the living and the true—at once righteous and loving, the enemy of evil, but the friend of those who by evil had been brought into captivity. This was just what they needed, and he who believed the message, whether Jew or Gentile, found at once rest and peace.

To the man who accepted apostolic teaching the world was no longer the dark and inexplicable enigma it had always appeared; for in the Gospel ("therein") was "the righteous of God" revealed. There, for the first time, he was taught the equity of God's dealings with the children of men, and how out of evil itself God was ever educating good. Thence issued, unheard before by Gentiles, the glad tidings of redemption, of resurrection, of a world beyond the grave, and with such anticipations came hopeful, victorious and triumphant feelings, to which he had hitherto been a stranger. Alas! how many among ourselves are untouched by this blessedness! How many are content to look upon God's ways, and especially upon the moral condition of the world around them, with a faith that is after all noth- ing better than a half-belief that in some way or other "the Judge of the whole earth will do right,"—will at least do that which to Him is right, although it can never seem so to them!

But this is not faith. Faith is "the evidence of things not seen;" but it is not the evidence that anything which to us with the word of God in our hands seems wrong, is really right. Faith, or trust in God, implies an assurance on our part, not only that He never does wrong, but that He never does anything which to a rightly constituted mind seems wrong. In matters relating to the intellect the creature is unable to comprehend his Creator. In matters of right and wrong it is otherwise. The distinction is an important one. The mode of the Divine existence, for instance, is, like many other things, far beyond human comprehension; much in the providence of God is to mortal eye inexplicable; but nothing that our Father does of a moral character, seen truly, can fail to be perceived by us to be righteous, if we ponder it with a trustful heart.

Striking illustrations of this fact are to be found in the words of God, by the mouth of his prophets, to the children of Israel. How continually He appeals to their sense of what is right and just! How He pleads with them as a man pleadeth with his friend, ever seeking to show, not that He is more rigid in exacting than they are, but that He is infinitely more forbearing, demanding less, and making larger allowance for weakness and sin, than they were ever willing to do in their dealings with one another.

I am quite aware that the phrase "righteousness of God" is usually understood in a very different sense from that which I think it frequently bears. I have no wish to dogmatize, or to be unduly positive as to the accuracy of my own conclusion on this matter; but I may at least be permitted to suggest (1) that the phrase "righteousness of God" is unquestionably used in Scripture to express God's righteousness in forgiving (Psa. li. 14); sometimes it is put for God's truth and goodness in fulfilling His promises to us (Psa. xxxi. 1); and sometimes, as in Phil. iii. 9, for that filial spirit and service which, as His own gift, God accounts righteousness, regarded in contrast with the self-righteousness of a man seeking to be justified by his own works. (2) That God's justice and mercy are but different manifestations of that one quality of love by which He has described himself.

St. Paul himself designates that which he taught, "the Gospel of the grace (favor) of God;" "the glorious gospel of Christ;" "the gospel of salvation;" and "the gospel of peace," (see Acts xx. 24, 25; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Eph. i. 10—13, and Eph. vi. 15).—The Righteousness of God.

THE JEW AND THE HEATHEN.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

THAT there is hope for the Jews, the Scriptures of the prophets, likewise the apostles, seem to be very explicit. And many of our Advent friends, who were once decidedly opposed to this, are now, after having fairly investigated the matter, settled down on the belief that the restoration of the Jews to their national privileges and immunities as a nation at Jerusalem, is a foregone conclusion, and a Bible doctrine. But the future destinies of the heathen, this they cannot see yet; that is, as to their being the subjects of Divine munificence subsequent to the glorious Epiphany of the holy Redeemer.

They have concluded there is no hope for them beyond the advent of Messiah, as once they held relative to the Jews. This may be accounted for to some extent on the same ground that they considered formerly the fate of the Jews a hopeless one, namely, want of investigation, with so strong a love to know "what is truth," that they were willing to let preconceived notions, theories, and opinions pass as errors.

As to the future destiny of the heathen in its more enlarged sense, that is, I mean in the aggregate, the Scriptures seem to me to clearly point it out. There evidently is a rainbow of hope that sheds its variegated light yet over that dark and benighted portion of the human race. And in "due time" the rainbow will have passed away under the genial and warm rays of the Sun of Righteousness which shall arise with healing in his wings. Observe, "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." (Mal. iv. 2; Rev. xxii. 2.) It is evident, then, that there are nations that need healing in the new or renewed Jerusalem state. And what more likely than these heathen nations?

But before I come to positive testimony relative to the heathen as yet becoming the recipients of the Divine bounties in the presentation of that gospel which was preached to Abraham—Gal. iii. 8,—and which explicitly declares, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," etc., I wish to call attention to a few parables giving a brief exposition of them by way of a preliminary, and as clearing away for the more favorable reception of what may be further said in behalf of the poor heathen.

It is contended, by many, especially among our Adventist brethren, that more especially the parable of the good and bad fish, and that of the wheat and tares, represent the whole human race, and that their gathering in by the net to the shore signifies the day of final decision and judgment. So with the time of the maturity of the wheat and tares when we come to the harvest time, that it symbolizes the fixed and unalterable destiny of the whole race, and that this event of course is contemporary with the second coming of Christ; and indeed the result of that coming. The gathering of the wheat into the "barn" was welcoming the children into the Kingdom, and the binding of the tares in bundles was but the total destruction of the entire residue of mankind left outside of the Kingdom.

The parable of the sheep and the goats is also classed with the two above by our friends in proof of the final destiny of the race declared at our Lord's coming. I will admit, in taking a cursory glance of these Scriptures, apart and by themselves, that there is some show of plausibility for such a theory. I once was inclined to believe, myself, that this view of the subject was correct; but by careful study of God's word and comparing Scripture with Scripture, here a little and there a little, have found I was mistaken, and have come to the conclusion, which appears to me to be correct,—perfectly harmonizing with the general tenor of the Word,—that those parables do not embrace the whole of mankind, but only that portion which comes under the head of christendom. The net containing the good and bad fish does not take in the heathen nations at all, but only the professed Christians. And so with the wheat and tares, as must be seen at once from the fact that the wheat and tares so much resemble each other in their exterior, and grow up so closely and intimately "together" that to disturb the one, that is the tares, or attempt to root them up, would endanger the health, growth, or very existence of the other, as the Saviour declares, Matt. xiii. 29, 30;—so that they are both to grow together until the harvest, which shows clearly they are all professed Christians, and far from being any heathen in this company.

It is a mistaken idea that the end of the world, here, means the terminus of all mundane things. The correct idea here is, the end of the aion, i. e., the age, the close of "the times of the Gentiles," the terminus of that portion of time allotted to the Gentiles for the treading down of Jerusalem, embraced in the Divine purpose. We know of no Scripture which predicts the utter destruction of the earth, but rather we are assured that "the earth abideth for ever." (Psa. civ. 5, comp. cxxv. 1; Eccl. i. 4.) In that better state of things promised beyond, for which we look, of which St. John had a glimpse in vision, he did not say, and there was no more earth. He saw that still remaining, beautiful; but he did say, "There was no more curse," (Rev. xxii. 3.)

A word on the parable of the sheep and goats, showing wherein it differs with the two former ones. This portion of Scripture is generally explained to represent the last judgment scene; the goats symbolizing the whole ungodly world are hurriedly consigned to the burnings of the general conflagration; while the sheep, representing the saints, are greeted in the kingdom with a—"Come, ye blessed," etc.; but this interpretation I conceive to be very erroneous. I can only harmonize this graphic picture of the millennial reign of Christ with other portions of Scripture with the following view, namely, that from the point indicated, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory," until, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal," (Matt. xxv. 31-46), evidently spans over a period of one thousand years more or less, as brought to view in the 20th chapter of Revelation; indeed, I regard it as a parallel Scripture. The consignment to everlasting punishment, i. e., being cut off from life, synchronizes with the fearful disposition made of those as stated—viz., "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire;" which lake of fire is obviously a very striking and appropriate symbol of utter destruction, or cutting off from life, as in the former case.

Furthermore, we remark, that the judgment pronounced upon these condemned fish, and worthless tares in the parables, and the goats in the scenic programme of the times of the Messianic reign was not premature, not without a fair investigation and trial, as that would be contrary to all the known principles of human jurisprudence, let alone the Divine code of laws, which is perfect in every particular: "Judgment and justice is the habitation of his throne," etc. We are assured that all of those who stand out in condemnation have had a just trial, and consequently have had the gospel fairly presented to them in their day, and had the privilege of choosing who they would serve, "Christ or Belial"—"God or mammon." They have decided to serve the latter, and now receive the wages which is simply "death;" as that, we are told, is the "wages of sin," and of a sinful life—"he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." (Rom. vi. 23; Gal. vi. 8.)

These are the characters spoken of as being destitute of the knowledge of God and disobedient to the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who are to be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power; the same punishment as brought to view in those former places referred to.

They know not God, and obey not the gospel; these are the charges upon which they are indicted and found guilty. The sense we are to understand here of knowing God, is to know Him in that light so as to recognize Him unto the obedience of his command. This is evident from the nature of the clause which follows,—"and obey not the gospel," etc. This implies that those parties upon which the judgments are to fall have had the Gospel preached unto them; have had a "fair chance," and will never have another offered them.

What is it, we ask, which condemns a man as bad, like the bad fish in the drawn net, which symbolize this class of men? It is the fact of their being favored with the offers of life in the Gospel, and have refused to accept. You observe they are all found taken in the net, which is symbolic of the boundaries unto which the Gospel had been preached, there and then. What is it which constitutes a wicked man in the light of the Gospel? Is not one who has had the light and blessing of that Gospel presented to him, despising the heavenly gift, not using it to the honor and glory of Christ; or rather, going and burying in the earth, etc.? (Matt. xxv. 25, 26.) Men are not arraigned before the bar of God for the sins of our first parents; but only for their own ill doings. Jesus Christ by virtue of his death and resurrection, who "was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification," (Rom. iv. 25,) has atoned for that sin, which is "the sin of the world," (John i. 29,)—he taketh it away; and by his righteousness, which he wrought out by perfect obedience to the Father, "the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. v. 18.) He "was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Then it is those who the gospel recognizes as righteous, who have accepted the "righteousness of God" in Christ; and those who reject it are styled the wicked; they have been blessed with "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, shining in the face of Jesus Christ,"—but have closed their eyes and ears against it.

We ask again, what brings men under condemnation? Is it not the rejection of that gospel light which has come into the world? Is it not those who prefer darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil? (John iii. 19, 20.) "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak (or, excuse, marg.) for their sin." (John xv. 22.)

This would seem to draw the dividing line between the saint and sinner. A sinner, then, in the light of the Gospel, is one who has had a fair opportunity under the blaze of that light, but rejects it.

Again, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; . . . but how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach,—i. e., preach effectually and truly—except they be sent?" (Rom. x.) These all, which we have been considering as arrayed under condemnation, have been blessed with all the privileges here described.

In our next we shall take up the direct argument in favor of a future opportunity for the salvation of such as have been unavoidably deprived of hearing the Gospel message.

MYSTICISM AMONG ADVENTISTS.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

ABOUT thirty years ago a position was published to the Adventist world, by a worthy man, then a resident of this State, now dead, which proved to be the laying of the corner stone of a spiritualistic system of scriptural interpretation. That position was this, the thousand years of Rev. xx. are in the past. Some time after he adopted the above named idea, there came to Connecticut an able preacher from the State of Maine, and settled in the same county where our brother of the thousand years in the past resided. This preacher was a man of large ingenuity, and having embraced the sentiment that the thousand years are in the past, he exercised his inventive skill in an attempt to harmonize all other Scriptures with that leading idea. He succeeded in reducing his views on that subject to a system, and published a book setting them forth in order. The book was entitled "TRUE LITERALISM." Adventists up to this time had advocated a literal interpretation of the Scriptures, and had supposed that their literalism needed no qualifying word; the title of this book, therefore, looked suspicious to many, and they were very careful about adopting the book. Others have written on the same subject since the above named work was published, but till quite recently not a single new feature has been added to the system as it was brought out more than twenty years ago in "TRUE LITERALISM."

A work has been published in later years entitled "THE MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM," but it is only a reproduction of the same ideas, in substance, that were published in "TRUE LITERALISM" years before. The object had in view by the author of "TRUE LITERALISM" was to overthrow the doctrine of the "age to come;" and nearly all anti-age to come Adventists down to to day, have taken their cue from him, and are using his arguments in their efforts to overthrow the doctrine of future probation. A writer has just finished more than twenty "Letters on the Age to Come," in a certain Adventist paper; and the whole is only a rehash of a portion of that system published in "TRUE LITERALISM." I do not question the honesty of these men, for I once adopted the same system, and that because it was the best anti-age to come theory in existence. I was, however, convicted in the early part of 1874 that the system was driving me where I did not like to go; and that too by my own attempt to overthrow the doctrine of future probation.

Finally, in my hard sickness, from which I have not as yet entirely recovered, God took me in hand, and in my meditations on His plan, as revealed in the Holy Scriptures, one after another of my visionary views faded away until they were all gone; and God, in his great mercy, opened my eyes to see light in His light, and to understand his great plan of love, that shall at last bring an innumerable host to bow in willing, joyful submission to the reign of justice, mercy, and love, that shall, through ceaseless ages, be administered by God's anointed One, and his associate kings and priests.

The main feature of the system published in "TRUE LITERALISM" is the following: Christ is now reigning, and will reign till he comes the second time, and at his second coming he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father. Carrying this view out to its legitimate conclusion, there is a class of Adventists who claim that Christ is now sitting on David's throne, that his kingdom was set up eighteen centuries ago, that Christ's reign is confined to this age, and that in the world to come Christ will have no kingdom. It is folly for the writer of "THE MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM," or any other man who assumes that Christ is reigning now, and that when he comes the second time he will deliver up his kingdom, to find fault with the above conclusion. There is but one kingdom promised to Christ, and if that kingdom is a mediatorial kingdom, and that mediatorial kingdom was established—set up—when Christ took his seat on his Father's throne, and that kingdom is to be given up when he makes his second advent; it inevitably follows that Christ will have no kingdom in the world to come.

There is but one reign of Christ to be found in the prophecies, or promises of the Old or New Testament; if Christ is reigning now, if he reigns in this age, and at the end of this age ends his reign by giving up his kingly power, as the author of "TRUE LITERALISM" teaches, and the writer of the "MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM" affirms, all must see, who have eyes to see, that beyond the point where Christ gives up his kingly authority, ceases to reign, he will have no reign—no kingdom. The only class of logical anti-age to come believers in America, is the class I have named, who believe, and teach, that in the world to come Christ will have no kingdom. They are consistent in another point of view. God will never establish a government unless there is need of one. He will not give laws unless there is a class of intelligent beings who need laws to regulate their actions. To teach that in a world, where all the beings who inhabit it are in a condition of immortalized perfection, it will be necessary to organize a government, and enact laws to control their actions, is glaringly absurd. There can be no government without laws, and all laws, whether human or divine, demand the obedience of those for whom they are made, and a penalty to be inflicted on those who disobey, or break those laws. A government, therefore, necessarily implies probation. If there is no probation beyond the present age, there will be no government in the ages that follow this. To talk about Christ as king in the ages to come, or that he will have a kingdom in any portion of the endless future, and at the same time assume that there is no probation beyond the end of this age, is an evident inconsistency; one that cannot be easily overlooked by close thinkers.

If, therefore, you wish us to respect you as logical men, do not call men fanatical who claim that Christ will have no kingdom in the world to come, till you abandon the idea that Christ is now reigning in his kingdom.

Both these classes, however, are compelled from their own premises, if they believe the plain reading of the Scriptures, to admit that there will be probation in the ages to come. I have shown that but one kingdom is promised to Christ, and that one reign only is prophesied of in all the Scriptures. It does not matter at all, so far as the question of future probation is concerned, where that reign begins so long as it is claimed that Christ reigns as a mediator. If Christ is ever a priest-king, that is the reign spoken of by the prophets of God, and promised by Jehovah; for no man can show from the Scriptures that Christ is to reign twice, or that he is to reign in two distinct kingdoms. The Scriptures declare plainly what is to be the length of the reign of Christ, and how long his kingdom shall exist. I will refer to a few texts of Scripture which speak plainly on this point. Dan. vii. 13, 14, "And I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." If there was no other text in the Bible, this is sufficient, for it declares in unmistakably plain language that when Christ commences his reign, his dominion, and his kingdom are for endless duration. The prophecy from which this text is selected is consecutive in its character. It begins with Babylon, represented by a beast like a lion; gives a brief history of Medo Persia under the symbol of a bear; and also of Grecia under Alexander the great, and its division into four parts, represented by a leopard having four heads; and foretells the rise of the Roman kingdom, the last universal Gentile monarchy; its division, and finally the rise of the Roman Catholic power. After all these kingdoms have had their day, last of all comes the kingdom of the Son of man, our Lord Jesus Christ. The point I wish to fix is this: this kingdom of Dan. vii. 14, is the only one named in this prophecy, given to Christ, the only one He can ever have. If Christ ever reigns in a mediatorial kingdom, this is the one. That He is to be a mediatorial king—a Priest on His throne—is claimed by the great champion of anti-age to come opposers, the author of "TRUE LITERALISM," and accepted by the writer of "THE MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM." If these men are right, probation does not end with this age, for when Christ enters on his dominion, takes his kingdom, it will never pass away. So the God of heaven has decreed, and it cannot be changed.

One text more. Luke i. 32, 33, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." This is the reign—the kingdom of Christ so often prophesied of by the prophets of Israel, and the only one of which they have written: the only reign and kingdom of Christ of which he himself spake, and the only one concerning which the apostles ever wrote. Now suppose we were to admit, as these Adventists claim, that this reign began—this kingdom was set up—at the beginning of this age; it would not by any means refute the doctrine of future probation. So far from it, it would positively confirm that doctrine. If Christ's kingdom commenced at the beginning of this dispensation, it has been a probationary kingdom for almost two thousand years, and Jehovah declares, in language plain, and unalterably sure, that this same kingdom, the kingdom of Jesus Christ, shall not pass away, SHALL HAVE NO END. Amen.

My opposition to the idea that Christ's kingdom was set up at the first advent, does not spring from any fear that such a position, if true, would refute the doctrine of future probation. I disbelieve it because I am satisfied it is contrary to the plain teaching of the Word of God. Rev. xx. plainly states that when Christ reigns, his saints reign with him. To assume that the church of God was in a kingly position, its different members reigning as kings, during the time that they were being slaughtered by millions, by the Papal hierarchy, requires a hard stretch of credulity. The time when the saints get their crowns is plainly given in the Scriptures. Hear the testimony of Paul: 2 Tim. iv. 8, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." The day referred to in the text is the day of Christ's second coming spoken of in verse 1. Peter's testimony is in harmony with Paul. 1 Pet. v. 4, "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

Thus it is settled that the saints are not crowned as kings till Christ comes the second time.

Again: Christ does not receive his kingdom till he comes in the clouds of heaven (See Dan. vii. 13, 14); and when he thus comes, is at his second advent. (See Matt. xxiv. 30.) To this agrees the language of Paul. 2 Tim. iv. 1, "I charge thee, therefore, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."

The language of Christ himself is plain on this subject. Matt. xxv. 31, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Christ's kingdom is to be set up in the land of Canaan. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." (Luke i. 32.)

The throne or dominion of David was the kingdom of Israel, in the land of Canaan; and the prophet of God declares that Christ shall rule that kingdom. See Ezek. xxi. 25-27. Christ has declared that Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. See Luke xxi. 24. Jerusalem was in bondage to the Romans at the time of the first advent, and for years afterward; and to-day it is under the foot of the impious Turk, and it will remain under foot till the Gentile lease runs out, and then, and not till then, the kingdom of Jesus Christ will be set up.

It is positive, to my mind, from all these Scriptures, and many more that might be quoted, that the kingdom, the reign of Christ, is all in the future, to be set up, begin, at his second coming. I am satisfied that the events now transpiring in the East indicate that the foot of oppression is soon to be lifted, the holy land set free from the dominion of the Turkish empire, and Christ come in his glory, take the throne, dominion of his father David, and commence an eternal reign over all the nations. May God enable us to be among that spotless company that shall constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife, be crowned "kings and priests," and "reign with him on the earth." Amen.

THE POSITION OF THE JEWS.

Rev. Dr. Moody Stuart, at the Free Church Assembly, Edinburgh.

IN laying the report of the work among the Jews for the past year upon the table, Dr. Moody addressed the Assembly at length on four points, viz., (1) What others are now saying of the Jews; (2) What the Jews are now saying of themselves; (3) What the Jews are now saying of us; and (4) What we may say and think and do for them. We extract the following paragraphs, which relate to the last two points:

THE English Jews are well aware of our esteem for their Scriptures, and therefore they cannot withhold their esteem from us. This is brought out in an interesting way in the expression of their hopes for a speedy return to their own land. Six months ago the leading Jewish periodical wrote in these terms:

"The dreaded Eastern Question has at last really come to the fore. If an immediate solution is pressed, a fierce struggle must and will ensue. The Turk will not tamely submit to the dismemberment of his dominions. He will die hard. And what will be England's part in the strife? Not another Crimean war. She will not risk a second time valuable lives and precious treasure to aid those that cannot, or will not, aid themselves. But one thing England must and will do for her self-protection. The nearest way to her Indian Empire must remain open to her. She must obtain the suzerainty of Egypt and the sovereignty of Syria. And Palestine? Let it for a time remain in the keeping of England. It is quite safe in her hands. Let it remain in her hands until her savagery has been subdued, her wastes built up, and she has become fit to be a high-road for the nations of the earth. Let it remain in the beneficent power of England until a highway is made through the desert, and Jerusalem and Cairo be joined by an iron path.

"We have no wish to penetrate into the mysteries of the future until Providence be pleased to cast another ray into the darkness, and light it up for the next step. Sufficient for the day is the good thereof. We cannot but follow with the greatest tension the complicated movements on the grand chess-board disclosed before our eyes. Our interest is deep in the game. Our fervent hope is, if the Turk is to be dispossessed of Syria, that England, and no other Power, will be his heir. It would be truly extraordinary if, after eight centuries, the days of the lion-hearted King should come back, and an English army again tread the soil of Palestine. But, as we have said, we must patiently await the unfolding of the designs of Providence. Thus much, however, we may say: that if Israel is to be indebted to any human agency for the realization of her highest hopes, from none would she accept this service with greater satisfaction than from the Power which of all others, in Europe has manifested the profoundest veneration for the sacred records entrusted to Israel, as also for the holy men who have been instrumental in their composition, and which has in modern time exhibited such a warm and sincere interest in her fate."

I make this quotation merely to show the feelings of the Jews toward Britain, notwithstanding our efforts to Christianize them. Three weeks ago, after noticing some passing events, they write again:

"There seems to be something providential, by way of eminence, in all these coincidences. Devout minds will not fail to perceive in this the finger of God. We will not pry into the designs of Providence. In due time the veil will be lifted and we shall see the fresh developments in store for us. At the present moment it appears to us that the design Providence seems to work at would be best promoted if, in the dissolution of the Turkish Empire, which cannot be so far off, England were impelled to extend her protecting hand over Syria. No contingency would be hailed by the Jewish people with greater satisfaction than such a turn of affairs in the East. England has given so many proofs of her friendly feeling towards the Jewish people that they could not wish to see the land of their forefathers under a safer keeping than that of Great Britain. Whatever government is in power, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, there is no difference in its behavior to the Jews. And if the English are not the brethren of the Jews in the flesh, as is contended by those who maintain that the Anglo-Saxons are descended from the ten tribes, they certainly act towards them as kinsmen in spirit and feeling. We have given expression to our heartfelt wishes in this matter. But Providence will, of course, go its own way. We must quietly await the disentanglement of the complications becoming thicker and thicker in the East. The solution of the problem cannot be delayed much longer."

These things add urgency to that which we note lastly,—What we ought to think and say and do for the Jews. And let us take first what we may do for them. Let us send missionaries who shall preach to them the glad tidings of deliverance through Jesus the Son of David, already come for their salvation, for how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? Russia contains one-third of all the Jews in the world, and the most religious portion of the nation. It has long been closed against our missionaries, but appears to be now open to them again. Along with this opening we are much encouraged by an accession to our funds. We have not received, but we have got intimation of more than one legacy, the yearly interest of which will maintain one or two missionaries. But we cannot find the men. It is the church that sends the men, and it is the Spirit that is in the church that moves her sons to go forth on her work, and if missionaries are wanting the fault must be in ourselves.

Let us do this for Israel—let us send the the preachers of that Gospel which their fathers sent to us. One great advantage in Russia would be that we believe there might be an opportunity for opening schools. The school is an immense advantage to the missionary, both for infusing Christian truth in the minds of the children, and for access to the parents, and also a centre of interest at home. The education in Germany is so efficient that there is no opening for schools, and the consequence is that even with an able and devoted man like Mr. Edward at Breslau his work appears far less than it really is. A visitor sees what a goodly company of godly men he has been the means of gathering in, and how zealous both minister and people are for the ingathering of Israel, and we cannot doubt of the Lord's blessing on his faith and labor of love.

But where the real fruit may be as great it does not present itself to the eye in the same manner as a school does, and fails to create the same interest at home. But this great advantage we hope to find in Russia, as in Pesth and Constantinople. Next when we cannot speak to them face to face, let us speak to the Lord on their behalf. Prayer on their behalf is increasing, but let it be more earnest and more abundant; and especially on their Sabbath, on Friday evening or Saturday morning. When they are reading their Scriptures let us pray that their eyes may be opened, to see that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Let us remember them also in their annual day of sorrow and confession and supplication, the great day of Atonement. Most touching to us is the sight of the millions of Israel yearning for reconciliation, yet blind to the one reconciling Sacrifice, and confessing,—"Sovereign of the universe! whilst the holy temple stood, if a man sinned he brought an offering and made an atonement; but now, because of our iniquities, we have neither sanctuary, nor altar, nor offering, nor priest to make atonement for us. There is nothing left us but the commemoration of them. Oh, may that be our expiation!"—Selected by H. R.

DANIEL, THE APOCALYPSE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, No. 3.

BY G. R. LEDERER.

CHAPTER III.

The events that are related in this chapter must have occurred a few years after those related in the preceding, as it seems that the erection of the colossal gilded image had some connection with the image of the king's dream. "Thou art this head of gold," said the divinely inspired Daniel to the king; he, therefore, wanted to erect a golden pillar which should represent the greatness and glory of himself and his kingdom. It may also be taken as a certainty that that pillar was dedicated to Bel, the principal god of the Chaldeans; and, therefore, its worship was strictly demanded.

I say "gilded image," for to believe that the image, or rather, pillar, was of pure massive gold, would give critics another handle to ridicule the sacred writings, because the amount of gold for such a colossus hardly existed at that time. The ark of the covenant, the table for the shewbread and inner altar of the tabernacle were generally called "the golden table," "the golden altar," and yet it is plainly said that they were made of shittim wood and covered with gold.

Verse 8.—It is a remarkable instance that the accusation of disobedience to the mandate of the king was not specifically against the three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abad-Nego, who refused to worship the image, but against the Jews in general. And truly, such has always been the case, and in some degree, it is so still, even in our days. Haman was not satisfied to take vengeance on Mordecai, who offended his pride, and destroy his life only, but determined to annihilate the whole nation of the Jews. In the dark mediæval ages, when a Jew committed some wrong, or even was only suspected of having done so, the wrath of the Christian (?) populace turned against all the Jews whom they could reach, and whole communities were massacred. So even now you can observe the same thing practiced by the masses. A Gentile committing a crime, people would say, "Peter," or "John has done this or that, and has been imprisoned;" but should the criminal happen to be of Jewish parentage, the people would not mention his proper name, but would say, "a Jew" has done so and so, and, what is more strange, it is so announced in the daily papers.

The wonderful preservation of the three faithful Hebrews from the fearful death in the seven-fold heated furnace was to impress again upon the mind of Nebuchadnezzar and his people that human will and purposes, even of the mightiest monarch, is nothing compared with the will and purposes of the God of heaven and earth, even the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abad-Nego. This incident also firmly established these men in their high positions which they occupied before, and which enabled them to further the welfare of their brethren and co-exiles.

I do not agree with some Bible students who say that the fourth person whom the king saw in the furnace was Christ who came to save these Hebrews. For Christ had no function on the earth until he was born at Bethlehem at the appointed time. But not only on this occasion I differ from these interpreters, but on other occasions where the Scriptures speak of an angel whom they believe to have been Christ. No, where it is said "angel," it was none else but a messenger of God to carry out a certain purpose. Here, moreover, it is only said that Nebuchadnezzar saw a fourth person in the fire, and it is most probable that, the king exceedingly surprised by the fact that the fire did not consume the men thrown into it, and dazzled by the great heat, imagined to see four instead of three persons, and indeed only three ascended from the furnace.

CHAPTER IV.

This chapter should rather begin with the 31st verse of the preceding, (in the English version it really begins so); for it is evident that the proclamation of the king to his people of the wonderful things which the Highest God has done to him, can have no reference to the preceding incident with the three Hebrew captives. In the first place, the acknowledgement of the supreme power of the God of the Jews, the king had already made, and is recorded in verse 28; also the decree to all his subjects to respect that great God is found in verse 29, and the 30th closes with the re-appointment of the three men to their high positions.

In the case of Nebuchadnezzar the general state of the unrenowned, unsanctified human heart is pictured in true and vivid colors. All the wonderful things the king had seen and experienced of the power of the God of heaven, as well as his own helpless, which he more than once was compelled to confess and acknowledge publicly, could not break his inclination and desire of self-aggrandizement, boasting and unmeasured pride. He was now to feel that power on his own body, which, at the same time would be a severe punishment for his stubbornness. After the restoration of his mind and to his former power he sent forth the confession of his frailness and his dependence upon the mercy of the God of heaven, which we see in the first three verses of this chapter—or the last three of the preceding chapter according to the division of chapters in the Hebrew Bible, and which, in fact, form the introduction to the grand subject as related further on.

CHAPTER V.

Great speculation exists among the different commentators concerning the king named in this chapter Belshatzar, who, according to the address of the queen, was the son of Nebuchadnezzar. By some historians we find that several kings reigned after the death of Nebuchadnezzar, and the last, who was conquered and dethroned by the Medo-Persians, was not named Belshatzar. When we consider, however, that almost all Oriental kings had several names, and that a grandson may also be called a son, there are no difficulties in the matter. It is a fact that the king who received the death warrant written on the wall was one of the lineal descendants of Nebuchadnezzar, and that he knew, or should have known, all that had happened to his ancestor, of his reverence for the God of the Jews, and should not have desecrated the holy vessels by using them in his entertainment with his magnates, wives and concubines. That he was not a friend of the captive Jews, who, in consequence, may have been cruelly treated, is evident from the fact that Daniel, who had been second in the kingdom, had been removed from his high position and lived in obscurity, and seemed to have been altogether forgotten, until the queen recommended him as the only man who would be able to read and interpret the handwriting on the wall.

The queen here mentioned was evidently the mother or grandmother of the king; for it is related here that his wives and concubines were all at the banquet. Moreover, his wives, we may fairly suppose, did not know anything of Daniel and his former position during the reign of Nebuchadnezzar and his immediate successor.

It will be interesting to the reader, I think, to hear what one of the most distinguished of the ancient Hebrews, (well known among Christian students,) Rabbi Saadya Gaon, says on the event of the handwriting on the wall and subsequent death of the king, though, as regards the chronology the Rabbi is greatly mistaken. He says: "That wicked king made a mistake in his calculation concerning the seventy years of Judah's captivity. He counted, namely, from the first time Nebuchadnezzar conquered Jehoyakim till the latter was carried to Babel, were eight years. Thirty-seven years during which Jehoyakim remained a prisoner until Evil-Merodach ascended the throne and made him free. (Jer. lii. 31-34.) This makes 45 years. Evil Merodach reigned twenty-three years, makes 68. Belshatzar ascended the throne and reigned two years till the Medo-Persian army besieged Babylon, which makes the total number of 70 years of captivity. And as the deliverance of Judah did not take place then, Belshatzar thought that the Jews never would return, and the temple never would be rebuilt, and, therefore, when one day he made a sortie upon the besiegers and gained a victory, his heart was so full of pride that he ordered a great banquet, and at that occasion used the holy vessels of the temple in his unholy revelry."

Verse 25.—MENE, MENE, TEKAL, U-PARSIN. Each of these four words admit of a two-fold meaning. Mene, is to number and also to be complete. Tekal is in Caldaic what shakol is in Hebrew, namely, to weigh; but it also has the meaning of, too light. U-parsin is derived from the root parasz, breaking or dividing, and at the same time it points to the people by whom the breaking will be accomplished, viz., the Persians. The translation, therefore, is this: "Mene," God has numbered the days of thy reign, "Mene," and has completed them,—He has concluded to end them. "Tekal," thou hast been weighed in the balance and hast been found too light, or wanting. "U-parsin," therefore, thy power will be broken, and thy kingdom given to the Persians.

It has been thought by many Bible students that those words on the wall were written in Hebrew letters; but when we consider that Babylon was so near to Judea, and contained a vast Jewish population, it would be absurd to think that none of the wise and learned Caldeans could be found to read and interpret the writing on the wall. We are, therefore, convinced that those words were written with such characters that only Daniel, divinely inspired, could read and interpret them.

Because the writing on the wall pronounced the sentence of breaking up the kingdom by the Medo-Persians, and because the death of the king took place on that very same night, and more than all this, because the next chapter begins with the reign of Darius the Mede, most Bible readers think that on that very night the city of Babylon was taken by the Medo-Persians. But such was not the case; for though Herodotes and Xenophon both say that Babylon was taken while the king and his people celebrated a grand entertainment, we know, even by these historians, that Evil-Merodach, perhaps also called Belshatzar,—was murdered by his brother-in-law, Nergilessar, who reigned four years, and was followed by his son Laboro-szorchod, who, after nine months' reign, lost throne and life, and was followed by Nabonidus, the one who was conquered by the Medo-Persians and banished to Carmania. Accordingly, from the events mentioned in this chapter—the terrible handwriting on the wall and the immediate death of the king—to the taking of Babylon and the passing of the kingdom into the hands of the Medo-Persians there elapsed nineteen or twenty years; that is, from 559 to 536, or thereabouts, before Christ. We cannot reject the testimony of profane historians when they are not in contradiction to the history written by inspired writers, particularly when the latter do not give us any data.

The question arises again, why did God show His decree to that wicked king which He never did afterwards to kings who were even more wicked than Belshatzar? The answer is again, that God did so on account of His chosen people Israel. It was needed to call out Daniel from his obscurity, and to make a fresh impression upon the mind of rulers and people that the God of the Jews is the Lord of their destinies, thus again making the remaining years of the exile of His people as tolerable as possible.

CHAPTER VI.

Here again there is no conflict between Daniel's narration of events and that of profane historians. Xenophon tells us that Cyrus the Persian was the conqueror of Babylon; but Cyrus only acted as an ally of the Medes, and Cyaxares the Second,—the Darius here mentioned,—ascended the throne of Babylon. This king was an aged man, and had no children but one daughter, whom he gave in marriage to his young ally, Cyrus, with Media as a dowry. Thus the latter became the ruler of the second universal empire, represented in the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream by the breast and arms of silver, the two arms became united in the breasts Media and Persia.

The appointment of Daniel as one of the three highest dignitaries under the new dynasty, proves demonstratively that the events as related in the preceeding chapter, the mysterious handwriting and its interpretation by Daniel which elevated him again to the highest office in the State, was not forgotten by the kings who followed Belshatzar upon the throne of Babylon. Darius on ascending the throne must have found Daniel in the high position he had so long occupied. Moreover, there is no doubt but that the fame of Daniel, his spirit, his skill in managing the affairs of so vast a dominion, had reached the ears of the Medo-Persian rulers, and had become a settled matter in their minds that, should they ever take possession of Babylon they would entrust its management to that wise and faithful minister who knew the country, its wants, and the way of governing the people to advantage by the experience of many years.

In the events related in this chapter we meet again with the common hatred against the Jews. The high favor which Daniel enjoyed with the king aroused the jealousy of all the satraps of the vast dominion, and they conspired to find out some means by which to destroy him. This chapter tells us that they found indeed the best way to accomplish their purpose. The religion of the Persians and Medians placed the king as the head of the church, or rather, as the incarnation of their God. (A precursor of popes.) It was, therefore, an easy thing for the conspirators to persuade the old man upon the throne to sign an edict which they had prepared. It was of no consequence of the heathen nations to worship the king as their God for a short time, because each had besides their own national god, and they could not deny the same reverence to the gods of other nations which they paid their own. But the Jews could not. They acknowledged no other God but Jehovah, and Him alone they worshipped. It was upon this fact that the satraps built their plan, in which they would have well succeeded had not the God of Daniel interfered, and, in a wonderful manner, not only frustrated their plan, but turned them into the pit which they had dug for Daniel and his people.

When the satraps presented the proposition to the king, he felt rather highly flattered, in being worshiped by so many nations who each of them adhered to their own god, at least for thirty days. He, therefore, signed the prepared edict without hesitation. We may take it for granted that the king, in signing the wicked edict, did not think of the Jews or their representative, his favorite prime minister, Daniel, else he would have hesitated to put his name under the document spread out before him, and thus would have escaped the trap laid out by his courtiers. It seems that the king must have been a man of little thought,—like Ahasuerus, one of his successors, in the case of Haman,—which afterwards brought him great sorrow and pain. When the king heard that Daniel had disregarded his edict and that the satraps demanded the strict execution of the penalty, his eyes were opened to see the purpose of the whole plan; he felt great sorrow, and tried to save his friend; but it was not in his power; "the laws of the Medes and Persians could not be transgressed"—or set aside—even by the king himself.

The silver is inferior to the gold! So was the character of the empires represented by these two kinds of metals. Nebuchadnezzar commanded the worship of the image he had erected for that purpose, which some of the captive Jews refused to do; but it came from himself, and he would not have yielded to his satraps to give such a foolish decree. Then, again, though the three captives were his faithful officers in high position, he insisted upon the execution of his decree: his authority demanded it, his majesty was offended. Not so Darius; he allowed himself to be caught in the trap laid by his courtiers; he regretted it deeply when he found out the object of their plan: he would cheerfully have set aside the offence of his majesty, had he not been bound by the law.

Darius was not ignorant of the event that had taken place under the reign of Nebuchadnezzar; how the God of the Jews had most wonderfully saved the three captives from the fiery furnace; he had, therefore, a strong hope that the same God would save Daniel, his faithful servant, who worshipped Him at the peril of his life. But he feared Daniel's enemies, who were determined to destroy him; he feared that they would, in some way or other, kill his friend, though the lions would spare him; he therefore, secured the opening of the den with his own seal.

After a sleepless night the king hastened to the den and soon rejoiced to see his hope realized. Daniel, his friend, was saved, and came forth entirely unhurt. The consequence was that Darius not only acknowledged the power of Daniel's God, himself, but sent forth a decree that all nations and people, under his sceptre, should revere and fear that God. He did not command them to abandon their idols, but to do nothing which should offend the mighty God whom the Jews worship, and who is able to do such wonderful things. Who cannot see in all these events the gradual preparation of the Gentiles to receive the Gospel?

PALESTINE AND THE JEWS:

Or, The Possible Result of the Conflict now going on in Relation to Turkey.

Much speculation is indulged in on the subject above named. The view expressed in this Magazine for November is still adhered to; but I give the following extract from a pamphlet of recent date, entitled, "NEW LIGHT ON THE EASTERN QUESTION." The ideas may be considered too worldly for those who are in haste to "burn the world" and all but themselves in it. But the counsel of the Lord shall stand; and that counsel is clearly expressed by many prophetic utterances both in the Old and New Testament as regards the return of Judah and Israel to the land of Palestine and of their becoming "one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel," etc. See Ezekiel xxxvii. to xxxix. inclusive; prophecies as surely to be fulfilled as any that speak of Christ's return from heaven, and substantially confirmed by Gabriel to Mary, that the child to be born of her should have "the throne of His father David, and reign over the house of Jacob for ever." (Luke i. 32, 33.) The following is the extract from the English writer:

"In the inevitable fall of the Ottoman Empire—and we say 'inevitable' advisedly, for we put little faith in the permanent effect for good of recent violent changes at Constantinople; they have been brought about too much in the old-fashioned Turkish fashion of intrigue and assassination—it may become a matter of compromise between Russia and the Great Powers as to the possession of Turkey proper and its Asiatic dependences. When the hour has come to blot out the miserable rule of the Sultans, Russia will want a part of Turkey. But what will be done with the other part of her possessions? It would be a fit time for Western Europe to get a foothold on Syria, and take it out of the hands of the present holders, for Syria, in time to come, will be coveted by Russia far more than it is now. It would be a deceptive policy to allow the continuance of the Turkish rule in Asia after it had been swept out of Europe. Suppose Russia and some other power ruled in Turkey, the Ottoman rule in Asia would be weaker than ever in consequence; and what is going on in European Turkey now, would be repeated before long in Asiatic Turkey; and as the question in its broadest aspect seems to be getting ripe for settlement, would it not be wiser to divide the whole of the Turkish Empire among the interested powers, and entirely supersede the effete and corrupt Ottoman Government? for only in this way can the Eastern Question ever receive a peaceful and satisfactory solution.

"Syria then would become a great centre of trade; it was so centuries ago, and received the commerce of surrounding countries into its lap. If it was felt to be a convenient emporium then, it will be found so again, but under improved circumstances. Its position will be a remarkable one when rapid communication with India, China, and Africa is made. The sea-board adjoining Europe is small, but would be advantageous. There is no part of the world so well adapted as

Syria for a universal depot and market. The Suez Canal has improved its maritime position; it commands the south sea-board of Europe; the north of Africa and India are all within a few days' sail. There is a clear way for America, as there is no part of its eastern coast that cannot easily be reached by sea from Syria. The busiest and most thickly populated part of America (North and South) is the east coast; but should the rail through Asia be completed, America would be able to travel east and west to one point, but if she traveled west, after the long sea voyage there would be the land route, as though the Great Designer had planned the trade of Western America to terminate in the east of Asia or China. The preponderance of trade would be from the east coast of America; there would only be the sea voyage to bring them to the chief market of Asia—Syria. Besides this, America will always have a good European trade, and her merchants, therefore, will have a special inducement to trade across the Atlantic rather than the Pacific. Again, it is only natural to consider that wherever the seat of commerce is, her face will be turned thither; indeed, that is the instinct of nations, that they shall face and push towards the centre. There is no centre now of the great land division. It has to be created, and can be no other than Syria, standing as it will, when the projects hinted at have been accomplished, with-in easy access of the masses of the earth's population, and traditionally, as well as positively, one of the richest districts on the earth's surface. The centre of commerce must be in the centre of civilization; this is the position England has so long held. The influence of Europe will be the means of making Syria a neutral country, and in the face of this, it would not be difficult to dispossess Turkey; and the question raised, as it will be, can only have, as we have tried to show, one satisfactory solution. A conference of nations interested in the scheme can alone settle it. Any existing nation possessing it would be an envied one, and hold sway subject to the bitter objection of all commercial powers; this would but retard, instead of furthering the interests of all. This conference could decree that no European power should possess Syria, and instead create a new nation, who should hold the country under the combined protection of all the powers, without being subject to any—making that community the medium of the commerce of Asia. The examination of this subject points directly to a people scattered over the face of the earth, who in justice ought to occupy such a position, and are practically more fitted than any other to do so. It will be at once apparent to the reflective reader, that allusion is here made to the Jews, whose right to possess the land is indisputable, if rights can be regarded after the lapse of so long a period of dispossession. Naturally the land is theirs, and the Powers would be justified in building up this people, possessing as they do such wonderful intelligence and capacity. In every business, craft, profession, or trade, we find the Jew, and this too in every land, so that, as a people they are acquainted with the languages of the whole earth, and if it is needful to have another nation handling the commerce of the world, here they are, of all the most capable, needing no training, for experience in the business of the world has grown into their very lives. It is a Jew who can trade, from the value of a pin to the debt of a nation.

"It may be thought that these views are far in advance of the times; but, after all, perhaps, not so far as many may be inclined to believe, for the tide of events rises rapidly in these latter days, and this riddle of the nations is waiting to be solved. In what way the problem can be best worked out, has occupied the attention of public writers for a long time, and the subject having had our careful thoughts for some years, will justify our bringing our views prominently before thinking minds; and we firmly believe that in the direction we have indicated lies the whole solution of the puzzling Eastern question. Conferring such position on the Jews might render them objects of envy, in the same way that our own country has been the envied by all nations, but such a thought must be dismissed as foolish where the good of all is concerned. Palestine should be made the keystone to all nationalities, and an Empire or Commonwealth founded on so substantial a basis must necessarily be great and lasting. There would be no sacrifice made to any individual Power, for at the present time, a land such as Palestine now is, without a settled people, laws, or religion, can be of little use to its possessors. Turkey has neither wealth nor vitality sufficient to secure the success of a country like this, or it would have done so long ago. Syria for future greatness demands a population with energy and capacity for trade and self-government. It is indeed, a pity that a land and its surroundings, such as Syria—displaying luxuriance and fertility when cultivated, where the vine and the olive grow freely, and where aromatic plants and delicious fruits thrive abundantly, with arable and pasture land notorious from the earliest historic period for its richness, with a climate that would be healthy but for the filth and wretchedness of its inhabitants—it is a pity, we say, that a country like this, thus centrally situated and suitable to the requirements of commerce, should be left to riot and robbers; a blot and a scar among civilized nations. But the time is not far distant, when Turkey will lose this rich inheritance, which she has wasted so shamefully; and why England has supported her claim to it so long seems a mystery of perverse statesmanship, for it has long been a loss to us, that an intelligent people did not dwell in this renowned land of traditional greatness and holiness.

"For the aggrandizement of nations were the Jews dispossessed of their own land, and for the aggrandizement of nations will they be restored, and all honor to the statesman, of whatever land he be, who shall have the wisdom to plan, and the strength to carry out, an Eastern policy broad enough to embrace the rapidly widening area of the world's civilization."

REMARKS BY EDITOR OF EXAMINER.—How far all the particulars of the foregoing extract may be accomplished before the personal second advent of the King to sit on David's throne, I do not say; but something of this character must take place before the Gogian invasion (Ezek. xxxviii.), and before Christ will sit on David's throne. Those who are impatient for the consummation of all things may find it important to let their "patience have its perfect work," without which they cannot "be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." (James i. 4.) We may look for and love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; but we must, also, "be patient unto the coming of the Lord." (Jas. v. 7.) Impatience is no evidence of readiness to meet Him.

A TEST FOR CHRISTIANS.

BY DR. LEASK.

Some of the counsels of the apostolic letters, addressed to believers, appear so contrary to the feelings and inclinations of human nature, even when it is partially sanctified, that the thought will force itself upon the intelligent student whether obedience is possible. Can God have given directions to his children with which he knew that they could not comply? Are these directions to be understood as requiring only a limited and occasional, instead of a constant and complete, obedience? Or do modern Christians fall so far short of the first churches, in the matters of faith and practice, that what was easy in apostolic days is difficult, if not impossible, now?

These three questions seem to cover the entire ground in relation to this very important matter. The first must be dismissed with an emphatic negative; for it is impossible to conceive of the heavenly Father asking His children to be or do anything beyond the limits for which his grace qualifies them. The law of both being and doing was declared by the Lord when he graciously said to his servant, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." The Divine service is in the highest sense "reasonable." God is not a slave owner, imposing tasks which it is impossible to perform, and then inflicting punishment at the dictate of an arbitrary will without respect to righteousness. He never asks without first giving. He lays upon us no more than we are able to bear. His ways are righteous, and his mercy is over all his works.

Neither can the second question be answered affirmatively, without disastrous practical consequences. To limit Christian obedience to times and seasons is more than absurd, it is monstrous, for it is a virtual abolition of all Christian obedience. He who obeys Christ when and where, and to what extent he pleases or finds convenient, does not obey Christ at all. However imperfect our obedience may be, that is to say, in the sense of coming short, it must be perfect in relation to its quality. We must have a constant and abiding sense that we are "under law to Christ," and whatever we do must be done for and in reference to him. And the idea that Christian counsels are not to be literally understood, must be rejected without a moment's hesitation. Take this, now, and look at it; look it full in the face without blinking or changing color: "IN EVERY THING GIVE THANKS." We shall come to our third question presently, but must first ask the intelligent reader, who is looking this remarkable precept full in the face, how the thought of partial or occasional compliance with it strikes him. You see the absurdity. It allows no loophole for occasional gratitude. It is a marvelously comprehensive law for the hearts of God's children, and therein consists its blessedness. "In some things give thanks," which is the only sense that partial obedience suggests, is, in reality, no sense at all, for the simple reason that such words would be no law. The worst of men are sometimes moved to gratitude. We have now and then heard a thoroughly sincere "thank God!" from lips that usually have no reverent word for the Holy One; but to say this burst of feeling from a bad man, in recognition of some act of kindness, was in obedience to the Christian precept under notice, would be simply foolish. It was nothing of the kind. The man knew nothing about apostolic precepts, or if he did care nothing for them; so that the professing Christian who gives thanks only for those things that are pleasant to flesh and blood, has really got not much farther on the road to child-like faith and obedience than our poor rough friend whose surprise at your kindness forced him to say, "thank God!"

Now the third question claims notice. To the Church of the Thessalonians Paul, by Divine direction, wrote thus: "In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." To the saints at Ephesus thus: "Give thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." To the brethren at Colosse, thus: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Surely no one will imagine that these injunctions were intended to be of only temporary duration. If the followers of Christ in the three churches named, were under obligation to obey them, so are the followers of Christ now. Union with Christ creates the obligation. That is the standing law of the case; that is the gracious motive power that prompts obedience; and that is the heavenly influence which clothes the law with love. Nor will any thoughtful person suggest that there were circumstances in the case of the early Christians that made it easier for them to give thanks for everything that befell them than it is for us. Easier! Why, if circumstances are to influence the feeling of the heart towards God, men steeped to the lips in affliction might well be excused, from every human point of view, for refusing to "give thanks" for bonds and imprisonments, and every other form of suffering which the genius of merciless persecution could invent. But those grand souls who lived before the Church lost her first love, did not refuse. Nay, it was their joy to obey, and the peace of God was their song in the darkest night of tribulation.

There is a subtle unbelief in many hearts, suggesting that we should walk by sight as much as we can. To walk partly "by faith" is admitted to be right; indeed, it must be done, for in relation to many things there is really no other way of walking. For all "good things," that is to say, things which sight pronounces good, we are, as a matter of course, thankful. Divine Providence is easily credited with things that please us. When our plans of self-advancement succeed, when our worldly property increases, when all things in the domestic circle are pleasant to the eye and music to the ear, and when our name is esteemed in the market place and the church, it requires no great strain upon our piety to trace all this to the kind providence of God. Indeed we begin to think, although we would not venture to put the half-formed thought in so many words, that we are heaven's special favorites, very good children indeed! But let our plans fail, our property decrease, our prayers get no answer, our domestic joy darkened by the heavy clouds of repeated bereavement, and our name cast out as evil for believing some things which "the church" rejects, and rejecting some things which the same imaginary authority is supposed to believe, what then? Is Providence to be recognized in all this? Shall we—can we—give thanks for these things? To both questions Paul, under Divine direction, would have promptly answered "Yes."

In reality, there is no difficulty in giving a clear and satisfactory reason for this prompt Apostolic reply. The sublime meaning of it all is easily apprehended. There is no labored argument required to remove a difficulty, either intellectual or theological. A simple fact solves all, this fact, namely, that the Lord's precepts are given only to the Lord's people. The modern pulpit often speaks as if it wished men of the world to bear Christian fruit, but the writers of the Bible never commit themselves in this way. They knew better. Their idea is in perfect harmony with the Lord's doctrine, that the good fruit is found only on the good tree. The Bible never gives Christian precepts to men who are not Christians; but upon men who belong to Christ, in the high sense of which the Apostolic letters speak, it lays the most sacred obligations to live in the world as Christ did—a life of pure, earnest, unwavering, uncomplaining, child-like faith. Everything must be left to God. They are God's family, his children, his younger born sons, in whom is the life of "the first-born among many brethren," and he has promised to take care of them, to feed and clothe and train them. Their Father's promise should be to them enough, and it is to them enough if they are what they profess. All things work together for their good; this is their grand charter; and He who said this loves them too well to allow anything finally to hurt them. An entire surrender to the will of God means perfect safety, the sanctified influence of all sorrow, and ultimate victory over all evil. The child of God who implicitly trusts his Father, will never be—can never be—forsaken.

"But," says one, "I can't see how this deep sorrow, that has wrung my heart, can be a blessing." No, brother, you can't "see," and, what is more, it is Divinely determined that you shall not see the end of the heavenly discipline through which you are passing. You live by faith, not by sight, and this condition of the Christian life will not be changed until the return from heaven and visible manifestation to his friends of your Redeemer and Lord. You will learn then, to the shame of you present unbelief, that the sorrow which has wrung your heart wrung His heart too. He had no pleasure in chastening you, and felt the deepest sympathy with you in your affliction. But He saw what was hidden from you. The "ages to come" were under his inspection; and he knew that to prepare you for your position and work during those ages he must deal with you as he has done, in a love which never grows cold, and a wisdom that is never at fault; therefore, "in every thing give thanks!"—The Rainbow.

MORE LIGHT WANTED.

I wish some writer for the BIBLE EXAMINER would explain John xvii. 3, which reads thus,— "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." It is often said by our writers none of our race will have their final doom decided till they have been made acquainted with God and his love for our race, and have had the offer of eternal life. It is also said, by our writers, that some, at least, when they obtain this knowledge will, or may, reject Christ, and so lose eternal life.

If these statements are both correct, I want to know what is meant by the above text. If to know the Father and the Son "is life eternal," will any reject Christ?

A similar text is found in Psa. cxxxviii. 4, "All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O Lord, when they hear the words of thy mouth. Yea, they shall sing in the way of the Lord." Do not these and other passages seem to show that IGNORANCE, and not unbelief, is the real cause of the mass of the world rejecting God and religion, in this dispensation? Unbelief seems to be caused by ignorance. Does not the prayer of Christ show this to be the case? "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

We might add to these questions, and ask, — How did our race become thus ignorant by nature? But this would lead us to examine Paul's statement in Rom. viii. 20, "For the creature (creation, Greek,) was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope."

Brethren, let us continue to "grow in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

To me it is far more important to learn what his work is to be when he comes, than to spend time, as many do, to learn the time of his coming.

I yet hope to gain in strength so as to write more fully on the vital points of doctrine named above.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM W. H. WHITMAN.

BRO. STORRS: I have been attending Sunday School nearly all summer and fall very regular, as I am permitted to talk freely in the Bible Class. The Superintendent has given us lessons in John's Gospel. It has been admitted several times by our Bible Class teacher that this was the last Divine book that was written. He has also asserted several times that a great portion of it was "prospective, or preparatory, when written." Now, if this is true, why not conclude that other books, written before it, are also prospective or preparatory? John wrote the Revelation about the year A. D. 96, near the close of the reign of the Emperor Domitian. Then in the reign of Nerva, he wrote his Gospel, and the three Epistles, about the year A. D. 98. Now, if this is true, and it takes the knowledge of a large portion of the Bible in order to save us in heaven as we are taught, what will become of the race that lived before the Bible was all written? Moses wrote near 2500 years after the creation. What did the people do for law, to be saved by, through that 2500 years? Upon what principle can they be saved and make God's ways equal? Who can answer, that opposes the doctrine of "the ages to come?" (Eph. ii. 7.) When God called Abraham out of Ur, and deposited His word with him and his descendants, all others seem to have been excluded, even that great nation from which he was called. Will they all be saved, because they were heathens, and did not have the law of God? If any answer, Yes, then would it not have been better for all the race to be without law? Then all would be saved! If any answer, No; then does it look just in God to condemn them all to "hell," or an unending death, and never let them know what for? He gives you light and knowledge so that you may obtain eternal joys; and deprives them of the great boon, who were as good by nature as yourself, just because they did not obtain what has never been put in their reach!

balance of the Bible was written, and all put in one Book. And when we take a view of the whole Book just as it is, and has been written, it seems that a great portion of it is "prospective, or preparatory." When the Bride of Christ is taken out from all nations, made immortal like her Lord, and take the government of the world, then blessings will begin to flow upon the balance of the race. This seems to be the only solution to these questions.

Galesburg, Ill.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BRO. STORRS: It is with a sad heart I take my pen, and out of the abundance will have to speak. We had one dear brother still in Scotland whom we had not seen for twenty-one years. We hoped he would come to see us, and lately expected him soon. About a month ago we had a letter saying he was dangerously ill, and the next, one week ago to-day, 2d Nov., a telegram, saying, "Your brother died this morning."

O, death, how long wilt thou reign? Is there hope in his death? hope that will meet him in the morning? Only in the pray of faith. He was a child of many prayers all his life. We had a mother who warned her children night and day with tears; and father also. That mother has been sleeping in Jesus over thirty years, but her prayers are not dead.

Strange to say, just about two months ago, while praying for this brother, I had a confidence that he would be converted this winter, and spoke of it several times. Some might say, it was only a delusion, but I cannot feel so, for the Word says, "This is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us. And if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him." What could be plainer? And Jesus said, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." I believe it, and then leave all in the hands of the Lord, knowing he doeth all things well.

I long for Jesus to come. Then "there will be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

Sorrowful, yet rejoicing.

Waukesha, Wis., Nov., 1876.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BRO. STORRS: With mind unwavering, will I engage, in spite of failing vigor and of age; nor quit the combat of truth against antichristian error till I quit the stage. Things that should be known by all the world. Immortality in the present state a positive evil. The CREATOR having arranged the foundation of the world, in the sentence pronounced on man, for transgression, commenced the preparation of the kingdom in the stipulations of a new law. The man had become "as the ELOHIM to know good and evil."

His calamity, great as it was, was not so great but that a greater might befall him, even in Paradise. If he was now permitted to eat of the tree of life he would be placed in a still more deplorable state. He now knew good and evil; but his case was not hopeless; deliverance could reach him. But if he should take of the tree of life his hope would be cut off, and he would live always in sorrow and pain. Job had some experience of such a state in his distress when he said, "When I say, my bed shall comfort me, my couch shall ease my complaint; then thou scareth me with dreams, and terrifieth me through visions; so that my soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life, for my days are vanity." If Adam had eaten of the tree of life, when reduced to such misery as this he would have sought death, but it would have fled from him: he would found no deliverance. To prevent such a catastrophe to a designed race, the Lord God made access to the tree of life impossible; thus preventing a present immortality. The finality of creation, providence and redemption was designed to be,—man upon the earth, glorious, honorable and immortal in a state of unmingled good. It was because God loved man, and out of mercy to him, that He drove him out of the Garden. Any other view dishonors the CREATOR, and makes him like the heathen Moloch, who devoured the helpless children sacrificed to him. God's love is manifested in His efforts to bring men into reconciliation to Himself. Not by terror—which the "Apostacy" employs; but by giving His only begotten Son to redeem and save men from all the ruinous consequences of sin.

Men, ignorant of "the exceeding great and precious promises" relating to the kingdom of God, lead others to think it is only by terror they can be led to "get religion," as they call it. Hence they use, mainly, all the terrible pictures of misery and woe, in the power of their imaginations, to accomplish their object. "Religion" got by such a process is worthless: it lacks the elements of humility and love. It may, indeed, restrain some from open acts of wickedness, but most likely will harden the heart and prove the ultimate ruin of its possessor by preventing the development of love, for, "he that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is LOVE." 1 John iv. 8.

FROM ALFRED ANNABLE.

BRO. STORRS: I have never, I believe, written one word of commendation or encouragement to you in the management of the EXAMINER and the great truths which it promulgates. It is not because I have been insensible to the fact, for I was with you at Springfield, in 1871, when you were virtually cast out of the "Life and Advent Union." But you had my warm sympathy, notwithstanding I could not see clearly with you on some points,—such as past generations to have a resurrection, etc.; but if "the whole house of Israel" is to have a resurrection, why not all the nations? for God is "no respecter of persons."

Never did I have such exalted views of our Father in heaven till I have studied these new and sanctifying truths. Who would wish to escape from His rule, His discipline, and His protection?

I have great joy and comfort in anticipating the soon coming of the Lord. Not that I am looking for His manifestation to the world and the nations in glory, at present; but the rapture of the church when he will come secretly, as he went away from the Mount of Olives, and as he told his disciples to lift up their heads when they begin to see these things come to pass: not when they have already come to pass. And as Moses was commanded to go up into the mountain with two clean tables of stone, and to go up secretly, not to be seen by man or beast, very early in the morning; and the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him in the top of the mountain; and put Moses in the cleft of the rock. The man-child of Revelation, who was caught up safely to the throne of God before the great judgment should come, who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron, I think, is no other than the church as one with their Lord.

No wonder Paul had a desire to depart and be with the Lord, which is far better. No doubt he was looking for the Lord at that time; for he said, "We shall not all sleep," etc. The Thessalonians were very much troubled, it seems, lest the day of the Lord, with all its judgments, was upon them, while they had not been caught away first to meet their Lord. But Paul comforts them by the Lord's coming, and of being gathered together unto Him. There would come the falling away; that would usher in the day of the Lord.

Christ is represented as "the bright and morning Star;" a beautiful emblem of Christ's coming early in the morning and secretly for His Church. O the glories that are laid up for those of His Church that are faithful! Who will not strive for the best gifts and a union with their Lord?

Manchester, Dec., 1876.

A FRIEND AND HIS WIFE from San Francisco, Cal., called on me in October last, and spent an hour at my house. After their return, they wrote me as follows:

BRO. STORRS: We arrived safe home. Thank the Lord for the visit we made you, and for the glorious truths we received at your house, through tracts, books, etc. We are happy in having such a heavenly Father who has promised that all men shall have one opportunity for salvation. The BIBLE EXAMINER we love next to the Bible. The good news of the kingdom is spreading. Honest men and women gladly receive the news of "the ages to come," where Jesus shall reign. Truly, "God is Love." The personal spirit-devil was the hardest thing to give up. We had so long put our own evil on him that we could hardly let him go. Now we see clearly: the Bible is a new book to us; Jesus more precious, and the love of God is greater than ever before. We will work more now for Bible truth than we ever did. We are glad we were compelled to leave self-styled "Adventists." Yours, in Christ.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Some of these Advent preachers call the views of "GEO. STORRS' dumbable heresy." The same spirit crucified the Lord Jesus; but may we all, who are thus reproached, remember the Saviour's prayer, for his murderers, on the cross: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." May the Lord bless them with light in their minds and grace in their hearts. Sooner or later, I trust He will.

N. L. THAYER, Wisconsin, writes: With the exception of the Bible, I prize the BIBLE EXAMINER more highly than all other periodicals of the age. It opens up the Scriptures to my mind so that the future looks not only harmonious, but glorious. I can say that I agree with your views generally, and am very much interested in Henry Dunn's writings. I love the truth which so satisfies and makes us free indeed. May the blessing of God continue with you till your work is done.

JOHN P. ROLLER, Colorado, writes: I would sooner deprive myself of any other comfort than to do without the BIBLE EXAMINER; for, its teachings are meat and drink for me. It is a welcome messenger, and I should regret very much to do without it.

G. B. STACY, Virginia, after speaking of various trials, writes: To be conscious that the Divine Father has "revealed his Son in us," and that He liveth in us; and that the life we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God; so that the Christ is manifested in our mortal flesh, while we are constituted "members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones;" at present conscious of our paternity, and of the fact that we are thereby heirs of our Father's kingdom and glory, is all-sufficient to make us, —under any and every set of circumstances it may please our Father to surround us, for our correction and education,—to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory," whilst we "walk by faith and not by sight;" and "looking not at the things which are seen, but at those which are unseen," we "press towards the mark for the prize of our high calling," steadfastly, unmovedly abounding in the work of the Lord. Let us rejoice together, because we are able to wait with confidence for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body, and the complete deliverance of this groaning creation from the bondage of its corruption "into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God."

ELD. J. LEWIS, Grafton, Ill., writes: Some of my friends have turned away from me because I have advanced, and am increasing in light on the plan of God in regard to "the ages to come;" that He will have all men come unto the knowledge of the truth. I would like to ask, how all can come to know the truth if the untold millions who have died without the means to know it are never to have the necessary means? and how those means are ever to be in their possession if there is no probation in "the ages to come?" As there is but one plan of redemption, and that is by "faith," how can they have faith without evidence, seeing that faith is confidence; and how can they have confidence in Him of whom they have never heard nor seen? But they will see Him; and "As soon as they hear of me they shall obey Me." Psa. xviii. 44. For God has made Him "the head of the heathen:" verse 43. "A people whom I have not known shall serve Me." So the truth stands out in bold relief that all of Adam's race who have not had the knowledge of the Redeemer must and will have an opportunity to hear and obey in the ages to come. See Rom. x. 14, 15. I feel as though I must be out in the field to work for my Master. My friends, who still stand up for the truth, desire me to visit them with the glad tidings. But I have no means to help me on my way, and hence am obliged to stay at home, hoping and praying that our heavenly Father will send help in his own good time.

IN MEMORIAM.

MISS SARAH C., daughter of THOMAS and ELIZA REDHEAD, of Brooklyn, N. Y., "fell asleep in Jesus," Dec. 4, 1876.

Thus has fallen under the dominion of death, for a short time, one who had many enjoyments, and who was in the morning of life; one who had endeared herself to all by her mild and cheerful disposition; her faithfulness and devotion in all her family relations, and fidelity to friends. Her sickness was long and exceedingly painful; which she endured with great patience, submission, and trust in God.

It had been her hope to live to be a comfort to her father and mother as they passed along into age and infirmity. Her heavenly Father suffered it to be otherwise. Her hope and belief in the resurrection and the return of Christ from heaven was strong and unwavering; it was her solace and comfort in the midst of great pain and weariness, and she longed to sleep, resting assured it would be but a little while before Jesus would appear, death be destroyed, and the Christian crowned with life and immortality unending.

The EDITOR of the EXAMINER improved the funeral occasion forcibly to bring to mind the conversation of Jesus with Martha and Mary before reaching the grave of Lazarus, and at the grave, showing His tenderness and sympathy of heart with those in sorrow and suffering; proving also from the case of Lazarus and other Scripture testimony, that death is a state of unconsciousness,—and not, as some teach, "death is the gate to endless joy," and, that when one dies, is ushered immediately into heaven, to "spirit-land," or some other unknown place: also, the EDITOR plainly brought to mind, from the writings of the apostles the truth of a literal resurrection from the dead, otherwise the Christian has perished hopelessly, and all are yet in their sins.

May this bereavement prove a means of blessing to all; to the brother and sister left behind, as well as to the parents. May all walk in the footsteps of the loved one as she followed Christ.

"She will sleep, but not forever;

There will be a glorious dawn.

We shall meet to part, no, never,

On the resurrection morn.

MRS. M. W. S.

 ELDER S. W. BISHOP will preach in Newark, N. J., Sundays the 7th and 14th of January, 1877. the Lord willing.

Mrs. LIDE RANSOM, Kansas, late from Illinois, writes: I cannot think of doing without the EXAMINER: it is all the Gospel preaching I have. The Methodists preach here: but they preach the same old story of endless torments and immortal souls; and if one ventures to say anything to the contrary the "mad-dog" cry is raised, and people are warned against it as being a dangerous heresy. Why is it, when people have so many advantages to learn, and do learn every thing else, that they are so blinded to the truth? Since I came here I have not met with any believers in "the ages to come." There are some "Adventists;" but they are almost as far behind on the truth of the Bible as the other sects. Your sister in Christ.

A BROTHER, lately from New England, now at Galveston, Texas, writes: It looks to me that this part of the country is a large field to work in, as nearly all the teaching the people have is "hell-fire." I hope you will remember us in your prayers, that the Lord may be with us to enable us to do His work as good and faithful stewards, that we may hear it said to us, "Well done," etc.

A DIVINITY DOCTOR WASHING SHIRTS.—Mr. Demond's William's College Alumni Address contains this incident:

"After the battle of Antietam, a gentleman passing over the field of blood, saw a man washing at a brook; as he came near he recognized a Doctor of Divinity, the pastor of one of the largest churches in Philadelphia, and a Delegate. Said he:

"Doctor, what are you doing?"

"The doctor straightened up, and pointing with his finger said:

"Over yonder are six hundred wounded men; most of them lying in the bloody shirts in which they were wounded. Our shirts are out, and we shall have none till to-morrow: so I thought I would take a few of the worst out here and wash and dry them in the sun. Do you think there is any harm in it?"

"Said the gentlemen:

"Doctor, I know God has blessed you abundantly in your work in Philadelphia, but I do not think the Master ever looked upon any act of your life with more pleasure than upon this."

"I believe it," said the Doctor, and turned to his washing."

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

 The Sermon "God is Love," has been somewhat revised, and is now published in a "BIBLE EXAMINER EXTRA," as it appeared in the EXAMINER for January, except most of that "Introduction" is omitted, and all of the "Appendix." These omissions are made in order to bring the Sermon into four pages. Only one thousand copies have been printed. They will be sold at two cents single copy; or, 15 copies for 20 cents.

No more of the Sermon in Pamphlets will be printed, and it is withdrawn from our list of Pamphlets on the last page. Those who would like to read or circulate it should order it soon.

GEO. STOKES.

 All persons who read the EXAMINER will bear in mind the standing testimony on the first page, that the Editor will not be responsible for the sentiments of Correspondents; and his position is not to be judged by theirs, but by his own editorials. He intends to give the largest liberty of expression to others that the EXAMINER's columns will permit; and none are excluded for the reason that they differ from the Editor, either by being in advance or in the rear of his position: a free interchange of views, in a Christian spirit, can do no candid inquirer after truth any harm. Let every writer's views be brought to the test of the Bible in its general tenor and the known attributes of God our Creator. Sectarianism with its traditions will do nothing towards promoting a scriptural and rational view of the character of God and His government over the creatures He has made. Let the traditions of men "go to the moles and the bats," who either have no eyes to see, or "love darkness rather than light."

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

1. For one new subscriber, with $2, I will give an unbound volume, of either 16, 17, 18, or 19, as they may choose.

2. For three new subscribers, with $6, he shall receive, unbound, all four of the volumes 16, 17, 18, and 19; or, if he prefers it, he shall have either volume 18 or 19 bound.

3. For five new subscribers, with $10, he shall receive both volumes 18 and 19, bound.

4. For eight new subscribers, with $15, he shall receive all three of volumes 18, 19, and 20, bound.

In all the offers, the persons who claim the premiums must pay the mail or Express charges on the bound works sent them.

VOLUMES 18, 19, or 20 of this Magazine will be furnished in plain morocco and gilt binding (to any who may desire it), at short notice. PRICE, $3.25 per volume free of postage; or, $3 when called for or sent by Express.

TO CLUBS FOR VOL. XXI.

FOUR copies will be sent to one address for $5.

TEN will be sent to one address for $10.

Those who take ten copies, may have them sent in two parcels of 5 copies each to two different persons; but I cannot consent to let clubs be divided into less than five copies to one address. If clubs are obtained, and it is wished to send a part of the copies to single individuals, 25 cents, each, must be added to cover my additional expense in the work of mailing.

Please do not forget this.

To accommodate those who cannot obtain a club of 5, I will send two copies to one address for $3.

 Those who intend to have the Bound BIBLE EXAMINER, Vol. 20, must apply for them soon; for I cannot supply many more of that volume. I have no perfect sets unbound of Vol. 20, to part with. I have some odd Nos. of it. Bound volumes 18 and 19 I can supply to any who wish them for $2 per volume, or $1 unbound.

POSTAGE.—The new law on printed matter is as follows: "On transient newspapers, magazines, and all kinds of printed matter, except circulars, ONE cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof." A new privilege is also granted: the sender may write his or her name and address on the inside or on the outside wrapper, preceded by the word "From."

CORRESPONDENCE.

O. H. HAMMOND, Iowa, writes: I have been furnished with a few numbers of the BIBLE EXAMINER the summer past; and of all the religious periodicals published in the U. S., purporting to set forth our most precious faith, that I have read, (and that is quite a number), none in my estimation has come to up to the high standard of Bible truth and wisdom as the EXAMINER, and I am well pleased with it, and wish to become a subscriber.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

1. WHAT was its design? 2. How frequent its use?

To the first question, the answer is comparatively easy. The second is not so readily answered. This is evident from the fact that Christians have been and are still divided about it. Some observe it once a month; others once in two or three months; others contend for its weekly observance; and these last seem to have most argument in favor of their view. I think, however, they are mistaken. Their argument, so far as it is derived from the Bible, all turns on the expression "break bread." Does that warrant a weekly communion? or, indeed, the eating the Lord's Supper at all?

Their argument is based mainly on two texts. First: Acts ii. 42; where it is said, believers "continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking bread." This is coupled with Acts xx. 7, where it is said, "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread," etc. These are the chief, if not the only, texts produced in proof of the weekly celebration of the Lord's Supper. Do they sustain such a view? Let us see.

Does the expression "breaking bread" prove it was the Lord's Supper? If so, then it equally proves it was done "daily:" for Acts ii. 46, saith, "They continued daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house." Was this eating the Lord's Supper? Just as certainly as "breaking bread," in the 42d verse, means the Lord's Supper, so does this in the 46th verse; and so it is not only on the "first day of the week," but "daily" it is to be attended to: one of the positions is just as strong as the other.

We shall, perhaps, find that neither can be sustained. The phrase "break bread" was in common use as related to ordinary eating. Matt. xiv. 19, it is said, when Jesus fed the multitude, "He took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, He blessed and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude." Mark vi. 41, the same form of expression is recorded; also, another feeding of the multitudes, Mark viii. 6, the same expression is used. Luke ix. 16, the same form is used: "He took the loaves and brake them." None will pretend here was the Lord's Supper. Compare these texts with the injunction, "Whether, therefore, ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

When Paul was carried prisoner to Rome, and had been fourteen days in peril by sea, after long abstinence he besought the ship's company to take something to eat, and "He took bread, and gave thanks to God, in the presence of them all; and when he had broken it, he began to eat." Here were 266 souls that eat of the "broken bread." Was it the Lord's Supper?

Again: Jesus appeared to two of his disciples on their way to Emmaus, after his resurrection; and while they were eating at Emmaus, "He took bread and blessed it, and break, and gave to them;" then "they knew him." Immediately they return to Jerusalem, and tell their brethren "what was done in the way, and how He was made known to them in breaking of bread." Was this the Lord's Supper? Surely not; for Jesus had said to the disciples, at that Supper, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom" (Matt. xxvi. 29). Some peculiarity in His ordinary manner of breaking bread was what "opened their eyes" to know him.

His method at common meals was to "break bread," as I have abundantly shown: and the phrase was no more applicable to the Lord's Supper than to any other and all other social meals, especially as the use of wine is not once named. Hence, no argument built on this form of words, standing alone, is of any weight in settling the question of the frequency of the celebration of the Supper. In the only instance where this form is used, in connection with "the first day of the week," it was not till a late hour of the night the breaking of bread occurred: for though it is said, the disciples came together to break bread, it is stated that Paul preached unto them till "midnight;" and because he continued his speech "long" a young man went to sleep, and "fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead." Paul went down and restored him to life. It is then added, "When he was come up again, and broken bread and eaten, and talked till break of day, so he departed." Nothing is said of the use of wine in this case nor in Acts ii. 42. Surely an important omission, if it was really the Lord's Supper.

Whether this coming together to break bread was an ordinary social entertainment, called "feasts of charity," (Jude xii.), often held by the early Christians, for the benefit of the poor, and for the social expression of a common brotherhood, or for the purpose of celebrating the Lord's Supper, it is impossible to tell from any Scripture record. If it was the latter, it does not prove that such was their practice every first day of the week: the regular season for it, might, on this occasion, have fallen on that day: and it is clear it was not at the early part of their meeting, but at a late hour of the night that breaking bread actually occurred. If it was the ordinary "feast of charity," the breaking of bread might have taken place both early and late.

I have now prepared the way to come more directly to the inquiry as to the frequency and time of the celebration of this feast.

"For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Cor. v. 7.) This text opens up the subject under consideration, and may serve as a key to it. Christ is set forth as he truly is, as the anti-typical passover Lamb. Hence, in order to understand the question at issue, we must examine the passover institution. We turn to Exodus xii.

The Lord was about to pass through Egypt and slay all the first-born of the land. He directs Moses to have the children of Israel take a lamb, on the tenth day of the month, and "kill it in the evening." Then they were to take of its "blood and strike it on the two side-posts and on the upper door-posts of the houses wherein they shall eat it"—the passover lamb. They were to eat it with their loins girded, their shoes on, and their staff in their hands. They were told, "The blood shall be to you a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt: and this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast forever." They were to put away all leaven out of their habitations, and eat no leavened bread during this feast. Of the passover, it is said, "In one house shall it be eaten: thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house: neither shall ye break a bone thereof." An evident prophecy, by a fact, of Christ's death without breaking a bone of Him. John refers distinctly to this prophecy, when speaking of the fact, that His legs were not broken with the malefactors': "These things were done," saith John, "that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken." Thus Jesus is identified as the anti-type of the passover lamb.

Concerning this passover feast, it is thus ordained—"Thou shalt keep this ordinance in its season, from year to year:" and, "it shall be a sign unto thee," . . . "and for a memorial between thine eyes; that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth; for with a strong hand hath the Lord brought thee out of Egypt." (Ex. xiii. 1-10. See the whole text.)

Having thus briefly contemplated the passover institution, we find it established as a yearly feast, an anniversary one, commemorative of the Lord's deliverance of Israel, and the slaying of the passover lamb. It was only once in each year the feast was to be celebrated.

The relation of this type to the anti-type will now be considered. In order to do this, we must examine the institution of the Lord's Supper. That it was instituted at the passover, none will question. Of the particulars, Luke's account is the most full. We may notice, it seemed necessary Jesus' death should occur at the passover; and when He sent his disciples to prepare for the passover, He bid them say to the man, where they went for that purpose, "My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples;" (Matt. xxvi. 18.) When he was set down, and the disciples, "He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer." (Luke xxii. 15.)

There must have been a special reason for this intense desire to eat "this passover." What reason so likely as that the institution itself, as a type, was to end by the anti-typical Lamb being slain? and hence, Jesus would take the occasion to make such alteration in the institution as should make it correspond to the fact. The passover feast was always kept in the night, and probably lasted most of the night. After the lamb was eaten, and at the close of the supper, a portion of bread and wine, which had been reserved, was used as the conclusion of the service, after which a hymn was sung, and they parted. See Mark xiv. 26. It seems the reserve portion of the passover feast, was that used in the institution of the Lord's Supper. Jesus had told his disciples while eating the passover, "I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God;" and also, "I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." (Luke xxii. 16-18.) He then proceeds with the concluding part of the passover service, "And He took bread and gave thanks, and break it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do"—this what? this concluding service of the passover—"in remembrance of me." There is to be no lamb used in this service hereafter—for the true Lamb is now to be "sacrificed for us:" hence that part of the passover service is hereafter to be omitted, but "this" breaking the bread and eating of it, as the symbol of His "body given for you," is to remain in use "in remembrance of" Him, and to "show forth His death:" see Luke xxii. 19, and 1 Cor. xi. 26.

"Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup"—what cup? that which concluded the passover, supper and hence called "after supper," i. e., the closing of it—"This cup is the new testament"—the new covenant, in distinction from the old, under which the passover had been established permanently, but was now to give place to a new covenant. "This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you," and Matthew says, "for many, for the remission of sins."

All the circumstances go to show, that the Saviour instructed his disciples, that at the recurrence of the yearly anniversary of the passover they were, hereafter, to attend to "this" concluding service only, and to do it in remembrance of Him.

If these things are so, it is plain, the yearly anniversary of Christ's death, or of the slaying of the true passover Lamb, is the true and only authorized time for the celebration of the Lord's Supper.

Because the Saviour is represented as saying, "This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me," some infer, they may do it as "oft" as they choose. But it strikes my mind, this is a misapprehension of our Lord's words. "As oft as ye" do what? "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup." What bread? and what cup? To me it seems clear, it is the bread and cup which concluded the passover feast: all the other parts of that service then passed away; but Christ retains "this" to be used in remembrance of himself as "our passover, who was sacrificed for us."

It appears to me, the coming together of a number of believers, who can conveniently assemble, at the anniversary of Christ's death, and partaking of a moderate festival, and conversing together, suitably contemplating the fact of their redemption by Christ, the Lamb of God, and concluding the interview by the use of bread and wine, reserved for that purpose, and singing a hymn of praise at parting, is just what is a gospel celebration, or commemoration of our redemption from sin and death by "Christ our passover, who was sacrificed for us."

To suppose the first day of each week was selected to attend to the memorial of Christ's death, or to "shew forth His death," involves an absurdity which has been entirely overlooked. Any celebration on that day, would manifestly have been appropriate only as a memorial of Jesus' resurrection; and it would have been entirely out of place to have kept a memorial of His death on the day of His revival into life; and I could not admit such a supposition without positive proof, which cannot be found in the Bible.

P. S. "The Jews concluded their passover by giving every person a piece of bread and a cup of wine; so Christ, though He set aside, as the nature of his office required, the rites enjoined by Moses in that ordinance which He had been commemorating, yet retained the bread and cup added by the Jews."—DR. EADIE'S BIBLICAL CY., p. 355.

I am informed by my friend LEDERER that the true time of "the Passover, this year, happens on Wednesday evening of the 28th day of March, being the first full moon after the equinox." Myself and family intend to observe that evening for the LORD'S SUPPER." Particular notice will be given next month.

THE "EASTERN QUESTION."

The above "question" has occupied the pens of a number of Adventists almost continually, as if it was the grand theme to stir one another up to look for the "Battle of Armageddon," and therefore the immediate second coming of Christ.

I have said but little on the subject, because of these unnatural excitements. In the EXAMINER for November last, I stated my disbelief of the idea of the present conflict about Turkey being likely to bring on the "Battle of Armageddon" immediately. It may prepare the way for Judah and Israel to repossess the "land wherein their fathers have dwelt." (Ezk. xxxvii. 25.) This is to take place and they be dwelling in peace and prospering, (Ezk. xxxviii. 8), when the invasion by Gog and his confederates takes place. It is not till then the Armageddon battle comes on; so I believe. Turkey is decaying, and has been for many years past; but the process has been slow, and may still be a protracted event; yet, Russia may soon possess herself of Constantinople, and thus stir up England to move in the restoration of Judah and Israel into Palestine. Then years may pass before the battle spoken of will occur.

The grand mistake which has, and still does bewilder Adventists, in this country, is the supposition that the immediate consequence of the second coming of Christ is a crash of all mundane things. Hence the labor, by that class of them, to keep up excitement in relation to it, and a catching at any and every event that seems to indicate such a crash.

From an article that appeared some little time since in The Rainbow, I give the following closing remarks, and commend them to the careful consideration of alarmists, and such as seem in a hurry to have the world in a blaze of war and ruin. The writer speaks as follows:

"But what evidence is there that the decay of Turkey is an event which immediately precedes the Advent? Is not Rev. xvi. 12 followed by the gathering of the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to the battle of the great day of God Almighty? No one will affirm that this gathering has commenced; for, with the exception of Turkey, peace prevails almost everywhere at present. True, this gathering may begin even before the power of Turkey passes away; but from the sequence of events intimated in the passage, it is just as likely that Turkey will cease to exist before the gathering begins. Then the time such a gathering will occupy, and that particular stage of it—if not at its very close—at which the Advent shall take place, are questions which require to be answered before the fall of Turkey can be of any practical use as a sign. And considering the attitude of the great powers of Europe towards each other, it is quite possible that the existence of Turkey may be prolonged in Europe for a considerable period.

"The giving so much prominence to political events as signs of the Lord's coming, seems to me to tend to the neglect of the repeated warnings given to watch because the time is unknown, and to say with the evil servant (in his heart), 'My Lord delayeth his coming.' We stand directly related, not to Christ's public appearing with his saints, but to that earlier and probably private meeting which shall take place at the resurrection when he comes, at the initial stage of his advent, to meet his saints. No foreknowledge of the events of that time and their order can give us notice of the resurrection: to which point all our watching should be directed—a watching not for signs, but to maintain the necessary character of those who wait for, look for, and love his appearing." ED.

"NOT SATISFIED."

SOME people suppose because they are "not satisfied" with the exposition of a text, or with the defense of a doctrine, that therefore it is not true; and they return with the same objections and the same texts and demand that we give them some other argument or explanation. The man that undertakes to "satisfy all objectors," will find he has engaged in a hopeless task. Inveterate prejudices, traditionary ideas, and the pride of one's own opinion, all or either of them, form a battlement or shield that it is next to impossible to overcome; and however strong we may attack their position, they have determined "never to surrender." Like the ancient Jews they want additional evidence, till they cry out, "Come down from the cross and we will believe." It is impossible to reach such minds by any amount of evidence; they are not to be convinced; and it is useless to spend time arguing with them; though they may think, because you determine not to spend your time in such a course, you cannot "come down from the cross" on which they fancy they have fixed you. The direction of our Lord on one occasion is the only course to be taken with such persons after we have candidly presented our views, viz., "Let them alone." Keep to our work, if satisfied that God has called us to it, and not waste time in repeating to the same person arguments which you know they are "not satisfied" with. We are, happily, not obliged to satisfy everybody; and the task is hopeless. Proclaim what you regard to be the truth of God and leave the matter with Him. "What if some do not believe?" It has always been so and always will be, to the end of this age.

The above has been my course, with some cavillers. It is manifest to me that they have had sufficient evidence if they were in a state of mind to be benefitted by evidence; and we might as well spend time to convince some rejectors of the Bible, itself, that the Book is given us of God to guide us in the way of life: they will not believe. "Let them alone," then, and leave them to their own master.

With sincere inquirers after truth—and it is generally easy to discern who are such by the spirit they manifest—we are to have all patience, and give them, if need be, "line upon line;" but at a certain point, it is best sometimes to leave them to digest what has already been said, rather than to multiply words with them. ED.

DOES "ALL" MEAN A "FEW"?

I have said all means the mass, or a majority, and never the minority. To say otherwise is to destroy all sense and meaning to words and to make faith an impossibility. Let us look at a few examples. "The LORD made heaven, earth and sea, and all that in them is." (Exo. xx. 11.) "Thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all the things that are therein, and thou preserveth them all." (Neh. ix. 6.) "All are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." (Eccl. iii. 20.)

What sense would there be in any of these texts if you substitute the word few for all? Does not any one see the meaning would not only be obscured but destroyed? But again, "This poor widow did cast in all that she had, even all her living." (Mark xii. 43, 44.) Does that mean her "two mites" were only a small part of all that she had,—a few mites out of the many she kept back? Was Jesus so ignorant as to say "all," when it was no such thing?

"The LORD is good to all:" (does that mean a few?) "and his tender mercies are over all his works." (Psa. cxiv. 9.) That means, does it, His tender mercies are over a few of his works? "Thou hast given Him power over all flesh." (John xvii. 2.) Does that mean over a few? "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." (Luke xxiv. 26.) Are not these words applicable to such as construe the word "all" to mean only a few? "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded to them in all the Scriptures" (Old Testament, of course, for the New was not written) "the things concerning himself." He did not tell them, all meant a few. Such teaching was reserved for the apostacy; and it is much to be regretted that professed Protestants still wear a part of the Harlot's attire.

"He gave himself a ransom for all." (1 Tim. ii. 6.) "O, no," cries out a transformer, "He only gave himself a ransom for a few," possibly only "for those under the law of Moses." Where will such assumption's land us? What shall we believe? Who can tell what is said, when all means only a few? Who can say that they are of the few? And if not of the few, who will dare to believe that God loved them when it is said He "loved the world," as that expression only means He loved a few? And when we are told that "Christ is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world," (1 John ii. 2), it don't mean that he "tasted death for every man," (Heb. ii. 9), but only for a few! Such is the perversion of the "Scriptures of truth" practiced by such as manifest a determination to sustain a theory at all hazards.

But there is little hope of such men being benefitted by anything that can be said; others, however, may be saved from error by the exposure of such assumptions. Once more, it may be said, to say that the words "all" and "every" are used in the Bible to mean any less than a majority, or that they are used to designate a few as opposed to the mass, is a most manifest perversion of the truth, and makes revelation no revelation and a mass of deception, destroying faith. ED.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS."

THE above text is sometimes quoted in a manner hardly justifiable. It should not be separated from its connection; or, regardless of the teaching of the context. The language is as follows: "The times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts iii. 21.) The first thing to consider is, What is a "restitution?" The proper idea of it is "The act of restoring any thing to its rightful owner, or making good, or of giving an equivalent for any loss, damage or injury; indemnification."—Webster.

The race lost, by the act of Adam, a perfectly unembarrassed trial for an enduring life; and this was for no sin or offence of the race. If, then, all the race are restored to an unembarrassed state of trial for an endless life, with the advantage of the experience of the sufferings sin brings in its train, is there not a perfect restitution?

Has the mouth of the Lord, or of his prophets, "spoken" of any other restitution to the race, as a whole? That God has promised things over and beyond a "restitution," to obedient believers, is true. But those things do not pertain to the restitution, but arise from the circumstances and the improvement of them made by free agents after as well as before the restitution.

It may, perhaps, be safely doubted whether any of the race have the trial which absolutely fixes their final state till after the restitution, except such as have entered the "strait gate and walked in the narrow way." These "cannot die any more;" others may die again if they fail in their trial proper, after the restitution.

I only suggest these thoughts that all may be guarded in their conclusions as to the final salvation into an endless life of every individual of the human race. I hold, that if any finally and hopelessly perish, it will be because they "sin wilfully after they have received the knowledge of the truth." That such a sin is possible, I see no reason to doubt. Ed.

REMARKABLE PRESERVATION.

Mr. James McBride took up from their burial places, in Potosi, Wis., the remains of seven persons, all of one family by the name of Hough, and brought them here for interment. On taking them up he found the bones of the body of Mr. Hough—his wife's father—who had been buried over twenty-seven years ago, perfectly preserved, and his burial clothes were entirely whole, as when first buried. The very polish on the neck-tie was strongly apparent, and the cloth itself was so strong he could not tear it. The hair, some of which Mr. McBride secured, was as beautiful and lustrous as when in life.

The foregoing statement is from the "Dubuque Times" of Dec. 17, 1871; connected with a sketch of the life of Mr. Hough, the person spoken of. Judge of my feelings as I recognized a friend and playmate of my youth in the person of Mr. Hough. We were both born and brought up in Lebanon, N. H., he being about two years my senior. We lived less than a mile apart, and spent many hours together, prior to the ages of sixteen and eighteen. About that time he left for Boston, and I never saw him again. He went into a Mercantile life, and I remained on a farm, some ten or twelve years later, and then entered the Ministry. Of his subsequent history I remained in ignorance till now, except I heard that he died in Wisconsin some years ago. The sketch of his life that accompanied the above statement was of deep interest to me, though nothing is said of his religious character, but the highest praise is given of his integrity and uprightness in business transactions. He is spoken of as a "noble specimen of manhood." Even that rejoices my heart when I reflect upon our intimate connection in childhood and youth. Ed.

THE "FIVE BRETHREN:" WHO ARE THEY.

"Will you please inform me, through the EXAMINER, who the five brethren are spoken of in Luke xvi. 28?" K.

Parables, as DR. ADAM CLARKE somewhere says, "are not to be made to go on all fours, like a beast." Expressions are employed in them that have no literal existence. In the first place, the "rich man" is but a parabolical illustration of a people, viz., the Jews, who were about to be cut off nationally and to pass through great sorrows and sufferings without relief for centuries, though claiming Abraham for their "father." The five brethren are introduced into the parable to teach the fact that the Jewish nation had in "Moses and the Prophets" so much light and instruction as to make them inexcusable for rejecting the Messiah, of whom they all spake so clearly: and if they would not believe their writings, neither would they believe "though one rose from the dead." The Saviour said to the Jews, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (John v. 46, 47.

Christ rose from the dead, and then the Jews would not "be persuaded" that He was the Messiah Moses and the Prophets spake of: hence their "impassable gulf" was to be perpetuated till Jerusalem should cease to "be trodden down of the Gentiles." Ed.

J. B. EGGLESTON, Conn., writes: I was never more interested in the BIBLE EXAMINER than at the present. It is "hard times" with me for work. I do not earn enough to get what I once called the "necessaries of life;" but I would sooner be without many things I once thought were the necessities of life than not to have the EXAMINER go on its glorious mission. I keep the bound volumes circulating wherever I find any that will read; and I give away all the monthly issue as soon as I have done with them.

THE REDEMPTION OF THE WORLD.

PRELIMINARY.

Does any revelation of Scripture forbid the hope that many in the age or dispensation to come, will find mercy, and—though it be in dishonor—attain to better things than they loved and followed on earth?

Not a single passage can be found which is calculated to close this door of hope. Any contrary supposition must rest on the notion—altogether unsupported by Scripture—that there can be no union to Christ short of the highest; that the Gospel has no work to accomplish on the earth beyond the salvation of the elect, and the condemnation of the rest; that the Redeemer can bestow no spiritual blessedness upon any creature whom He does not identify with Himself; that "the salvation of the Church"—little flock though it be, even to the last—is a term equivalent in breadth and compass to the "creating" of "all things new."

If it be so, where is the reality and truthfulness of the assurances so frequently given in Scripture, that Christ is "the Saviour of the world;" that the object of His coming was "that the world through Him might be saved;" that His lifting up should "draw all men" unto Him; that "God our Saviour will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth;" that Jesus suffered, "that He, by the grace (favor) of God should taste death for every man;" that "He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world?"

There is but one way in which the force of these texts can be evaded, and that is by asserting that if they mean anything beyond the possibility of all men being saved who here repent and believe, they teach Universalism,—the final salvation of every man, do what he will and be what he may. But is this mode of reasoning either truthful or honorable to God? It is neither. Let us then thankfully accept the statements of Scripture as they stand, and rejoice that the same Saviour who reveals the glory of the elect, reveals also the redemption of the race.—EDITOR.

THE REDEEMER.

The promise involved in the mystic prophecy that the seed of the woman should bruise the ser-pent's head, in due time found its fulfilment in the birth of the Redeemer.

Ancient seers had long anticipated the advent of this Deliverer, in language glowing with expectation and delight. The angels announce His birth to the shepherds as "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Heaven re-echoes with the song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to man." He is "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of His people Israel." He is "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Such is the gladdening and UNIVERSAL ASPECT of man's redemption.

But it has also an INDIVIDUAL AND EXCLUSIVE side,—one for the believer only.

"He that believeth is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Not to all, but to "as many as received Him, to them gave He power [or, privilege] to become the sons of God, even to them which believe on His name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Further,—the privileged must also be the perfected. They are to be "poor in spirit," "meek," "merciful," "pure," "peacemakers," the "salt of the earth," the "light of the world." They are relatively few—everywhere the minority; for the gate is "strait," the way "narrow," and "few there be that find it."

To these belong the higher mysteries of the Gospel.

"Unto you [the disciples] it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them."

For these—we had almost said for these alone—the Redeemer prays.

"These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee: as Thou hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as Thou hast given Him." "I have manifested Thy name unto the men which Thou gavest Me out of the world. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which Thou hast given Me; for they are Thine. Holy Father, keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may be one, as we are."

Such, and so striking, is the apparent contrast between the two sides of Redemption,—between its world-wide bearing and its individual application. It seems indeed impossible for any candid man to read the Scriptures fairly without being struck by the fact that everything revealed prior to the introduction of Christianity would lead to the expectation that the triumphs of Messiah would be immediate and universal; while everything relating to the development of Christ's work, either in its earlier days or during the eighteen hundred years of its existence, as clearly indicates delay and limitation.

Theories in explanation have never been wanting; but they are all utterly unsatisfactory. We turn from them to THE BOOK. There, if anywhere, shall we find the true solution of the problem that oppresses us. From no other quarter can even a solitary ray of light fall upon our darkness. We ask, therefore, for a purged eye and a purified heart, to enable us to discern in Revelation itself the hidden harmony which unites the Elder Brother of the Elect with the Redeemer of the Race. —The Destiny of the Race.

THE ATONEMENT.

The Atonement is a great fact. The philosophy of it is a profound mystery. It is with the fact alone that, as sinners, we have to do; the philosophy involved we may safely leave to higher intelligences and other states of being.

The word "atonement" occurs but once in our English Version of the New Testament (Rom. v. 11), and there only through a mistranslation; for katalagee unquestionably ought to be rendered reconciliation. It is so rendered in other places (e. g., 2 Cor. v. 18, 19; Rom. xi. 15), and should have been in this also, since no argument whatever as to the method of reconciliation can honestly be founded upon it. To ordinary readers, "atonement" conveys the idea of substitution by sacrifice, and so far its use is, without question, misleading.

Other words, however, supposed to imply the doctrine in question, frequently present themselves, such as "propitiation," "oblation," and "sacrifice,"—words which, like the announcement of John the Baptist, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and the declaration of St. Paul, "Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us," become unintelligible if they are not to be regarded, in some measure at least, in connection with the blood-shedding of the Old Testament economy.

Unhappily, theologians will not allow us to rest on Divine facts. They insist that it is as necessary to hold a true philosophy of the Atonement as it is to believe in the fact of one. "The doctrine," says a recent prominent defender of the faith, "is the inference from the fact, and without the doctrine the bare dry fact is nothing. The question is, in what way Christ's death effects its purpose. Upon our answer to this depends the nature of our religion."

It never seems to occur to such reasoners that the revealed fact is alone Divine; that all inferences deduced therefrom, true or false, are purely human; and that therefore, on their theory, "the nature of our religion depends," not on the simple reception or otherwise of a Divine testimony, but on a purely logical process, which, owing to the unfitness of the human mind to deal with matters stretching into the infinite, is at least as likely to be wrong as right.

Into the various controversies that have arisen out of this perverse disposition to be "wise above that which is written," I shall decline to enter.

It may be assumed as undeniable that the Old Testament prophets predict a coming Messiah, and that they describe Him in two aspects: first, and chiefly, as "a priest upon a throne," under whose glorious reign all nations shall be blessed; and secondly, as a "man of sorrows," humiliated and suffering, yet not for any sin of His own.

The fortieth Psalm, taken, as it must be, in connection with its exposition in the Epistle to the Hebrews (x. 5—14), is, perhaps, of all these prophecies the most remarkable, since it gives us the reason for Christ's coming,—the inefficiency of the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sin; and the result of the coming,—the honoring of the law: "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God. He taketh away the first" (sacrifice and offering). "that He may establish the second" (perfect obedience). To this remarkable prophecy, and its inspired exposition, we naturally look for an explanation of the facts of the Gospel history,—so far, at least, as explanation is needful.

Connecting these things with other revealed facts, such as that He came "to give His life a ransom for many;" that He laid down his "life" for his "sheep;" that he shed his "blood" for "the remission of sins;" that He "redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us;" that "with his stripes we are healed;" and that through eternity the song of the redeemed will be, "Thou art worthy: for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood,"—nothing surely can be plainer, than that He died vicariously—for others; that He died voluntarily,—"I lay down My life of Myself;" that death was most unwelcome to Him, and submission to the cross the severest of trials,—“Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me;” that all this pain, ignominy, and suffering might have been avoided by a wish,—“Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to My Father, and He shall presently give Me more than twelve legions of angels?” and, finally, that there was such a necessity for the endurance, that under the united pressure of duty and love, “He sweat as it were great drops of blood” in resisting the temptation to avoid it.

All this we gather from the narrative; but there is no assertion that He was, in any sense whatever, punished; that He endured anything at the hand of God as a Divine infliction; or that He was ever looked upon by the Father in any character save that which really belonged to Him as the Holy and the Blest.

That He was, in a sense, “stricken of God and afflicted,” is as certain as that He was made “perfect through sufferings;” that in all He “bare our sins and carried our sorrows” is as true as that He redeemed us from Satan; that without the endurance of this cruel and ignominious death—without the actual laying down of His life, the the shedding of his blood, the work of redemption could not have been consummated, is a clearly revealed fact; but that this was the effect of “Divine anger,” or that it was “necessary to the avenging of the violated law,” is a conclusion which, whether true or false, is the result of human reasoning, and not the direct teaching of the Bible.

To me it seems a strange conclusion that because Christ came into the world to die; that because it is His blood which cleanseth from all sin; that because He is our “sacrifice,” our “pass-over,” and our “propitiation,” therefore the virtue of His sacrifice lies in the material blood shed on Calvary; its efficacy, in the assumption that He died under the “anger of God;” or that reconciliation with the Father was not possible without the crime and the cruelty of the wicked men, by whose evil agency the Lord of Life was “crucified and slain.” That it pleased God to admit this agency is certain; that Jesus was “delivered” into the hands of his murderers “by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God,” is true also (Acts ii. 23); but that this wicked act had anything to do with the redemption of man beyond consummating at once the Saviour's work and the judgment of the Jewish nation, is nowhere taught in Holy Writ.

Dean Alford has truly said, “Never do we find in Scripture, Old Testament or New Testament, any such expression as the Father was propitiated concerning our sins, on account of the death of His Son; or Christ propitiated God, or God's wrath, by his blood; never, God was reconciled.” (Note on Heb. ii. 17.)

That a question should ever have arisen as to the extent of the Atonement; that Christian men, with the Bible in their hands, and its plainest statements before them, should ever have ventured to assert that Christ died only for the elect; that if He “bought” others, such “purchase” is for them “no ransom of redemption, fairly so called;” that He has bought them, only “that He may so dispose of them as to glorify the retributive righteousness of God in their condemnation;” that faith is the act of “a new faculty,” a Divine act, “implying the communication of a Divine capacity,” and yet that all who do not possess it are irrecoverably lost, is to me one of the most melancholy proofs I have ever met with of the tendency of the human mind to claim for its own weak and erring inferences an authority which really belongs only to the direct teachings of God.

The true solution of the theological difficulty which has led to these sad aberrations from the truth will, I am satisfied, ultimately be found in the reception of the apostolic declarations to Timothy, when instructing him as to what he was to teach,—“This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners: of whom I am chief” (1 Tim. i. 15:) that “God our Saviour will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth” (ii. 4); and that while He is “the Saviour of all men,” He is “specially” so “of those that believe” (iv. 10). “These things,” says the apostle to him, “command and teach” (iv. 11).

I set out, then, with a settled conviction, that with regard to the atonement itself, viewed simply as a revealed fact, there is no room even for a doubt as to the testimony of Scripture. To its necessity the Christian consciousness also bears its infallible witness; for what renewed heart does not feel its guilty alienation from God and holiness, and its need of a mediator? But I am bewildered the moment I attempt to speculate about the method of reconciliation, - to settle the philosophy of it, or to decide on the precise extent of the benefit it confers.

I reason, therefore, thus with myself: - If I believe that "Christ died for my sins according to the Scriptures," I shall surely appreciate the blessings of his redemption, whether theologians rule that the intent of that great "sacrifice" was to win me to God, or to reconcile God to me. Is Christ less my "Surety," if it be denied that he literally bore the exact punishment of my sin? Am I still exposed to the "curse" of God, if the dying Lamb on Calvary was the object, not of wrath but of Divine complacency, when thus exhibiting "obedience unto death?" Did He fail to carry my "sorrows," if the agony of Gethsemane was but the struggle of a holy soul, resisting "unto blood" against the temptation to avoid the cross? Is His death less mysterious, or less glorious, if the exclamation, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" be interpreted simply as intended to indicate, for the comfort of the sorrowing disciples, the true meaning of that Messianic and finally triumphant psalm, of which it forms the initial verse, and in which they would find the explanation of all they witnessed? I cannot for a single moment admit of such a supposition. Answer these, or a thousand similar questions as you may, my need is the same, and my sense of Christ's sufficiency is the same. The great doctrine of salvation by faith in the atoning Lamb of God is still to me all that it ever was—joy and peace; and He, "the propitiation, not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

I know very well that many, when first awakened to a sense of the evil of sin, and to its penal consequences, can find peace only in such a contemplation of the cross of Christ as is involved in the thought that He, as the substitute for the sinner, literally bore the penalty of our transgressions. But this is rather the result of particular teaching than the natural impression left by Scripture. And if it be true, as it unquestionably is, that there are others, "habitually dwell much more on the sad fact of their natural alienation from God, than of their exposure to His condemnation; who contemplate far more frequently the holiness and love of their heavenly Father, than His justice or His threatenings;" and who therefore only see in Calvary a transcendent mystery, before which they bow with awe, rather than "rejoice with trembling," am I obliged, if I partly sympathize, to abandon the cross? or to concluded that it is "made," either to them or me, "of none effect?"

I see no reason whatever why I should do so; nor can I consent for a moment to stake the great verity of man's redemption on any particular mode of explaining, either the principle on which it rests, or the process by which it is accomplished.

THE HIGH CALLING.

That there are degrees of happiness in the future world few will be inclined to deny. Passages which refer, on the one hand, to a salvation "so as by fire," and on the other to an "entrance ministered abundantly into the everlasting kingdom," forbid even doubt as to whether or no all redeemed persons in the world to come will be alike honored or honorable. Further, it is generally admitted that, at the coming of Christ—in whatever sense the second advent is to be understood—even among those who "wait for His appearing," some will "be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless," while others will be "ashamed before Him at His coming." Nay, more (neglected as such truths commonly are), few, probably, would be found absolutely to assert that a "prize" and a "gift" imply, in all respects, the same thing; that a "crown," which some obtain and others lose, is not a special distinction, or that it is impossible to be "beguiled" of our "reward."

But these admissions, much as they involve, practically amount to little or nothing, since they are all but universally stripped of power in what is usually considered "sound" interpretation, — according to which the diversities referred to, all end in every individual being as happy as he can be; each vessel, it is said, whatever be its capacity, will then be full of joy and glory, — the only difference being that one will be able to contain more than another. The slightest reflection, one would think, would be sufficient to show that this is really explaining away the entire doctrine; for what can any man desire more than to be as happy as his nature and capacity will admit of?

The point at issue is simply this, — Will the Elect Church, the Bride of Christ, occupy, in the world (or age) to come, any position materially differing from that of other "saved" persons? Is there, from the testimony of Scripture, any reason to suppose that, without and beyond the pale of the Church, properly so termed, others will be found tributary to its glory, but not partakers of its dignity and splendor?

Something of this kind would surely seem to be indicated in the forty-fifth Psalm, where, in prophetic symbol descriptive of Messiah's glory, the Church, under the name of the king's daughter, is described as "all glorious within,—her clothing of wrought gold:" while the daughter of Tyre (heathen) is there "with a gift." Something of the kind is surely asserted in the Apocalypse, where the Church is described under the figure of a glorious city, of which "the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb" are "the temple," and into which, "saved" nations outside do bring "their glory and honor."

The words of the apostle Paul to Timothy (1 Ep. iv. 10), "We trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe," can scarcely have any other meaning than that some will be saved with a higher, and some with a lower salvation. They seem distinctly to imply that for some there is a salvation, inseparably connected with belief, entered upon here, by faith; and for others, who—it may be for want of a teacher—have not accepted the Gospel, a salvation of an inferior kind.

This interpretation of the passage is confirmed by another text in the second epistle, where we are told that in the Church, as in "a great house," there are "some vessels to honor and some to dishonor;" and that he would be "a vessel unto honor," must "purge himself" from "profane and vain babblings," and, in addition thereto, live a holy and godly life. Then would such a man be "meet for the Master's use," fit for closer union with the Redeemer than others, and therefore for more distinguished service.

The entire question is simply one of Divine testimony, and its only importance is that which it derives from its bearing on the revealed character of God; on the extent and efficiency of the work of Christ; and on the promotion of holiness among those who believe themselves to be emphatically His children.

To these, if in Christ, all things belong, for they are Christ's and Christ is God's. Before them is set "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus,"—the crown, the kingship, the priesthood, the "abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Never is any man "called of God" to less than this. To nothing short of immediate faith and repentance; to a present deliverance from evil; to all the blessedness here and hereafter that is implied in union with Christ now—to this, and to nothing short of this, is any man ever bidden. Nor can it be doubted that he who neglects or rejects this invitation forsakes his highest good, and loses what cannot be recovered in any world or age that is to come.

But though the "call" be one, the effect of the call is manifold. The few "enter into life;" the many fall short of it. Yet not in vain has this gospel of the kingdom been preached even to them. Faith, however weak, is not worthless. The Lord, when on earth, did not despise that which reached no further than belief in His power and willingness to heal bodily disease. There were those who were deemed fit to follow Him as personal friends and disciples, and there were those who although not rejected, were inadmissible to close fellowship. So has it been ever since. The faith that brings with it a present union with Christ may not be attained, and yet much may be bestowed that will as certainly affect the condition of the recipient in the world to come as it affects his character and condition here. Whatever restrains or elevates, whatever enlightens or purifies, although it be but partially, is of this character, and ought therefore never to be despised.

All this is, I know, very distasteful to that large class of dubious Christians who—to use a phrase of their own—never do more than indulge the hope of being eventually saved, and yet are, nevertheless, marvellously satisfied with their spiritual condition.

Accustomed, as such persons have always been to regard "salvation" only in one light, viz., as complete deliverance from evil and sorrow after death, anything which seems to indicate the possibility of the future state involving trial is to them intolerable.

Impatient under the discipline of this life, irritated rather than improved by its cares, people of this class cling only the more closely to the conviction that, if "saved" from hell, they must, in the world to come, be perfectly happy; have done for ever with the vexations and contradictions which have tormented them in this mortal state, and find no further occasion for the exercise of a forbearance, the practice of which has been so difficult and disagreeable while here. It never seems to occur to them as possible that those who leave the earth meek and chastened, loving and truthful, may, perchance, carry with them, even into paradise, the elements of their joy; or that others, by the same law of continuance, may bear in their own bosoms seeds of sorrow capable of development even in a world of bliss. How can it be so, they say, since "saints" are by grace alone made "heirs" of heaven, and "sinners" altogether excluded from joy or hope? Beyond this awful alternative, Scripture, they imagine, reveals absolutely nothing.

Not such, however, so far as I have yet been able to discover, is the teaching of the Bible. If it were so, our only duty would be silence. But believing, as I do, that such is not the case,—that some portions of revelation, at least, are intended to lead us to a very different conclusion, and that while Scripture distinctly reveals a salvation of the highest kind for the few, it intimates also a salvation of a much lower kind for the many, I venture to pursue search for the whole truth, without fear or hesitation. Christian fearlessness is above all things essential to the conservation of whatever is really Divine. And this is a faithfulness which will be little affected by popularity or persecutions, by success or failure, by conquest or defeat. For as Dr. Arnold has somewhere said, “it is not all truth that triumphs in the world, nor all good; but only truth and good to a certain point. Let them once pass this point, and their progress pauses. Fewer and fewer are those who still press on in their company; until at last even these fail and there is a perfection at which they are deserted by all men, and are in the presence of God and of Christ alone.”

The conclusion I draw from the whole is, that the pardon of the sinner, and the glorification of the saint, are two distinct things, and ought never to be confounded; that the work of Christ and of His Gospel on earth is twofold:—first, to call out His Bride,—His Elect Church; and secondly, to destroy the works of the devil by forgiving sins by delivering captives, and by preparing mankind at large for higher and nobler revelations in the age to come, when Christ himself will rule and teach through those whom He has here, for that special end, taught and trained. Then it will be seen that the falsehoods of Romanism on the one hand, and the delusions of infidelity on the other have been but mocking shadows of the true; that the Lord is at once a Priest upon a throne, and the social Regenerator of the race; that while, on the one hand, as King and Judge, He executes vengeance on His enemies, He is still—His nature being unchangeable—“kind even to the unthankful and to the evil.”

The contrary view is not sustained by any comprehensive view of Scripture, but derives all its plausibility from the isolation and exaggeration of particular texts—a process by means of which it is made out—that because Christ has a redeemed church “chosen from the foundation of the world,” therefore none else can be benefited by the redemption he has wrought; that because “he that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be condemned,” therefore they that have never heard, and they that have heard amiss, shall be all alike involved in one common widespread, and everlasting ruin; that because he that is in Christ is “a new creature” therefore all who do not become “new creatures” here, are forever shut out from hope, denied mercy, and finally abandoned to Satan and his angels.

Such are the conclusions to which good men are forced by that inexorable logic which has for ages usurped dominion over thought, and trampled at once on the heart of man and the character of God.—Destiny of the Race.

THE JEW AND THE HEATHEN.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

IF the premises laid down in our previous article are correct, the logical conclusion is: There is hope for the heathen.

Let us now see what is the direct testimony of the Scriptures on this point. Positive and unequivocal testimony is always preferable to circumstantial, indirect, or inferred; as one, “Thus saith the Lord” will go much further in evidence than twenty times, Thus saith man.

It must be borne in mind that we are about to contemplate the destinies of the heathen, not in the present age, but in the future ages.

We remark that as the Jewish, or Hebrew nation was the first repository of Divine truth in its compact, that is, civil and ecclesiastical form, and this remained in their keeping until the coming of their Messiah whom they rejected, in consequence of which these blessings were taken from them, as it is said, “The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.” Matt. xxi. 44. The kingdom of God here taken from you, etc., certainly signifies the blessings of the Gospel, which we know were taken away from the Jews, as a nation, and turned over to the Gentiles, as a general thing. Acts xiii. 46. And now when the Gentiles, that is, those who come under the head of civilized and enlightened nations that have been illuminated with the Gospel, when they have had their day, then these blessings are to flow again to the Jews in conjunction with what is styled the heathen. The great apostle seeing this munificent and sublime arrangement of God, and these wonderful workings of the Most High, to the end that he might ultimately have mercy upon all in the exercise of his grace and unlimited extension of his goodness, gives utterance to his admiration as at the end of the chapter: Rom. xi. 32.

Agreeable to this we shall find that the Scriptures, which I purpose to quote, where the heathen are spoken of as the happy recipients of the Divine bounties, the Jews or Israel, are always favorably mentioned in the same connection.

"Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people; and Thou hast made me the head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me; as soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me; the strangers shall submit themselves unto me," etc. Psa. xviii 43-45.

This Psalm is purely prophetic: and David here represents the Lord Jesus Christ in his triumphal aspect, overpowering that class who would dare oppose Him after His installment as King in Zion. See and compare Psa. ii. 6, and Rev. xix. 11. His becoming the Head, King, or Ruler over the heathen, at this time, is not, certainly, for the purpose, as some vainly contend, that He may "break them with a rod of iron" and "dash them into pieces;" but that He might govern them in the gracious administration of his kingdom. This is evident if language is reliable. The expression is so unequivocal and definite that it leaves no room for conjecture as to its meaning of our Lord's becoming the Head of the heathen, who are such as "shall serve me;" shall "obey me;" "shall submit themselves unto me."

It is through the restoration of the Jews that the waters of life will begin to pour in upon these benighted and much neglected race of the heathen.

It is explicitly declared that when the Lord shall build up Zion, He shall appear in his glory: and then "the heathen shall fear," (i. e., in the sense of homage and loving obedience,) "the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory." The time is definitely marked here as being in the day when Jerusalem is to be delivered from under the Ottoman domination, and become elevated in point of eminence and prestige so as to fill out the figure perfectly, namely; She being long in bondage with her children, now becomes free, and the mother of us all. Gal. iv. 25, 26. And this is to be when there shall be an authoritative declaration made in Zion in the name of the Lord, and his praise is to resound again in that restored city. Psa. cii. 14-22. This agrees with what the prophet says, addressing Zion: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come," etc. "And the Gentiles, or heathen, shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." "And the forces (or, wealth, margin) of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." Who are to be found aiding and assisting thus:—"And the sons of strangers (i. e., the heathen) shall build up thy walls, and their (heathen) kings shall minister unto thee," etc. Isa. lx. 3, 5-10. "And He said it is a light thing that thou should-est be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob and to restore the desolate and scattered of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles (or, heathen), that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth. Isa. xlix. 6.

Thus we find that the word being preached to, and accepted by the heathen is contingent upon the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem. As it is again said, "For thus saith the Lord, I will extend peace to her—Jerusalem—like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream. . . And I will set a sign among them (i. e., Israel,) and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Sud, that draw the bow, (i. e., the more barbarous tribes), to Tubal, and to Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles;"—or, heathen—Isa. lxvi. 12, 19. Who would be more likely to effectively preach to the benighted and idolatrous heathen, who bow down to their "many gods and many lords" as those who are not tinctured with the doctrine of a plurality of gods, as our modern preachers and missionaries, but who believe in but "one God and one Lord Jesus Christ?" And this is why the case of the Jews relative to their conversion is rather a hopeless one under the present popular preaching. They cannot reconcile the teachings of modern Christianity with "Moses and the prophets," who declare most emphatically that "there is but one God," while christendom declares three, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. And hence as the mental illumination and bringing in of the heathen is a subsequent event in the Divine arrangement and dependent upon the Jews being restored, it follows, that there is no hope for them until the first is reinstated in the bosom of the Divine munificence: and furthermore, hope for the world generally, must be forever abandoned if the Jews are not to be as literally restored as they were scattered, Jer. xxxi. 10. And this hope is clearly intimated by the apostle, when discussing the future national restoration of Israel, in the following expression, "What shall the receiving of them be (i. e., the restoration of them be) but (as) life from the dead." Rom. xi. 15. Again it is said, "In that day." What day? "The day of Jerusalem's redemption, shall five cities in the land of Egypt, speak the language of Canaan, and swear (i. e., proclaim allegiance) to the Lord of hosts. . . in that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of Egypt (i. e., in the most central, or capitol city) and a pillar at the border (the remotest portions of the land, showing how wide-spread and universal the conversion will become) thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign and a witness unto the Lord of Hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a Saviour, a great one; and he shall save them. And the Lord shall be known unto Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day: i. e., know him in the recognition of him unto obedience to the truth; which is clearly inferred from the following language: "and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the Lord, and PERFORM it." Isa. xix. 18-21.

ROMANS, CHAPTER XI.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

It seems to me that there is much said about the above named Scripture that might be improved by simply reading the entire chapter, and believing it as it reads. If we start right with this chapter, it will help us a great deal in keeping right to its end.

Some writers make confusion at the outset by confounding converted Jews with the Israel of this chapter; while Paul makes a clear distinction between the two. In verse five we read, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace." Nothing in Scripture is more plain than that the remnant is the elect of this chapter. It being true that the remnant of the Jews—those who had been converted to Christ in Paul's day—were the remnant according to election, that remnant is of course, the elect. The question arises, is this remnant—this elect—the Israel of this chapter? Let verse seven of answer. It reads, "What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Who did not obtain? Israel. Who did obtain? The elect. Who were blinded? The rest—all except the elect. Who are "the rest?" Israel. Thus it is settled that Israel in this chapter is not converted Jews, or Christianized Israelites. Israel is "the rest"—those who had not received Christ at the time that Paul wrote. It was the mass—the nation,—for mark, that portion that had believed in Christ was the remnant of Israel. A remnant of cloth is not the web, neither is it two thirds, or even one half of the web; it is a small portion of the web. This is true of every thing else. The elect is the remnant,—the small portion,—Israel is the mass—the rest of the seed of Jacob. To my mind there is no possibility of evading the above reasoning. Having established this principle, the remainder of the chapter is easily understood.

When in verse 11, Paul asks, "Did they stumble that they might fall?" (Emphatic Diaglott;) the "they" referred to is Israel; and when he answers, "By no means; but by their fall the nations have salvation in order to excite them to emulation;" the idea that their stumbling was to result in their irretrievable fall, is proved to be wholly repugnant to the teachings of the inspired Paul. When again the apostle says in verse 25, "For, brethren, that you may not be conceited with yourselves, I wish you not to be ignorant of this secret, that hardness in some measure has happened to Israel till the fulness of the Gentiles may come in (Em. Dia.); he refers to the same Israel as all will see who read from verse 12 to 25, and keep the plain grammatical connection in their minds. Who is blinded? Israel; not the remnant, not those that believed out of Israel, but the mass. To what extent is Israel blinded? Not wholly certainly, but in some measure. Because it reads in the received version, "Blindness in part is happened unto Israel," some have claimed that Paul's statement is that a portion of the Jews are blinded. Such a construction is contrary to the laws of language, and also an entire misapprehension of the literal reading of the Greek text. Paul's simple, plain statement is that Israel,—the mass of that people—is blinded in some measure, and that partial blindness will remain upon them, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. If asked in what sense they are free from absolute blindness? My answer is the language of the great apostle. See Rom. iii. 1, 2. "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there in circumcision?" "Much every way: chiefly because that unto them were committed the oracles of God." See also chapter i. 3-5. "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh: to whom pertained the adoption and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as pertaining to the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen." These Scriptures tell us very plainly in what sense Israel is not wholly blinded. They tell us that to Israel was given the oracles of God. Those oracles are with them to-day, and they follow their teachings according to their best understanding. The oracles of God committed to them embraced the covenants (plural), the law, the service of God, and the promises, and Paul asserts that all these pertain to Israelites. But, says one, Paul says, They are not all Israel that are of Israel." Most true indeed; but in what sense are they not Israel? O, the answer is, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly; but he is a Jew which is one inwardly." Altogether true certainly; but what do you mean by quoting that text? If you assume that Paul means to teach that converted Gentiles real are Jews, I deny the truthfulness of the assumption wholly. Paul says nothing of that kind in the text. No matter how thoroughly a Gentile may be converted to Christ, that conversion does not make him a Jew. Some people will scold and fret about "Judaizers," and perhaps in the very next breath they will Judaize the entire Christian Church. Paul is talking only about Jews and Israelites, in this text, and says nothing whatever about Gentiles, either converted or unconverted. He means just what he says. He says, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly; but he is a Jew which is one inwardly." The idea is simply this, he is not a God accepted Jew, one of the promised seed, unless his heart is right in the sight of God. If the whole nation of Israel had been good at heart, that nation would have constituted the seed that would have inherited the Abrahamic promise, and with Abraham they would have blessed the nations. Are we to suppose that because they fell out and attained not unto the inheritance of the world—the nations—the race (Rom. iv. 13), that therefore there will be no Seed to inherit and bless the nations? Had the nation of Israel been true in heart to the God that called them; they would have been God's kings and priests. Is it to be supposed that because they failed, therefore, God will have no kingdom of priests? Nay, verily. God has transferred the kingship to those that believe, of the Jews first, and also of the Gentile. See Acts xv. 14. Matt. xxi. 43. Here again people take a long leap in the dark. They assume that because Israel has lost the kingship, therefore all is lost, for them there is no hope of future good. This is wholly an assumption. Not an iota of real evidence can be given to prove it, and there is positive evidence to the contrary. I have already shown that the word Israel, in every instance in this chapter, refers to the nation—the mass of the descendants of Jacob, and not to the remnant who believe in Christ in this age. I have also shown that in harmony with this indisputable fact, the Israel of verse 25, upon whom partial blindness has fallen, is the same Israel—the nation—the mass of that people. They are blinded, however, only up to a certain time, viz., until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. It is clearly implied that when that time is reached they will be blinded no longer. We are not, however, left to rely upon an inference only, plain as it is.

The following verse affords us positive evidence, and makes the position doubly sure. After declaring in verse 25, that partial blindness is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, he tells us plainly in verse 26, what shall then come to Israel. "And then all Israel will be saved." (EM. DIA.) The Israel of this verse must of necessity be the same Israel of verse 2, 7, and 25. Here is positive proof that when God has completed the work of taking out a people for himself from the Gentiles, when the Seed is gathered out, the kings and priests selected, THEN the whole house of Israel should be saved. This statement of Paul is in harmony with all that the prophets have said concerning the future of Israel. The doctrine of the final salvation of Israel, is taught in verse 12. It reads as follows: "But if their fall is the wealth of the world, and their failure the wealth of the Gentiles, how much more will their full acceptance be?" (EM. DIA.) Mark, it is the very ones that have fallen, who are to be blessed by a "full acceptance." The same idea of the future salvation of Israel, is also taught in verse 11. It reads, "I say then have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy." Here Paul declares that in stumbling they did not fall, and yet he says they did fall. There is but one way in which these seemingly contradictory statements can be reconciled; it is this. That they did fall, in some sense, is certainly true: but they have not fallen irrecoverably. There is hope in their case as a nation, notwithstanding they have fallen. Murdock translates the text as follows: "But I say: Have they so stumbled as to fall entirely? Far be it. Rather through their falling life is come to the Gentiles." Surely those who assume that the fall of Israel is final, irretrievable, are thoroughly mistaken. Paul declares plainly it is not so. Surely he knows best. It is true that they are "in the gospel, enemies for your (believers) sake; but in the election they are beloved for the Father's sake."—Murdock. The Emphatic Diaglott reads: "In relation to the glad tidings, indeed they are enemies on your account: but in regard to the election, they are beloved on account of the fathers." Why is this? Answer: "For God is not changable in his free gift and in his calling."—Murdock. This agrees with the testimony of Christ.

In speaking of the signs that should precede his second coming, he foretells the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the scattering of the Jews among all nations; and then adds, "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." (See Luke xxi. 24.) When the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled Jerusalem will be trodden under foot no longer; but the holy prophets speak of her glorious exaltation beyond the end of Gentile times. Again, Christ foretells the overthrow of the Jews, and mourns over their coming distresses, in the following language: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathered her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate." (See Matt. xxiii. 34—38.) But this is not their end. No, no! Hear him further. "For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." So sure as Christ spake to them honest words of truth, there is a time beyond this last scattering of the children of Jacob when they will see him and say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

For more evidence on this point turn to Luke xxii. 28—30. "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

This judging, or ruling, the twelve tribes of Israel, is to be in the regeneration (See Matt. xix. 28), when Christ shall sit on the throne of his glory; or "in the renovation" (Emphatic Diaglott); or, as Murdock translates the text, "Verily I say unto you, that, as for you, who have followed me, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory in the new world, ye also shall sit on twelve seats, and shall rule (margin) the twelve tribes of Israel." It would be a very difficult question to solve how the twelve tribes of Israel could be ruled over in "the regeneration"—"the renovation,"—"the new world,"—unless the twelve tribes of Israel are in the new world.

These Scriptures agree exactly with the testimony of the angel Gabriel, as recorded by St. Luke. "The Lord God shall give unto him (Jesus) the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." I know of no course so safe as to believe plain declarations like the above, falling from the lips of the Son of God; and believe them as he spake them. All who do believe Jesus and Paul, as they spake and wrote, will be compelled to the conclusion that the house—nation—of Israel will be in the restitution, when Christ shall sit on his father David's throne, to rule in a kingdom that shall have no end.

When this shall be accomplished, then "a Deliverer will come from Zion, and will turn away iniquity from Jacob." "And then will they (Jacob) have the covenant that proceedeth from me, when I shall have forgiven their sins." (ver. 26, 27.)—Murdock. In view of this great plan of mercy, I can from my heart, adopt the language of the apostle as written in the closing verses of this chapter. "O the depth of the riches, and the wisdom, and the knowledge of God! For man hath not searched out his judgments; and his ways are inscrutable. For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been a counsellor to him? Because all is from him, and all by him, and all through him: to whom be praises and benedictions for ever and ever: Amen."—Murdock.

THE ROYAL PRIESTHOOD OF SAINTS.

BY N. H. PALMER, GEORGIA.

Our head title is intended to indicate the place and the privileges of every regenerate and sanctified person. If we would see their position in God's kingdom, and clearly apprehend their privileges, we must first gain a clear knowledge of the means by which they are taken out of their natural state, and made members of a living, holy, royal priesthood; and, furthermore, we must comprehend their relations, honors, privileges and work, as they stand related to the revealed designs of the Deity in regard to the future destiny of His creatures.

We will first establish the fact of the believer's priesthood.

In the first epistle of Peter we have a declaration of the priesthood of all persons, who are "Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus." 1 Pet. i. 2.

To such he says, "To whom (the Lord) coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious, ye also as lively (living) stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5.

Again, in verse 9. "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light."

These passages bring out, in connexion with the fact of the believer's priesthood, two of its leading characteristics: First, It is "an holy priesthood," as designed to offer up spiritual sacrifices to God: secondly, It is "a royal priesthood," as appointed to "show forth the praises of Him who hath called (us) out of darkness into His marvellous light."

The position and privileges of this holy and royal priesthood form the key-note to the song of Rev. i. 5, 6: "Unto Him that loved (loveth) us and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and has made us kings and priests unto God and His Father; to Him be glory and dominion, forever and ever, Amen."

In Eph. i. 3-6, these characteristics are distinctly marked as belonging to all the saints.

In both this place, and in the above from Revelations, the sublime truths enunciated stand in immediate connexion with two names of God,—viz., His name as God, and His name as Father;—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."

In the following verses the Spirit amplifies these rich utterances. He first enunciates the blessings we have from God, as "the God of our Lord, Christ; and then the blessings we have from God, as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The blessing bestowed as the God of our Lord Jesus, is our election to an holy priesthood: "According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before Him in love."

In order to secure this holy estate it is said, "He laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" "by His stripes we are healed." "He made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made (become) the righteousness of God in Him."

Hence, in the culminating act of redemption, He addresses, not His Father, but His God:—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

After His resurrection this distinction is still strictly maintained: "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." Jno. xx. 17.

The way having been, in this manner, opened up by the blood of Jesus, for God to bless His saints righteously, and to display His justice in the forgiveness of their sins, (Rom. iii. 21, 26.) His grace now sets no limits, short of the glory

He has given to Jesus, Himself, to the blessings which He bestows on the saints, as the Father of our Lord Jesus, and their Father. "Having predestinated us to the adoption of children (sonship) by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will, to the praise of the glory of His grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the Beloved." Eph. i. 5, 6.

We see in this the saints are constituted royal priests,—children of God; and "if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ;" and called into fellowship (partisanship) with Him in all the glory which the Father has given Him; and which He also has given them in His own words: "And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them." John xviii. 22.

Hence it is that Paul in addressing "them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints," affirms, "All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." 1. Cor. iii. 21-23.

Again it is said: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye may also have fellowship (partizanship) with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son, Jesus Christ." 1 John i. 3.

Now it is very clear that it is no part of their office as Christian priests to offer to God sacrifices for sins. This was done, "once for all," by our great High Priest, who, "through the eternal Spirit, offered Himself without spot to God;" that His blood might "purge our conscience from dead works, to serve the living God."

But for an adequate exhibit of the amplitude of the Spirit's revelations on this point we must refer the reader to the Scriptures. See Heb. ix. 22-28; x. 1-22.

Now the Scriptures above quoted and referred to, place the saints in God's house—in His very presence, consciously cleansed from every stain, by the blood of the everlasting covenant; and every demand of their conscience, as well as of God's righteousness, is satisfied. Standing in their place, they "offer the sacrifices of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of their lips, giving thanks to His name." Heb. xiii. 15.

But the priesthood of the saints, in as far as we have yet gone, has not a full manifestation, nor a complete Scriptural development.

We have seen them, as yet, only standing in "the house of God, which is the church (militant) of the living God." Here their priesthood is not a caste, but is only the place of standing belonging to every saint considered simply as a believer, into which he was brought by becoming a son of God, and as such having received "the promise of the Spirit."

But the Spirit points to other views of them. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." 1 John iii. 1, 2.

In the future manifestation of this royal priesthood, Christ will give to him that overcometh power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron. "He will make him a pillar in the temple of God," and grant to him to "sit on His throne, as He also overcame, and is set down with His Father on His throne." Rev., chapters ii. and iii.

To the future glory of the saints in fellowship with Christ, the utterances of 1 Cor. vi. 1-4 apply.

"Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge (rule) the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that ye shall judge angels? how much more then things that pertain to this life? If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are the least esteemed in the church."

It seems now clearly obvious from all these documents, that the royal priesthood of saints is, during this life, and in this world, or condition of waiting—of holding privileges and honors in abeyance—a state of expectancy and hope. Its full manifestation belongs to another life, after the resurrection, when the Lord shall come to reward His saints.

We cannot, at this point, well repress the inquiry, How do the saints, invested with the functions and the glory of a royal priesthood, stand related to the revealed designs of Deity in regard to the future destiny of all His creatures?

We look forward to the end of the present age, and view the general assembly, and Church of the First-Born, whose names are written in heaven, and who "shall be counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead;" and who "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," (Luke xx. 35, 36,) and we see them a royal priesthood, made kings and priests unto God, by their glorious Head; we see them receive power over the nations, and sit down with the Lord on His throne. They also receive an everlasting kingdom and a "two edged sword, to execute vengeance on the heathen, and punishments on the people, to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute on them the judgments written: this honor have all the saints." Psa. cxlix. 6-9.

Now, we ask, what all this portends? and what is to be the issue of such stupendous preparations?

We may be permitted to elaborate a little further by a reference to some important considerations.

If we consider this future body of saints in their corporerity, they are "kings and priests," but if their individuality, it is more probable they are kings or priests, as respects the ministries they may then perform.

These terms are always appropriated to vested powers in government and religion; and are suggestive of the Divine economy in "the ages to come."

Government and religion are co-ordinate departments in the great and comprehensive economy of Heaven; as it is presented to our apprehension. Man is, by his constitution, both a social and religious being.

Without both government and religion he can never perfect his nature, nor attain the great end of his being.

It is the design of government to develop man's social nature, and to preserve society by promoting all the social virtues; while it is the work of religion to develop, in the individual, certain states of mind and heart we call piety; and the joint product of government and religion is moral character.

Man's necessities have always called forth in the world, some kind of government, and some sort of religion. Either, without the other, would fail to secure the great purposes for which they were ordained. They are not opposed, and should never be dissevered or placed in conflict.

Government finds its support, life, and glory in religion; while religion finds its form, beauty, and defense in government. Like husband and wife they are united in one.

It is manifest that government can not execute itself, and personal agents are essential to its administration; and such agents are equally essential to exercise the powers and functions of religion.

If, therefore, man is to retain his essential nature and attributes in the kingdom of God, and the world to come,—and we can not conceive otherwise,—it would seem essential for the orderly evolution of his nature and existence that he continue in the same economy.

We must conclude, therefore, that the saints will not become sinecures, nor glory in merely titular dignities, but that they will, with Christ the Lord, become the ministers of the powers and functions of government and religion in the "new heavens and new earth."

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

In all His works there is a progressive tendency to perfection.

The first creation was perfect in its kind; but there were perfections that did not belong to the first creation, for they were incommunicable by omnipotence. Power could not confer moral holiness, man's true glory; yet, for its exercise, the Creator conferred on him the most wonderful capacities.

He was made and intended for the practice of virtue; and the glory of the Creator is manifested and set forth in the creature's moral likeness to Himself.

To secure this we have the new creation, the glorious plan of moral elevation, adapted to his nature and his end; in which God constitutes his creature a co-worker with Himself in securing "holiness, incorruptibility, immortality and eternal life." This glorious plan will demonstrate the divineness of man's capacities, and magnify the infinite resources of his infinite Father.

We are told "the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by which we draw nigh to God." By the operation of this "better hope" all things in heaven and earth are to be reconciled in one body to God; that is, all things will be brought and held in society with God and each other; and the immortalized saints, with Christ their Head, will constitute the agency and medium of this social and spiritual union.

O glorious destiny of the saints! How full of promise to the universe, that God purposes in "the ages to come" to make known, by the Church, His manifold wisdom to the principalities and powers in heavenly places! Eph. iii. 10.

DANIEL, THE APOCALYPSE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. No. 4.

BY G. R. LEDERER.

CHAPTER VII.

It will be observed that the divisions of the book have not been made according to chronological order of visions, but according to the occurrence of events. Some part of the vision accorded in this chapter pointed to things that were already fulfilled; for the Prophet saw the first of the universal kingdoms under the Gentile supremacy, the Babylonian, in its highest glory and its fall, and also the introduction of the second, the Medo-Persian. Another part of the vision has been verified after the death of the Prophet, namely, the fall of the second, the rise and fall of the third, and the rise of the fourth of the represented empires. The fall of the latter and the rise of the fifth, the kingdom of God and His Messiah are still future, and for which we wait and pray.

The vision described in this chapter dates far back to the event related in the preceding, namely, to the first year of the reign of Belshatzar, which, as we have already explained, was twenty or twenty-one years before the ascension of Darius the Mede, the first ruler in the second, or silver kingdom.

The vision shown to Daniel was not a mere repetition of that shown to Nebuchadnezzar; it was more explicit, describing how each preceding empire will be broken down by its successor, which was not given in the vision of the image. There it was only said, that four powers shall succeed each other in supremacy, but does not intimate the ruin of the former. It seems also that this vision representing the universal empires by living creatures instead of inanimate metals, was given to Daniel more on account of the glorious fifth than of the former four. This fifth, or last and indestructible kingdom, represented in the image by a stone that fell upon the toes of the image is here shown to the gazing Prophet in its true or real aspect; he saw the King himself in his power and glory. That King is the Son of man; He who has recovered the power that was lost by Adam.

The four universal empires which were to sway the sceptre over that kingdom which was called "the kingdom of God," namely, the kingdom of Israel, in which God was acknowledged as the supreme king, are here represented by living creatures; but they were beasts of the field. They were unlike in appearance, strength, and character, still the noblest among them was but a beast, an order by far lower than man, created to be ruled over by him. The fifth is represented by "one like a Son of man;" and the Prophet saw how this Son of man was inaugurated into His high position. He did not, like his four predecessors, obtain the kingdom by conquest, by virtue of the sword and spear, but it was given him by the "Ancient of Days," by him who has created the universe, and has the right and the power to give it to whom he pleases.

Thus when the time shall come, the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, that is, when the number of co-rulers from among the nations of the Gentiles, which the Lord of the universe has appointed to be rulers under the captain-ship of the One to whom the government under the whole heaven shall be given, then the judgment shall sit, the Gentile rule shall be declared unfit to remain any longer in power and condemned to be subordinate to the great King or perish.

As to the perfect harmony between the representatives of the four universal empires in the vision of Daniel and those in the metallic image of Nebuchadnezzar, I quote from one of the ancient Hebrew commentators, Aben Ezra, as follows: "This vision corresponds perfectly with the image which was shown to Nebuchadnezzar in his dream which he forgot." Aben Ezra says that the fourth beast is the Mahomedan power, since he counts the Greek and the Roman as but one, the third. The little horn, he says, is a kingdom, or king who shall dethrone three kings of the ten in which the third universal monarchy will be divided, and speak great and blasphemous things against the Most High. This event is still future; this king will appear shortly before the coming of the blessed Messiah, pretending to be sent by God.

Daniel beheld the passing of the four beasts one after another until the thrones or chairs were arranged for a grand session of the Supreme Court, and the Chief Judge—the Ancient of days—took his seat. The books—the records of the deeds of those who occupied the thrones of the kingdoms on earth—were opened, and then "the One like a Son of man" was brought before Him in the clouds of heaven. This will say, that the Son of man, appointed to take the kingdom came down from heaven, he must, therefore, have had his dwelling place in heaven. The grand scene of judgment and the inauguration of the great King was shown to Daniel to take place on the earth and not in heaven. (And so, it seems to me, was the judgment which John saw in the vision on Patmos.)

Here again I quote from Saadya Gaon, who says, "The chairs here mentioned are the thrones of all the kings of the Gentiles which will be thrown down, that is, entirely abolished, preparatory to the reign of the 'One like the Son of man.' Jarchi, however, says that it means the placing down the chairs for the persons—whenever they may be constituting the High Council over which the Ancient of Days will preside. I agree with the latter view; because the sitting down to judgment must precede the sentence of abolishing the thrones of the guilty kings; here however, the setting down the chairs as thrones is the first thing mentioned in the sublime vision.

There is no discrepancy between verses fourteen and eighteen as so many critics believe to be, because in the former it is said that the kingdom and dominion was given to him, who like a Son of man came down in clouds before the Ancient of Days, while in the latter verse the kingdom is said to be delivered to a people of saints of the Most High, (literally translated, "to the high saints.") It must be considered that the first is a scene which Daniel really saw with his own eyes; a real fact or event that has taken place in his presence. There was no explanation needed, for the matter was too plain as not to be understood. Here sat the High Judge; on both sides others sat on chairs—perhaps angels of the highest order—and then the personage who was found worthy to receive the kingdom and dominion. But Daniel could not understand who those thousand times ten thousand were who served Him who sat on the throne, and who evidently were not of those who were under the judgment. This the angel explained Daniel. He said that these multitudes represent the ruling people under the fifth, everlasting monarchy, under the scepter of the great King, to whom "as thou hast seen," the kingdom and dominion were given. For every king has his governors and other officers of different rank and grades, who govern the people in his name, and watch over them, that the king's laws be strictly observed. That this is the meaning of verse eighteen, is confirmed by the same angelic interpreter in verse twenty-seven, where he repeats the same, but adds, "Him, not them," "and all dominions shall serve and obey Him," nearly the same words which Daniel heard before, when He like a Son of man was clothed with the royal dignities and power.

Concerning the One to whom the kingdom was given, there is diversity of opinion between orthodox Jews and Christians; all agreeing that it was king Messiah. The former believe that this coming in the clouds, as here described, will be his first and only coming, while the latter, maintain that this is the same Jesus who first appeared to make an atonement for those who shall at the establishment of the everlasting kingdom, be his co-rulers, governors and judges in that kingdom. But as to the people called here the "high saints"—not as the common version says: "the saints of the Most High"—the opinions differ widely, not only between Jews and Christians in general, but among Christians themselves.

The Jews, of course, believe this people of high saints means no other but Israel, the people chosen to be God's royal priesthood; and, though they have lost this high position by continued disobedience, yet, after having suffered for it for a long time appointed by God, He will cleanse them from all their sins and unrighteousness, send them their Messiah who will reign over the world and make them the head of all nations.

Orthodox, or rather, sectarian Christians do not believe in the literal fulfilment of this prophecy; they locate all these things some where above the skies, and the saints here spoken of, are the souls of the departed believers in Christ. The question over whom these disembodied spirits shall rule, or whom they shall judge, they answer in different ways, satisfactorily to themselves only.

Others believe that this people of high saints means, indeed, Israel; at the same time, however, they maintain that it is not literal Israel, descendants of Jacob, but the faithful believers in Christ, from Gentile nations, who have fallen asleep in Jesus to be raised from the dead, or, if alive at his coming, to be changed. This class of Christians exclude literal Israel altogether, as having been rejected and cast away forever. This class, moreover, believe that at the coming of the Son of man the earth, the heavens, and all the elements of nature will undergo the process of literal burning, in which, of course, all mortal beings will perish, and only the saints will be (where, they cannot say,) preserved, and then reign with Christ over the new creation. To the question where these saints, who, they believe, will not be disembodied spirits but real, material persons, will be preserved while the earth and all elements will be burning and then cooling again? Some are foolish enough to answer that the whole process will only last twenty-four hours. (Long enough, I should think, to become uncomfortably heated.) To the question over whom these immortal ones will reign, or whom they will judge, since no mortals, liable to sin and disobedience will exist, and what they will do with the numerous promises and prophecies which unmistakably indicate the existence of mortal nations under the reign of Christ, they have no answer which would satisfy any honest and intelligent student of the Word of God.

Some German Bible students think—orthodox as they are—that immortalized beings have nothing to do on the earth. The people of saints here mentioned, are, therefore, literal Israel. This people, among all other mortal nations on the earth, will be the most privileged, since the king of glory will reside among them, in Jerusalem, their national capitol. They will chiefly be employed as rulers or judges all over the earth.

But, finally, there are those who, in perfect harmony with all the Scriptures, believe that the earth will not be burnt, mortal nations will continue to exist, and will enjoy the blessings of restored nature; that literal Israel will indeed be the most privileged among all the nations; but they will not be the co-rulers with Messiah. The immortalized saints, gathered out from all nations, Jew and Gentile, shall live and reign with Him forever. These gathered ones, therefore, are the high saints of whom the angel speaks when giving an explanation to the prophet Daniel, and with this class of believers I fully agree.

The description, or rather the vision representing the judgment by setting chairs—the word in the original is a plural—and the occupation of one of these chairs by the “Ancient of Days” must not lead to the erroneous supposition into which most Hebrew commentators have fallen, namely, that in judging the nations God assembles His council, the high angels, to consult the matter with them. No, God alone is the Judge, none has ever given him counsel, and none ever will. But, as it was in the plan of God that Daniel should understand that in the end of Gentile supremacy, a judgment would take place, and those governments condemned and replaced by that of the One like a Son of man, with a people of high saints or co-rulers, the vision had to appear in the form of a human court. Had Daniel seen but the sitting down of the Ancient of Days alone, the idea of a judgment would not have been suggested to his mind. In this sense must also be understood the opening of books, and the same is the case of the twenty-four elders etc., etc., in the vision of John.

It remains yet to remark that the “One who approached Daniel to give him an explanation of the terrible vision which brought fear and trembling upon him, only dwelt at some length on the fourth nondescript beast. This, we may suppose, was on account of the following circumstances. First, because of its long duration, while the former three lasted, comparatively, but a short time. Secondly, because of its greater extend and destroying policy, particularly as regards the people and city of the great King; and lastly, on account of its development into that power or king which shall speak blasphemous words against the Most High, and be a greater enemy to the saints of God than any other before him, and whom John calls the Antichrist, who will, at last bring Gentile supremacy to an end. The latter part of this vision, therefore is still future.

I think the readers of the BIBLE EXAMINER will be interested in the views of ancient Hebrews on some points of the important prophecy contained in the vision just considered, I therefore offered some of these views. S. Gaon on verses 11 and 12: "Daniel saw in the vision that the fourth beast, or rather the little horn power, which will be its last representative, utterly destroyed." Gaon and others believed that while all former monarchies only changed rulers and forms of government but still remained as kingdoms, retaining even their names, as, Syria, —or Babylon—Persia, Greece and Rome, the fourth, or last (the Mahometan power, as already observed before), will be utterly annihilated and nothing will remain of it.

Yarchi—the most popular of commentators—and rabbi Joshua on verses thirteen and fourteen, agree that the "One like a Son of man," means the king Messiah, to whom the government of the whole earth shall be given, and which shall last forever. Aben Ezra differs from the two, in saying that "One like a Son of man," means collective Israel, and refers to verse twenty-seven, where it is said that all the kingdoms under the whole heaven shall be given to a people of high saints. This learned Hebrew could not see the perfect harmony of both passages. In the first, verse thirteen, the One like a Son of man receives the power of government from the "Ancient of Days;" in the latter, verse twenty-seven, the power is delegated to the high saints, but it is stated by whom; we conclude, therefore, that He who was inaugurated as universal King delegated power to the high saints, making them co-rulers in the universal and everlasting kingdom.

That Aben Ezra understood that the people of high saints meant literal Israel, to the exclusion of all other nations, need not to be wondered at; he was a Hebrew, living in the dark ages of the terrible persecutions of his people, he did not, and could not believe in the Messiahship of the Nazarene, whom the Jews believed to be the source of all their sufferings, and, consequently, could not believe in the saintship of the followers of that Jesus, and that they were cleansed from all unrighteousness by His atoning blood.

THE PRUDENCE OF CHRIST.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE.

THE prudence of Christ in his conduct among his people was as remarkable as any of his other qualities. Perhaps this character of our Lord is better seen in regard to his claim to royalty than in any other respect.

He had here a most difficult part to discharge. He must needs give sufficient proof that he was King of Israel, as the prophets had foretold of him. He must assert this, and prove this by his words and by his works before his death. Here—in his very success here—lay one grand danger arising from the temper and circumstances of his people and his times. If his just claim were accepted, the people would insist on making him king in their sense: popular tumults would arise: a colorable pretext would be afforded to the Romans for condemning him as a rebel against imperial authority: hostile feeling would identify him with one of the many false Christs of popular insurrections: his name would have been handed down to succeeding ages as but one of such pretenders: our faith would falter at such a view of Christ.

The extreme danger of this is seen readily from the conduct of the Jews to other men who claimed the office of the Christ, and from their conduct on many occasions to Christ himself. The setting up to be the predicted king of prophecy was with every one except Jesus of Nazareth a call to arms responded to eagerly by a fierce and excited people. This we know from history. From our Gospels we know that multitudes were waiting and ready to act a similar part by Christ. Without any encouragement from him, nay, against his will, the exhibition of a power which proved him to be the prophet predicted by Moses was seized on by them as the opportunity for forcibly making him a king, and as such the leader of opposition against Roman rule. (John vi. 15.)

Viewing these two matters, viz., the necessity of his claiming to be and establishing his claim to be King of Israel, and also to escape all just suspicion of setting up to be such a king as the people expected or of producing popular tumults, the conduct of Christ was pre-eminently prudent. He claimed and was acknowledged to be King from first to last. As such he was worshipped by the wise men in his cradle at Bethlehem. As such he was acknowledged by Nathaniel and his disciples at the outset of his public life. As such he was hailed by multitudes in his triumphal procession into Jerusalem. (Matt. ii. 2; John i. 49; xii. 13.) Yet, he never created a tumult: he never gave the slightest pretext for charging him with opposing Roman rule; such a charge was made against him before Pilate, but the man who was most directly interested in such matters only treated the charge as an impertinence. The necessity for such a prudent course was certainly present in Christ's mind. (John vi. 15.) It gives us also a clue to some of his conduct which it is else not always easy to comprehend. Hence, when enthusiasm runs high he returns to a desert and hides in its welcome solitude till popular ardor has abated. Hence, we have little doubt, was the reason why, on several occasions when he had wrought one of his great works, he enjoined a partial or a total silence. (Matt. ix. 30; xii. 16; Mark vii. 36.) We cannot suppose that he gave an injunction that he did not wish to be obeyed. In his desire to avoid popular excitement there appears to be the real reason for such conduct on his part, and when his injunction was not followed we find him retiring from the scene altogether. (Luke xv. 14-16.)

The great thing to be noted here is that Christ succeeded in both his objects. He was acknowledged as king by numbers during his earthly life, and these numbers have ever since been growing and increasing. To them—the honest and the candid—he gave sufficient proof that he was King of Israel. On the other hand, the suspicion even that he wanted to be king in the sense that Herod and Cæsar were kings, or in the sense that the false pretenders to be Messiah wanted to be kings, has never attached for a moment to his name. The Jewish nation never did affirm it of him, and do not affirm it of him now. Infidels may call him an enthusiast, but such an idea as we speak of they never attribute to him. All this exhibits an astonishing prudence in the conduct of Christ. When we take into account the strange, excitable, suspicious, fierce, crafty temperament of the Jewish people in the time of Christ, as we find them depicted in the pages of Josephus and brought strongly forward in many incidents of the Gospels, we will admire the marvellous prudence of speech and conduct which enabled the young Galilean teacher to spend his extraordinary life in the midst of them, making and establishing his lofty claim to be the Son of David and King of Israel, and yet never exposing himself even to a suspicion that he wanted to be a potentate of this age. His conduct never led king, or tetrarch, or high priest, or people, watched closely as he was by all of them, to imagine that he sought, wished for, dreamed of a kingdom now.

And his conduct arose neither from the absence of lofty hopes and aspirations upon Christ's part, nor from personal timidity. In the highest sense of the word Christ was ambitious. The offer of the kingdoms of the world made to him by Satan was, beyond doubt, a strong temptation to the mind of Christ, to be overcome only by the sense of his duty to his Father. Timidity had nothing to do with the prudence of Christ. There was never a more fearless man than he. He faced an angry nation for years: they feared him: his cheek never blanched before them. Alone, he drove them from the temple: alone, he denounced woe after woe upon their ruling classes, while these glared upon him with fury in their hearts: alone, he stood before Pilate, the Sanhedrim, and the multitude, the only heart that beat no faster, while the passions of evil were bubbling and seething around him, when Peter lied and cursed in abject terror, when the Governor gazed in alarm at the unconcerned man before him, whose manner told that he lived in a region raised above the storms of earth. The prudence of Christ we see to have been upon a par with his power and his love.

A VOICE FROM ASSYRIA.

The following facts were communicated to the Royal Society of Antiquarians, under date of September 15, 1868, and also, in brief, to the American Oriental Society, two days later.

But in this telegraphic age, when at any moment the Divine telegram may flash from continent to continent, "There is one YAHVEH, and his "name one," these great historic facts ought not to be confined to the circle of the few and the dust of the schools.

They belong of right to the press, to be brought home by its power to the understanding and to the hearts of the people.

In Layard's Second Expedition to Assyria and Bablonia, in a Table of the Thirteen Great Gods of Assyria, the one marked No. 6 is named YAV.

Sir Henry Rawlinson in his Herodotus, just out in London, calls this name IVA or EVA, which is the same thing. The sign in the Assyrian or wedge-shaped mode of writing—called the arrowhead, or cuneiform character—having the same phonetic power—that is, the same power or back bone as a consonant, in either case.

The difference in vocalizing the Assyrian or Cuneiform symbol, depends upon the nearness to or departure from, the Hebrew, as a standard, in sounding more or less broadly the kindred Chaldean vowels.

Now YAV is one of the oldest gods of Assyria, appearing in the nineteenth century before Christ—as an element in the name of a son of Ismi-dagon, a king of Ur of the Chaldees.

YAV—god of the atmosphere, one of the olddest and earliest names yet found among the Assyrian deities, and always regarded with reverence, enters as an element into the name of the son of the king of the city where Abraham was born; is found upon the very earliest cylinders and inscribed bricks of that city; and was thus entirely familiar to the patriarch, both in its use and perversion through the elemental worship of the Chaldeans.

So much for Assyria. What do we find in Hebrew?

It is now ascertained and conceded that the Assyrian arrow-head, or middle-cuneiform writing is merely a family language of the Hebrew,—the Hebrew verb and the Assyrian verb interpreting each other.

We find YAVEH and its contract YAH, holding different and yet kindred relations.

Bunsen, in his "Bibel-Werk" makes the unqualified statement as one from which no scholar can dissent, that Jehovah is no word at all. It is simply a manufacture. The true Hebrew name for the Supreme God of Abraham, the patriarchs and the Pentateuch is YAVEH—in its contract form YAH.

It is likewise conceded by all who understand the subject, that the book of Genesis, especially throughout the first eleven chapters, is made up of various documents. These documents antedate as much the old Egyptian "Book of the Dead," found about the persons of all respectable mummies (which in its present form at least, can hardly be placed earlier than Abram) as Abram and the "Book of the Dead" antedate Moses.

The documents are scientifically discriminated by Dr. Herman Hupfield, of Halle, in his "Die Quellen der Genesis, (The Source of Genesis), Berlin, 1853.

Those in the first eleven chapters of Genesis are well separated and set forth in Bunsen's "Bibel-Werk," Leipsic, 1858.

Of the explanation given to the documents in unfolding the archeology of Genesis, found in the volume of "Yahveh Christ," it is unnecessary here to speak.

The documents with which Abraham was so familiar, may be designated in a brief and popular way, as the two accounts of creation—the two accounts of the flood—records of the house of Noah, with records of the Abrahamidae, or house of Abraham, etc., etc.

All these appear in the first eleven chapters of Genesis, and may be read as separated in Bunsen.

We can thus determine at once the first use of YAHVEH, among the Hebrews. It is the name of the Supreme Deity in the second account of creation—in the second account of the flood—in the mouth of Noah, and the invocations of Abraham.

So another and a slightly older word, Elohim—implying the knowledge of the singular form, El, likewise appears as the name of the Supreme Deity of the Hebrews—in the first account of creation—the first account of the flood, the records of the house of Noah, and in the mouth of Abraham.

It is farther well known to all acquainted with the subject, that both the Phenicians and the late Chaldeans (family relatives of the Hebrews speaking branches of the same Semitic language) perverted the first and oldest name of the Supreme Deity, viz., Elohim, with its singular form, El, from its original monotheistic idea to a foreign and polytheistic use.

On the cylinders and inscribed bricks of Ur of the Chaldees, the birthplace of Abraham, and the land of his fathers, we find the earlier Chaldeans did the very same thing for YAHVEH and its contract YAH.

The deep historic interest of this hitherto lost determination of YAHVEH speaks for itself. The facts are their own commentary.—Independent.

THE CONVERSION OF SAUL.

BY REV. HOWARD CROSBY, D. D.

WHEN he stood upon the high stairs of Antiochia, and when two years afterwards he spoke in the Cæsarea prætorium before the royal descendant of the Maccabees, the apostle Paul rehearsed the story of his conversion as an unanswerable argument for the truth of Christianity to his Jewish hearers. The Jewish mind understood what the tenacity of a Jew to his faith was; and when that Jew was a Pharasaic leader of learning and honor his renunciation of Judaism seemed as impossible as the removal of Lebanon. Lord Lytton's argument that Paul could be neither enthusiast nor impostor is familiar to all. Too steady and sober-minded to be an enthusiast, and too spiritual to be an impostor, yet even had he been either he would have been such in Judaism and not away from Judaism. Judaism never nurtured an enthusiasm for its own destruction, nor could imposture hope anything by taking a position without the camp. The writer mentioned is perfectly right when he considers the one miracle of Saul's conversion (seen in its just relations) to be an irrefragable proof of the divine character of Christianity. And the Jews of Paul's day saw it in its just relations. The argument shone upon them uncloudedly. While Gentiles might say "Paul, thou art beside thyself," Jews could not fashion such a charge, but must each say, if they dare say anything. "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Truth never fails in the field of the intelligence, but only on the battle-ground of the heart. The Jews of Christ's day knew Jesus to be the Messiah, but their hearts borrowed the lie about Beelzebub to throw at him. So the Jews who heard Paul, and knew the difference between him and the Pharisaic tiger Saul, knew Paul preached the truth, but their hearts rose in rebellion and over-awed their intelligence.

The miraculous points of Saul's conversion were not only the objective movements of nature, which arrested his attention and aroused his fear. If a miracle be an activity foreign to known laws with a personal intervention we are not to limit the miraculous to external nature, but to extend its reach to the region of the soul where laws also operate. Thus in Saul's case the brilliancy that eclipsed the noon-day sun and the voice speaking from the skies formed a miraculous setting for the more astounding miracle in Saul's soul. And in this Saul's case differs in no respect from that of every convert to God. There is no sequence of law between the natural emotions and desires of the heart and personal godliness. The sequences are all in the other direction. That a godless soul should turn to God is as justly miraculous as that a stone should fall uphill. A personal intervention is necessary, and that intervention must be with adjustments unknown to human personality. Saul's case is a conspicuous one because of the deepness of its contrasted colors. The ringleader of the fiendish mob that dashed out Stephen's brains is a docile scholar at timid Ananias's feet. The external miracle, moreover, intensifies the influence of the spiritual marvel. But, after all, it is this spiritual marvel that carries the force of conviction and staggers the opposition of the Jews. Were the lines of every conversion brought out so clearly its study would strike infidelity with dumbness.

Look at the features as given in the case of Saul:

(1.) The personal call. "Saul! Saul!" He feels that he is dealt with directly and singly. He is not lost in the aggregate. He cannot sink himself in "society." God has a controversy with the individual Saul. There is no dodging the isolation. The imagination is now a feeble toy. Its wand is impotent. Philosophic maxims are but brittle threads, God speaks and the soul hears.

(2.) The astonishment. "Who art thou, Lord?" Intercourse between the soul and God is something new. It is dazed. What does it all mean? Why this agitation, that will not away? The current of life is interrupted so rudely; plans and purposes are thrown into a jumble; and the mind refuses to grasp its wonted work.

(3.) The revelation. "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." Here the soul recognizes that it has been an enemy, an active, resolute enemy, to God. Its self-deception is removed.

(4.) The yielding. It takes the form of the humble question "What shall I do?" The man puts himself into Jesus's hands. God's will now stands out before the soul as filling the whole horizon.

(5.) The divine guidance. "Arise," etc. The servant of God is not left in any quandary. His way is made plain, even though he have no eyes. Other eyes are ready to be used for him, and hands are provided to lead him. Even though it be through a valley of humiliation, it is the divine guidance.

These are the characteristics of conversion as illustrated in Saul's case. * The analysis of every conversion would reveal the same elements. They are the steps by which the divine and human come into organic union. Paul, in his old age, looking back to the scene near Damascus, sees behind and beneath all these details the source of all in the divine mercy (1 Tim. i., 13). He never takes any credit to himself for his renewal. He never supposed that there was any more merit in his yielding to God than there is in a drowning man's yielding to the hand that draws him out of the water. From the beginning to the end God is magnified and man is humbled, and now the humbled man finds his exaltation in God.—Ch. Union.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

BRO. STORRS: My visit to Eatontown, N. J., was a very pleasant one, and I had good liberty in presenting the great truth that God will manifest his love to all the race, by granting unto every member thereof all necessary facilities to enable them to gain a saving knowledge of the only true God, and of his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, and that the opportunity thus granted can only be made available unto them, to the securing of the salvation offered, by obedience on their part to divinely appointed conditions; and that God's plan, his only plan, will, in due time, be presented to every child of the race, not to force the acceptance of that plan upon either the whole or any part of the race; but that all may have a free, unhindered opportunity to accept salvation according to the provisions of that plan; and if they do accept, they will share in its glorious consummation.

The brethren in Eatontown, among whom I have labored in trying to honor God and teach his truth, and with whom I have passed over seven years of my pilgrim life, manifested the spirit of our Master in giving me a most kind reception and cordial welcome to their homes, and a candid and interested hearing in their pleasant little Chapel; and that too when but very few of them were in sympathy with our views of the ages to come. What will be the result, I leave for the future to develope; but God gave me great liberty, and the assistance of his Holy Spirit, both afternoon and evening, in declaring his truth; to Him I do from my heart, ascribe all the praise. I passed more than a week in very pleasant associations with my old Christian brethren in that place, and most fully appreciate their endeavors to make my stay among them both pleasant and conducive to my progress in gaining my former health and strength:

My visit to Newark was also very pleasant and profitable to me. It was indeed a blessing to me to associate with old brethren and friends in Newark, who though they do not, as a general thing, endorse our views as to the character of the future ages, nevertheless were ready to take me cordially by the hand, and from the heart call me brother. I was also very much gratified in the fact that they listened candidly, intelligently, and with apparent interest, to a presentation of the plan that God has devised, through which he designs, in due time, to bring a great multitude that no man can number, to accept and enter on the enjoyment of an endless life. In the afternoon, of the second Sunday, we had a good audience, in which a variety of views were represented, and by the assistance of God's grace and Spirit, I was enabled to speak to the edification of all.

I do not wish to flatter, but in these days when sectarianism is the almost universal rule of action among the humanly organized churches, and they are so thoroughly bigoted as to shut their doors and their ears against every man who does not say "Shibboleth" precisely as they speak it; churches like Eatontown and Newark, who break away from their sectarian leading strings, and fellowship a man for his Christianity, instead of adoring him for his dogmatic exclusiveness, ought to be commended. For my own part I am fully satisfied that to base our Christian fellowship on an agreement in religious doctrines, is to adopt a fictitious basis. Working on such a basis, our fellowship will necessarily be always imperfect. We shall be governed in its manifestations by mere party ties, and party expediency. This is necessarily so. None of us, as yet, have a perfect creed. We now "see through a glass darkly." We shall never see eye to eye till "the Lord shall bring again Zion;" and "when the Lord brings again Zion. He will appear in his glory." Then our organism will be perfected in immortality, and we shall be free from errors in forming our judgment as to what is truth.

It is on this principle that I have always been opposed to humanly devised creeds, and all ecclesiastical legislation which aims to the establishment of any set of religious doctrines, or sentiments. God does not allow us to compromise, or be unfaithful to a single iota of truth that he has taught us from his word, and Christians should not require us to do so in order to gain their Christian sympathy or fellowship. If the love of God is "shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit given unto us," we shall, while it is reigning there, instinctively love that same spirit of love abiding in, and manifested by others, though we may not agree with them in theological details.

Let us "be patient toward all men," and especially towards those who are honestly endeavoring to "serve the only living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven."
